

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

HARVARD LAW LIBRARY

3 2044 078 468 386

HARVARD LAW SCHOOL LIBRARY

July 1, 1908

VOL. 33

NO. 1

Pages 1-128

Magazine Edition

Kentucky Law Reporter

Frankfort, Ky.

RATES

Subscription	$5 Per Year
Binding Each Volume	$1.00

A Semi-Monthly Magazine, Reporting in
Full All the Decisions of the Court of Appeals

The Frankfort Printing Co.

Incorporated

Publishers

1908

TABLE OF CASES.

	Page.		Page.
Alsip, &c. v. Morgan.....	72	Irons, &c. v. U. S. Life Ins. Co.
Arnett v. Pinson, &c.....	36	of N. Y.....	46
Baker v. Best.....	1	Jackson, &c. v. Jackson.....	68
Black Raven Coal Co. v. Ed-		Kennedy v. Fulton Mercantile monson	3	Co., &c.	60
Board Equ. Campbell Co. v. L.		Kennedy v. Commonwealth...	83
& N. R. R.Co.....	78	Ky. Union Co. v. Common
Boreing, &c. v. Wilson & Moss,	14	wealth	9
Burton' v. Monticello & Burn-		Ky. Union Co. v. Common-side Turnpike Co.....	85	wealth	49
Calor Oil & Gas Co. v. Franzell,		Ky. Heating Co., &c. v. Calor
&c.	98	Oil & Gas Co.....	98
Charles v. Hurley, Sr.....	78	Lexington, City of, v. Walby,
Clark v. Commonwealth.....	72	&c.	116
Clinger's Adm'r. v. Ch. & O. of		L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Gilmore's
Ky., &c.....	86	Adm'r.	74
Comingor v. Lou. T. Co., Trus-		Louisville Veneer Mills Co. v.
tee Bankruptcy, Simonson,		Clemonts	106
Whiteson Co.	53	Moseley's Adm'r. v. Black Dia-
Commonwealth v. White.....	70	mond Coal & M. Co.....	110
Commonwealth v. C. & O. Ry.		Newcomb v. Fidelity Trust Co.,
Co.	92	&c.	41
Covington, City of, v. Regen-		N. C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v.
thal	127	Bean's Ex'or	114
Devon v. Cin., Cov. & Erianger		Nioum v. Commonwealth.....	62
Ry. Co.	122	Ochsner v. Commonwealth . .	119
Doores v. Commonwealth.....	69	Schulte v. L. & N. R. R. Co.
Eastern Ky. Coal Lands Corp.		&c.	31
v. Commonwealth	49	Sebree, &c. v. Sebree.....	114
Falls City Woolen Mills v.		Slaughter v. Ditto.....	"
Pike, by, &c.....	67	South Cov. & Cin. St. Ry. Co.
Globe Bank & Trust Co. v. Rig-		v. Besse.....	52
glesberger	96	Terry v. Terry	126
Huesman, for use, &c. v.		Warden v. M. H. & E. R. R.
Dersch	77	Co.	38
		Welch v. Commonwealth.....	51

Magazine Edition

Kentucky Law Reporter

RATES

Subscription	.	.	.	$5 Per Year
Binding Each Volume	.	.	.	$1.00

Vol. 33	July 1, 1908	No. 1
---------	--------------	-------

COURT OF APPEALS OF KENTUCKY.

BAKER v. BEST.

(Filed March 4, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Actions—Owner of property—Liability of for accidents—In this action by B. for damages for injuries sustained by falling through an elevator shaft, Dunn was not liable because it is shown by the record that his purchase of the property was not complete at the time of the accident.

2. Same—The verdict against Mrs. B., the owner, seems to be supported by the evidence, and it must be upheld. The evidence complained of could not have prejudiced appellant's rights.

B. W. Hall, C. H. Shield and J. B. McCormick for appellant.

W. B. White for appellee.

Appeal from Montgomery Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, affirming.

On November 8, 1905, J. M. Best fell through an elevator shaft in what is known as the Tyler Apperson Building, owned by Kate S. Baker, in Mt. Sterling, Ky.; he brought this suit to recover for his injuries, against her and J. E. Dunn. The court, on the hearing of the case, instructed the jury peremptorily to find for Dunn and submitted to the jury the question whether Kate S. Baker was liable. The jury found for Best $500, and she appeals.

Dunn made a proposition, on September 18, to buy the property. On November 7 his proposition was accepted; a deed and notes were drawn and placed in the hands of C. H. Shield, to be delivered by Shield, if, upon an examination of the title, he approved it. Best was injured on the eighth. After this, on the twentieth, Shield examined the title, and the deed and notes were delivered, it being agreed between the parties that Dunn should take the rents from November 7th. But on November 8th the title had not passed from Mrs. Baker to Dunn. If Shield had reported adversely to the title, the deed would not have been delivered, and as he had not reported on November 8, the title remained in Mrs. Baker until the deed was delivered absolutely to Dunn. The circuit court, therefore, properly held that Dunn was not liable. The proof for Best was to the effect that the building was rented out for offices; that he was in the building to see a lawyer who had an office on that floor; that the hallway was not lighted so that he could see; that the lawyer had two rooms, with a door in each entering the hallway, and between these two rooms was the elevator shaft, with a door entering it; that the door of the elevator shaft was left open, and he, taking it for the door to the lawyer's office, walked into it and fell down the shaft. He was precipitated to the cellar, a distance of 18 feet, according to his proof; was confined to his bed about ten days; suffered much pain in his back and shoulders. At the trial, 18 months afterwards, he still continued to suffer, and had been unable to do hard manual labor, as before the fall.

The verdict of the jury for $500 can not be said to be so excessive as to indicate passion or prejudice. If the elevator door was left open in a dark, unlighted hall, where people were expected to come to get to the offices on either side of the hall, it was a question for the jury whether ordinary care was used; because strangers using the hallway would naturally think, without notice to the contrary, that open doors led into rooms on either side. It was incumbent upon the owner of the property, when the rooms in the building were rented out for public offices, to exercise ordinary care to keep safe the hallways and the elevator shaft. Best was not a mere licensee; he was a person invited upon the premises; for all persons who had business with the lawyers were, by implication, invited to their offices, and to use the hallways for this purpose.

John A. Judy was introduced as a witness for the plaintiff, and was allowed to state that he had an office in the building, and that he had often seen the elevator door standing open when the elevator had been moved up to some other floor, with nothing to prevent a man from stepping into it and falling to the cellar below. It is insisted for the appellant that this evidence is incompetent, for the reason that negligence on one day in leaving the door open, can not be shown to prove negligence on another day. (Southern Railway v. Winchester, 32 Ky. Law Rep., 19.) We think the evidence should not have been admitted, but we can not see how it was prejudicial to the defendant. It was manifest that the plaintiff fell through the elevator shaft. This was undisputed. There was no proof introduced by the defendant to the effect that the door was closed. The only effort to show this was by the witness who helped to get Best out of the cellar, and he said that he understood Best to say that he had opened the door, thinking it was Judge Hazelrigg's office door, but he did not know for sure whether he said this or not. The plaintiff, Best, testified positively that he made no such statement. John C. Wood, introduced by the defendant, testified, on his direct examination, that Best told him, just after he came out of the building, that the elevator door was open and he fell through it, taking it for the door of the lawyer's office. The janitor was introduced for the defendant, and stated that on the day Best was hurt, he had not opened that door, or seen it open. But he does not testify it was not open, or that he had seen it that day closed. This being all the evidence on the subject, the jury were bound to believe, under the proof, that the door was open when Best fell through it; and the proof that the door was open on some other day could have had no effect on the verdict. If the defendant had introduced proof showing that the door was closed and that Best had opened it, a different question would be presented. But, on the whole record, we conclude that the substantial rights of the defendant were in nowise prejudiced by the admission of this evidence, and that a new trial should not be granted.

Judgment affirmed.

BLACK RAVEN COAL CO. v. EDMONSON.

(Filed March 25, 1908—not to be reported.)

Detinue—Action for Specific Articles—Recovery for Aggregate Sum—Validity of Verdict—In an action by a claimant of certain specified articles of household furniture, against one he alleged had wrongfully taken them, to recover same or their value and for damages for their detention, where the value of each item was separately stated in the petition, a verdict of the jury awarding the plaintiff the aggregate value of all the items as set out in the petition, was not erroneous in that it did not fix the separate value of each article detained.

D. B. Logan for appellant.

Chas. W. Logan for appellee.

Appeal from Bell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by William Rogers Clay, Commissioner, affirming.

Appellee, L. E. Edmonson, was employed as a coal miner by appellant, Black Raven Coal Company, in its mines in Bell county, Kentucky. It rented to him a house in which he lived, and, at the same time, sold and delivered to him a lot of household furniture for the agreed price of $75. The contract of sale, which was dated July 30, 1906, after setting forth the articles purchased by appellee, has the following provision:

"The ownership of these goods to remain with the Black Raven Coal Company in full until I have sufficient credit in the office to pay for the same."

In November, 1906, appellee quit working for appellant and secured employment at the Straight Creek mines, in the same county. For the purpose of moving his household fixtures he secured two wagons, which were driven to the house which he had occupied as tenant of appellant. After a considerable portion of his household goods was loaded on the wagons, the parties in charge of them were directed by appellant's agents not to remove the goods, but to unload the same. Thereafter appellee instituted this action in the Bell Circuit Court to recover the articles of furniture detained by appellant, and, in his petition, described each and every article and the value thereof, together with the aggregate value of all the articles, amounting to $179.90. Appellee also asked damages in the sum of $175 for the detention of the furniture. Appellant, by its answer, denied appellee's ownership, of the first twelve items of property sued for, and admitted that it held the possession and averred that it was the owner of these twelve articles. The answer further denied that appellant ever withheld from, or prevented appellee from taking his other articles of household or kitchen furniture, but charged that appellee had abandoned them in appellant's tenement house. While admitting that it had sold to appellee the twelve articles referred to, it alleged that he had never paid for the same, but still owed thereon the sum of $43.06, and claimed that it had the right to take possession of the goods in question and hold them until they were paid for. Upon the hearing of the case the jury returned a verdict in favor of appellee. From an order overruling appellant's motion and grounds for a new trial this appeal is prosecuted.

While several grounds for reversal are urged appellant relies upon the following grounds alone: (1) The finding of the jury, that appellee had paid for the goods in question, was flagrantly against the weight of the evidence. (2) The court erred in giving instruction No. 3, which fixed the value of each of the articles sought to be recovered, instead of submitting this as a question to be determined by the jury. (3) The verdict of the jury did not fix the value of the several articles of property separately, and was not sufficient to authorize the judgment rendered.

First. According to the testimony of appellant's bookkeeper, appellee was indebted to the company, as shown by the statements taken from its books, in the sum of $43.06, at the time he attempted to take the furniture. It appears, however, that at the end of the month of October: appellee's indebtedness, according to the company's statement, was only $5.53. Prior to that time, appellee had been charged with $10, which he, as surety, had agreed to pay for one Woodyard. Appellee contends that his liability to the company was only in the event Woodyard failed to pay the same, and that in no event could this sum of $10 be charged as against his furniture. Deducting this item of $10, appellant, at the end of October, would have been indebted to appellee in the sum of $4.47. Appellee also testified that appellant's bookkeeper told him that he had paid for his furniture and had a nice snug outfit, and that he (the bookkeeper) would tear up the contract, as it was settled. We do not believe that, after appellee had paid for his furniture, appellant could thereafter make advancements to him which would be a charge against it. By this system of bookkeeping he could never pay for the furniture as long as he owed appellant anything for advancements for other purposes. At any rate, the question whether he had paid for the furniture in full was for the jury, and we are unable to say that their finding was flagrantly against the weight of the evidence.

Second. In instruction No. 1 the court told the jury that, if they believed appellant detained appellee's goods, they should find for appellee the goods so detained, or the value of the goods so detained, not exceeding the sum of $179.90; also the damages sustained by appellee, not exceeding $175, provided the jury believed that appellee had fully paid for the furniture set out in the bill of sale. By instruction 2 the jury were told that, if they believed appellee voluntarily abandoned the household goods claimed by appellant, then they should not find any damages against appellant for the goods it did not claim. By instruction No. 3 the jury were told that if they believed appellant wrongfully or forcibly took possession of the articles of personal property claimed by the plaintiff in his petition, to wit: One oak dresser, worth $10, one oak washstand, worth $4, and so on, naming each article and the value thereof, they should find for appellee the value of said articles, not exceeding the sum of $179.90, and in addition thereto such damages as appellee had sustained, not exceeding the sum of $175, the amount claimed in the petition. By instruction No. 4 the jury were told that appellant had the right to take possession of the articles claimed by it in its answer by any peaceable means if appellee had not fully paid for same; and if appellee had not fully paid for same, they should find for appellants as to said articles so set out in the bill of sale.

While instruction No. 3 was unnecessary, we do not think the giving of it was prejudicial error. It does not fix in absolute terms the value of each article, but submits to the jury the question whether or not appellant detained certain articles therein of a certain specified value, and provides that if they so believe, they will find for appellee the value of said articles; thus still leaving to the jury the right to determine the value of the articles so detained. Furthermore, the value of the articles set forth in the instructions was fixed by appellee in his petition and also in his testimony, and there was no evidence to show that the value so fixed by appellee was incorrect.

Third. The verdict returned by the jury is as follows: "We, the jury, do agree and find for the plaintiff the sum of $179.90 for value of household goods, and damage of $75 for retaining same." Counsel for appellant contends that, under section 330, of the Civil Code, and the rule laid down in Buckner v. Haggin, 3 Mon., 59, and Young v. Parsons, &c., 2 Met., 499, the verdict is erroneous in that it does not fix the value of the several articles detained by a separate finding as to each. The effect of the verdict, however, was to fix the aggregate value of the articles detained according to the total sum of their separate values as claimed by appellant in his petition, and fixed by him in his testimony. By instruction No. 3 it was left to the jury to say whether they believed from the evidence that appellant detained each article, and whether it was worth the price named by appellee in his petition and in his testimony. By finding for appellee in the total sum fixed by him, which sum was made up of the separate values also fixed by him, the jury, in effect, found the separate values of the various articles to be the same as fixed by appellee. Furthermore, the judgment entered upon the verdict provided for the recovery of the several articles according to the separate value fixed on each. Under this judgment appellant could either return the various articles or in lieu thereof pay the value as fixed therein. Under these circumstances we do not think the failure of the jury to find the separate value of the articles detained was prejudicial to the substantial rights of the appellant.

For the reasons given, the judgment is affirmed.

SLAUGHTER v. DITTO.

(Filed March 25, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Married Women—Contract—Note for Worthless Stock—Saving Husband from Prosecution—Validity of Contract—Ratification—Estoppel—Where a note was executed by a married woman for stock in a pants factory, which was at the time worthless, which fact was unknown to her, and because of representations made to her that if she did not purchase the stock her husband would be prosecuted on a charge of burning the factory, in an action thereon it was competent for the wife to testify to statements made to her by her husband to induce her to sign the note and thereby save him from a prosecution for arson, such evidence being competent for the purpose of showing her condition of mind at the time she signed the note; and the fact that she subsequently made a payment on the note when in the same condition of mind, did not amount to a ratification of the contract, or estop her from making defense to the remainder, or to recover back the sum paid.

Geo. W. Jolly and W. Scott Morrison for appellant.

Sweeney, Ellis & Sweeney and Little & Slack for appellee.

Appeal from Davless Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, affirming.

This is the second appeal of this case. The former opinion may be found in 28 Ky. Law Rep., 1165, but a brief statement of the facts will be necessary to present the objections urged by appellant.

On June 30, 1903, the appellee, Clara L. Ditto, executed to appellant, Slaughter, a note for $1,600. The note recited that it was given as the purchase price of thirty-three shares of stock in the Owensboro Pants Manufacturing Co.—the stock being pledged as collateral security for the note. In October, 1903, Mrs. Ditto paid $1,000 on the note, and afterwards Slaughter brought suit to recover the balance. In answer to this suit, Mrs. Ditto averred that the note was executed without consideration, that the stock for which it purported to be given was worthless, and further, that the note, as well as the $1,000 paid thereon was procured by fraud and duress. She tendered with her answer the shares of stock, and sought to recover upon a counter-claim the $1,000 paid Slaughter. Upon the first trial, from which the former appeal was prosecuted, the lower court peremptorily instructed the jury to find for Slaughter.

On the first trial, as on the one from which this appeal is prosecuted, the evidence shows that the stock in the pants company was worthless, and had no market value, and that Slaughter knew this, but that Mrs. Ditto did not. There was also evidence that the husband of Mrs. Ditto had been arrested for burning the pants factory, which was heavily insured, and that his examining trial was to be held on the day the note was executed. Mrs. Ditto and her husband lived in Owensboro. The note was written in the law office of Miller & Todd, and was taken from there by her husband, who returned in a few minutes afterwards with the note signed by Mrs. Ditto.

On the former trial, as appears from the opinion, Mrs. Ditto offered to testify that when her husband presented the note to her, he told her that Slaughter would not consent that Mr. Miller, an attorney whom he was anxious to secure in his defense, might appear for him, and that unless the note was executed Slaughter would become a witness against her husband, and relate facts which would be very damaging to him in the prosecution. That, influenced by these statements, she signed the note, and that she paid the $1,000 on the note under threats made by Slaughter, which were reported to her by her husband, that he, Slaughter, would go before the grand jury and procure an indictment against her husband unless the $1,000 was paid. In reference to this evidence, this court said that, although both Mrs. Ditto and her husband could not testify, it was competent for her to relate what her husband said to her at the time she signed the note, and when she paid the $1,000, for the purpose of showing her state of mind, and to illustrate whether her signature and the payment were obtained by fraud or duress. The court further said that there was sufficient evidence upon the question of fraud and duress to take the case to the jury, and as the evidence upon the last trial was in substance the same as upon the first, the case was properly submitted to the jury.

On the trial from which this appeal is prosecuted, Mrs. Ditto testified that she never bought any stock in the Owensboro Pants Co. from Slaughter, or had any conversation with Slaughter, or any other person, in regard to the stock, and had no idea what it was worth; that on the day she signed the notes she knew that her husband was to appear before the county judge on the charge of arson, accused of being implicated in the burning of the Owensboro Pants Co.'s plant; and that her husband had been endeavoring to employ Mr. Miller as an attorney to defend him in the prosecution; that on the morning of the day the prosecution was set for trial her husband brought her the note sued on, and she signed it, because her husband told her if she did not sign it Mr. Slaughter would not let Mr. Miller represent him, and Mr. Slaughter was going to appear against him as a witness in the prosecution; that at the time she was greatly distressed and would not have signed the note except for the fear and mental distress under which she was laboring. She further testified that when she made the payment of one thousand dollars, that her husband told her the note that she had signed was due and that Slaughter had said to him that the grand jury would soon be in session and that unless she made a payment on the note he would appear before the grand jury against her husband, and that induced by the fear that her husband would be prosecuted by Slaughter, she paid $1,000, and did not know at the time that she was not liable on the note. While Mrs. Ditto was testifying, the court frequently admonished the jury that the statements made to her by her husband were only competent for the purpose of showing her state of mind at the time she signed the note, and when she made the payment of $1,000.

Slaughter, on the witness stand, denied that he had ever threatened to prosecute Ditto, or that he had interfered with his employment of Mr. Miller. That while in Miller's office on the morning before mentioned, Ditto said to him: "I will buy your stock, or at least my wife will; I will give you fifty cents on the dollar;" that he asked Mr. Miller to draw up a note, and Ditto took it and went out to get his wife's signature, returning in about fifteen minutes with the note signed by her. That he also took with him notes to be signed by his wife payable to Brown and Rinehart, who, in connection with Slaughter had been induced by Ditto to buy stock in the pants company. It may be here remarked that Slaughter, Rinehart and Brown claimed that Ditto had induced them to purchase the stock by misrepresentation and fraud as to its value, and that they were about to, or had, instituted proceedings against Ditto to recover from him the purchase price paid, upon the ground that he had practiced a fraud upon them.

Appellant offered to prove by Rinehart and Brown that on the occasion that Slaughter sold his stock and took Mrs. Ditto's note therefor, that they also sold their stock to her, and she executed notes to them; but this evidence the court excluded.

Ditto was introduced in rebuttal, and asked if, on June 30, or at any other time, he made a proposition to Slaughter to buy his stock for his wife; and, over objection, he answered that he did not—the court, at the time, admonishing the jury that his evidence was only competent for the purpose of contradicting what Slaughter said.

Upon the conclusion of the evidence, the court instructed the jury, in substance, that if they believed that there was no valuable consideration for the execution of the note, or that it was signed by Mrs. Ditto under fraud or duress, and that the thousand dollars was obtained by fraud or duress, they should find for the defendant.

The jury returned a verdict finding that Slaughter was not entitled to anything on his note, but that Mrs. Ditto should recover from him $1,000.00. From a judgment on this verdict Slaughter appeals, and asks its reversal upon the ground that the trial judge erred, (first) in refusing to permit Rinehart and Brown to testify that they sold some of the capital stock of the Owensboro Pants Company to appellee on the day it is alleged she purchased the stock from appellant; (second) in permitting appellee's husband to testify after she had elected to and did make herself a witness; (third) in giving and refusing instructions; (fourth) that the verdict is against the evidence, as there is no evidence showing that appellant ever threatened the husband of appellee, or that he practiced any fraud or duress upon her.

We think the evidence clearly establishes that the stock for which it is said appellee executed the note was, at the time, worthless, so that it may safely be said there was no valuable consideration for the execution of the note, and it would be a manifest injustice to require appellee to pay for the stock. It is also clear that appellee, at the time she signed the note, did not know anything about the value of the stock, and all the circumstances point to the conclusion that she was induced to sign the note because of the representations made to her by her husband that unless she did sign it, Mr. Miller would not appear as counsel for her husband in the pending prosecution against him, and that appellant would testify for the Commonwealth. At the time the note was signed, the prosecution against her husband for arson had been called for trial before the county judge in the court house—the trial being delayed by the efforts of the parties to make arrangements about the execution of this note. The circumstances surrounding the sale of the stock in Mr. Miller's office, and the execution of the note immediately afterwards, strongly support the conclusion that Ditto was apprehensive that unless he procured his wife's signature to the note, that Slaughter would take some part in the prosecution against him; and that he prevailed on his wife to sign the note by making statements of this character to her. Under the circumstances, situated, as she was, it is easy to understand that she would willingly and readily believe any statements her husband might make, and do anything he asked her to do to help him out of the trouble he was involved in. Mr. Miller had no part whatever in the sale of the stock—nor anything to do with the conversation that took place between Slaughter and Ditto in reference to it—or with procuring Mrs. Ditto's signature to the note. His only connection with the matter consisted in the fact that the parties happened to be in his office.

The evidence proposed to be made by Rinehart and Brown was not competent, as neither of them sold Mrs. Ditto any stock in person, or had any conversation with her about the sale of their stock. It seems not improbable that Ditto was as anxious to pacify them as he was to make terms with Slaughter, to the end that he might have the good influence, or, at least, not their opposition, in the pending prosecution against him, and it is likely that he made some statements to his wife to induce her to sign their notes, as he took them with the Slaughter note to get her signature; but, upon this point, we express no opinion as the question is not before us, and only mention it to illustrate the fact that, in no aspect of the case, could the evidence of Rinehart and Brown that Mrs. Ditto bought their stock be competent, in the absence of evidence showing the circumstances under which Mrs. Ditto bought it, or any statements made by or to her at the time she signed the notes.

At the time Mrs. Ditto paid the $1,000.00, she was laboring under the same condition of mind as when she executed the note, and from her statements was induced to make the payment by reason of the fact that she feared unless she did so, Mr. Slaughter would renew the prosecution of her husband on the charge of arson. Her payment of this money under the circumstances did not amount to a ratification of the contract, nor is she estopped by it from making defenses to the remainder of the note, or seeking to recover this sum back. Looking at it from her standpoint, and the jury were at liberty to accept her version as true, the entire transaction, so far as she was concerned, was fraudulent and without valuable consideration. She testifies that when she made this payment she did not know her legal rights, or that she had a valid defense against the note. Under these circumstances, her payment can not be deemed to be a waiver, estoppel or ratification.

In respect to the assigned error in permitting Ditto to testify in rebuttal as to what Slaughter said relative to the conversation in Mr. Miller's office—admitting that it was incompetent, under that provision of the Code forbidding both the husband and wife from testifying, it could not have been prejudicial to appellant, because it was really immaterial. It threw no light whatever upon the only two questions involved in the case, which were, the want of consideration, and Mrs. Ditto's mental condition at the time she signed the note.

The case, for appellee, might well have been rested under the evidence upon the single proposition that there was no valuable consideration for the execution of the note, or the payment of the one thousand dollars; and, therefore, appellee was entitled to the judgment rendered in her favor.

The instructions presented to the jury the only issues in the case.

We find, in the record, no substantial error to the prejudice of appellant, and the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

KENTUCKY UNION CO. v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed March 25, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Land—Forfeiture for Taxes—Redemption—Penalties and Interest—It was competent for the Legislature to provide in the revenue act of March 15, 1906, that the amount paid to remove cause of forfeiture, where land was sold for unpaid taxes, should be the taxes without interest or penalties for the years named and if in adding penalties and interest the Legislature exceeded its constitutional authority the act would be void only in so far as it exceeded such authority and the penalty and interest would be eliminated.

2. Same—Recovery of Land—Deed—Boundary—Exclusions—The rule is universal that where one seeks to recover land under a grant or deed which does not convey all the land within the boundary described he must show that the land sought to be recovered is within the boundary and without the exclusions.

3. Same—Petition—Allegations—In an action for the forfeiture of land for non-payment of taxes under the act of March 15, 1906, it is not necessary for the petition to describe more than the tract of land, the title to which is sought to be forfeited.

4. Large Boundary—Many Occupants—Judgment—Description—Partial Sale—In an action for the forfeiture of a large boundary of land on which there are many occupants, it is not necessary for the judgment to ascertain and describe the parts of the land held by the several occupants. If at the hearing it should appear that the title as to certain parts only of the tracts would pass to the purchaser under a sale, the statute would be complied with by a sale of the title covering those parts alone. In any event, it is the duty of the court to prescribe what parts thereof shall be sold, if less than the whole is to be sold.

5. Re-purchasing Land—Time Allowed—Under the provision of the act the defendant has until the close of the first term after the judgment of forfeiture is entered in which to file his petition and bond to purchase back the land, and it was error of the court to order a sale of the land before the time elapsed in which defendant could file such petition.

W. B. Dixon, Louis B. Wehle and Cleon K. Calvert for appellant.

Ira Fields and James H. Jeffries for appellee.

Appeal from Leslie Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lassing, reversing.

This appeal presents for consideration questions as to the constitutionality of article 3, of the Revenue and Taxation Act, approved March 15, 1906, and of practice and procedure thereunder.

On the 20th day of April, 1907, the Commonwealth of Kentucky, by Ira Fields, Commonwealth's attorney, in and for the thirty-third judicial district of Kentucky, which includes Leslie county, filed its petition in the Leslie Circuit Court against appellant, alleging, among other things, that on the 12th day of June, 1872, the Commonwealth of Kentucky granted to Stephen G. Reid, by letters patent, forty thousand acres of land in Perry, now Leslie county, Kentucky, a copy of the grant being filed with, and as a part of, the petition. The petition also described the land by metes and bounds, courses and distances, and alleged that the corporate defendant, appellant here, under, through and by virtue of, divers mesne conveyances, from the patentee, was the claimant of said tract of land under said patent.

The petition further alleged that appellant and its predecessors in title had failed to list said tract of land, or any part of it for assessment and taxation, as of September 15, 1901, September 15, 1902, September 15, 1903, September 15, 1904, and September 15, 1905, and had so failed to list the same as of each and all of said dates; and had failed to pay the taxes charged, and which should have been charged against said tract of land assessible as of said dates, and had failed to pay such taxes assessible as of any of said dates. The prayer was for judgment against appellant, forfeiting and transferring to the Commonwealth of Kentucky all of appellant's claims, title, right and interest in and to all of said tract of land, and for costs. By an amended petition the prayer was enlarged and asked for a sale of all the title, interest and claim of appellant in and to all of said tract of land.

Appellant appeared and filed general demurrer to the petition at September rules, 1907, which was overruled at the regular October term. The appellant elected to stand on its demurrer and declined to answer. At the same term the case was set down for hearing and trial before a jury, and upon a verdict in favor of plaintiff the court entered a judgment forfeiting and transferring to the Commonwealth the right, title, interest and claim of appellant in and to the said tract of land described in the petition and judgment; and further adjudged that the title so forfeited and transferred to the Commonwealth be sold by the master commissioner. The judgment contains the usual provisions for a sale by a master commissioner, and authorizes the commissioner to sell said tract of land as a whole or in parcels to suit purchasers.

By further provision of the judgment the master commissioner was directed not to advertise the sale until after the close of the regular February, 1908, term of court.

Complaining of errors in this judgment, appellant prosecutes this appeal.

Appellant, confessing as true the allegations of the petition, relies for reversal upon the alleged unconstitutionality of the act upon which the proceedings were based, and further claims that as the petition did not allege, nor the judgment ascertain, what parts of the forty thousand acres had been occupied, and taxes paid thereon by occupants, the petition is defective, and the judgment erroneous.

The questions thus presented for determination by this court are (1st) is article 3, of the revenue and taxation act, approved March 15, 1906, a constitutional exercise of legislative authority; (2d) is the judgment erroneous in that the petition fails to allege or the judgment to ascertain the various persons who had occupied and paid taxes on lands within said forty thousand acre boundary for five years next preceding the judgment of forfeiture; and (3d) did the court err in entering judgment of sale at the same term at which the judgment of forfeiture was entered?

The constitutionality of this article was considered and upheld by this court in an exhaustive opinion written by Chief Justice O'Rear in Eastern Kentucky Coal Lands Corporation v. Commonwealth, 32 Ky. Law Rep., 129, 106 S. W., 260, and it is not necessary to again refer to the various objections there urged, and passed upon by the court. Upon further consideration, we are satisfied that the conclusions there reached are correct.

It is contended by appellant that under the act of 1906 a failure to list land for assessment and to pay the taxes thereon for the years 1902, 1903, 1904, 1905 and 1906 is visited with a different and heavier penalty than was provided by law in force during those years. It is by no means certain that the act accomplishes any such result; but if it did it would result in making void only the penalties and interest provided for the default, and would not affect any other portion of the act. The act expressly provides that it is enacted in detail and that each provision shall stand by itself unaffected by any other portion that for any reason might be invalid. The act is a comprehensive revenue measure and this result would follow had there been no such provision.

It was clearly competent for the Legislature to prescribe that the amount to be paid to remove cause of forfeiture should be the taxes, without interest or penalties, for the years named; and if, in adding penalties and interest, the Legislature exceeded its constitutional authority, the article would be void only in so far as it exceeded such authority; and the penalty and interest would be eliminated. The penalty and interest can be stricken out and that which remains is complete within itself, and capable of being executed in accordance with the apparent legislative intent. Similar objections were urged in Hoke v. Commonwealth, 79 Ky., 567, and Muir's Adm'r v. City of Bardstown, 120 Ky., 739, and in each case, where penalty was provided, the act was held void only to the extent of the penalty imposed.

No question, however, concerning the validity of the provisions of the act as to what penalties the appellant should pay for its delinquency during the years 1902, 1903, 1904, 1905 and 1906 arises in this case. It has not attempted either to list its land or offered to pay any taxes, though the act gave ample time, after it became a law, for compliance with its provisions. (Mulvey v. Boston, 83 N. E., 402; decided January 14, 1908; Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S., 628; Black on Tax Titles, sections 279-286.) Had the appellant attempted to comply it could then have contested or disregarded any unconstitutional provision of the act.

As we held in the case of Eastern Kentucky Coal Lands Corporation v. Commonwealth, 32 Ky. Law Rep., 129; 106 S. W., 260, it was competent for the Legislature, in the exercise of the taxing power, to provide a forfeiture for a failure to list property for assessment and pay the taxes due thereon. The penalty of forfeiture provided by the act is not for a past delinquency, but for a failure to list and pay after the act went into effect, and within the time there provided. We are here concerned only with this feature of the act, and it has no semblance of an ex post facto law.

Appellant contends that, if the act is constitutional, the petition is defective, and that the general demurrer thereto should have been sustained, because the petition fails to disclose what parts, if any, of the land described in the petition is held by occupants who have paid taxes thereupon for the five years preceding the judgment of forfeiture; and that the judgment is erroneous because it does not segregate the parts to which the forfeited title would inure.

So far as disclosed by the record there is no part of the tract held by occupants. But the court judicially knows, and it was admitted in argument, that practically, if not quite, all the land described in the petition is adversely held by occupants under claim or color of title. The record shows only that the appellant is the owner or claimant of the title to the tract of land, which is specifically described, by metes and bounds, courses and distances, and that appellant has failed to comply with the provisions of the article with respect to the listing of it for taxes and the payment of taxes thereon. The petition contains all the allegations necessary to show that appellant was delinquent, and its title subject to forfeiture, and the demurrer thereto was, therefore, properly overruled. Nor is the judgment erroneous on that ground. Certainly the title to the tract of land described in the petition, and which is adjudged to be subject to forfeiture and sale, can be sold by the same description, the purchaser taking that which, under the article, passes at the sale. The doctrine of caveat emptor applies in this, as in other proceedings. And the purchaser, and not the occupant, as argued by counsel for appellant, would be required to show, in actions to recover under his purchase, that the land claimed by him was not of the excluded class. The rule is universal that where one seeks to recover under a grant or deed which does not convey all the land within the boundary described, he must show that the land sought to be recovered is within the boundary and without the exclusion. (Hall v. Martin, 89 Ky., 9.)

The act provides that the deed shall transfer to the purchaser the title and claim,

"So forfeited and transferred to and vested in, the Commonwealth, as remains in it after the operation of section 6 of this article, and shall so recite."

The article, taken as a whole, clearly shows that such was the legislative intent. It is not necessary for the petition to describe more than the tract of land, the title to which is sought to be forfeited.

After the judgment of forfeiture becomes final the main purpose to be conserved is the interest of the Commonwealth, and circumstances might arise or be shown to exist that would authorize different modes of executing it. We have no hesitancy in holding that it is not necessary for the judgment to ascertain and describe the parts of the tract held by occupants. If, at the hearing, it should be made manifest that the title as to certain parts only of the tract would pass to the purchaser under a sale, the statute would be complied with by a sale of the title covering those parts alone. In any event it is the duty of the court to prescribe what parts thereof shall be sold, if less than the whole is to be sold. Therefore, the judgment appealed from, in so far as it authorizes the commissioner to sell the tract as a whole or in parcels to suit the purchaser is erroneous.

Another error in the judgment of sale is that it was rendered at the regular October term, 1907, of the Leslie Circuit Court, the term at which the judgment of forfeiture was entered.

By section 4 of article 3 it is provided that "if before or during the term of circuit court, next succeeding the term at which a judgment of forfeiture may have been entered," the defendant in privity with the title, so vested in, and forfeited to, the Commonwealth, should file his counterclaim, accompanied by bond, and ask to be allowed to purchase back the property, he should be allowed to do so upon the terms prescribed in the article. The defendant, by the express provisions of the act, has until the close of the first term of court after the term at which the judgment of forfeiture is entered, in which to file this petition; and it was error for the circuit court to order a sale of the property before the time had elapsed in which the defendant could file his petition and bond to purchase back the property. It is insisted that this premature entry of the judgment of sale is not error because it becomes inoperative if the defendant should, within the time authorized by the act, file its petition to purchase the property back. But the judgment of the court was a final order from which an appeal could be, and now is being, prosecuted, and the circuit court had no control over it, after final adjournment of the term at which it was entered. The judgment of sale, therefore, was erroneous.

It is earnestly insisted that the article in question is a repeal, to a certain extent, at least, of the statute against champerty. But in this we do not concur. The purchaser, in an action to recover the land, or part thereof, would still be required to prove his chain of title, as if there had been no forfeiture or sale. The utmost that could be claimed is that the commissioner's deed, made pursuant to a judgment of court, is not ordinarily subject to the provisions of the statute as against champerty. Conceding this to be true, the only link in the chain of title against which the plea of champerty could be interposed would be the commissioner's deed made pursuant to the sale directed by the judgment; and this plea would not extend to any link in the chain of title antecedent to the commissioner's deed. But, is the commissioner's deed, made under this article, subject to the plea of champerty?

In section three of the article in question, it is provided that:

"No other title, claim, or possession, or continuity thereof, whether owned or claimed by the defendant or by others, shall be forfeited, or in any manner affected by said proceeding."

And by section four of the article, it is provided that:

"No person except a defendant, and no defendant except as herein provided, shall be allowed to purchase back from the Commonwealth, the title so forfeited to, and vested in it, except such defendant as may, but for such forfeiture, establish, in such proceeding, a title thereto in himself, upon which he could maintain an action of ejectment."

As was stated in Farmers' Bank of Kentucky v. Peter, 13 Bush, 591:

"The purchaser takes what he gets. The rule of caveat emptor applies in all its vigor to a sale of real property."

The sale referred to, being a sale by a commissioner under decree of court.

From the provisions of the act above quoted, it is manifest that it was not the intention of the Legislature to take from an occupant any defense that he might theretofore have had, whether of champerty or otherwise. It is expressly stated, that no title, claim, possession, or continuity thereof, by whomsoever owned, shall, in any manner, be affected by said proceeding. We are, therefore, of the opinion, that the benefit of the plea of champerty is not only not taken from the occupant, but it is preserved to him as against the commissioner's deed itself, and that such deed does not come within the general rule that the plea of champerty is not available as against a commissioner's deed.

In Commonwealth v. Rosenfield Bros. & Co., 118 Ky., 374, the court, quoting from Endlich on Interpretation of Statutes, section 295, says:

"Where the language of a statute, in its ordinary meaning and grammatical construction, leads to manifest contradiction of the apparent purpose of the enactment, or to some inconvenience or absurdity, hardship or injustice, presumably not intended, a construction may be put upon it which modifies the meaning of the words, and even the structure of the sentence. This is done sometimes by giving an unusual meaning to particular words, sometimes by altering their collocation, or by rejecting them altogether, or by interpolating other words—under the influence, no doubt, of an irresistible conviction that the Legislature could not possibly have intended what its words signify, and that the modifications thus given are mere corrections of careless language, and really give the true intention. The ascertainment of the latter is the cardinal rule, or rather the end and object of all construction; and where the real design of the Legislature in ordaining a statute, although it be not precisely expressed, is yet plainly perceivable or ascertained with reasonable certainty, the language of the statute must be given such a construction as will carry that design into effect, even though in so doing the exact letter of the law be sacrificed, or though the construction be, indeed, contrary to the letter."

This rule is re-enunciated in an opinion of this court by Judge Barker, filed March 17, 1908, in the case of Morrell Refrigerator Car Co. v. Commonwealth of Kentucky. If it were possible to construe the act in question as contended for by appellant, with respect to champerty, which we do not hold, the rule announced by this court in the above cases would preclude such a construction. But there is nothing in the act indicating such an intention upon the part of the Legislature. Its whole purport is to the contrary, and by specific provision. It declares that the title, claim, or possession of the occupants, or the continuity thereof, should not, in any manner, be affected by the proceedings.

If the occupant has had five years' possession, coupled with the payment of taxes, the forfeited title devolves upon him; if he has not had possession for a sufficient length of time to cause a vestiture of title in him, he, nevertheless, is in possession; and as a sale of the forfeited title to the extent of his possession would be champertous, the title thereto remains in the Commonwealth, and the possession of such occupant, or the continuity thereof, is not in any manner affected thereby. The title to those parts not transferred to the occupant, or which is not adversely held, is alone the subject of sale, and the title to only such parts would pass upon a sale in gross.

The judgment is affirmed in so far as it adjudges a forfeiture of the title and claim of appellant, but for the reasons indicated and because it orders a sale of the land and not of the forfeiture of title, it is reversed for proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Whole court sitting.

BOREING, &c. v. WILSON & MOSS.

(Filed March 25, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Judges—Affidavit of Disqualification—Sufficiency—An attorney appointed by the Governor as a special judge of a court, may properly refuse to vacate the bench upon an affidavit by a litigant that he and the opposing counsel of the litigant happen to be attorneys for the same railroad though in different parts of the State.

2. Same—Likewise a judge is not disqualified to sit in a case because he may be socially entertained by the opposing counsel of one of the litigants, or because he expressed an opinion upon a preliminary motion in the case after hearing the argument thereon and congratulated the opposing counsel on his argument on the motion. Or because of his supposed intention to appoint a receiver in the case, who was not friendly to a deceased party whose estate is involved in the action.

3. Partnership—Acts Constituting—Where three men mutually agree to go in together and buy a large tract of mineral and timbered land and hold it for a profit, each to furnish some of the money, and expense and to do certain work, and, after the sale of the land, each shall have the money he advanced with 7 per cent. interest thereon and his expenses refunded, and to share equally in the balance of the sale money, they are partners in contemplation of law.

4. Settlement of a Partnership—Sharing of Profits—Where in the settlement of a partnership formed for the purchase and sale of land, it is shown that one of the partners sold 500 acres of the partnership land and 500 acres of his individual land in a body at an agreed consideration for the whole 1,000 acres, such partner was bound to account to his co-partners in the 500 acres for one-half of the price he received for the whole tract, and the fact that the partner in making such sale received a part of the consideration in corporation stock did not require his co-partners to accept such stock in payment for their interest in the 500 acres of partnership land sold.

5. Same—Interest Paid on Advancements—Like Interest on Settlement—Where, in the formation of a partnership, it is agreed that each partner shall be allowed eight per cent. interest on advancements made, which was enforced in the settlement of such advancements, it would be equitable and proper in the distribution of the proceeds of the partnership to require each of the partners, on final settlement, to account for eight per cent. interest on the amount due from each from the time the same was received.

D. B. Logan and Greene & VanWinkle for appellants.

Wm. Ayres for appellee Wilson.

J. R. Sampson for appellee Moss.

Appeal from Bell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Wm. Rogers Clay, Commissioner, affirming.

In the spring of the year 1886, appellee John H. Wilson was engaged in the practice of law in Barbourville, Knox county, Kentucky. His services were secured by the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company after that corporation had decided that it would construct a branch railroad from Corbin, on the main line of its Knoxville division, up the Cumberland river into the coal fields of Bell and Harlan counties, or through Cumberland Gap into the coal fields of Wise and Lee counties, Virginia. After appellee Wilson had learned that the road would be constructed, he could readily see that the coal bearing properties along the line of the proposed road would, of necessity, rapidly advance in price, and that the purchase of the lands at the low prices then prevailing, and before it became known that the road would be constructed, would prove a very profitable investment. Appellee had formed the acquaintance of his co-appellee, M. J. Moss, some time prior to 1886, who was engaged in the practice of law in Bell county, and was well acquainted with the inhabitants of that county, and especially the land owners along the line of the proposed railroad. Accordingly they agreed to go into an arrangement by which they would purchase lands and hold them until the prices advanced. Realizing that it would take a large sum of money to carry through the enterprise, they then proposed to Vincent Boreing, a wealthy and influential man in that section of the State, to join the enterprise. It was agreed between the parties to the arrangement that whatever cash was advanced or furnished by either was to be returned to him with interest, and the profits were then to be divided equally among them.

In pursuance of this arrangement, about 5,000 acres of land were purchased. Frequently Moss or Wilson would propose that they get together and draw up a contract accurately defining the rights of each party to the lands in question; sometimes Boreing would make the same proposition. No such contract, however, was ever signed. The matter was permitted to drag along from year to year, and finally, in the year 1903, Vincent Boreing died.

Thereafter the appellee, Wilson, filed his petition in the Bell Circuit Court alleging the existence of a partnership between him and Moss and Boreing. To this petition, appellee Moss and the heirs, devisees and personal representatives of Vincent Boreing were made defendants. The petition, after setting forth the death of Boreing, the dissolution of the partnership by reason thereof, and the qualification of his administrators under the will, alleges that it was agreed, at the inception of the partnership enterprise, that Vincent Boreing should furnish the money necessary to acquire the lands, and that he (Wilson) and Moss should contribute in aid of the enterprise their services and assistance, and, when the land was sold, Boreing should receive the various sums of money which he had advanced from time to time in making the necessary purchases, as well as all reasonable and necessary expenditures in connection therewith, together with seven per cent. interest on said sums of money from the time of their payment by Boreing. The petition further states that it was also agreed that he (Wilson) and Moss should, out of the proceeds, receive from time to time such money, with a like rate of interest thereon, as either of them might have contributed or paid out towards the purchase of said lands, in surveying expenses or other expenses incurred in the acquisition of title thereto; that Boreing had paid on said lands $30,000 or $35,000; that he (Wilson) had paid $2,000 to $2,700, and that Moss had paid $7,000 or $8,000; but that the exact amount that each had paid was unknown to appellee. Appellee then asked a settlement of the partnership accounts, and a reference to the master commissioner for that purpose.

To appellee Wilson's petition, appellee Moss, on December 7th, 1903, filed his answer, counter-claim and cross-petition, making appellants cross-defendants, and joined in the prayer of appellee, Wilson, for a settlement of the partnership accounts. Appellee Moss also set forth in his answer and cross-petition the unsettled and uncertain state of the partnership accounts, as well as the fact that Boreing had furnished, in the purchase of the lands, $30,000 or $35,000, but that the exact amount was unknown to appellee. He also alleged that he had paid in about $7,500, but that Wilson had paid in only about $1,475. Both the petition of appellee Wilson and the answer and cross-petition of appellee, Moss, alleged that Boreing had received large sums of money in the way of rents and proceeds from the sale of lands and timber involved in the controversy, the exact amount of which they did not know. Among other items they alleged that Boreing had received $20,000 for 500 acres of land which was sold by him out of the partnership property to the Bell County Coke & Improvement Company, and that he had also received $3,000 for certain machinery on the Tuckehoe lease which he had sold to A. H. Melcon.

On January 13th, 1904, the appellants herein filed their answer to the original petition of appellee Wilson, and also their reply to the answer, counter-claim and cross-petition of appellee Moss, denying and putting in issue every material allegation of those pleadings. Thereafter certain amended pleadings were filed, and, among them, one by appellee Wilson, asking for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the property during the litigation. Responsive pleadings were then filed and the issues joined on all the material allegations of the several amendments. The court appointed a receiver, qualified and is now in charge of the property. The parties then proceeded with the taking of testimony, and the special judge, Hon.

John McChord, called a special term of the court in the month of July of that year, at which to hear the case.

On July 28th, 1904, one of the administrators, John R. Boreing, presented and filed his affidavit with the clerk of the Bell Circuit Court, in which he claimed that appellants could not get a fair trial of their cause before said special judge. The latter decided that the affidavit was insufficient and declined to vacate the bench. After this affidavit was filed, the case was continued to the October term for further preparation, and was then submitted and tried. The court held that a partnership existed between Wilson, Moss and Boreing; that in the settlement Vincent Boreing's estate should be charged with the sum of $3,000 for the machinery sold to A. H. Melcon, with eight per cent. interest on said sum from the time the money was paid; that said Boreing's estate should be charged with the further sum of $20,000 for the land sold by Boreing to the Bell County Coke & Improvement Company, with eight per cent. interest thereon from the time of the receipt of said sum by Vincent Boreing. On October 29th, 1904, the court entered a judgment in accordance with his conclusion set out above. After the entry of this judgment, appellants filed their written motion asking the court to set aside certain parts thereof, and in support of the motion filed certain affidavits, together with the deed of conveyance executed by Vincent Boreing on the 23rd day of May, 1890, to the Bell County Coke & Improvement Company. Upon the hearing of appellants' motion the court refused to set aside any portion of the judgment entered. Of the judgment and of the refusal of the trial court to set certain portions thereof aside, appellants now complain.

This appeal involves the determination of the following questions: (1.) Did the special judge err in refusing to vacate the bench? (2.) Did the transaction between appellees and Vincent Boreing constitute a partnership? (3.) Was A. H. Melcon, who purchased the machinery on the Tuckahoe lease, competent to testify for appellees, and did the court err in charging the estate of Vincent Boreing with the sum of $3,000 paid by said Melcon for said machinery? (4.) Did the court err in charging the estate of Vincent Boreing for the 500 acres of partnership land sold by Boreing to the Bell County Coke & Improvement Company, and fixing the sum to be charged at $20,000? (5.) Did the court err in charging the estate of Vincent Boreing interest at the rate of eight per cent on said sums of $3,000 and $20,000 from the time said sums were received by him? (6.) Did the lower court properly overrule the motion of appellants to set aside those portions of the judgment respecting said items of $3,000 and $20,000, and to refer same to the commissioner for further proof?

First. On July 28th, 1904, appellant John R. Boreing, for himself and his co-appellants, filed the following affidavit in which he set forth legal grounds why the special judge should vacate the bench:

"The affiant, John R. Boreing, says that he is one of the defendants in the above styled cause and is the only one taking an active interest in the defense herein; that his co-defendants, Julia T. Williams, Sallie Boreing, Belle Young, James M. Boreing, May Melcon and this affiant are the only devisees of Vincent Boreing, deceased. The other defendants, to-wit: A. H. Melcon, J. M. Williams and Joseph Young are nominally defendants only, the husbands of affiant's married sisters.

"This affiant says he does not believe the Hon. John McChord, the special judge, appointed and commissioned herein to try this cause, by the Hon. J. C. W. Beckham, Governor of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, can or will give these defendants a fair and impartial trial of the issues herein, or that he can or will impartially try and decide the issues herein between the plaintiff, J. H. Wilson and the cross-plaintiff, M. J. Moss, on one side and these defendants, the brother and sisters of this affiant and himself, on the other.

"This affiant's belief is based upon the following grounds:

"He says that since the last term of this court he has learned and he avers it to be true, that the said special judge, John McChord, is an attorney and representative of the L. & N. R. R. Co., a corporation owning and operating a line of railroad through Bell county, Kentucky, and through several other counties in the State of Kentucky, with its chief office at Louisville, Kentucky, which line of railroad extends through Marion county, Kentucky, in which said special judge resides; that one J. W. Alcorn, is likewise an attorney and representative for said L. & N. R. R. Co., and as such superintends, conducts and has charge of the litigation in which said railroad company is involved from Louisville, Kentucky, to Cumberland Gap, and has the right to direct and does direct and superintend and advise other attorneys engaged in the service of said L. & N. R. R. Co., from Louisville to Cumberland Gap, including said special judge, John McChord; that the cross-plaintiff, M. J. Moss, is the regular circuit judge of the 26th judicial district, of which district Bell county is a part, and that the said J. W. Alcorn practices law in the said 26th judicial district and in the Bell Circuit Court, giving his attention almost exclusively to the litigation of said L. & N. R. R. Co.; that he, the said J. W. Alcorn, likewise practices in the Laurel Circuit Court where this affiant and his brothers and sisters live; that the affiant, as president of the Bell Coke & Improvement Co., which is the owner of a part of the property claimed in the pending controversy to have been once owned by the alleged partnership alleged to have existed by and between the decedent, Vincent Boreing, the plaintiff, John Henry Wilson and cross-plaintiff, M. J. Moss, has caused an action to be instituted in the Laurel Circuit Court to recover of the said M. J. Moss five hundred dollars ($500) alleged to be due said company on the subscription of said Moss to its capital stock; that the said J. W. Alcorn is one of the attorneys of said Moss in said action, and that although he does not sign the pleadings as attorney he in everything else represents said Moss as attorney in said cause, withholding his name from the pleadings. He aided in the preparation of the answer of said Moss in said cause while in Bell county, and prepared an affidavit of said Moss for delay in said cause, and presented and filed it in the Laurel Circuit Court, making at the time a speech to the court which plainly showed his personal animosity toward the affiant; and that the said J. W. Alcorn has on several other occasions manifested his inclination to be strongly adverse to the welfare of the estate of Vincent Boreing, and that he has, without fee or compensation, on several occasions opposed the successful winding up of said estate, and has on each and every occasion shown his bitter personal dislike and antagonism for and toward the said estate and those representing it and this affiant; that said Alcorn is a very warm personal friend of the said M. J. Moss, the said judge of the Bell Circuit Court, and his influence over the said judge is such that, in litigation in said court in which said company is involved and wherein said Moss presides as judge, the railroad company wins almost uniformly and the opposing litigants lose; that said company owns and maintains a branch of its railroad through Bell county and has various shops and its superintendent's division therein, and that it has almost continuously litigation in the Bell Circuit Court.

"Affiant further says that the said L. & N. R. R. Co., under contract with three of the lessors of the property in controversy in this action, has built a spur or a short railroad from the L. & N. main track at Four Mile, Kentucky, up Four Mile Creek and through and over the property in controversy, and that the continuance of its operation is made to depend upon contingencies regarding the successful operation of said property as a coal mining property and most especially upon the construction of ambiguous contracts with the said L. & N. R. R. Co., regarding the construction of said spur or branch railway which ambiguous contracts this affiant believes and avers will, before the termination of this suit, be litigated in this very action in order to establish the relative rights of the said L. & N. R. R. Co., and this affiant and his brother and sisters, the heirs and devisees of said Vincent Boreing, in, to and concerning said spur or branch railway up Four Mile Creek. Affiant further says that the said spur or branch railway has not been fully paid for by the said lessors of the property or the property-owners, and that there will probably arise in this very suit a controversy between this affiant and the other heirs and devisees of Vincent Boreing and the plaintiff, John Henry Wilson, and the cross-plaintiff, M. J. Moss, and the said L. & N. R. R. Co., over the construction of said spur or branch railway, and the amount of its cost and construction and the manner of payment of same, and this affiant believes that an attorney for the L. & N. R. R. Co., could not, as judge in this case, wherein the interests of the said L. & N. R. R. Co. will probably become adverse to this affiant and his brother and sisters, who claim in this action to be the sole owners of the property in controversy, impartially or fairly decide this controversy and the issues which may place the said L. & N. R. R. Co., in a more advantageous position when said controversy between them and this affiant, his brother and sister arises, and in which the said special judge, John McChord, as a servant and attorney of said railroad company will, as affiant believes, be interested and will desire a coalition of the interests of said company and the interests of the plaintiff John H. Wilson and cross-plaintiff M. J. Moss, and especially that of the said Moss, because of his official position and power as circuit judge; that personally and socially the said special judge has shown toward the plaintiff Wilson and the cross-plaintiff Moss and his attorneys, J. R. Sampson and William Ayres, special favoritism and has seemingly, on the other hand, in minor matters in this cause, given these defendants no quarter in this proceeding up to the present time. And this affiant is informed and believes and avers that said judge has repeatedly stated and declared to persons outside of the courthouse and in private conversations that he had no doubt of the existence of a partnership between the decedent, Vincent Boreing, the cross-plaintiff, M. J. Moss, and the plaintiff, John H. Wilson, and that he had become satisfied of this fact before he had heard half of the testimony on the plaintiff's application for a receiver, tried last January, the main and about the only question to be tried in this cause and the only issue of any importance is whether or not a partnership actually existed between said parties. Whether or not a partnership was ever formed or ever existed is the vital issue in this cause, and this affiant and his brother and sisters feel that this issue can not be fairly or properly tried by a judge who has already formed and expressed his opinion that such a partnership did exist. That affiant, just after the trial of the motion for receiver herein tried at the January term, 1904, of this court, at the Edwards House, in Pineville, Kentucky, heard the said special judge, John McChord, congratulate said William Ayres, attorney for plaintiff Wilson, upon his able presentation of the grounds and cause made for receiver in this cause, and in his congratulatory address to said Ayres he said that before said Ayres was half through the presentation of his side (said McChord) was of the opinion that a partnership in fact did exist between the decedent, Vincent Boreing, the plaintiff, John H. Wilson, and the cross-plaintiff, M. J. Moss, and that a receiver should be appointed therein on that ground to take charge of the partnership property; and when said Ayres had finished his speech he was conclusively convinced of the same. Said judge was thanked very much for the compliment by said Ayres in garceful terms, and this affiant was informed and believes that said special judge made similar statements at other times and to other persons regarding this case.

"Affiant further says that he is reliably informed and believes it to be true that the said special judge, John McChord, has been approached for the purpose of having C. W. Metcalf appointed special commissioner in this cause for hearing proof and settling the alleged partnership accounts between the plaintiff, Wilson, the cross-plaintiff, Moss, and Vincent Boreing's estate, and that said judge has promised to make said appointment in event it is determined by him, the said special judge's decision that a partnership ever existed between said plaintiff, Wilson, cross-plaintiff, Moss, and Vincent Boreing, and that affiant believes that said special judge has already from his expressions of opinion, made outside of the court and in conversations, determined to adjudge and decide that said partnership did exist, and that the appointment of Metcalf is to follow as one of the steps in this case. Said C. W. Metcalf is also a practicing attorney in the Bell Circuit Court, and is the attorney for the L. & N. R. R. Co. in Bell county, Kentucky. He was a bitter political enemy of the late Vincent Boreing in his lifetime, and carried said political feeling so far that it became personal hate and malice. The said Metcalf is also governed and controlled as attorney for the L. & N. by J. W. Alcorn. Upon the recommendation of the cross-plaintiff, M. J. Moss, and in possession of a letter from said Moss to the Governor of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, in February, 1904, the said Metcalf on a personal call to said Governor was appointed special judge of the 26th judicial district of Kentucky, to hold the February term of the Letcher and Perry Circuit Courts, while the cross-plaintiff, Moss, was in Bell county preparing this case for trial, and giving his own deposition as a witness. Metcalf, as affiant believes, can not but feel that he owes favors to the said cross-plaintiff, Moss, for these acts performed in his favor, enabling him to become special judge as aforesaid. In addition to these facts the said Metcalf, like other lawyers employed for the L. & N. R. R. Co., desires that the interests of judges and other officers of courts charged with duties in the administration of justice and the L. & N. R. R. Co., shall not run counter to each other, but act in harmony and for each other's mutual assistance and benefit. Affiant does not believe said Metcalf, under such circumstances, would be a proper person to hear proof, or could fairly decide upon matters of account in this case, and that said judge has determined to appoint him. Affiant has learned these facts since the last term of court and within the last week.

"The application for the appointment of receiver was tried when the defendants had no time or opportunity for preparation of the defendants' side of the case and at a time when defendants' attorney, D. B. Logan's office had just been destroyed by fire and his office furniture, books and papers turned upside down in a heap and said attorney overworked and illy prepared for the presentation of a defense to the motion. These facts were known to the judge as well as to the plaintiff Wilson and cross-plaintiff Moss and their attorneys, and the necessity for a receiver, affiant believes was wholly lacking and that his appointment was improvident and entails cost alone without benefit to the owners of the property in controversy, and that the application for a receiver was made alone to annoy the defendants and this affiant.

"This affiant expects to file grounds and make a motion for conclusion of this cause to enable defendants to prepare this cause for trial. The grounds and reason for the motion will be fully stated in the affidavits in support thereof, and this affiant does not believe that the present special judge, the Hon. John McChord, will impartially or fairly try or decide the said motion because of reasons hereinbefore stated. Affiant said the foregoing statements are true as he verily believes:

"Wherefore, this affiant and his co-defendants ask that upon consideration of these reasons the special judge decline to hear or try further motions herein or to try this case, and for other proceedings according to law and the practice of this court."

Passing the question whether or not this affidavit was filed in time, we will proceed to the discussion of the grounds relied upon. It will be observed that the first point relied upon by appellant John R. Boreing in his affidavit is that both the special judge and J. W. Alcorn are attorneys for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company; that Alcorn is superior in authority to the special judge, and has been indirectly assisting appellee, Moss, in an action brought against him by the Bell County Coke & Improvement Company, to recover $5,000 alleged to be due by him on a subscription to its capital stock; that Alcorn in a speech in that case had shown personal hostility towards the affiant and an inclination to be strongly adverse to the welfare of the Vincent Boreing estate. These might be reasons why J. W. Alcorn, if appointed special judge, should not act; but we can not conclude, merely because the special judge and J. W. Alcorn happened to be attorneys for the same railroad, though living in different parts of the State, that whatever hostility J. W. Alcorn had would be transferred to the special judge. By such allegations no hostility on the part of the special judge is shown, but a mere probability that the hostility of a co-employee of the same railroad might be imparted to the special judge.

The second point is that the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company, under contract with certain lessors of coal lands in controversy in this action, had built a spur track up Four Mile Creek, and it was possible that litigation might arise with that railroad in connection with those matters, and if such controversy should arise, the special judge would not impartially or fairly decide the matters involved in this litigation. If a reason such as this were sufficient to require a special judge to vacate the bench, we doubt if any special judge would ever be able to preside in a case which he was appointed to try. This allegation contains no fact showing hostility, prejudice or bias, but sets forth a mere conjecture that by some possibility, nebulous and remote, there might arise in the future—no one knows when—a controversy either in this action or in some other, between the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company and the appellants and appellees respecting that railroad spur. Because of that remote contingency, we are asked to conclude that the special judge was disqualified from sitting in this case. It is hardly necessary to say that such an allegation states no grounds disqualifying the special judge. The mere statement of the proposition carries with it its own refutation.

The next point is that the special judge had shown favoritism, both personally and socially, towards appellees, Moss and Wilson, and their attorneys. This is not the kind of favoritism that disqualifies a judge from acting; it is only judicial favoritism that disqualifies a judge. The time has not come in this State when the ordinary courtesies and amenities of life are to be dispensed with. From time immemorial, it has been customary for visiting judges to be entertained by members of the bar. Wherever a judge is called there are necessarily some lawyers with whom he is on terms of intimacy, more or less pronounced. The fact that he seeks the company of those who are most congenial can not be construed as an evidence of judicial corruption. It is no infrequent thing for members of the bar throughout this State, who practice before this court, to be entertained by members of the court while in attendance thereon; and we may further say it not infrequently happens that immediately after a visiting practitioner before this court has been thus entertained, his host has gone to the consultation room, and, after a consideration of his case, has noted that his side was without merit. Our opinion of the bar of this State is too high for us to conclude that a man called to the high position of a judge will render an unfair or corrupt decision merely because of social courtesies extended him. Neither the acceptance nor the refusal of an invitation to dine can be considered as an evidence of such bias or friendship as to indicate a lack of judicial integrity.

But counsel for appellant rely particularly upon the allegation in the affidavit that affiant was informed, and believes and charges, that the special judge had repeatedly stated and declared to persons outside the court house and in private conversation, that he had no doubt of the existence of a partnership between Boreing, Wilson and Moss, "and that he had become satisfied of this fact before he had heard half of the testimony on plaintiff's application for a receiver tried last January;" that whether or not a partnership existed was a vital issue in the case, and that this issue could not be fairly and properly tried by a judge who had already formed and expressed his opinion that such partnership did exist; that the special judge stated to William Ayres, one of the attorneys for appellees, that before he was half through the presentation of his side, he (the special judge) was of the opinion that a partnership did in fact exist, and that when said Ayres finished his speech he was conclusively convinced of same; that said special judge was thanked very much by said Ayres for the compliment in graceful terms. For the purpose of determining whether or not the facts above alleged are sufficient to disqualify the special judge, we must take into consideration the fact that appellees in this action sought not only a settlement of the partnership affairs, but asked that a receiver be appointed to take charge of the partnership property. Upon the hearing of this application, almost the same evidence was heard as upon the final submission of the case. For the purpose of determining whether or not a receiver should be appointed, the special judge heard evidence and argument upon the question whether or not a partnership existed. He concluded that there was a partnership, and, because upon this hearing he complimented the attorneys for the appellees upon their presentation of their side of the case, and also stated to various parties that he was satisfied before he had heard half the testimony, and before Ayres was half through his argument, that there was a partnership, it is contended that the special judge thereby prejudiced the main issue which was thereafter to be determined in this case, and consequently became disqualified from further acting. If this were the law, then every time a judge passes upon a preliminary motion, or sustains or overrules a demurrer, thus indicating his views of the case, he would be disqualified from further sitting in the case. If appellants' contention were sound, it would then be impossible for any one judge to try a whole case; every time he indicated his ruling upon any question involved it would be apparent that he had prejudged the case so far as that point was concerned. We can not concur in such a view, nor can we hold that because the special judge complimented one of the attorneys upon his able presentation of the case, he thus became disqualified from further acting in the case.

The last point relied on in the affidavit is the allegation that the special judge intended to appoint C. W. Metcalf special commissioner for the purpose of hearing proof and settling the partnership accounts; that Metcalf was a personal enemy of appellants' father, Vincent Boreing, and was also under great obligations to appellee, Moss. At the time the affidavit was filed the appointment of a commissioner had not come up for action by the court. If the special judge had really contemplated the appointment of Metcalf, there is nothing to show that he knew of the latter's disqualification by reason of his personal hostility towards Vincent Boreing. The facts stated were good reasons why Metcalf should not be appointed commissioner; these could be relied upon when the court determined to make the appointment. The allegation did not show any disqualification on the part of the special judge, but merely set forth reasons why Metcalf should not be appointed commissioner.

A careful reading of the whole affidavit leads to the conclusion that it does not come up to the requirements of the law. In German Insurance Co. v. Landrum, 88 Ky., 433, the rule is thus stated: "While the Legislature has said that if any affidavit is made by the litigant, that the judge will not afford him a fair trial, he shall not preside, the facts upon which this general averment is made must appear, and they must be such as brings the case within the legislative meaning." In this case no such facts are stated. The affidavit is made up of mere inferences, suspicions and conjectures, and does not comply with the provisions of the Code as interpreted by this court. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the special judge did not err in refusing to vacate the bench.

Second. Did the transaction between appellees and Vincent Boreing constitute a partnership?

The record in this case consists of about 2,000 pages of typewritten matter. A large part of the evidence is embraced in letters which passed between Boreing, Wilson and Moss. Several disinterested witnesses gave their depositions. Wilson and Moss each testified. At the time their testimony was given, Vincent Boreing was dead. Exceptions were sustained to that portion of their testimony which related to things said or done by, or transacted with Vincent Boreing. It was contended below that, while neither Moss nor Wilson could testify for himself, each could testify for the other. The trial court did not take this view of the case. On this appeal we are asked to review this action of the trial court, and hold that this ruling was improper. No cross-appeal, however, was prayed by, and granted to appellees, and we, therefore, deem it unnecessary to determine this question.

It would extend this opinion to too great length to give anything like a brief abstract of the testimony. Suffice it to say that the writings signed by Vincent Boreing, and the letters which passed between him and Moss and Wilson, show conclusively that the contract between them was that lands along the route of the proposed extension of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company were to be purchased for their joint benefit; that the legal title thereto was to be taken in the name of Vincent Boreing and held by him in trust for himself, Moss and Wilson; that the information with reference to the proposed line of railway was to be furnished by Wilson; that Wilson and Moss were to do the greater portion of the work in connection with the selection of the lands, the perfection of the titles, &c.; that the main portion of the capital necessary to finance the enterprise was to be furnished by Vincent Boreing; that before there was a division of profits, the amount of money furnished by each party, with interest of not less than seven per cent. was to be returned. These sums words signify, and that the modifications thus given are mere corrections of careless language, and really give the true intention. The ascertainment of the latter is the cardinal rule, or rather the end and object of all construction; and where the real design of the Legislature in ordaining a statute, although it be not precisely expressed, is yet plainly perceivable or ascertained with reasonable certainty, the language of the statute must be given such a construction as will carry that design into effect, even though in so doing the exact letter of the law be sacrificed, or though the construction be, indeed, contrary to the letter."

This rule is re-enunciated in an opinion of this court by Judge Barker, filed March 17, 1908, in the case of Morrell Refrigerator Car Co. v. Commonwealth of Kentucky. If it were possible to construe the act in question as contended for by appellant, with respect to champerty, which we do not hold, the rule announced by this court in the above cases would preclude such a construction. But there is nothing in the act indicating such an intention upon the part of the Legislature. Its whole purport is to the contrary, and by specific provision, it declares that the title, claim, or possession of the occupants, or the continuity thereof, should not, in any manner, be affected by the proceedings.

If the occupant has had five years' possession, coupled with the payment of taxes, the forfeited title devolves upon him; if he has not had possession for a sufficient length of time to cause a vestiture of title in him, he, nevertheless, is in possession; and as a sale of the forfeited title to the extent of his possession would be champertous, the title thereto remains in the Commonwealth, and the possession of such occupant, or the continuity thereof, is not in any manner affected thereby. The title to those parts not transferred to the occupant, or which is not adversely held, is alone the subject of sale, and the title to only such parts would pass upon a sale in gross.

The judgment is affirmed in so far as it adjudges a forfeiture of the title and claim of appellant, but for the reasons indicated and because it orders a sale of the land and not of the forfeiture of title, it is reversed for proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Whole court sitting.

BOREING, &c. v. WILSON & MOSS.

(Filed March 25, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Judges—Affidavit of Disqualification—Sufficiency—An attorney appointed by the Governor as a special judge of a court, may properly refuse to vacate the bench upon an affidavit by a litigant that he and the opposing counsel of the litigant happen to be attorneys for the same railroad though in different parts of the State.

2. Same—Likewise a judge is not disqualified to sit in a case because he may be socially entertained by the opposing counsel of one of the litigants, or because he expressed an opinion upon a preliminary motion in the case after hearing the argument thereon and congratulated the opposing counsel on his argument on the motion. Or because of his supposed intention to appoint a receiver in the case, who was not friendly to a deceased party whose estate is involved in the action.

3. Partnership—Acts Constituting—Where three men mutually agree to go in together and buy a large tract of mineral and timbered land and hold it for a profit, each to furnish some of the money, and expense and to do certain work, and, after the sale of the land, each shall have the money he advanced with 7 per cent. interest thereon and his expenses refunded, and to share equally in the balance of the sale money, they are partners in contemplation of law.

4. Settlement of a Partnership—Sharing of Profits—Where in the settlement of a partnership formed for the purchase and sale of land, it is shown that one of the partners sold 500 acres of the partnership land and 500 acres of his individual land in a body at an agreed consideration for the whole 1,000 acres, such partner was bound to account to his co-partners in the 500 acres for one-half of the price he received for the whole tract, and the fact that the partner in making such sale received a part of the consideration in corporation stock did not require his co-partners to accept such stock in payment for their interest in the 500 acres of partnership land sold.

5. Same—Interest Paid on Advancements—Like Interest on Settlement—Where, in the formation of a partnership, it is agreed that each partner shall be allowed eight per cent. interest on advancements made, which was enforced in the settlement of such advancements, it would be equitable and proper in the distribution of the proceeds of the partnership to require each of the partners, on final settlement, to account for eight per cent. interest on the amount due from each from the time the same was received.

D. B. Logan and Greene & VanWinkle for appellants.

Wm. Ayres for appellee Wilson.

J. R. Sampson for appellee Moss.

Appeal from Bell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Wm. Rogers Clay, Commissioner, affirming.

In the spring of the year 1886, appellee John H. Wilson was engaged in the practice of law in Barbourville, Knox county, Kentucky. His services were secured by the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company after that corporation had decided that it would construct a branch railroad from Corbin, on the main line of its Knoxville division, up the Cumberland river into the coal fields of Bell and Harlan counties, or through Cumberland Gap into the coal fields of Wise and Lee counties, Virginia. After appellee Wilson had learned that the road would be constructed, he could readily see that the coal bearing properties along the line of the proposed road would, of necessity, rapidly advance in price, and that the purchase of the lands at the low prices then prevailing, and before it became known that the road would be constructed, would prove a very profitable investment. Appellee had formed the acquaintance of his co-appellee, M. J. Moss, some time prior to 1886, who was engaged in the practice of law in Bell county, and was well acquainted with the inhabitants of that county, and especially the land owners along the line of the proposed railroad. Accordingly they agreed to go into an arrangement by which they would purchase lands and hold them until the prices advanced. Realizing that it would take a large sum of money to carry through the enterprise, they then proposed to Vincent Boreing, a wealthy and influential man in that section of the State, to join the enterprise. It was agreed between the parties to the arrangement that whatever cash was advanced or furnished by either was to be returned to him with interest, and the profits were then to be divided equally among them.

In pursuance of this arrangement, about 5,000 acres of land were purchased. Frequently Moss or Wilson would propose that they get together and draw up a contract accurately defining the rights of each party to the lands in question; sometimes Boreing would make the same proposition. No such contract, however, was ever signed. The matter was permitted to drag along from year to year, and finally, in the year 1903, Vincent Boreing died.

Thereafter the appellee, Wilson, filed his petition in the Bell Circuit Court alleging the existence of a partnership between him and Moss and Boreing. To this petition, appellee Moss and the heirs, devisees and personal representatives of Vincent Boreing were made defendants. The petition, after setting forth the death of Boreing, the dissolution of the partnership by reason thereof, and the qualification of his administrators under the will, alleges that it was agreed, at the inception of the partnership enterprise, that Vincent Boreing should furnish the money necessary to acquire the lands, and that he (Wilson) and Moss should contribute in aid of the enterprise their services and assistance, and, when the land was sold, Boreing should receive the various sums of money which he had advanced from time to time in making the necessary purchases, as well as all reasonable and necessary expenditures in connection therewith, together with seven per cent. interest on said sums of money from the time of their payment by Boreing. The petition further states that it was also agreed that he (Wilson) and Moss should, out of the proceeds, receive from time to time such money, with a like rate of interest thereon, as either of them might have contributed or paid out towards the purchase of said lands, in surveying expenses or other expenses incurred in the acquisition of title thereto; that Boreing had paid on said lands $30,000 or $35,000; that he (Wilson) had paid $2,000 to $2,700, and that Moss had paid $7,000 or $8,000; but that the exact amount that each had paid was unknown to appellee. Appellee then asked a settlement of the partnership accounts, and a reference to the master commissioner for that purpose.

To appellee Wilson's petition, appellee Moss, on December 7th, 1903, filed his answer, counter-claim and cross-petition, making appellants cross-defendants, and joined in the prayer of appellee, Wilson, for a settlement of the partnership accounts. Appellee Moss also set forth in his answer and cross-petition the unsettled and uncertain state of the partnership accounts, as well as the fact that Boreing had furnished, in the purchase of the lands, $30,000 or $35,000, but that the exact amount was unknown to appellee. He also alleged that he had paid in about $7,500, but that Wilson had paid in only about $1,475. Both the petition of appellee Wilson and the answer and cross-petition of appellee, Moss, alleged that Boreing had received large sums of money in the way of rents and proceeds from the sale of lands and timber involved in the controversy, the exact amount of which they did not know. Among other items they alleged that Boreing had received $20,000 for 500 acres of land which was sold by him out of the partnership property to the Bell County Coke & Improvement Company, and that he had also received $3,000 for certain machinery on the Tuckehoe lease which he had sold to A. H. Melcon.

On January 13th, 1904, the appellants herein filed their answer to the original petition of appellee Wilson, and also their reply to the answer, counter-claim and cross-petition of appellee Moss, denying and putting in issue every material allegation of those pleadings. Thereafter certain amended pleadings were filed, and, among them, one by appellee Wilson, asking for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the property during the litigation. Responsive pleadings were then filed and the issues joined on all the material allegations of the several amendments. The court appointed a receiver, who qualified and is now in charge of the property. The parties then proceeded with the taking of testimony, and the special judge, Hon.

John McChord, called a special term of the court in the month of July of that year, at which to hear the case.

On July 28th, 1904, one of the administrators, John R. Boreing, presented and filed his affidavit with the clerk of the Bell Circuit Court, in which he claimed that appellants could not get a fair trial of their cause before said special judge. The latter decided that the affidavit was insufficient and declined to vacate the bench. After this affidavit was filed, the case was continued to the October term for further preparation, and was then submitted and tried. The court held that a partnership existed between Wilson, Moss and Boreing; that in the settlement Vincent Boreing's estate should be charged with the sum of $3,000 for the machinery sold to A. H. Melcon, with eight per cent. interest on said sum from the time the money was paid; that said Boreing's estate should be charged with the further sum of $20,000 for the land sold by Boreing to the Bell County Coke & Improvement Company, with eight per cent. interest thereon from the time of the receipt of said sum by Vincent Boreing. On October 29th, 1904, the court entered a judgment in accordance with his conclusion set out above. After the entry of this judgment, appellants filed their written motion asking the court to set aside certain parts thereof, and in support of the motion filed certain affidavits, together with the deed of conveyance executed by Vincent Boreing on the 23rd day of May, 1890, to the Bell County Coke & Improvement Company. Upon the hearing of appellants' motion the court refused to set aside any portion of the judgment entered. Of the judgment and of the refusal of the trial court to set certain portions thereof aside, appellants now complain.

This appeal involves the determination of the following questions: (1.) Did the special judge err in refusing to vacate the bench? (2.) Did the transaction between appellees and Vincent Boreing constitute a partnership? (3.) Was A. H. Melcon, who purchased the machinery on the Tuckahoe lease, competent to testify for appellees, and did the court err in charging the estate of Vincent Boreing with the sum of $3,000 paid by said Melcon for said machinery? (4.) Did the court err in charging the estate of Vincent Boreing for the 500 acres of partnership land sold by Boreing to the Bell County Coke & Improvement Company, and fixing the sum to be charged at $20,000? (5.) Did the court err in charging the estate of Vincent Boreing interest at the rate of eight per cent on said sums of $3,000 and $20,000 from the time said sums were received by him? (6.) Did the lower court properly overrule the motion of appellants to set aside those portions of the judgment respecting said items of $3,000 and $20,000, and to refer same to the commissioner for further proof?

First. On July 28th, 1904, appellant John R. Boreing, for himself and his co-appellants, filed the following affidavit in which he set forth legal grounds why the special judge should vacate the bench:

"The affiant, John R. Boreing, says that he is one of the defendants in the above styled cause and is the only one taking an active interest in the defense herein; that his co-defendants, Julia T. Williams, Sallie Boreing, Belle Young, James M. Boreing, May Melcon and this affiant are the only devisees of Vincent Boreing, deceased. The other defendants, to-wit: A. H. Melcon, J. M. Williams and Joseph Young are nominally defendants only, the husbands of affiant's married sisters.

"This affiant says he does not believe the Hon. John McChord, the special judge, appointed and commissioned herein to try this cause, by the Hon. J. C. W. Beckham, Governor of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, can or will give these defendants a fair and impartial trial of the issues herein, or that he can or will impartially try and decide the issues herein between the plaintiff, J. H. Wilson and the cross-plaintiff, M. J. Moss, on one side and these defendants, the brother and sisters of this affiant and himself, on the other.

"This affiant's belief is based upon the following grounds:

"He says that since the last term of this court he has learned and he avers it to be true, that the said special judge, John McChord, is an attorney and representative of the L. & N. R. R. Co., a corporation owning and operating a line of railroad through Bell county, Kentucky, and through several other counties in the State of Kentucky, with its chief office at Louisville, Kentucky, which line of railroad extends through Marion county, Kentucky, in which said special judge resides; that one J. W. Alcorn, is likewise an attorney and representative for said L. & N. R. R. Co., and as such superintends, conducts and has charge of the litigation in which said railroad company is involved from Louisville, Kentucky, to Cumberland Gap, and has the right to direct and does direct and superintend and advise other attorneys engaged in the service of said L. & N. R. R. Co., from Louisville to Cumberland Gap, including said special judge, John McChord; that the cross-plaintiff, M. J. Moss, is the regular circuit judge of the 26th judicial district, of which district Bell county is a part, and that the said J. W. Alcorn practices law in the said 26th judicial district and in the Bell Circuit Court, giving his attention almost exclusively to the litigation of said L. & N. R. R. Co.; that he, the said J. W. Alcorn, likewise practices in the Laurel Circuit Court where this affiant and his brothers and sisters live; that the affiant, as president of the Bell Coke & Improvement Co., which is the owner of a part of the property claimed in the pending controversy to have been once owned by the alleged partnership alleged to have existed by and between the decedent, Vincent Boreing, the plaintiff, John Henry Wilson and cross-plaintiff, M. J. Moss, has caused an action to be instituted in the Laurel Circuit Court to recover of the said M. J. Moss five hundred dollars ($500) alleged to be due said company on the subscription of said Moss to its capital stock; that the said J. W. Alcorn is one of the attorneys of said Moss in said action, and that although he does not sign the pleadings as attorney he in everything else represents said Moss as attorney in said cause, withholding his name from the pleadings. He aided in the preparation of the answer of said Moss in said cause while in Bell county, and prepared an affidavit of said Moss for delay in said cause, and presented and filed it in the Laurel Circuit Court, making at the time a speech to the court which plainly showed his personal animosity toward the affiant; and that the said J. W. Alcorn has on several other occasions manifested his inclination to be strongly adverse to the welfare of the estate of Vincent Boreing, and that he has, without fee or compensation, on several occasions opposed the successful winding up of said estate, and has on each and every occasion shown his bitter personal dislike and antagonism for and toward the said estate and those representing it and this affiant; that said Alcorn is a very warm personal friend of the said M. J. Moss, the said judge of the Bell Circuit Court, and his influence over the said judge is such that, in litigation in said court in which said company is involved and wherein said Moss presides as judge, the railroad company wins almost uniformly and the opposing litigants lose; that said company owns and maintains a branch of its railroad through Bell county and has various shops and its superintendent's division therein, and that it has almost continuously litigation in the Bell Circuit Court.

"Affiant further says that the said L. & N. R. R. Co., under contract with three of the lessors of the property in controversy in this action, has built a spur or a short railroad from the L. & N. main track at Four Mile, Kentucky, up Four Mile Creek and through and over the property in controversy, and that the continuance of its operation is made to depend upon contingencies regarding the successful operation of said property as a coal mining property and most especially upon the construction of ambiguous contracts with the said L. & N. R. R. Co., regarding the construction of said spur or branch railway which ambiguous contracts this affiant believes and avers will, before the termination of this suit, be litigated in this very action in order to establish the relative rights of the said L. & N. R. R. Co., and this affiant and his brother and sisters, the heirs and devisees of said Vincent Boreing, in, to and concerning said spur or branch railway up Four Mile Creek. Affiant further says that the said spur or branch railway has not been fully paid for by the said lessors of the property or the property-owners, and that there will probably arise in this very suit a controversy between this affiant and the other heirs and devisees of Vincent Boreing and the plaintiff, John Henry Wilson, and the cross-plaintiff, M. J. Moss, and the said L. & N. R. R. Co., over the construction of said spur or branch railway, and the amount of its cost and construction and the manner of payment of same, and this affiant believes that an attorney for the L. & N. R. R. Co., could not, as judge in this case, wherein the interests of the said L. & N. R. R. Co. will probably become adverse to this affiant and his brother and sisters, who claim in this action to be the sole owners of the property in controversy, impartially or fairly decide this controversy and the issues which may place the said L. & N. R. R. Co., in a more advantageous position when said controversy between them and this affiant, his brother and sister arises, and in which the said special judge, John McChord, as a servant and attorney of said railroad company will, as affiant believes, be interested and will desire a coalition of the interests of said company and the interests of the plaintiff John H. Wilson and cross-plaintiff M. J. Moss, and especially that of the said Moss, because of his official position and power as circuit judge; that personally and socially the said special judge has shown toward the plaintiff Wilson and the cross-plaintiff Moss and his attorneys, J. R. Sampson and William Ayres, special favoritism and has seemingly, on the other hand, in minor matters in this cause, given these defendants no quarter in this proceeding up to the present time. And this affiant is informed and believes and avers that said judge has repeatedly stated and declared to persons outside of the courthouse and in private conversations that he had no doubt of the existence of a partnership between the decedent, Vincent Boreing, the cross-plaintiff, M. J. Moss, and the plaintiff, John H. Wilson, and that he had become satisfied of this fact before he had heard half of the testimony on the plaintiff's application for a receiver, tried last January, the main and about the only question to be tried in this cause and the only issue of any importance is whether or not a partnership actually existed between said parties. Whether or not a partnership was ever formed or ever existed is the vital issue in this cause, and this affiant and his brother and sisters feel that this issue can not be fairly or properly tried by a judge who has already formed and expressed his opinion that such a partnership did exist. That affiant, just after the trial of the motion for receiver herein tried at the January term, 1904, of this court, at the Edwards House, in Pineville, Kentucky, heard the said special judge, John McChord, congratulate said William Ayres, attorney for plaintiff Wilson, upon his able presentation of the grounds and cause made for receiver in this cause, and in his congratulatory address to said Ayres he said that before said Ayres was half through the presentation of his side (said McChord) was of the opinion that a partnership in fact did exist between the decedent, Vincent Boreing, the plaintiff, John H. Wilson, and the cross-plaintiff, M. J. Moss, and that a receiver should be ap-commissioner for the purpose of hearing proof and reporting thereon. They insist that the trial court should have awarded them a new trial, not only on this ground, but because of the facts alleged in certain affidavits and contained in the deed of Vincent Boreing to the Bell County Coke & Improvement Company, dated May 3, 1890, purporting to convey a certain boundary of land, whose area is not stated, in consideration of $25,000.00, of which $12,500.00 was paid and $12,500.00 was to be paid in twelve months from March 1, 1890. We have carefully read the affidavits pro and con, and are of the opinion that the questions relating to the $3,000 and $20,000.00 transactions were taken up, heard and discussed by the trial court with the distinct understanding that he should then and there pass thereon. Besides, the order of submission shows that the case was submitted on exceptions to certain depositions and "for hearing and trial in chief." Under these circumstances, without such an agreement and understanding between counsel for appellants and appellees, the trial court would have been justified in passing upon the questions referred to. It is quite evident from the record that the appellants were at all times relying upon the fact that, Vincent Boreing being dead, it would be impossible for appellees to establish their contentions. There is nothing to show that the evidence referred to in their affidavits, in support of their motion for a new trial, could not have been secured in time for the final hearing. The deed referred to was on record, and a copy thereof could have been readily secured. No good reason is shown why it was not secured in time for the hearing. Besides, the affidavit of R. C. Ford, who lived in Pineville, and whose deposition could readily have been taken, tends rather to support the conclusion reached by the trial court. He says that "the price was to be $55,000.00 for 1,000 acres, and was sold by the acre, and if land fell short, then V. Boreing was to rebate at rate of $55.00 per acre for such shortage." This does not show that any higher price was placed upon one acre, than upon another. With this affidavit before him, the court could not help reaching the conclusion that, in fixing the value of the land at $40.00 per acre, or $15.00 per acre less than this affidavit shows was the agreed price, he made no error in favor of appellees. The deed in question, it is claimed, covered only 125 or 150 acres of the land sold to the Bell County Coke & Improvement Company. It is the contention of appellants that the remaining 850 or 875 acres are shown by this deed to have been valued at $30,000.00. The deed can not, however, be regarded as conclusive of the value fixed. It is not shown that either Moss or Wilson had any knowledge of its provisions at the time it was executed; and certainly it was not binding on them. Besides, the affidavit of Ford completely nullifies the recitals of the deed. We are of the opinion, therefore, that the trial court did not err in refusing to grant a new trial, and again referring the case to the commissioner to take further proof in regard to the items of $3,000.00 and $20,000.00.

Upon a case involving so many questions of law and fact, and consisting of such a voluminous record, we think the trial court displayed admirable judgment in the conclusions he reached. After a careful examination of the entire record, we are of the opinion that it contains no error prejudicial to the substantial rights of the appellants.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

Whole court sitting, except Judge Barker.

SCHULTE v. LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO., &c.

(Filed March 25, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Pleadings—Filing Amendments During Trial—Discretion of Court—Trial on Merits—The trial court has a large discretion in allowing amended pleadings to be filed during the progress of the trial, and this discretion should be exercised with great liberality when the purpose of enabling the party offering it is to obtain a fair trial of the case on its merits.

2. Injury to Personal Property—Negligence—Interest on Damages—Discretion of Jury—Exemplary Damages—Where personal property is injured by negligence, wrongful or unlawful acts and the owner is deprived of its possession and use, he is entitled, in a suit for damages for its loss, to recover its value with interest thereon in the discretion of the jury, but this rule can not be applied when it is sought to recover unliquidated damages, or in cases where no certain sum is claimed, and the jury may assess any amount in their discretion; and in cases where exemplary damages are recovered the plaintiff is not entitled to interest thereon.

3. Property—Injured—Damages for Its Use—Special Plea—Where a party desires to recover for the value for the loss of the use of property injured it should be specially pleaded, and where damages are sought for the injury done the property, as well for the deprivation of its use, interest is not allowable, as the recovery for the use takes the place of interest.

4. Railroads—Gates Across Highway—Protection to Public—Joint Use by Different Railroads—Liability for Injury—Where a gate is necessary across a street in a city for the protection of the traveling public across a railroad track, it is the duty of every railroad company using the track to protect the public from injury from its trains, and each company, and the owner of the track, is jointly and severally liable to the public for injuries committed by its trains due to failure to perform this duty, and the duty of protecting such crossing can not be delegated to one of the companies using the track, or to the owner, so as to absolve the company whose trains commit the injury from liability to the person injured.

5. Gates Raised—Invitation to Cross—Presumption—Care Required—When gates are maintained at a crossing, and are closed when trains are approaching and kept open for traffic when they are not, the fact that they are up and open is an invitation to the public to cross, and persons have a right to assume they can do so without danger by using ordinary care for their safety.

Robt. C. Simmons for appellant.

Galvin & Galvin for appellee Cov. & Cin. Elevated R. R. Transfer & Bridge Co.

S. D. Rouse and Benjamin D. Warfield for appellee L. & N. R. R. Co.

Appeal from Kenton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, affirming.

The appellant brought this suit against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. and the Covington & Cincinnati Elevated Railroad Co., averring that while his servant was driving a wagon and team of horses along Twelfth street, in the city of Covington, his horses and wagon were struck by a locomotive engine, operated by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., at a point where the railroad crossed Twelfth street, the collision demolishing the wagon, killing one of the horses and crippling the other, and causing the loss of all the dairy products in the wagon, to his damage in the sum of $2,200.

Each of the defendants filed answers, traversing the averments of the petition, and the Covington & Cincinnati Elevated Railroad Co. in addition, pleaded contributory negligence on the part of Philip Roth, the employe of appellee, who was driving the wagon. Appellant filed a reply to the answer of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., but failed to file one to the answer of the Covington & Cincinnati Elevated Railroad Co.

The case went to trial before a jury, and the evidence conduced to show that Roth was driving at an ordinary gait, that when he approached the railroad tracks the gates maintained on each side of it for the purpose of warning travelers and preventing them from crossing when a train was approaching, were up. That he did not hear any engine bell ringing or whistle blown or receive other warning as he came near the track, and the gates being up, he drove along, not suspecting any danger, and did not know of the approach of the train which was running about twenty-five miles an hour until his team was on the track. The railroad employe who had charge of the gates, and whose duty it was to close or put them up or down, was talking to a man nearby, and neglected to close the gates. The railroad track was owned by the Covington & Cincinnati Elevated Railroad Co., and the gate keeper was its employe, but the trains of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. were operated over it.

Upon the conclusion of the evidence for plaintiff, the Covington & Cincinnati Elevated Railroad Co. asked for a peremptory instruction, upon the ground that there was no denial of the plea of contributory neglect in its answer. Thereupon the attorney for plaintiff offered to file a reply, and also to pay the costs of the trial up to that time, and to continue the case if the Covington & Cincinnati Elevated Railroad Co. desired it. These motions and requests were overruled, and the jury directed to return a verdict for the Covington & Cincinnati Elevated Railroad Co.

The trial proceeded against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., when a verdict was returned against it for $425, the actual loss sustained by appellant being some $515, according to the evidence in his behalf, but less than this under the evidence for appellee—in short, the verdict was substantially correct.

A reversal is asked, first, because the trial court failed to allow a reply to be filed; second, in declining to instruct the jury that they might award interest on the value of the property destroyed from the time of its destruction; and also refusing to give an instruction on the subject of punitive damages; third, in failing to instruct the jury that they might allow damages for the use of the horse that was injured; fourth, in failing to instruct that the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. was responsible for the negligence of the gate watchman, and fifth, for errors in giving instructions.

It has been frequently held that unless the plea of contributory neglect in an answer is controverted of record or replied to, that the defendant is entitled to a judgment in his behalf on the pleadings, notwithstanding the fact that the plaintiff may have obtained a verdict. (L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Paynter, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 761; L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Copas, 16 Ky. Law Rep., 14; L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Mayfield, 18 Ky. Law Rep., 224; Brooks v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 24 Ky. Law Rep., 1318.) And when the plaintiff rested his case in the court below, the defendant upon the pleadings, as they stood, was entitled to the peremptory instruction requested, if the plaintiff had not, when the motion was made, offered to file a reply. The trial court has a large discretion in the matter of allowing amended pleadings to be filed during the progress of a trial; and this discretion should be exercised with great liberality when the purpose of the amendment is to enable the party offering it to obtain a trial of the case upon its merits, and it is not tendered for delay or to obstruct justice. When, in the language of section 134 of the Code, an amendment offered during the trial "is in furtherance of justice," and it does not appear that the substantial or meritorious rights of the adverse party will be prejudiced by its filing, but that injustice will be done if it is rejected, the court should permit it to be filed upon such terms as will insure a fair trial and protect the rights of the parties. (Ford v. Providence Coal Co., 30 Ky. Law Rep., 698; Kearney v. City of Covington, 1 Met., 340; Washington Mfg. & Mining Co. v. Barnett, 19 Ky. Law Rep., 958.)

In the case before us, the court should have permitted the reply to be filed, requiring the plaintiff to pay the costs up to the time of the filing, and also continuing the case if the defendant desired a continuance.

In respect to the question of interest, we are of the opinion that the jury should have been instructed that if they found for plaintiff, they might, in their discretion, allow him interest on the sum found as the value of the property destroyed from the date of the injury—and as to the horse that was injured up to the time the owner was fully restored to his use and possession. Where personal property is injured, or destroyed, by negligent, wrongful or unlawful acts, and the owner is thereby deprived of its use and possession, in a suit to recover damages for the loss he is entitled to the value of the property and interest thereon in the discretion of the jury. If the recovery was limited to the value, he would receive no compensation for the deprivation of the use between the time of the injury and the trial, or the date he was restored to the use and possession if this happened before the trial; and the recovery would not be adequate recompense for the loss. This rule can not be applied when it is sought to recover unliquidated damages or in cases where no certain or fixed sum is claimed that may be awarded as compensation, and the jury are authorized to and may assess any amount in their discretion. In this class of cases the amount the plaintiff is entitled to recover can not be estimated at the time of the injury, or indeed until there has been a verdict and judgment. And in cases where exemplary damages are recoverable, and allowed, and the plaintiff gets more than compensation, he is not entitled to interest, as the interest and the exemplary damages would be, in a measure, double compensation. But, where personal property has been destroyed or injured, and the recovery is limited to compensation, the amount of damage sustained can be approximately if not accurately ascertained at the time and the parties can adjust the loss on a basis fairly susceptible of reasonable estimation. This rule is supported by the decided weight of authority, and meets with our approval. (Sedgewick on Damages, section 433; Sutherland on Damages, section 355; Joyce on Damages, section 1034; 22 Cyc., 1500; 16 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, page 1027.)

A contrary view seems to have been expressed by this court in Ormsby v. Johnson, 1 B. Mon., 80, but the better rule is the one that allows the jury in their discretion to award interest in cases of this character.

Appellant further insists that the jury should have been instructed in their discretion to award exemplary damages or punitive damages. There is some authority to the effect that exemplary damages may be recovered in actions where personal property has been injured or destroyed by gross negligence; but we are not disposed to apply this rule to negligence cases like the one under consideration, where it is sought to recover the value of property. Negligence, generally speaking, whether it be ordinary or gross, is merely an omission to perform a duty, although there may be instances where gross negligence is of an affirmative character and amounts to an intentional wrong or a reckless disregard of the rights of others. But, strictly speaking, it is not an affirmative wrongful act, such as trespass, or other acts that are accompanied by circumstances of aggravation or attended by fraud, malice or intentional wrong. There is a marked distinction between personal injury cases or those involving loss of life, by negligence or wrongful act, and actions to recover the value of property injured or destroyed by negligence. In the former, the damages are not susceptible of accurate, or even approximate, estimation. No certain, or even satisfactory rule of compensation, can be laid down for the loss of an arm or a leg or a life. Therefore, the courts have permitted exemplary damages to be recovered when the negligence causing the personal injury or death was gross. But, where personal property is injured or destroyed, it can be replaced. The person damaged can be made whole. The loss he has sustained is capable of accurate, or at least approximate measurement, and when he has received the value of the property with interest thereon he has been compensated for the wrong done, and this is all that in negligence cases when property only is involved, and the elements of fraud, oppression, reckless or intentional wrong-doing are lacking, that he is entitled to unless it is sought to recover for the use. The case of Kountz v. Brown, 16 B. Mon., 577, relied on by appellants as allowing the jury to award exemplary damages in cases of this character, does not conflict with the views herein expressed. There the wrong committed was an affirmative wilful act, and the court said:

"In actions for forcible injuries, the general rule is that the jury may give exemplary damages, and certainly they may be told that they can do so where the injury, in their opinion, may have been wilful. It is not necessary to say whether the testimony was sufficient to authorize the conclusions that the injuries were committed wilfully, for if they were recklessly committed, as the jury clearly had a right to infer in regard to the last and principal injury, the law did not confine them to the actual injury, but authorized them to give exemplary damages. It is not alone for wilful trespasses that exemplary damages are authorized by law to be given, but they are authorized also for acts of wanton and reckless carelessness."

Along the same line is South Covington & Cincinnati St. Ry. Co. v. McHugh, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1112. There, as in the Kountz case, the act complained of was more than a mere omission of duty. It was an affirmative wrong—a reckless disregard of life and property.

In the case before us, the only act of negligence committed was the failure of the gate watchman to close the gates. His conduct, although amounting to gross negligence, was not a wilful or intentional act, committed against appellee or his property. In other words, it was not an affirmative wrong, but an omission of duty. This distinction runs through all the cases that have come under our notice, where the question of allowing exemplary damages has come up in cases involving the injury or destruction of personal property. We do not mean to hold that exemplary damages are confined to injuries to the person, because they may be awarded in trespass or where there is injury to personal property, if it is attended by affirmative acts of aggravation or is the result of wilful or reckless or malicious conduct. (Major v. Pulliam, 3 Dana, 582; Jennings v. Maddox, 8 B. Mon., 430; Andrews v. Singer Mfg. Co., 20 Ky. Law Rep., 1089; Bowler v. Lane, 3 Met., 311; Slater v. Sherman, 5 Bush, 203.)

Appellant also contends that he was entitled to prove the loss he sustained in being deprived of the use of the horse that was injured from the time of the injury until his recovery; and to an instruction allowing the jury to award damages of this character. In support of this contention, we are cited to Sedgewick on Damages, section 195, and Joyce on Damages, section 1040. There are cases in which it would be proper to allow the plaintiff to recover the value of the use of the property of which he was deprived by negligence or wrongful act, but, if a party desires to recover for the value of the loss of the use, it should be specially pleaded. This element of damage can not be recovered under a general allegation of negligence as in the case before us. And where damages are sought for the injury done the property, as well as damages for the deprivation of its use, interest is not allowable, as the recovery for the use takes the place of interest. In other words, a party may sue for the injury done personal property, and the jury may, in their discretion, allow him interest on the sum found, and should be so instructed; or, he may sue for damages occasioned by the injury and also for the loss of the use, but he cannot recover interest as well as damages for the loss of the use.

As before stated, the railroad track, over which the trains of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad run, are owned by the Covington & Cincinnati Elevated Railroad Company, which corporation employs the gate watchman. The point is made whether or not the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company is chargeable with the negligence of the watchman in failing to close the gates on the approach of one of its trains. We do not regard it material who employed or paid the gate watchman, or who owned the railroad tracks. If a gate was necessary for the protection of the traveling public at the crossing where this injury occurred, then it was the duty of every railroad company using the track to protect the public from injury by its trains; and each company, and the owner of the track, is jointly and severally liable to the public for injuries committed by its trains, due to a failure to perform this duty. The duty of protecting a crossing like this can not be delegated to one of the companies using the track, or to the owner of the track, so as to absolve the company whose trains commit the injury from liability to the person injured. (C. & O. R. Co. v. Osborne, 97 Ky., 112; L., H. & St. L. R. Co. v. Kesse, 31 Ky. Law Rep., 617; L., H. & St. L. R. Co. v. Illinois Central R. Co., 29 Ky. Law Rep., 265.)

We may also add that when gates are maintained at a crossing, and are closed when trains are approaching and kept open for traffic when they are not, the fact that they are up and open is an invitation to the public to cross; and persons desiring to cross have a right to assume that they can do so without danger of being struck by an approaching train, although this rule does not relieve the person desiring to cross from exercising ordinary care for his own safety, or from giving attention to other notice or warning of the approach of trains.

In L. & N. R. Co. v. Sights, 28 Ky. Law Rep., 186, in considering a similar question, this court approved the following instruction, that presents the duty owing by the traveler:

"The court further instructs you that, if you believe, from the evidence, that the flagman so stationed at said crossing at the time plaintiff approached the same, was not in his customary place of duty, then the plaintiff had a right to presume, in the absence of reasonable and timely warning to the contrary, that he would not be exposed to danger from approaching trains in driving near or crossing said track."

Although the court erred in refusing to permit a reply to be filed, and in declining to instruct the jury to award interest in their discretion, in other respects the appellant had a fair trial. He recovered substantially all that he was entitled to against either or both of the appellees, and it cannot be doubted that the judgment against the appellee, Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, is collectible. It is true the jury might have allowed appellant interest on the recovery, but whether they would or not is uncertain. The matter of interest that appellant might have recovered is too small and the probability of its recovery too indefinite to authorize us to reverse the case alone for this error.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

ARNETT v. PINSON, &c.

(Filed March 25, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Contracts Made in One State to be Performed in Another—Validity—Where Determined—While there is occasional conflict of authority as to which law prevails where a contract is made in one State and is to be performed in another, the authorities are uniform that where the contract is not only made in one State, but by its terms is to be performed there, its validity must be determined by the laws of the State where it is made, and is to be performed.

2. Same—Application to Peddlers' Notes—Section 4223, Kentucky Statutes, relating to peddlers' notes, has no extra-territorial effect. It does not apply to peddlers' notes executed and delivered in another State.

3. Common Law—Application in Different States—Presumption—In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the presumption is that the common law of the State where the contract is made is the same as that of the State where the contract is sued on, but this presumption does not extend to the statute laws.

4. Action on Notes—Defense Controverted—Burden of Proof—In an action in this State on two notes executed in West Virginia, the defendant pleaded: first, no consideration; second, that they were "peddlers' notes" and were not so endorsed on their face as required by Kentucky Statutes, section 4223; third, fraud, which plea was controverted of record. Held—That the burden was on the defendant to show that they were invalid under the laws of West Virginia, and were fraudulent and without consideration.

O'Neal & Carter for appellant.

G. W. Skaggs and Sullivan & Stewart for appellees.

Appeal from Lawrence Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by William Rogers Clay, Commissioner, reversing.

Appellant, Elliott Arnett, instituted this action against appellees, J. W. Pinson and J. J. Wallace, on two notes of $107.50 each, which appellees executed and delivered to appellant and Robert Dixon; the latter having sold and transferred his interest in the notes by written endorsement thereon to appellant. These notes were executed in Williamson, West Virginia, and were made payable at the Bank of Williamson in that State.

Appellees defended on three grounds: First, no consideration; second, that the notes were peddlers' notes, and did not have written across their face the words "peddlers' note," as required by section 4223, Kentucky Statutes; third, fraud and misrepresentation.

The trial court held that the burden of proof was on appellant. The latter then went upon the stand and testified that the notes sued on and attached to the petition were the same signed and delivered to him by appellees. The notes were then read in evidence, together with the endorsements thereon, and it appeared that they did not have the words "peddlers' note" written on their face. Appellant further testified that the notes were made, signed and delivered to him in Williamson, in the State of West Virginia, and were assigned to him by Robert Dixon, in the State of Kentucky; that he had "purchased the State of West Virginia in which to sell patent window locks;" that the notes in question were executed for certain portions of that patent right territory in said State; that since the execution of the notes, appellees had moved into the State of Kentucky, and lived there when this suit was filed. At the close of appellant's testimony, the trial court peremptorily instructed the jury to find for appellees. Motion and grounds for a new trial were then overruled, and an appeal granted to this court,

While there is occasional conflict of authority as to which law prevails where the contract is made in one State and is to be performed in another, the authorities are uniform that where the contract is not only made in one State, but by its terms is to be performed there, its validity must be determined by the laws of the State where it is made, and is to be performed. (Brown v. Todd's Adm'r, 16 Ky. Law Rep., 697; Steele v. Curle, 4 Dana, 381; Johnson v. Bank of U. S., 2 B. Monroe, 310.)

Counsel for appellees insist that this case comes within the well known exception to the above rule, to the effect that such contracts will not be enforced in the courts of another State if contrary to public morals, public policy, or the positive law of the latter. (Parke v. Moore, 115 Fed. Rep., 802.) It will be observed, however, that sections 4214 to 4223, Kentucky Statutes, relate only to peddlers doing business in this State. Section 4223 applies only to such peddlers' notes as are executed for patent right territory in the State of Kentucky. This section has no extra-territorial effect. It does not apply to peddlers' notes executed and delivered in another State. We, therefore, conclude that the validity of the notes in question must be determined by the laws of West Virginia.

Nor does the fact that the assignment from Robert Dixon to appellant was made in the State of Kentucky in any way affect the liability of appellees. The general rule is that the law of the State in which an assignment is made controls. Such defense, however, would be available only by the assignor. The assignment made by persons other than the makers of the note in this State could not make the contract, so far as they are concerned, subject to the laws of this State. (Hyatt v. Bank of Kentucky, 8 Bush, 192.)

Counsel for appellees insist that the presumption is that the laws of the State where the contract is made and to be performed are the same as those where the contract is sought to be enforced. This presumption, however, does not extend to statute laws. The presumption is that the common law of the State where the contract is made is the same as that of the State where the contract is sued upon, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the presumption is that the common law prevails in a sister State. (Cope v. Daniel, 9 Dana, 415; Johnson v. Bank of U. S., 2 B. Monroe, 310.)

In one paragraph of appellees' answer they plead the invalidity of the notes, both under the West Virginia and the Kentucky law. They claim they were, therefore, entitled to judgment, because their allegations in regard to the West Virginia law were not denied. In this contention counsel are in error, for, by an order entered February 1, 1907, it is provided that the affirmative matters in all the pleadings are traversed of record. Under this state of case, it was necessary, therefore, for appellees to prove that the notes in question were invalid under the laws of West Virginia.

Moreover, appellees admitted the execution of the notes and sought to defeat a recovery thereon, not only by the plea that they were invalid under the laws of West Virginia, but also because of want of consideration and fraud. As to each of these defenses, therefore, the burden of proof was on appellees, and the court erred in placing the burden on the appellant.

For the reasons indicated, the judgment is reversed, and cause remanded, for a new trial consistent with this opinion.

WARDEN v. MADISONVILLE, HARTFORD & EASTERN R. R. CO.

(Filed March 25, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Railroads—Contract for Constructing Roadbed—Conclusiveness of Contract—The fact that a contract by a railroad company with a contractor employed to construct its road bed only called for one track, is not conclusive that the railroad company did not intend to build another track thereon.

2. Eminent Domain—Necessity to be Shown—Circumstances to be Considered—There must always exist necessity for the appropriation of land sought to be condemned for railroad purposes, and in determining this necessity, the court should take into consideration all the facts and circumstances in the case. The right to condemn is not confined to the land that may be absolutely required at the time of the taking, but extends to so much as the present plans and purposes of the railroad company show will be reasonably necessary to construct and operate the road in accordance with such plans.

W. Scott Morrison for appellant.

Glenn & Simmerman and Benjamin D. Warfield for appellee.

Appeal from Ohio Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by William Rogers Clay, Commissioner, affirming.

This is the second appeal of this case; the opinion on the first appeal will be found in 31 Ky. Law Rep., 234. In that opinion this court said:

"On the return of the case to the circuit court, the court will set aside the order sustaining the demurrer to so much of the answer as denied the incorporation of the plaintiff and will hear proof as to the incorporation and as to the necessity of the strip of land proposed to be taken. A copy of the articles of incorporation duly certified will make out a prima facie case for the plaintiff as to its incorporation. If the proof shall satisfy the court that the strip of land is necessary for the purposes of the railroad company, and that the railroad company has been properly incorporated, he will then enter a judgment upon the verdict of the jury. The verdict of the jury will stand, as there was no error in the proceedings before the jury, and the questions to be determined are purely questions of law for the court, but which must be determined by the court before a judgment taking the defendant's property for the plaintiff's use can properly be entered."

Upon the return of the case, proof as to the organization of the company met the requirements of the former opinion of this court, and of such evidence of incorporation no complaint is made on this appeal. The only question now before us concerns the necessity for railroad purposes of the strip of land condemned. Before proceeding to state the evidence, we will advert to a few authorities construing the word "necessity" in connection with condemnation proceedings.

In 15 Cyc., 632, the rule is thus stated:

"To authorize the condemnation of any particular land by a company to which the power has been delegated, a necessity must exist for the taking thereof, for the uses and purposes of the party instituting the proceedings, and this must be made to appear. And it is never permissible for a company or individual to appropriate more land than is necessary for its use. There is, of course, a prohibition against excessive appropriation or the taking of any land not within the scope of the purposes required. The moment the appropriation goes beyond the necessity of the case, it ceases to be justified on the principles which underlie the right of eminent domain. Nevertheless, necessity, within the meaning of this rule, does not mean an absolute, but only a reasonable necessity, such as would combine the greatest benefit to the public with the least inconvenience and expense to the condemning party and property owner, consistent with such benefit, although it does not include the taking of land which may merely render the employment of the improvement more convenient or less expensive, or for a necessity which is merely colorable."

In the case of Aurora G. Ry. Co. v. Harvey, 53 N. E., 331, the Supreme Court of Illinois, in discussing the question of "necessity," said:

"Counsel for appellees contends that a 'necessity' required by the statute, in relation to horse and dummy railroad, means an 'absolute necessity'—a necessity so great that, in the case at bar, if it be physically possible for appellant to construct and maintain its railroad upon the highway, there is no right to condemn. We do not think that such a strict interpretation should be placed upon the language of the statute. * * * The safety, comfort and convenience of the traveling public require protection, and the policy of the State must be to compel railroad companies to so build their roads, to conserve the safety of its citizens to as high a degree as is reasonably attainable, in view of the character and exigencies of that mode of transportation.

"In the construction of statutes relating to the taking of private property, the word 'necessity' should be construed to mean 'expedient,' 'reasonably convenient' or 'useful to the public,' and can not be limited to the absolute physical necessity. This, we think, was certainly the intention of the Legislature when the act was passed. The view here expressed seems to be well supported by authorities." (Hays v. Briggs, 3 Pittsb., 504; Commissioners v. Maesto (Mich.), 51 N. W., 903; Pettingill v. Porter, 8 Allen, 1; Cates v. Mayor, &c., 7 Cow., 585.)

In the matter of Application of Staten Island Rapid Transit Railroad Co., &c., decided by the Court of Appeals of New York, 8 N. E., 548, that court said:

"It was conceded by the petitioner, upon the hearing, that the lands in question were not required for its present uses, and it is strenuously contended therefrom by appellant that the petitioner has not made a case for condemnation, or such a case as establishes a reasonable probability that such lands will be required for its uses in the future. It is quite obvious that the beneficial exercise of the power of acquiring property for public uses can not be enjoyed unless allowed in anticipation of a contemplated improvement; and it is, therefore, well settled in this State that the mere fact that the land proposed to be taken for a public use is not needed for the present and immediate purpose of the petitioning party, is not necessarily a defense to the proceeding to condemn it.

"The statute authorizing the formation of railroad corporations, confers power upon such as are organized under its provisions to acquire land by the exercise of the right of eminent domain, not only from individuals, but also from the State, for its prospective as well as present uses, provided, its necessities for such use in the immediate future are established beyond a reasonable doubt."

Our own court, in the case of Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. Scamp, 30 Ky. Law Rep., 487, states the rule as follows:

"When land is condemned for railway purposes, the strip is taken, not with reference alone to the present needs of the company, but for all needs which the future may develop. The plaintiffs have, therefore, no cause of complaint that the defendant built the additional tracks referred to, or broke up its trains or stored its cars on these tracks."

From these authorities, we conclude that there must always exist necessity for the appropriation of the land sought to be condemned. In determining this necessity the court should take into consideration all the facts and circumstances of the case. The right to condemn is not confined to the land that may be absolutely required at the time of the taking, but extends to so much as the present plans and purposes of the railroad company show will be reasonably necessary to construct and operate the road in accordance with those plans.

By sub-section 4 of section 768, Kentucky Statutes, it is provided:

"Every company shall possess the following powers, and be subject to the following liabilities and restrictions:

"To lay out its road not exceeding one hundred feet in width, and if more than one track is laid, fifty feet additional for each track, and construct the same; and for the purpose of cuttings and embankments, and procuring stone, gravel or other material, or for the purpose of draining its road bed, to take, in the manner herein provided, such other lands in the vicinity of, or adjacent to, its road as may be necessary for the proper construction, operation and security of its road." * * *

In this action appellee seeks to condemn 200 feet of appellant's property. The statute gives the right to condemn 150 feet where there are to be two tracks. In addition to this, the railroad is given, for the purpose of cuttings, or embankments, and for procuring stone, gravel or other material, or for the draining of its road bed, the right to take other land as may be necessary for the proper construction, operation and security of its road.

The chief engineer of the appellee company testified that it was the intention of the company to build a double track on the land of appellant, where it was sought to condemn 200 feet, and for the purpose of this double track and making the fill and properly draining the road bed, the 200 feet of land was necessary; that the greater part of the strip, where the 200 feet was condemned, is across a bottom, where there is a considerable fill, and that the roadbed would require ditches on each side to drain and prevent its being injured by water; that the company would require, for the purpose of making this fill, dirt from each side of the road. He further stated that it was the intention of the company to put in a side track as soon as the main line was built. The witness also testified that the company had in view, although the exact location thereof had not been determined, the establishment of a depot at or near the land sought to be condemned, in which event there would be a necessity for additional tracks. Appellant testified and described the condition of the land as to cuts and fills. E. S. McMillen, the contractor in charge of the work, stated that the fill on the land was to be seven feet high, 30 feet wide at the bottom and 18 feet at the top; that some companies use 32 feet and some 40 feet for double track; that his contract was to put in one track, and the fills were made from the cuts. We do not think the testimony of the contractor, that his contract called for only one track, is at all conclusive of the contention that the railroad company did not intend to build another track. Taking the testimony as a whole, we are of the opinion that appellee showed that the land proposed to be taken was reasonably necessary for the purposes of the company. This is the view taken by the trial court, and the judgment is, therefore, affirmed.

NEWCOMB v. FIDELITY TRUST CO., &c.

(Filed March 25, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Wills—Construction—Intention of Testator—Favorable to Disposition of Entire Estate—That construction of a will will be favored, which disposes of the entire estate, and prevents the testator from dying intestate as to any part of it, when it is apparent from the whole will, that such was the intention of the testator.

2. Same—Estate by Implication—Presumption—The weight of authority is to the effect that an estate by implication will not be presumed or created by strained construction, but must grow out of the fair intentment of the instrument under consideration, looking at all its parts.

Lewis McQuown, Eli H. Brown, Jr., Benjamin Patterson and Geo. Bell for appellant.

Humphrey & Humphrey and L. R. Yeaman for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, First Division.

Opinion of the Court by Judge Carroll, affirming

The only issue of H. D. Newcomb by his first marriage now living or living at the death of Newcomb is the appellant, H. Victor Newcomb, H. D. Newcomb married a second time, and there was born of this marriage Warren S. Newcomb and H. Dalton Newcomb. In 1874, H. D. Newcomb died, leaving a will which was duly probated in Jefferson county. Warren S. Newcomb died without leaving descendants. In his will he did not undertake to dispose of any interest in the property involved in this controversy, but named as his residuary legatee Richard TenBroeck. Richard TenBroeck transferred any interest he might have in the trust fund in controversy to H. Dalton Newcomb. The widow died in 1905. After her death, H. Dalton Newcomb died without issue, and this litigation is between the executors of H. Dalton Newcomb and H. Victor Newcomb.

The trust fund in controversy was created by the fourteenth clause of the will of H. D. Newcomb. This clause reads as follows:

"I give and bequeath to John B. Smith and Thomas L. Barrett two hundred thousand dollars to be held by them in trust and safely and advantageously invested, so as to yield a semi-annual income, which, after paying all taxes and charges thereon, shall be appropriated and applied by said trustees to the continual support and maintenance of my wife, Mary Cornelia Newcomb, and her children, free from the control, use or enjoyment of any husband she might have. But neither the said trustees nor Mrs. Newcomb, nor any future husband, nor her child or children shall at any time have the power, right or authority in any way, manner or for any purpose, to encumber or anticipate the said fund or the said income or any part thereof for any purpose whatever. And in case these restrictions are violated, this bequest at once shall be void, and the fund hereby bequeathed shall become a part of my residuary estate; and in case of her death without child or children, issue of my marriage with her, living or leaving descendants, the said fund shall be a part of my residuary estate."

Indirectly bearing upon the question is the sixteenth clause of the will disposing of the residuary estate, and reading as follows:

"After all my debts are paid, and legacies hereby given are satisfied and the trusts hereby created are provided for as herein prescribed, it is my will that all the residue and remainder of my estate, real, personal and mixed, in possession and in action, owned by me at my death, whether now belonging to me or hereafter acquired and where-soever being or situated, shall be divided as follows, to-wit: If my said wife, Mary Cornelia, dies without issue of my marriage with her surviving her (I having already given to my son, H. Victor Newcomb, over $500,000), the said residue and remainder shall be equally divided between my said wife and my said son, H. Victor Newcomb, but if there should be a child or children, issue of my marriage with said Mary Cornelia, then I give to my said wife one-third of all my personal estate absolutely, and one-third of all my real estate for her life, and direct the whole of said residue and remainder of my estate to be equally divided between H. Victor Newcomb or his descendants and the children by my marriage with the said Mary Cornelia or their descendants."

And the first clause of the codicil, reading in part as follows:

"I devise and bequeath to my friends, John B. Smith and Thomas L. Barrett, of said city, as trustees and in trust for the use of the child or children of my present wife, Mary Cornelia Newcomb, one year after my death, $100,000 for each child then living, to be by the said trustees safely and advantageously invested so as to yield an income, the net proceeds of which income, after paying all taxes and charges thereon, or so much thereof as may be necessary and proper in their judgment and discretion, may be appropriated and expended for the support and education of said child or children. * * * When each male child of those by this clause provided for arrives at the age of twenty-one years, he may receive the one-half of the whole fund then held for him, including increase, and the other half shall then be held by the trustees, and the income, proceeds and increase thereof invested and re-invested until such male child arrives to the age of thirty years, then the entire balance of the fund with the increase held for such child shall be paid over to him, * * * and if either of said male children herein provided for shall die without issue surviving him, then so much of his share of said fund yet in the hands of the trustees to pass to my heirs-at-law in like manner, and in case either trustee shall die or refuse to act, the other may appoint another to act with him to have the same powers as if here named as trustee under this clause, and so on until the trust is closed, keeping two competent trustees to act together."

After the death of the widow, Mrs. Cornelia Newcomb, this action was brought by the trustees under the fourteenth clause of the will for the purpose of securing a judicial determination of the meaning of the fourteenth clause, with reference to the testator's intention in the disposition of the principal of the trust fund thereby bequeathed. In this action H. Dalton Newcomb filed his answer, in which he asserted that the trust terminated with the death of his mother, Mrs. TenBroeck, and that he was entitled in fee to the bequest described in the fourteenth clause, and upon his death, pending the action, his executors asserted title to the entire fund. H. Victor Newcomb's contention is that H. Dalton Newcomb was not at his death or at any time entitled to the principal of the fund held by the trustees under the fourteenth clause of the will.

The chancellor adjudged that H. Victor Newcomb was not entitled to any part of the fund of two hundred thousand dollars created and provided for in the clause mentioned, and that the entire fund together with all the income which had accrued or will accrue thereon passed under the will of H. Dalton Newcomb to his executors. From this judgment, H. Victor Newcomb prosecutes this appeal.

Counsel for appellant in their brief state that:

"The sole question in the case is whether the fourteenth clause of the will disposed of the principal of the fund after the termination of the trust by the death of all of the beneficiaries who were the second wife and her children. If it does so dispose of the fund, we have no case; if it does not so dispose of the fund, H. Victor Newcomb has an interest therein, either as residuary legatee or as the next of kin."

To put it in another way. H. Victor Newcomb's contention is that upon the death of the widow and her children born of her marriage with the testator, the fund mentioned in the fourteenth clause of the will became a part of the residuary estate; or, if not, that it was undisposed of by the will and passed to the next of kin, as in the case of intestacy, in which event H. Victor Newcomb, being the sole heir, would take the estate.

On the other hand, the executors of H. Dalton Newcomb insist that the testator intended, by the fourteenth clause of his will, to devise an absolute estate in the trust fund to his widow and her children, or a life estate to her with remainder in fee to her children, and hence H. Victor Newcomb has no interest in the fund.

There is no claim that the restriction:

"But neither the said trustees, nor Mrs. Newcomb, nor any future husband, nor her child or children, shall at any time have the power, right or authority in any way, manner or for any purpose, to encumber or anticipate the said fund or the said income or any part thereof for any purpose whatever. And in case these restrictions are violated, this bequest at once shall be void, and the fund hereby bequeathed shall become a part of my residuary estate," in the concluding provision of the fourteenth clause were violated, therefore the fund for this reason did not become a part of the residuary estate. It will be noticed that the testator gave to the trustees the trust fund, the income thereof, after paying all taxes and charges, to be appropriated to the support and maintenance of his wife and her children; stipulating that neither the trustees nor Mrs. Newcomb nor any future husband nor her child or children should at any time have the power, in any way or for any purpose, to encumber or anticipate the said fund or the income or any part thereof for any purpose whatever; and in the concluding words of this clause he said: "in case of her death without child or children, issue of my marriage with her, living or leaving descendants, the said fund shall be a part of my residuary estate."

Our construction of this clause is that the testator intended that the fund therein mentioned should be held in trust during the life of Mrs. Newcomb, the income thereof during her life to be applied to the support and maintenance of herself and children. But at her death, leaving children born of her marriage with the testator, the trust terminated, and the trust fund, together with any unexpended accretions thereof, vested in fee in the children. We think this construction is strengthened by the concluding words of the clause in which the testator declares that "in case of her death without child or children, issue of my marriage with her, living or leaving descendants, the said fund shall be a part of my residuary estate." It is true that there is no specific direction in this clause as to what disposition shall be made of the trust fund upon the death of the widow leaving children. But there is a bequest over in the event she died without children. The fee in the trust fund was disposed of, subject only to be defeated by the death of Mrs. Newcomb without leaving children. The estate was not limited to the life of Mrs. Newcomb and her children, nor are there any words indicating a purpose to so limit it; and when it is considered that the testator's will was carefully written and elaborate provisions made for carrying out his intentions, it would seem that if he desired to limit Mrs. Newcomb and her children to a life estate in this fund, he would have so declared. The fact that he did not is strong evidence of his intention that the fund, after the death of Mrs. Newcomb, should become the property of her children, and sufficient to raise a bequest by implication. It is plain that if Mrs. Newcomb died leaving children, the fund should not become a part of the residuary estate; because the testator, in the concluding words of the clause in question, expressly provides that it shall only become a part of the residuary estate in the event of the death of the widow without child or children. This provision entirely eliminates the contention of appellants that any part of the fund went into the residuary estate. It would require a most unreasonable interpretation and one that would do violence to the plain language of the instrument to say that, although Mrs. Newcomb died leaving children surviving her, the trust fund should become a part of the residuary estate. It would be declaring exactly the opposite of what the testator said and meant, and be giving to his language a construction that it is not susceptible of. Only in one contingency could this trust fund become a part of the residuary estate, that contingency was the death of Mrs. Newcomb without leaving a child or children, and this contingency did not happen. As the fund did not go into the residuary estate, it only remains to determine whether the testator left it undisposed of, and died as to it intestate. The presumption is against this construction. That construction of a will will be favored which disposes of the entire estate and prevents the testator from dying intestate as to any part of it, when it is apparent from the whole instrument that it was the intention to dispose of the entire estate. In the absence of a contrary intention, we feel warranted in holding that under the general and well established rules upholding devises by implication that upon the death of Mrs. Newcomb the fee in the fund vested in H. Dalton Newcomb, her only surviving child. A contrary purpose can not be gathered from the will. Recognizing the fact that the weight of authority is to the effect that an estate by implication will not be presumed or created by strained construction but must grow out of the fair intendment of the instrument under consideration looking at all of its parts, we cannot escape the conclusion that the testator, although he did not in terms give to the children of Mrs. Newcomb the fee in the trust fund, intended that they should come into it at her death. And we find strong support for this construction in Gill v. Logan, 11 B. Mon., 231. In that case the testator gave to Robert S. Saunders in special trust for the daughter of testator, Elizabeth Logan, and her child, a farm and several negroes, and in another clause of his will directed that, with certain exceptions, the balance of his estate be divided between his children. It was contended that the devise to Saunders as trustee was not in fee simple but terminated upon the death of all the beneficiaries. In considering this point, the Court said:

"The legal title being placed in Saunders as trustee for Mrs. Logan and her children, without any specification of the duties of the trustee, or of the rights of the beneficiaries, except such as is contained in the word special, we regard him merely as holding the title for the use of the beneficiaries and can give no further effect to the word special than as indicating that the legal title was not intended to vest in the beneficiaries, or, at most, that as to the interest of Mrs. Logan, it was to be held for her sole and separate use, which latter construction would not affect any question now to be determined. But, upon the premises above assumed, the equitable estate being in the beneficiaries by the will, is subject to the same rules as to its limitation and devolution as if it were a legal estate. And, although by the common law a devise to a trustee, without words of inheritance in trust for certain beneficiaries, without such words would prima facie pass, but a life estate in both the legal and equitable estates, yet, as such words are dispensed with by our statute, and as there is nothing on the face of this will to show that a life estate only was intended to be limited, it follows that a fee simple passed both in the legal and equitable estate. And as there is no condition expressed and, as we think, none implied, on which the devise is to be defeated or the estate to return to the testator's heirs or devisees, or in any manner to come within the control of his will, we think it clear that, so far as it vested in the trustee upon the testator's death, it became subject to the rules and power of the law as to the estate of the beneficiaries."

In Booker v. Carlisle, 14 Bush, 154, the testator, Winston, gave to his sister, Mary Booker, a tract of land for life, providing that at her death the title should vest in Y. O. Booker, for the support and benefit of the daughters of Mary Booker, and in case Y. O. Booker died before Mary, then the title to the land to vest in the daughters before named, the testator died, leaving surviving him his sister, Mary Booker, who died, leaving her son, Y. O. Booker, and his daughters in possession of the land. It was contended that, as no words were used in the will indicating that the fee in the land was devised for the benefit of the daughters of Mary Booker, that they only took a life estate; but the court said:

"We are of opinion that, by the will of Winston, the land in dispute was devised to Mary Booker for life, and at her death, the legal title was vested in Y. O. Booker in trust for the use and benefit of the daughters. * * * In Gill v. Logan, 11 B. Mon., 233, this court used the following language: 'When the title to land is conveyed to a trustee without any specification of the duties of the trust or the rights of the beneficiaries, he holds a fee under our statute for the use of the beneficiaries, and it is subject to the same rules as to its limitations and devolution as a legal estate, and though all the beneficiaries die, the estate does not revert, but passes by descent.'"

In Webster's Trustee v. Webster, 93 Ky., 632, the testator appointed a trustee to receive the estate devised to his daughter, the trustee to keep the same at interest and appropriate it to the support of his daughter. It was contended that the daughter took only a life estate, but the court said:

"The only limitation upon the absolute estate was the dying without living children; and it is believed that the testator meant that limitation to be the only one upon the absolute estate, and to confine its operation to the time of the distribution of the estate. The limitation clearly means that, should Euphema (daughter) have living children before distribution, she would take absolute estate, subject to be defeated if she and the children died before distribution. And, taking this clause in connection with the preceding ones quoted, there can be no manner of doubt that the estate devised was an absolute estate, subject to the one limitation indicated. The appointment of the trustee to take charge of the estate and to limit its expenditure upon Euphemia was evidently in view of the fact that the testator did not regard her as competent to take care of it, and the appointment is not incompatible with an absolute estate to the devisee."

In Masterson v. Townsend, ——— N. Y., ———, 10 L. R. A., 817, the court in construing a will in which it was claimed that there was no testamentary disposition of the estate created by the will after the re-marriage of the widow, upon which contingency, Peter Masterson contended that the estate vested in him; and the court said:

"This is a plain case of a devise by implication, whereby, upon the death of the testator, his brother, Peter, became vested with the title to the real estate, subject only to the trust provision made for the testator's widow. However incomplete the language to express the purpose of the testator, an intention and an understanding on his part are evident that his brother, Peter, should take as devisee the property which was the subject of disposition in that clause. What the testator has imperfectly done by way of expression is effectuated by the application of well known legal rules. * * * Courts have, from an early day, repeatedly upheld devises by implication where no gift of the premises seems to have made in the will in formal language."

In Boston Safety Deposit & Trust Co. v. Coffin, ———, Mass., 8 L. R. A., 739, the court said in construing a will somewhat similar to the one before us, that:

"When an intention to dispose of the whole of an estate appears, a partial intestacy should not be recognized unless the deficiencies in the expressions of the will are such as to compel it. * * * When the reading of a whole will produces a conviction that the testator must necessarily have intended an interest to be given which is not bequeathed by express or formal words, the court will supply the defect by implication, and so mould the language of the testator as to carry into effect, as far as possible, the intention which it is of opinion that he has on the whole sufficiently declared."

Numerous other cases along this line holding the same general doctrine might be produced, but we do not deem it necessary to cite them.

In the lower court the point was made by appellant that the testator intended to substitute for the trust fund mentioned in the fourteenth clause of his will the one hundred thousand dollar bequests named in the first clause of the codicil; and this contention was made the subject of a large part of the able and learned opinion of the chancellor. It is not, however, pressed on this appeal, and for this reason we have not felt it necessary to do more than mention it.

The conclusion we have reached is amply fortified by authority, and in our opinion, effectuates the intention of the testator.

Wherefore the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

IRONS, &c. v. U. S. LIFE INS. CO. OF NEW YORK.

(Filed March 26, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Insurance Policies—Sale of—Interest Acquired—Assignment—Purchaser—Insurable Interest in Assured—A purchaser of a policy of insurance on the life of one in whom he has no insurable interest, except as creditor, will hold the proceeds of the policy, over and above his debt, in trust for the beneficiaries of the policy, and an assignment of the policy to such purchaser will operate, at most, only as a pledge that he will hold the proceeds over and above the amount he has paid for it, with interest, in trust for the beneficiaries of the policy.

2. Same—Judicial sale—Effect—The doctrine of constructive trusts applies no less to judicial sales than to private sales. Where property is impressed with a trust, the trust is enforceable as well against the purchaser at a judicial sale as at a private sale.

3. Same—In a judicial sale of a life insurance policy, the court making the sale does not inquire, sua sponte, whether the purchaser has an insurable interest in the life of the insured. The order confirming the sale, where no exceptions are filed, does not establish that the purchaser is not a trustee for the parties, nor that he has capacity to take the property absolutely; and, to show such fact in a subsequent suit, in no wise impeaches the judgment in the former suit.

G. W. Stone and J. S. Wortham for appellants.

Charles Carroll, J. C. Graham, Jess T. Gosnell and W. O. Jones for appellees Gosnell and Jones.

Augustus E. Willson and M. K. Yonts for appellee U. S. Life Ins. Co.

Appeal from Grayson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lassing, affirming.

In 1890, Benjamin Wells, an unmarried man, caused his life to be insured for the sum of $2,500.00 in the United States Life Insurance Company, of New York, the premiums to be paid in ten annual installments, and the money, at his death, to go and be payable to his sister, Lydia Spriggs Bunch, and her surviving children, share and share alike. At that time, Mrs. Bunch was a widow, with three small children, six, eight and ten years old, and all dependent upon her brother, Benjamin Wells, for a support. The premiums were regularly paid, when due, during each year, until the year 1900, when the last of the ten payments called for under the terms of the policy was paid, and the policy became a paid-up policy.

At that time the children of Mrs. Bunch were sixteen, eighteen and twenty years of age, respectively; they had no estate whatever; and their mother, for the alleged purpose of raising money to complete their education and to support them, instituted an equitable action in the Grayson Circuit Court for the purpose of securing an order for the sale of the paid-up policy of insurance. Prior to the institution of this suit, she had appeared in the Grayson County Court and had been, on her motion, appointed and qualified as guardian for her three children. She caused her brother, Benjamin Wells, and the United States Life Insurance Company, of New York, to be made parties defendant to this equitable action.

In this equitable suit she set forth fully the needs and necessities of her children, alleged that the policy of insurance was the only estate of any kind whatever owned by them, and that a sale of it was necessary in order to raise the funds needed to support and educate them. Her brother, Benjamin Wells, filed an answer, consenting to said sale, and joining in the prayer of the petition. The insurance company answered, asking that its interests be protected. Proof was taken by affidavits in support of the allegations of the petition, and it was also shown by the affidavit of Lydia Spriggs Bunch that she was forty-five years of age and had passed the change of life and could not bear further issue. Thereafter, the case was submitted and judgment was rendered in conformity with the prayer of the petition; the plaintiff, Lydia Spriggs Bunch, was appointed a special commissioner for the purpose of selling the policy. At the following term of court, she, as special commissioner, filed her report, setting forth the fact that she had sold same to appellees, Gosnell and Jones, for the sum of $731.18. No exceptions having been filed to this report of sale, it was confirmed, and, acting under the direction given in the judgment ordering the sale, the company transferred to Gosnell and Jones, as purchasers, the policy of insurance.

In May, 1906, Benjamin Wells died. Proofs of loss were promptly furnished the company by Gosnell and Jones, and, on the 17th of May, 1906, the insurance company paid to them, in satisfaction and settlement of the policy, the sum of $2,500, the full face value thereof. On August 16, 1906, Mary E. Irons, Minnie M. Dense and Benjamin Bunch brought suit in the Grayson Circuit Court against the United States Life Insurance Company, of New York, Jess T. Gosnell, W. O. Jones and their mother, Lydia Spriggs Stevenson, she having married again, setting up the facts as to the issuing of the policy of insurance in their favor, the judgment of the Grayson Circuit Court directing its sale, and the sale and transfer thereof to appellees, Gosnell and Jones, the death of their uncle, Benjamin Wells, and the payment of the money, as above recited, to them. The circuit court dismissed the petition, and the plaintiffs appeal.

Neither Gosnell nor Jones, when they purchased the policy, had any insurable interest in the life of Benjamin Wells. In a long line of decisions, this court had held that the purchaser of a policy of insurance on the life of another, in which he has no insurable interest, except as creditor, will hold the proceeds of the policy, over and above his debt in trust, for the beneficiaries of the policy; and that where he has no insurable interest, the assignment will operate at most only as a pledge and that he will hold the proceeds of the policy over and above the amount that he has paid for it, with interest, in trust for the beneficiaries of the policy. (Basye v. Adams, 81 Ky., 368; Barbour v. Larue, 106 Ky., 546; Lee v. Ins. Co., 26 Ky. Law Rep., 577; Ins. Co. v. Brown, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 2070; Baldwin v. Hayden, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 900; Schlamp v. Berner, 21 Ky. Law Rep., 324; Bramblett v. Hargis, 29 Ky. Law Rep., 610.)

• The doctrine of constructive trusts applies no less to judicial sales than to private sales. If the purchaser, at a private sale, will hold the property in trust for another, the purchaser, at a judicial sale, under like circumstances, will equally so hold it. If the property is impressed with a trust, the trust is enforceable as well against the purchaser at a judicial sale as at a private sale. (Miller v. Antle, 2 Bush, 407; Roach v. Hudson, 8 Bush, 410; 2 Pomeroy's Equity, section 1052.)

If the appellants had been of age and had sold this policy to Gosnell and Jones, the latter, under the above authorities, would only take an interest in the policy to the extent of the amount which they paid for it, and interest. The court was applied to simply because the children were not of age. The action of the court supplied the want of capacity in the children by reason of their non-age, but the court only did for the children what they might have done for themselves if of age. What Gosnell and Jones took under their purchase is to be determined, not alone from the judgment of the court, but from their capacity to take. The court transferred the policy to them, but the effect of the transfer is to be determined by the law which regulates what interest they could take in such a policy. The transaction having been made under an order of the court, which had all the parties before it, Gosnell and Jones must be adjudged entitled, out of the policy, to the amount they paid, with interest. To give it greater effect, would be entirely to ignore the rule that where a purchaser, at a private sale, would hold as trustee, he equally holds as trustee where he purchases at a judicial sale, under like circumstances, the reason for the rule being that his title in both cases depends upon his capacity to take and that if he can not take the title in one case absolutely, he cannot take it in the other. When a proposed purchaser is reported to the court, it does not consider whether he has capacity to take the property, or what interest he can take, unless the question is raised by exception to the sale. This is a matter which he is to see to for himself. The court, unless objection is made, does not consider whether he is trustee for the parties and will hold the property for them. In the case of a sale of a life insurance policy, the court does not inquire, sua sponte, whether the purchaser has an insurable interest in the life of the assured. The order confirming the sale, where no exceptions are filed, does not establish the fact that the purchaser is not a trustee for the parties, or that he has capacity to take the property absolutely. If, in fact, he has capacity only to take a limited estate in it and hold the remainder in trust for the parties, to show this fact in a subsequent suit, in no wise impeaches the judgment in the former case. The question is, what he took under that judgment and he could not take any greater interest than he had capacity to take. If he had no insurable interest in the life of the assured, the law allowed no greater interest to be vested in him by his purchase than a lien for his money, with interest. Every reason for the rule exists in sales made by order of court as in private sales; for there is the same temptation in each case to wrong doing and a mere gaming venture.

We have not referred to section 678, Kentucky Statutes, as that is in the division of the statute applicable to co-operative insurance and there is nothing in the section to show that it was intended to apply to other policies. The right of the mother can not be adjudicated in this action, as she has brought no suit.

Judgment reversed as to Gosnell and Jones, and cause remanded, with directions to the circuit court to adjudge Gosnell and Jones out of the proceeds of the policy $731.18, with interest at 6 per cent. from May 10, 1900, and to adjudge to the plaintiffs three-fourths of the remainder, and for further proceedings consistent herewith.

As to the insurance company, the judgment is affirmed.

The whole court sitting.

KENTUCKY UNION COMPANY v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed March 26, 1908—Not to be reported.)

W. B. Dixon, Louis B. Wehle and C. K. Calvert for appellant.

J. H. Jeffries for appellee.

Judge Hobson delivered the following dissenting opinion.

For the reasons given in the dissenting opinion, filed this day in the case of Eastern Kentucky Coal Lands Corporation v. Commonwealth, I dissent from the opinion of the court herein.

EASTERN KENTUCKY COAL LANDS CORPORATION v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed March 26, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Wm. J. Hendrick, Hoppen & Berard, Hazelrigg, Chenault & Hazelrigg, Jno. K. Hendrick and R. L. Miller for appellant.

Hager & Stewart, T. H. Paynter, W. H. Wadsworth, D. W. Baird, Z. T. Vinson, E. W. Hines, C. C. McChord, N. B. Hays and C. H. Morris for appellee.

Judge Hobson delivered the following dissenting opinion.

When an act is not punishable under the law in existence when it is done, it can not be made punishable by the Legislature by a law subsequently passed; and, upon like principles, where an act is punishable in a certain way when it is done, the Legislature can not, by a subsequent law, add to the punishment or penalty. The Legislature can not deny to any one the equal protection of the laws; and, in my judgment, article 3 of the Revenue Act of 1906 is void, both on the ground that it is ex post facto legislation, and that it denies to the holders of land titles referred to the equal protection of the laws.

The act was approved March 15, 1906. It took effect about ninety days thereafter. The first section of the act makes it the duty of every owner or claimant of land to pay all the taxes which had been assessed or should have been assessed against him or those under whom he claims, as of the 15th day of September, 1901, 1902, 1903, 1904 and 1905. And, if it had not been assessed for any of these years, the act made it his duty to assess the land and pay the taxes, interest and penalty therein provided for. His failure to do this is made a cause for the forfeiture of his title, but this forfeiture shall be extinguished if, on or before March 1, 1907, he lists the land and pays the taxes, with the interest and penalties provided by law in case of the redemption of land sold for the non-payment of taxes. When land is sold for the non-payment of taxes, a penalty of fifteen per cent. is added, and the taxes bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. So that the meaning of the act is that the owner of land who had failed to list it for the years named must list it after the act takes effect and pay a penalty of fifteen per cent., also interest on the taxes at ten per cent. per annum from the time he was delinquent, that is, from the time the land should have been assessed. By the law in force up to the time this act took effect, the owner of land, which had been omitted from assessment, might voluntarily have it assessed at any time and pay the taxes without interest or penalties. If he failed to list it voluntarily, and a proceeding was instituted against him under section 4241 of the Kentucky Statutes, he was liable to a penalty of twenty per cent., which went to the officer instituting the proceeding; but, even in this case, he was not liable for interest at ten per cent. on the taxes; and if he made the assessment voluntarily, without a proceeding being instituted against him, he was not liable for the penalty of twenty per cent. While the act gives him until March 1, 1907, to list his property and pay the taxes, from the moment the act took effect the only way that he could escape the forfeiture of his title was to pay not only the taxes but the interest and penalty. The act does not give him a certain length of time to list his property and provide that if he fails to list within that time he shall be subject to the penalty, but it imposed the penalty upon all who are delinquent in listing their land, and who would escape the forfeiture of their title by listing it after the act takes effect. It is said that so much of the act as imposes the penalty for the past delinquency may be rejected, and that the balance of the act may stand; that this is not a case in which that rule can be applied, for the reason that the act forfeits the title of all persons who had failed to list their land for the years named, and the only way in which they can escape the forfeiture is by paying the taxes with interest and penalty. If they do not pay the taxes, interest and penalty, the forfeiture stands. If that part of the act which provides for the extinguishment of the forfeiture is invalid, then there is no way in which the owner can escape the forfeiture. Besides, this is an essential part of the whole scheme of the act, and it cannot be presumed that the Legislature would have passed the act without this. The forfeiture of the titles of the owners is the purpose of the act. There could not be a clearer case of legislative intention to punish retrospectively.

. By the general law, the person owning land at the time it should be assessed is not only liable for the taxes, but remains bound therefor; by this article the present owner's land is forfeited to the Commonwealth for the non-payment of taxes by the former owner. By the general law, if the occupant of land pays the taxes thereon, he is entitled to recover of the owner the amount so paid, with interest, and has a lien on the land therefor; by this article, the fact that the land has been listed for taxation and the taxes paid by the occupant, does not prevent the forfeiture as therein set out. By the general law, land may be assessed retrospectively at any time not later than five years, but not to prejudice the rights of purchasers acquired in the meantime; by this article, the purchaser is required to pay the taxes with interest and penalty. By the general law, if the owner sells the land after the 1st of February of the year in which the taxes are due and payable, it is the duty of the owner to pay the taxes; by this article the purchaser's title is forfeited if he does not pay them. By the general law, where property has been sold for taxes, the owner may redeem it within two years; by this article, the owner forfeits his title to the land if he fails to assess it and pay the taxes thereon as therein provided. By the general law, if the owner fails to assess his property, it may be assessed retrospectively, but the taxes are then collected as other taxes; by this article, the taxes are not collected as other taxes, but must be paid at once with interest and penalties, to avoid a forfeiture of the title. By section 4 of this article, before the defendant may redeem, he must pay not only the amount of unpaid taxes charged, but those that ought to have been charged against those under whom he claims for fifty years preceding the filing of the counterclaim. No such provision is found in the general law relating to other property, and there is no provision in the general law for double taxation of the same property, and the payment of the taxes by each claimant where there are two claimants to it.

A reading of the article shows that it was a deliberate attempt on the part of the Legislature to deny the equal protection of the laws to the owners of the land title referred to, and to provide, as to the holders of these land titles, an entirely different system from that provided for the holders of other species of property. It is, therefore, in my judgment, void, both under the Constitution of this State and the Constitution of the United States.

For these reasons I dissent from the opinion of the court.

WELCH v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed March 26,, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Witnesses—Party Accused—Incriminating Testimony—Commission of Separate Offense—When the accused testifies as a witness in his own behalf, he stands as any other witness and can not be required to disclose public offenses committed by him other than that for which he is on trial.

2. Same—Motive—Evidence of—On the trial of one for malicious shooting, the motive, being a material element of the shooting, may be shown by facts proven, though they involve the commission of another offense by the defendant, but such proof must be established by other witnesses than the defendant.

A. R. Burnam & Son and J. Tevis Cobb for appellant.

James Breathitt, N. B. Hays, Chas. H. Morris, T. B. McGregor and R. H. Crooke for appellee.

Appeal from Madison Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, reversing.

S. E. Welch was indicted on the charge of shooting P. D. McBride, maliciously and with intent to kill him. He was found guilty of shooting in sudden heat and passion; his punishment was fixed at a fine of $500 and imprisonment in the county jail for one year. His motion for a new trial was overruled, and he appeals.

On the trial of the case, the defendant was sworn as a witness in his own behalf and testified to facts showing that the shooting was done in his necessary self-defense. On cross-examination he was asked if he had had any improper relations with Mrs. Fish, at whose house the shooting occurred, and if these relations did not continue down to the time of the shooting. To these questions he objected, on the ground, among other things, that he could not be compelled to incriminate himself. The court overruled his objections and he, in effect, answered the questions in the affirmative, when required by the court to answer them. To this he excepted. The matter was gone into at great length and with minuteness. This testimony was made the theme of the closing argument for the prosecution, and so emphasized that the real charge against the defendant presented to the jury by the argument was this offense, as well as the one for which he was indicted.

It is provided, in section 11 of the Constitution of the State, defining the rights of the accused in criminal prosecutions, among other things, as follows:

"He cannot be compelled to give evidence against himself."

When the accused, in a criminal case, takes the stand as a witness in his own behalf, he stands as any other witness, but he has all the rights of any other witness. He can not be required to disclose public offense committed by him other than that for which he is on trial. A witness can not be required to give evidence against himself or to testify to facts showing he has committed a public offense. For, if he were required to answer questions relating to such a matter, his testimony could be used against him on the trial of a prosecution for the offense so disclosed. The manner in which a witness may be discredited is provided by law, and, among other things, it is provided that he may not be impeached "by evidence of particular wrongful acts," except that it may be shown that he has been convicted of felony. (Civil Code, section 597.)

The motive with which the shooting was done was a material element of the offense, and, to show motive, facts may be proved, though they involve the commission of another offense. (4 Elliott on Evidence, section 2720; 1 Wigmore on Evidence, section 304; 1 Jones on Evidence, section 144; O'Brien v. Commonwealth, 89 Ky. 362, 115 Ky., 608.)

But proof of such facts here must be made by other witnesses when they establish the commission of another offense; the defendant can not be required, over his protest, to bear witness against himself and thus subject himself to another prosecution.

On the whole record, we are satisfied the substantial rights of the defendant were prejudiced on the trial and that a new trial should be granted.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, for a new trial.

SOUTH COV. & CIN. STREET RAILWAY CO. v. BESSE

(Filed March 26, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Street Cars—Swinging of Car on Curve—Collision with Passing Wagon—Injury to Driver—Liability—Every driver of a vehicle must know that the motorman of a street car can not control the hind end of a car at a curve, so as to keep it from swinging out as far as, by nature, it will go, and it is, therefore, incumbent on such driver of a vehicle in passing a car at a curve, to keep out of the way, and if he fails to do so, and is injured by the natural swing of the car, the fault is his own, for which no recovery can be had.

L. J. Crawford for appellant.

Auther C. Hall for appellee.

Appeal from Campbell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, reversing.

At the intersection of Berry street and Sixth street in Dayton, Ky., there are double tracks of the street railway. The street cars turn here from Sixth street into Berry street. Frank Besse, on October 5, 1906, was driving along Sixth street, and as he got to the intersection of Sixth street and Berry street, he met a street car going in the opposite direction. He was driving along on the other track of the street railway, and as the street car made the turn, the hind end of the car, as it turned on the curve, swung out beyond the track and thus came in contact with the hind end of Besse's wagon. By the collision he was thrown against the brake, and he brought this suit to recover for his injuries. A trial was had before a jury, who found for him, and fixed the damages at $500. Judgment was entered upon the verdict, and the defendant appeals.

The evidence for the plaintiff showed that his wagon was struck by the hind end of the car while the wagon was within the rails of the other track of the railway company. It also showed that the motorman saw Besse as he passed him, but did not see him afterwards. The car was running about three miles an hour and there was no lurch of the car, and nothing more of a swing by the hind end than always occurred at that point when a car of this length passed; but the car was an unusually long one, and therefore the hind end swung out further as it turned than the hind end of a shorter car would do. The proof for the defendant was to the effect that Besse, after passing the motorman, drove between the tracks and got nearer to the car, thereby causing the collision. The defendant introduced proof showing that the hind end of the car never reached over as far as the other track.

It is the duty of those in charge of street cars to keep a lookout for persons and vehicles on the street, and to exercise ordinary care to avoid injuring them. It is the duty of those driving other vehicles to keep a lookout for the cars and to exercise ordinary care to keep out of their way. The street car must stay upon its tracks. In making a turn, as the trucks are not at the end of the car, the end must project more or less beyond the track, according to the length of the car and the degree of the curve. Every driver of a vehicle must know that the motorman can not control the hind end of the car at a curve so as to keep it from swinging out as far as, by nature, it will go. It is, therefore, incumbent upon the driver of a vehicle passing a street car to keep out of the way, and at curves to drive further from the car than at other points. He must expect the car to stay on its track, and he must expect that the end of the car will swing out in turning the curve, and if he does not make a sufficient allowance for the swing of the car and drives so close to it that the car, in turning, strikes the vehicle, the fault is his own and not that of the street car company. The motorman can not leave his track; the driver of the vehicle has the whole street to drive on and it is his fault if he does not drive far enough from the car to prevent the hind end of the car from hitting his wagon as he passes it. Under the proof the court should have instructed the jury to find for the defendant.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, for further proceedings, consistent herewith.

COMINGOR v. LOUISVILLE TRUST CO., TRUSTEE IN BANKRUPTCY, OF SIMONSON, WHITESON & COMPANY.

(Filed March 26th, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Assigned Estate—Management—Duties of Assignee—Liability for Negligence—In the management of an assigned estate the assignee is bound to exercise the same care that an ordinarily prudent person would use in his own affairs under like circumstances, and for such losses, deficiencies or injuries as may be caused by his affirmative or negative violation of this rule and the duties it imposes he is answerable for the loss thereby inflicted.

2. Same—Fraud of Assignee—Compensation—Where it is shown by the evidence that the assignee of an estate fraudulently accepted the position at the instance of the assignor with the view of aiding him in concealing his property and selling it to a pretended purchaser, who turned it over to the assignor at a greatly reduced price, the circuit court properly refused to allow him any compensation in his fraudulent management of the estate.

3. Action for Settlement—Jurisdiction of Chancellor—Necessity for Jury—In an action for the settlement of an assigned estate, where the assignee is charged with fraud, the issues of fact as to the questions of fraud and value are but incidental to the main purpose of the action to compel an accounting of the assignee, and the chancellor having exclusive jurisdiction thereof, such jurisdiction carries with it the power to decide all other issues raised without the intervention of a jury.

4. Claim—Affidavit and Demand—Failure to Make—Delay in Objecting—The failure of the plaintiff to comply with the statutory requisition as to affidavit and demand must be objected to by the defendant before he interposes his defense on the merits, by filing an affidavit showing that the preliminary proof and demand had not been made by the plaintiff and asking a rule for its compliance.

Alfred Selligman and W. M. Smith for appellant.

Geo. Weisinger Smith, Smith & Sprague and Barnett & Barnett for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, Second Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle, reversing.

On December 5th, 1908, the firm of Simonson, Whiteson & Company, composed of D. G. Simonson, I. Whiteson and Leo Stern, conducting a merchantile business in the city of Louisville in a house known as the "Mammoth," made a deed of assignment to their book-keeper, the appellant, L. Comingor, conveying him for the benefit of their creditors the stock of merchandise and fixtures in the Mammoth store. The latter at once accepted the trust, executed bond with approved security, and duly qualified as such trustee, thereby undertaking to perform in a legal manner, the duties required of him in that capacity.

At the time of the assignment the cash value of the merchandise owned by the firm of Simonson, Whiteson & Company, was between $100,000.00 and $138,000.00, the fixtures and electric plant in and connected with the store about $12,000.00, and there was due the firm in open accounts about $7,000. Probably it would not be overstating the mark to say that the total assets of the firm then approximated $150,000.00, and that its liabilities were nearly as great.

Appellant immediately procured the appointment of appraisers to appraise the assigned property. The appraisers completed their work in four days, placing the value of the property at the sum of $71,656.56, which was much less than its actual value.

Three days after the filing of the deed of assignment, appellant brought suit in equity to settle his accounts as assignee. Only a few of the firm's creditors were made parties to this action; one of the largest creditors, the Louisville Banking Company, though conducting business just across the street from the Mammoth store, was not made a party to the action. Summons was executed upon only the members of the firm in question, but later, and by amended petition, two other creditors were made parties and served with summons. On December 10th, 1898, the assignee opened the store and commenced the sale by retail of the assigned property. Later he filed two petitions to obtain advice of the court. By the first he asked permission to sell the stock of goods by retail. By the second he reported large sales at prices above the values fixed by the appraisers, and averred that he still had on hand over $5,000.00 worth of the assigned property. As a matter of fact, according to the weight of the evidence, the goods then on hand were reasonably worth as much as or more than $70,000.00. On January 25th, 1899, appellant, in another petition, then filed, again asked advice of the chancellor and averred that there were only "remnants, odds and ends" left of the stock, a sale of which as a whole, would redound to the benefit of his assignors and their creditors. The order of sale was granted by the court, though none of the creditors, even those who were parties to the action, had notice of the request or order. The law firm of Kohn, Baird & Spindle, who represented a few creditors, not parties of record, had such notice, but did not concern themselves about it as their clients had theretofore agreed with appellant and Simonson, Whiteson & Company to accept fifty cents on the dollar in settlement of their demands.

The assignee thereupon caused to be inserted in small type and in an obscure column of the Louisville Evening Times, between a notice relating to false hair and another to false teeth, an abbreviated advertisement of the time and place of the sale to be made of the assigned merchandise and fixtures. The Times' foreman was directed by the assignee to insert the advertisement without display. It appeared in the Times on Friday and Saturday, January 27th and 28th, 1899, and the sale occurred on January 30th, which was Monday of the following week. As there was no issue of the Times on Sunday the advertisement was published but two days, Friday and Saturday. The goods and fixtures sold were purchased by Henry Stern, of New York, at the price of $15,000.00. Henry Stern is a brother of Leo Stern, who was a member of the firm of Simonson, Whiteson & Company at the time of the assignment to Comingor. Shortly before the sale the three members of the firm of Simonson, Whiteson & Company, made an agreement in regard thereto with Henry Stern, which was reduced to writing by their attorney and signed by the parties, several months later. That writing reads as follows:

"We have agreed to divide equally between us all that may be left out of the assets of Simonson, Whiteson & Company, and what we may save from the wreck after paying the indebtedness of said firm to D. L. Newborg & Son and Stern, Falk & Co.

"Louisville, Ky., June 14th, '99.

"D. G. SIMONSON,

"I. WHITESON,

"LEO STERN."

Under the verbal agreement entered into before the sale, Henry Stern was to come to Louisville, and bid in the stock of goods and fixtures at not less than $15,000.00, nor more than $20,000.00. On the day of the sale and at the hour named in the advertisement, to-wit: 10 o'clock, a. m., Henry Stern was on hand, pursuant to the agreement referred to, and at 10:30 o'clock the goods and fixtures were knocked down to him at the price of $15,000.00, which he at once paid to the assignee. The sale was consummated under unusual circumstances. The store was closed down to the hour fixed for the sale, and neither at the time indicated, previous thereto or during the sale was there any effort to attract the notice of the public, either by the customary ringing of an auction bell, the hanging out of a red flag, distribution of hand bills, or posting of a notice on the store door. While conducting the sale the auctioneer stood on the stairway leading from the first to the second floor of the store. In from five to twenty minutes after the auctioneer reached the store the sale was consummated, Though all the time present, neither the assignors nor assignee exhibited the goods, called attention to their quality or value, or did anything to encourage bidding. All the while the goods on the first floor remained covered, and those in the basement and on the second, third and fourth floors were never shown the few persons, besides the parties in interest present.

The auctioneer did not have, nor had the assignee furnished him, an inventory of the property sold. There was no offer to sell the goods in lines or by lots, or to make a separate sale of the fixtures. But few persons were present and Henry Stern was practically the only bidder. According to the testimony of some of the persons in attendance, one or two of the spectators would have made bids, but Whiteson deterred them from doing so by requesting them not to take away his bread and meat; one prospective bidder was threatened with a choking if he persisted in bidding, and yet another was given a note of several hundred dollars he was owing Simonson, Whiteson & Company, to keep him from bidding.

On the day of the sale and upon his paying the assignee the amount of his bid, Henry Stern took possession of the goods and two days later placed them in possession of Leo Stern, Simonson and Whiteson, the first as manager, immediately following which, Henry Stern returned to New York, where he has since remained. While in charge of the goods and business left with him by his brother, Henry, Leo Stern replenished the stock to the amount of $15,000.00, and during the six months of his management of the business he deposited in the German Bank of Louisville $82,138.16, realized from the sale of the goods his brother purchased of the assignee of Simonson, Whiteson & Company, and the $15,000.00 further stock, added thereto under his (Leo Stern's) management of the business.

On February 1st, 1899, or two days after the sale to Henry Stern, of the goods and fixtures of Simonson, Whiteson & Company by the assignee, the Louisville Banking Company, principal creditor of the firm, brought suit to set aside the sale of the property to Henry Stern, and to subject the same to the payment of the firm's debts; and shortly thereafter other creditors of the firm filed, in the United States District Court for the Western District of Kentucky, a petition in involuntary bankruptcy against Simonson, Whiteson & Company, and each member of the firm, and the company and members thereof were later duly adjudged bankrupts. Following this adjudication, the referee in bankruptcy issued rules against Comingor, assignee of Simonson, Whiteson & Company and his attorneys to show cause why the assignee should not pay to the trustee in bankruptcy $3,398.90, the amount claimed by the assignee as commissions, also $6,766.53, balance of the assets of the estate of his assignors admitted by him to be in his hands, and the further sum of $3,000.00 which he claimed to have paid as a fee to his attorneys. The rule being made absolute as to the $6,766.55, that sum was paid by the assignee into the Federal Court, but upon appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals and later a writ of error to the Supreme Court, that tribunal reversed the judgment of the district court upon the ground that the assignee had a right to have his accounts settled in the State court, in which was still pending the action brought by him to obtain a settlement of his accounts. (Comingor v. Louisville Trust Co., 184 U. S., 184).

Upon the conclusion of the litigation in the Federal Courts, the Louisville Trust Company, trustee in bankruptcy, by supplemental answer, cross-petition and counter-claim filed in the action in the Jefferson Circuit Court, asked to enforce a settlement of Comingor's accounts as assignee of Simonson, Whiteson & Company and to recover of him the amount he had or should have in his hands belonging to the estate of his assignors.

The circuit court, being of opinion that the questions of law and fact raised by the pleadings could be determined by the court without the cost and delay resulting from a reference to the commissioner, refused to order such reference. On the hearing the court below rendered judgment in favor of the Louisville Trust Company, trustee in bankruptcy, of Simonson, Whiteson & Company, against Comingor, assignee of the same firm for $10,706.00, with six per cent. interest from July 5th, 1900, upon the ground that his negligence caused a loss to the estate of that amount; and for the further sum of $5,398.90, with six per cent. interest from the 5th day of July, 1900. The sum last mentioned being the amount of commissions retained by him for services claimed to have been rendered as assignee, but which the court held he was not entitled to on the ground that his negligence caused a loss to the estate of his assignors to that amount, in addition to the larger sum first named. Comingor complains of the judgment, hence the appeal; and as appellee, Louisville Trust Company, was claiming in its answer and counter-claim a much larger sum than was recovered, it took a cross-appeal because of the failure of the circuit court to give judgment in its favor for the full sum claimed.

We are of opinion that the evidence appearing in the record clearly shows that there was a fraudulent agreement, entered into before the public sale of January 30th, 1899, between Simonson, Whiteson and Leo Stern on the one part and Henry Stern on the other, pursuant to which the stock of assigned goods and fixtures of the former were to be sold to the latter at greatly less than their value, to-wit: $15,000.00, or not exceeding $20,000.00; and that, after being purchased by Henry Stern, they were to be sold and the proceeds divided among Simonson, Whiteson and Leo Stern, after paying the claims of the preferred creditors named in the writing subsequently drawn to evidence the agreement.

Appellant's knowledge of the agreement and participation in the consequent fraud is, we think, also established by the evidence. His position as book-keeper of Simonson, Whiteson & Company, necessarily made him familiar with their business and rendered it practically impossible for them to execute the agreement in question without his knowledge and assistance. As the assignment was necessary to carry out the fraudulent agreement it is most natural that the firm should have selected their book-keeper and confidential friend to act as assignee, if, as the evidence in the record tends to show was the case, they knew he would further their purposes. Their attorneys represented appellant until he disposed of the assigned property, but in this court he has been and is represented by other counsel who had no connection with the assignment or disposition of the assigned property. One of his first acts as assignee was to put it out of the power of the appraisers to fairly value the property and assets that came to his hands, for he and his assignors so arranged and concealed the goods and fixtures and juggled inventories and price lists, as to prevent a fair appraisement. The circumstances attending the advertisement and sale of the goods and fixtures to Henry Stern could not have been accidental, and would not have prevailed without appellant's assistance or connivance. No surer means could have been adopted to carry out the fraudulent scheme contemplated by his assignors and Henry Stern than those resorted to by appellant in procuring from the court, without notice to the creditors and by a suppression of the true facts in respect to the value of the goods, the order of sale, and the illegal manner of advertising and conducting the sale.

In the petition filed by appellant for "advice" and to obtain of the court the order of sale, he admitted phenomenal sales of the assigned goods and represented that he still had in the store "over $5,000.00," worth of goods which he wished to sell as "remnants, odds and ends."

When the petition was filed he knew that the goods, fixtures and accounts then in the store amounted in value to not less than $70,000.00. In addition it appears from the record that appellant's attorney who advised him in all matters connected with the assignment wrote the agreement in question.

It further appears from the evidence that appellant did not file in the county court or clerk's office an inventory of the assigned estate, or schedule of the debts of his assignors.

From all the evidence before us we can not doubt appellant's knowledge of the fraudulent agreement, or his participation in its execution. If he did not know of the fraudulent agreement and the manner in which it was consummated, he was extraordinarily negligent, for the evidences thereof manifested themselves in his presence and in connection with his duties as assignee, from the time of his appointment down to the beginning of this litigation; in view of which his failure to detect it, is inexplicable and unpardonable.

In our opinion appellant should have realized a much larger sum from the sale of the goods and fixtures than he received.

Without adopting the estimate of any particular witness, we are satisfied that the great weight of the evidence is to the effect that the stock of goods sold by appellant to Henry Stern was at the time of the sale worth at cost prices not less than $50,000.00 and the fixtures not less than $10,000.00, making the total value of goods and fixtures $60,000.00. Deduct from this amount 40 per cent. or $24,000.00, for depreciation in the value of the stock and fixtures, and the $15,000.00 received by appellant in the sale to Henry Stern, and there will be left $21,000.00 with which appellant is justly chargeable. In addition he should be charged with $3,398.90, the commissions retained by him for services rendered as assignee, making a total of $24,398.90, for which, with interest from July 5th, 1900, appellee should have recovered judgment in the court below.

No doctrine is better settled than that an assignee, or other trustee, in the management of the estate entrusted to him is bound to exercise the same care that an ordinarily prudent person would use in his own affairs under like circumstances, and for such losses, deficiencies or injuries, as may be occasioned by his affirmative or negative violation of this rule, and the duties it imposes, he is answerable for the loss thereby inflicted. (Perry on Trusts, sec. 770; Pom. Eq. Juris., sec. 1070.) In Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, section 1079, it is said:

"It might be supposed that the term 'breach of trust', was confined to willful and fraudulent acts which have a quasi criminal character, even if they have not been made actual crimes by statute. The term has, however, a broader and more technical meaning. It is well settled that every violation by a trustee of a duty which equity lays upon him, whether willful and fraudulent, or done through negligence, or arising through mere oversight or forgetfulness, is a breach of duty."

Upon the facts furnished by the record before us, and under an application of the just rule above stated, appellant's management of the estate entrusted to him was highly reprehensible, and such as to manifest bad faith and gross misconduct, which this court can not ignore or condone, even to the extent of allowing him compensation for any part of the services he claims to have rendered as assignee.

The circuit court's action in refusing him compensation was, therefore, proper, for a trustee guilty of fraud or misconduct in the management of the estate is not entitled to contemplation. (Perry on Trusts, section 919; 4 Cyc., 257.)

We do not think appellant's contention that he should have had a trial by jury of the questions of fact raised by the pleadings is tenable. The Constitution secures to a litigant the right of trial by jury, only in cases where such right existed at common law. (O'Connor, &c.

vs. Henderson Bridge Co., 95 Ky., 643; Ford vs. Ellis, 21 Ky. Law Rep., 1838; Carder vs. Weisenburg, 95 Ky., 138; Reese, Adm'r vs. Youtsey, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 603.) In view of expensive testimony having been taken by deposition in the case as prepared, it would have been an abuse of discretion on the part of the lower court to direct an issue out of chancery. Moreover, the action is not one on appellant's bond, but to settle his accounts as assignee. The issues of fact as to the questions of fraud and value were but incidental to the main purpose of the action, which was to compel an accounting and settlement of the assignee, and the chancellor having exclusive jurisdiction thereof, such jurisdiction carried with it the power to decide all other issues raised, without the intervention of a jury.

Appellant's contention that appellee, Louisville Trust Company, trustee in bankruptcy, has no right to assert in this action the claim in controversy, is without merit. Its right to do so was recognized by the Supreme Court in the case of Comingor v. Louisville Trust Company, 184 U. S., 184; and it would be an anomalous change of base to permit appellant, after defeating appellee in the Federal Courts upon the ground that he has the right to settle his accounts as assignee in the State court, to insist that appellee can not assert its right of action against him in the latter court, where he forced it to go. Section 21, Civil Code, allows a trustee in bankruptcy to sue in his own name without joining the beneficiary. Manifestly, if in this case there should be a recovery against appellant, it should be applied to the payment of the debts of Simonson, Whiteson & Company; and the trustee in bankruptcy, as the representative of the firm's creditors, would be and is entitled to receive it; for which reason it had the right to enter its appearance in the action to assert its rights. In addition, appellee was expressly authorized by an order of the Federal District Court to sue and recover of appellant the claim herein litigated, and section 47, Bankruptcy Act of 1898, made it its duty to do so.

Appellant has no just ground of complaint of the action of the circuit court in overruling his exceptions to the depositions of appellee. Under section 1008, Kentucky Statutes, and rule 12 adopted by the Jefferson Circuit Court, the depositions were properly taken upon interrogatories. As Simonson's deposition seems to have been taken after the filing of the answer and not within twenty days from the service of summons, and he is not united in interest with appellee and the deposition was not taken in his own behalf, under the rule in question it was properly admitted in evidence.

Appellant further complains that there does not appear in the record the statutory affidavit purging appellee's claim. Obviously, the objection comes too late. The cause of action stated by appellee's pleadings against appellant was complete, without an allegation that payment of the claim sought to be recovered had been demanded of appellant before suit, or that such demand had been accompanied by the statutory affidavit as to the absence of usury, &c. Failure of the plaintiff to comply with the statutory requisition as to affidavit and demand, must be objected to by the defendant before he interposes his defense on the merits of the case, by filing an affidavit showing that the preliminary proof and demand had not been made by the plaintiff, and then asking a rule against him to produce evidence of his compliance with the necessary prerequisites. If such evidence be not produced in response to the rule, the court will dismiss the action. (Thomas, Ex'or v. Thomas, 15 B. Mon., 182; Gough's Adm'r v. Alvey & Co., 10 Ky. Law Rep., 590; Rigny v. Peely, 13 Ky. Law Rep., 93; Cockrill v. Mize, 11 Ky. Law Rep., 637; Rogers v. Mitchell's Ex'or, 1 Met., 24; Lyon's Ex'tx v. Logan County, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1668.)

Appellant did not pursue the course above indicated, and having

allowed the case to proceed to judgment, he is estopped to complain of appellee's failure to comply with the statutory requisition of affidavit and demand.

For the reasons indicated, the judgment is affirmed on the original and reversed on the cross-appeal, and cause remanded, with directions to the lower court to enter judgment in appellee's behalf against appellant for $24,398.90, with interest from July 5th, 1900; and for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Whole court sitting.

KENNEDY v. FULTON MERCANTILE CO., &c.

(Filed March 26th, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Contracts—Made in Name of a Company—Liability of Individuals—Persons who make a contract are bound by it although they make it in the name of a company.

2. Same—Proposed Corporation—Failure to Organize—Liability as Partners—Where those who propose to form a corporation make a contract in the name of the proposed corporation, they are bound as partners upon the contract when the corporation is not organized.

Lee & Hester for appellant.

Herschel T. Smith for appellees.

Appeal from Fulton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, reversing.

In September, 1906, D. B. Horn, W. C. Gammons, George Bruce, M. P. McDowell, J. B. McDowell, S. A. Bolton, and M. I. Bolton agreed among themselves to form a corporation to be known as the Fulton Mercantile Company, to conduct a mercantile business in Fulton, Ky., the company to have a capital of $3,500. After having gotten a subscription of about $3,500, the subscribers had a meeting at which they elected a president and a secretary and appointed a committee to confer with J. C. Kennedy about renting a brick store house. The committee, after a number of meetings with Mr. Kennedy, finally made the following written contract by authority of the other subscribers:

"Articles of agreement by and between J. C. Kennedy of the first part, and the Fulton Mercantile Company of the second part: Witnesseth, That the party of the first part this day rents to the party of the second part his entire brick building in front of Paschall Block and the Iron Warehouse in the rear and all appurtenances thereto, for which the party of the second part agrees to pay to the party of the first part six hundred dollars ($600) per year, said amount to be paid 1-12 at the end of each month. Said Kennedy is to keep buildings in good repair. Said Mercantile Company is to be responsible for any damage done to buildings by them or their employes, except the necessary wear and decay of same. Said Mercantile Company is to keep the Iron Warehouse in proper repair for same so long as said company uses it. The arches cut in the brick wall by M. P. McDowell are to be properly replaced by said Fulton Mercantile Company at expiration of said company's lease if so desired by said J. C. Kennedy. Whatever fixtures furnished by said Mercantile Company may be removed by said company at expiration of lease if said Kennedy should not want to purchase same. On above terms, party of the first part is to let party of the second part have the buildings for five years, beginning October 1, 1906. Witness our hands this September 7th, 1906.

"J. C. KENNEDY,
"THE FULTON MERCANTILE CO.
"Per M. P. McDOWELL, Sec."

Witness:

"A. H. MOHUNDRO."

On January 3, 1907, Kennedy brought this suit against them charging that they had taken possession of the property and had had the use of it but had paid no part of the rent and had not kept the premises in repair, to his damage in the sum of $100. He prayed judgment against them for the rent due, $150 and $100 damages. The defendants answered, pleading in substance that it was agreed between them and Kennedy that the contract was not to take effect or be binding unless they organized the corporation; that by mistake of the draftsman this part of the agreement was left out of the contract; and that they had failed to organize the corporation by reason of the fact that the necessary subscriptions to the stock could not be secured. Proof taken and on final hearing the circuit court dismissed Kennedy's petition. From this judgment he appeals. Kennedy made Earl Boaz and Aud Boaz, also defendants to his petition, but the proof clearly shows that they subscribed for stock after the contract with Kennedy was made, and that they had nothing to do with the making of the contract. The court properly dismissed the petition as to them as they were strangers to the contract; but as to the other defendants a more difficult question is presented. To state all the evidence in detail, would unduly extend this opinion and we shall content ourselves with a statement of the facts which control the case. The witnesses introduced by the plaintiff to show that it was agreed that the contract was not to be binding unless the corporation was organized and that this was left out of the contract by mistake do not testify that they said this to Kennedy or that he agreed to it. They say that this was understood; but the facts that they state only go to show that both parties then assumed that the corporation would be organized. They show that they asked Kennedy to subscribe for stock in the corporation and that they informed him that the stock was not made up; but there is nothing in what they said to indicate a doubt on their part that the stock would be made up. On the contrary Kennedy testifies emphatically that nothing of the sort was said or understood. The contract was under discussion some days before it was made. Their first proposition to Kennedy was not accepted. When their second proposition was accepted, time was taken to reduce the contract to writing. The first draft of the contract was not acceptable to Kennedy; a second draft was then made and before it was signed, A. H. Mohundro was called in to witness it. He read the contract aloud twice before it was signed and testifies without contradiction that nothing was said in his presence about the contract not being binding unless the corporation was organized. The defendants took possession of the property; they repaired the warehouse and after they failed to organize the corporation, Geo. Bruce who had his stock in the storeroom, and now testifies that the contract was conditional, went to see Kennedy and proposed to pay him rent at $20 a month for the room which he occupied. Kennedy declined to take it and they then called in a justice of the peace as an adviser for them both, Bruce telephoning for him. When he came, both of them stated the case to him and neither one of them then said anything about the contract being conditional. In addition to all this, the evidence satisfies us that the corporation was not organized because the defendants fell out among themselves. Horn wished to put in a stock valued at $1,600 on his subscription and Bruce was to put in his stock. Some difficulty arose between them about these matters which led to the abandonment of the scheme. The proof does not show that Kennedy took possession of any part of the rented premises or rented it out; on the contrary it shows that he was careful to do nothing to waive his contract rights under his lease. The fact that the defendants took possession of the property and improved the warehouse is conclusive to our minds that they assumed that they would organize the corporation, and after they had done this, their obligation to Kennedy could not be affected by their falling out among themselves and by reason of this failing to organize. A written contract deliberately entered into and intelligently made should not be set aside or modified unless on satisfactory proof of mistake. After the parties themselves treated the contract as absolute by taking possession of the property and improving it, they can not be released from their obligation on such inconclusive proof as we have here to the effect that the contract was conditional and was not binding unless the corporation was organized.

There is nothing to sustain the charge that the property was damaged; but under the proof Kennedy was entitled to judgment for the installments of rent due at the time the petition was filed. Persons who make a contract are bound by it, although they make it in the name of a company. Where those who propose to form a corporation make a contract in the name of the proposed corporation they are bound as partners upon the contract when the corporation is not organized; and we think the fair effect of all the proof is that the defendants assumed that they would form the corporation and made the contract with Kennedy upon this assumption. When they did this, they took the risk that the corporation should be organized.

The judgment appealed from as to Earl Boaz and Aud Boaz is affirmed but as to the other defendants, the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, for a judgment as above indicated.

NIOUM V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed March 26, 1908—To be reported.)

1. New Trial—Newly Discovered Evidence—Probable Effect on Another Trial—To entitle one to a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, such evidence should be of such a controlling and decisive character as to convince the court that it will probably have a preponderating influence upon another trial.

2. Same—Foreigner—Trial for Felony—Appointment of Interpreter—Authority of Court—A foreigner on trial for maliciously cutting another, who does not understand the English language, and had to have an interpreter to translate his testimony to the jury, is not entitled to a new trial after conviction, on the ground that there is no statute in this State authorizing the appointment of an interpreter except in bastardy cases (sec. 181) and courts of continuous session (sec. 1034.) Courts in the absence of statutory authority have the inherent power to appoint an interpreter when the ends of justice require it.

3. Same—Failure to Swear Interpreter—Absence of Objection—Consideration on Appeal—Where an interpreter was permitted by the court to be used on the trial of one for felony, who was introduced and used by the defendant to translate his testimony to the jury, the fact that he was not sworn, to which no objection or exception was made by defendant until the filing of his grounds for a new trial, such error or oversight can not be considered on appeal.

4. Same—Qualification of Interpreter—Where an interpreter was introduced by a defendant on trial for a felony and used by him to interpret his testimony before the jury, to which no objection was made by the Commonwealth, the court had a right to assume that he was qualified to act, and it was not error in the court to fail to examine into his competency as an interpreter.

5. Arraignment of Defendant—Showing of Record—Grounds for New Trial—On the trial of one for a felony, the fact that the record fails to show that the defendant was arraigned, or that a formal arraignment was waived, or that his plea was entered, is not cause for reversal, unless such failure is made a ground for a new trial.

Allan D. Cole, G. W. Adair and Virgil McKnight for appellant.

James Breathitt, Thos. B. McGregor and Charles H. Morris for appellee.

Appeal from Mason Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle, affirming.

The appellant, Demetri Nioum, was indicted, tried and convicted in the Mason Circuit Court for maliciously shooting and wounding Thomas James, and his punishment fixed at three years' confinement in the penitentiary. Appellant was refused a new trial, of which, and the judgment of conviction, he now complains.

Appellant and James are Greeks, both came from Bulgaria to the United States and later to Maysville, Kentucky, where they entered the service of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway Company, the former as a common laborer in railroad construction, the latter as an interpreter of the Greek or Bulgarian language, there being a number of persons, beside appellant, from Bulgaria in the employ of the railway company, unable to speak or understand the English language.

It appears from the evidence that the wives of James and appellant are first cousins; that the two men were excellent friends while they lived in Bulgaria, and continued so after they came to Maysville until about one week before the shooting of James by appellant, at which time the latter had a difficulty with some of his fellow workmen which resulted in his quitting the service of the railroad company and going to Cincinnati where he remained for a week and then returned to Maysville. James seemed to have interfered at the time of the difficulty, but whether for or against appellant is not clear; he did, however, render him some assistance in getting from the railway company, the wages due him. Unless appellant entertained ill-will against James for something done by the latter at the time of his (appellant's) difficulty with his fellow workmen, the record fails to furnish a motive for the shooting and wounding of James.

The facts as to the shooting and wounding of James were in brief as follows: In April, 1907, James and two associates, Crager and Hughes were on the bank of the Ohio river, engaged in the pastime of shooting at a mark. Another man, Harrison, was also present, but did not take part in the target practice. The lock of the pistol with which the shooting was done got out of repair, and while James, Crager and Hughes were trying to fix it, appellant came up and, without warning, shot James; the ball entering his neck immediately below the jaw and passing out on the opposite side, within one sixteenth of an inch of the carotid artery, making a very dangerous and well nigh fatal wound. After firing the shot, appellant ran from the ground and while running fired another shot at James, but without effect. He then left Maysville for Cincinnati and a few days after was arrested not far from Maysville.

Shortly after appellant's difficulty with his fellow workmen, and before the shooting of James, he inquired of the latter whether he had a gun. The shooting and wounding of James was admitted by appellant at the time of his arrest and again as a witness on the trial, but on each occasion he claimed to have been drunk at the time of the shooting and unconscious of the act.

Appellant's motion for a new trial was based on the grounds: 1st. That the circuit court erred in admitting and rejecting evidence. 2nd. That the verdict of the jury was influenced by passion or prejudice. 3rd. Newly discovered evidence material to the defense, ascertained after the trial, and which he could not with reasonable diligence have discovered in time to produce at the trial. 4th. That the verdict of the jury is not sustained by sufficient evidence and is contrary to law. 5th. Accident or surprise which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against.

The 2nd and 4th grounds can be considered together and summarily disposed of. There is not a fact or circumstance presented by the record that tends in the remotest degree to indicate that the jury were influenced by either passion or prejudice, and the fact that they fixed appellant's punishment at three years' confinement in the penitentiary, when they might have made it five, would seem to indicate that their sympathies were to some extent, enlisted in appellant's behalf, on account of his ignorance of the English language and friendless condition. Instead of there being no evidence, or not a sufficiency of evidence to support the verdict, the contrary is certainly true. Leaving out of consideration appellant's admission of guilt, the testimony of the Commonwealth, which was contradicted by that of appellant in no material particular, so demonstrated his guilt as to remove any vestige of doubt and close every loophole of escape. The evidence introduced by appellant, other than his own testimony, failed to furnish any proof that he was, by reason of intoxication at the time of shooting and wounding James, mentally incapable of understanding the nature and enormity of the act, and the fact that he ran away so swiftly from the scene would seem to indicate that he was not intoxicated to an appreciable extent. It also manifests that the verdict was not contrary to law. During the trial no objection was made, or exception taken by appellant to the instructions given by the court, and no criticism of them is to be found in the briefs of his counsel; in view, therefore, of the convincing proof of appellant's guilt, and the admittedly correct presentation by the instructions, of all the law of the case, we are unable to perceive any ground for appellant's complaint that the verdict was or is contrary to law.

The complaint made in ground number 1, of the admission of incompetent, and the rejection of competent evidence, on the trial by the court below, is unsupported by the record. We have failed to find that any competent evidence was excluded by the court, or that appellant excepted to any ruling of the court excluding evidence. The evidence admitted on the trial which appellant insists was incompetent, was the alleged false interpretation of his testimony given the jury by one Nick Poppes, introduced by appellant as interpreter, and the contents of a letter written by appellant in Greek, or Bulgarian, to Kosta and Nickles, of Cincinnati, soon after the shooting of James, which Poppes translated into English and read to the jury at appellant's request.

As to the alleged misinterpretation by Poppes of appellant's testimony and of the letter to the jury, it seems sufficient to say, that no objection was made by appellant at the time, to Poppes' interpretation of his testimony, or of the letter read to the jury; indeed, his complaint as to these matters was first made in the motion and grounds for a new trial, which, in view of section 281, Criminal Code, will prevent this court from considering it.

It is argued, however, that appellant's ignorance of the English language and consequent inability at the time of testifying to detect the alleged false interpretation given his testimony and the letter by Poppes to the jury in English, prevented him from then making his objections thereto known to his counsel or the trial court, but that when, after the trial, he discovered for the first time that Poppes had, to the prejudice of his substantial rights, falsely interpreted his testimony to the jury, and falsely interpreted the letter written to Kosta and Nickles, this after acquired information being newly discovered evidence of which he was by accident deprived on the trial, entitled him to a new trial upon the third and fifth grounds filed in support thereof.

We find in the record the affidavits of appellant, his chief counsel and one Sam Roberts, giving the facts intended to show the alleged newly discovered evidence and how and when it was discovered by appellant. The affidavits of appellant and his counsel in substance recite that appellant tried to secure the services of an interpreter of Cincinnati, other than Poppes, to act in that capacity at his trial; that information came to him that the person to whom he wrote was not in Cincinnati and could not attend the trial, but that he had sent to act as interpreter in his place, the witness Poppes, who though unknown to appellant, was introduced by him as interpreter on the trial. Affiants, however, gave it as their belief that Poppes had not in fact been sent by the other interpreter to act in his place, but that his attendance at the trial had been procured by James, whom appellant had shot and wounded. That Poppes, by fraud or mistake, had misinterpreted his testimony and the letter to Kosta and Nickles to the jury, and this fact was first made known to appellant by Sam Roberts after the trial, by the latter's translating into Bulgarian and reading to him the typewritten manuscript made from the notes of the stenographer taken in short hand at the trial; and that Roberts is a competent interpreter of the Greek or Bulgarian language and can likewise readily translate the English into Greek and Bulgarian.

The affidavit of Roberts contains the statement that he is a baker by occupation, a native of Bulgaria, and the master of twelve languages, including Bulgarian or Greek; that he had not seen the letter from appellant to Kosta and Nickles, but had read to appellant in Bulgarian from the stenographer's transcript, the interpretation given on the trial by Poppes of appellant's testimony and of the letter in question "and finds from the defendant (appellant) Demetri Nioum, that said interpretation is false and not true."

None of the affidavits disclose how much, or what part of the testimony of appellant was falsely interpreted by Poppes, nor do they indicate in what particular, or to what extent, the letter appellant wrote Kosta and Nickles, was falsely interpreted by Poppes. If the affidavit of appellant or that of Roberts contained a true translation into English of the letter, a comparison of such translation with that given by Poppes found in the bill of evidence, would prove the deception, if any was practiced. The affidavits fail to set forth in substance, or at all, the facts constituting the alleged newly discovered evidence or to show their materiality, and are based wholly upon what appellant claims he is now prepared to say he testified on the trial without disclosing a true interpretation of the testimony as he claims he gave it.

The affidavits also fail to show that Poppes is not a competent interpreter, or to impeach his interpretation of appellant's testimony, nor do they, except by indirection, attack Poppes' integrity. They express the belief of one of the affiants, that Poppes' attendance at the trial to act as interpreter was instigated or procured by James, the Commonwealth's witness, but state no facts to support such belief. In our opinion, the affidavits were wholly insufficient to authorize the new trial asked by appellant. To entitle one to a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence, the discovered evidence should be of such a controlling and decisive character as to convince the court that it will probably have a preponderating influence upon another trial. As said in Torian, &c. v. Terrell, 29 Ky. Law Rep., 306:

"Applications for a new trial are addressed to the sound discretion of the court, to be exercised according to the rules and usages of law, and the court should regard the substantial justice of the case, equally remote from favoring negligence, or exacting unreasonable diligence."

Poppes' translation of the letter written by appellant to Kosta and Nickles, which appears in the record, reads as follows:

"Messrs. Kosta and Nickles:

"I am in Maysville, Ky., out in the woods. I am two days up am not sure whether the police will come to catch me or not. And now one says go to New York. I am up here and never eat nothing for two days and I have just waited up here. I am scared to go to the city, because, I shot my cousin. I have that check over and I have some money coming to me in C. H. & D. depot and if you can get it send it to my wife and children in the old country."

A comparison of the foregoing letter with the testimony of appellant given on the trial and interpreted by Poppes will show no substantial difference between them, and as the original was found on the person of appellant at the time of his arrest, and he admitted writing it, no reason can be urged against its competency. It was not, however, more prejudicial than appellant's own testimony, for it contains no other admissions of his guilt than he made as a witness.

Appellant and Poppes, his interpreter, were sworn and introduced as witnesses in the former's behalf, after the Commonwealth introduced its evidence in chief, and it is now argued by his counsel that "the record does not show that the appellant had interpreted to him, or was enabled to understand or that he knew an oath was administered to him." Simply stated this is a mere declaration that appellant was not legally sworn before giving his testimony. If this were true, we do not think he can complain that the Commonwealth allowed him to give his testimony without requiring him to be sworn, or having interpreted to him the meaning of the oath, administered before giving it. It does not lie in his mouth to say that his testimony was less accurate or truthful than it would have been, if he had understood the meaning of the oath; moreover, a complete answer to the argument is to say, that the record also fails to show that an objection was made or exception taken by appellant's counsel as to this matter at the time, nor was it assigned as error on the motion and grounds for a new trial, consequently this court is prevented by section 281, Criminal Code, from considering it on appeal.

It is likewise insisted for appellant that the use of interpreters in the courts of this State, is restricted by the Kentucky Statutes to bastardy cases (sec. 181) and courts of continuous session (sec. 1034.) While it is true the Kentucky Statutes contain no other provisions in respect to the appointment of an interpreter than those referred to, the courts, in the absence of statutory authority, have the inherent power to allow the use of interpreters when the ends of justice require it. If this were not true, persons charged with crime or having valuable property interests involved in litigation, and who, by reason of their inability, or that of some of their witnesses, to speak or understand the English language, would, in the absence of an interpreter, be prevented from asserting or protecting their rights and thereby subjected to the grossest injustice. It is also sufficient to say of this, and the further complaint of appellant that the record contains no order appointing Poppes interpreter, that no objection was made or exception taken to the action of the court in permitting him to act in that capacity, before or at the time he so acted; nor was the matter called to the attention of the court in the motion and grounds for a new trial; therefore, it will not be considered by this court.

It is also complained by appellant that the record fails to show that Poppes was qualified to act as interpreter. This complaint would be well founded, but for the fact that the interpreter was introduced and used on the trial by appellant. This being manifest, and no objection being made by the Commonwealth to his introduction, the court had the right to assume, as it doubtless did, that both parties were satisfied as to his qualifications and capacity to act as interpreter; consequently, there was no occasion for an examination of the interpreter to ascertain his qualifications.

Obviously, it is the duty of the court to ascertain whether one offered as an interpreter is qualified to act as such, but the failure on the part of the court to perform such duty, can not be urged for a reversal where, as in this case, the necessity for its performance was obviated by the recognition of the interpreter's fitness, manifested by both the Commonwealth's attorney and defendant. Besides, this ground of complaint was not made to the court below in proper time, or presented in the grounds for a new trial. (Section 281, Criminal Code; Rutherford v. Commonwealth, 78 Ky., 639; Val Dalsen v. Commonwealth, 28 Ky. Law Rep., 340.)

Appellant's final contention is that he was not legally arraigned. It is not claimed that the record fails to show a waiver of formal arraignment, or that a plea of not guilty was entered, but contended that it does not show that the purpose and meaning of the arraignment and plea were interpreted to, or understood, by appellant. The question here raised has time and again been decided by this court, adversely to appellant's contention; the most recent case being Bischoff v. Commonwealth, 29 Ky. Law Rep., 770. The opinion contains a review of all the cases in this State bearing on the question, and adheres to the conclusion expressed in most of them, viz: That the failure of the record to show that the defendant was arraigned, or that a formal arraignment was waived, or that his plea was entered, whether of guilty or not guilty, is not cause for reversal, unless such failure is made a ground for a new trial. (Bischoff v. Commonwealth, and authorities therein cited.)

The record in the case before us does not show, nor is it claimed by appellant, that he objected or excepted to the failure of the court below to have the nature and object of the waiver of formal arraignment or of his plea of not guilty, interpreted to him, or that such failure was made a ground for a new trial.

For the reasons indicated, the judgment is affirmed.

FALLS CITY WOOLEN MILLS v. PIKE, BY, &c.

(Filed April 15, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Grounds for New Trial not in Record—Sufficiency of Petition—As appellant's motion and grounds for a new trial are not in the record, the court can not know what errors were complained of in the lower court. Such being the condition of the record and the petition being sufficient to support the judgment, it will not be disturbed.

O'Neal & O'Neal for appellant.

L. F. Withers and Charles F. Ogden for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas Branch, Third Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle, affirming. .

This is an appeal from a judgment entered upon a verdict awarding appellee, an infant, $600 damages for an injury to his arm and hand, sustained by their being caught in a machine in appellant's manufacturing establishment where appellee was employed as a servant; it being averred in the petition and proved on the trial, that the machine in question was a dangerous one, and that appellee was injured because of the negligence of appellants in requiring him—a raw and inexperienced youth—to work at such machine, without advising him of its dangerous character, instructing him in his duties, or how to avoid contact with the machine and the consequent danger and injury likely to result from such contact.

The answer contained a traverse and plea of contributory negligence, which plea was denied by reply, thereby completing the issues.

As appellant's motion and grounds for a new trial, filed in the court below, are not to be found in the record, we are unable to learn what errors were complained of in that court. We are also unadvised as to the grounds relied on by appellant for a reversal of the judgment, no brief having been filed in this court by its counsel.

Such being the condition of the record the only question to be determined by this court is, whether or not the petition is sufficient to support the judgment. Of this there can be no doubt. Therefore, the judgment is affirmed.

JACKSON, &c. v. JACKSON.

(Filed April 15, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Lands—Divisional Lines—This is a controversy over a divisional line, the instructions fairly submitted the question to the jury, the evidence was conflicting, and the verdict of the jury will not be disturbed.

J. P. Alexander for appellants.

S. Hodge for appellee.

Appeal from Caldwell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, affirming.

Appellants, Margaret Jackson, &c., brought this suit against appellees, Hugh Jackson, &c., to recover a strip of land in controversy between them. The defendants claim title to the land under a patent issued to Ninian Edwards on a survey made February 4th, 1805, containing 400 acres of land. The deeds under which the plaintiffs claim call for the line of the Ninian Edwards survey; so the only question in the case was the location of that line. The jury found for the defendants; the court entered judgment upon the verdict and the plaintiffs appeal.

The court instructed the jury that they should find for the plaintiffs if the dividing line between the defendants and the plaintiffs was as claimed by the plaintiffs and that they should find for the defendants if the line was located as claimed by them. Both parties claimed to the same corner at one end of the line, the controversy being a triangular piece of land on the south side of the Edwards survey. The court also instructed the jury that, in locating the line, course and distance must yield to natural objects, found on the land. The evidence was conflicting, but we can not say on the whole proof that the verdict is palpably against the evidence. The instructions of the court aptly submitted to the jury the question of fact in dispute between the parties. On the whole record we see no reason for disturbing the verdict of the jury. The course and distance called for in the patent would run the line as claimed by the plaintiffs rather than as claimed by the defendants; but the weight of the evidence shows that the corner stood at the point claimed by the defendants, and therefore the course and distance must yield to the marked corner found on the ground.

Judgment affirmed.

DOORES v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed April 16, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Local Option—Interstate Commerce—The appellant did not violate the local option statute in shipping whisky from Nashville, Tennessee, where it was paid for, to Burksville, Cumberland county, and the fact that he conducted a whisky business in Bowling Green did not lessen his right to do so. He had a legal right to take advantage of the interstate commerce law in a case like this and what a man has a legal right to do is not a trick or device in the meaning of the Kentucky Statutes.

Porter & Sandidge for appellant.

James Breathitt, Tom B. McGregor and Chas. H. Morris for appellee.

Appeal from Cumberland Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker, reversing.

The appellant, J. T. Doores, was indicted by the grand jury of Cumberland county, charged with the offense of retailing whisky in a local option district. A trial resulted in his being found guilty and his punishment fixed at a fine of one hundred dollars, of which he now complains.

The appellant introduced no evidence in his own behalf on the trial below, resting his defense upon the testimony of the Commonwealth. The uncontradicted facts are: That Doores is engaged in the whisky business, both at Bowling Green, Kentucky, and Nashville, Tennessee; that prior to the indictment a citizen of Cumberland county, Kentucky, W. A. Gossage, sent a written order to the appellant, at Nashville, Tennessee, for a gallon of whisky, enclosing a check to pay for it and the expressage from Nashville to Burksville, Kentucky. Gossage received the whisky from the express company at Burksville, where local option prevails.

Was the defendant guilty of an offense under the local option statute? The whisky was sold in Nashville, and its shipment to Burksville was interstate commerce. Doores had a right to do business in Nashville, Tennessee. The fact that he also did business in Bowling Green, Kentucky, did not in any way lessen this right. He had a right to sell whisky in Nashville to anybody who would buy it from him, and under the Constitution of the United States he could ship it to his consumer in Cumberland county, Kentucky. The principle involved in this case in nowise differs from that involved in C., N. O. & T. P. R. R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 31 Ky. Law Rep., 954, and the question here is concluded by the reasoning of the opinion in that case.

There is no doubt that Doores opened his branch house in Nashville, Tennessee, for the purpose of taking advantage of the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States, which enables him to retail liquor in the manner shown in this record; but this is a legal right, and can not in any sense be considered a trick or device in the meaning of the Kentucky Statute. What a man has the legal right to do is not a trick or device. The interstate commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States prevents the operation of the Kentucky Statutes on transactions such as the one at bar; and that clause can not be abrogated by calling the transaction under it a bad name. A peremptory instruction to find the defendant not guilty should have been given the jury at the close of the State's testimony.

For the reasons given, the judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent herewith.

COMMONWEALTH v. WHITE.

(Filed April 16, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Indictments—Descriptive of the Offense Charged—This indictment is defective in that it fails to describe the instrument claimed to be a deadly weapon. It might have been a pistol, or it might have been some other weapon. Under such an indictment a defendant is not apprised of the circumstances he is required to meet.

2. Same—Not Sufficient to Charge Breach of Peace—Nor is such an indictment sufficient to charge a breach of the peace, for it is not clear from the language used which of the features of the statute it was intended to cover.

James Breathitt, Thos. B. McGregor, Chas. H. Morris and Wm. Lewis for appellant.

Appeal from Clay Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice O'Rear, affirming.

The indictment in this case was drawn in the following language:

"The grand jury of Clay county, in the name and by the authority of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, accuse Larkin White of the offense of willfully assaulting another person with a deadly weapon, committed in like manner and form as follows, viz: The said Larkin White, did, on the 9th day of May, 1907, in the county, circuit and State aforesaid, and in less than one year next before the finding of the indictment herein, unlawfully and willfully point a deadly weapon at W. O. B. Lipps, and use same in a threatening and boisterous manner, and thereby greatly interrupting and disturbing him, and putting him in fear, against the peace and dignity of the Commonwealth of Kentucky."

It was framed under section 1308, Kentucky Statutes, which provides that "if any person shall draw a deadly weapon, or shall point any deadly weapon at another," &c. The question for decision is as to the sufficiency of the indictment. The rule is that "where the words of the statute are descriptive of the offense the indictment will be sufficient if it shall follow the language and expressly charge the exact offense of the defendant." But this rule applies only to offenses which are complete in themselves, when the acts set out in the statute have been done or performed. (Davis v. Commonwealth, 13 Bush, 318; Ward v. Commonwealth, 14 Bush, 233; Mitchell v. Commonwealth, 88 Ky., 349; Commonwealth v. Tanner, 5 Bush, 316.)

We think this indictment is defective in that it fails to describe the instrument claimed to be a deadly weapon. It might have been a pistol; it might have been a dirk, a sword, or a heavy murderous bludgeon. Under this indictment the defendant would not be apprized of the circumstances that he would be required to meet and rebut at the trial. It is not direct and certain, under section 124 of the Criminal Code.

It is claimed in the case at bar that the deadly weapon used by the accused was a 45 caliber pistol. Such an instrument is a deadly weapon. But the defendant should have been informed of the fact that the Commonwealth would attempt to prove that he used such weapon. The statement in the indictment that the defendant "did unlawfully and willfully point a deadly weapon at W. O. B. Lipps" is a conclusion of the pleader, in so far as it refers to the character of the weapon. The weapon may be deadly or not, according to its nature or to the manner of its use. (Commonwealth v. Duncan, 92 Ky., 595.) The weapon should be so described in the indictment that the fact that it is a deadly weapon as used must appear from the language of the charge. Whether a particular weapon such as a club, or stone, is deadly, would be a question of fact to be determined by the jury, and the fact whether it is such is to be submitted under appropriate instructions; but where the weapon charged is a pistol, a gun, a sword, or bowie knife, upon proof of that fact, under an appropriate charge contained in the indictment, a prima facie case would be made out for the prosecution. But the defendant is not required to introduce any evidence until he is first charged in appropriate language with having drawn or pointed a weapon which from its description or manner of use would be a deadly weapon. Nor is the prosecution allowed to supplement a defective charge in the indictment by sufficient proof. In this case the evidence for the State that the accused pointed a 45 calibre pistol at the prosecuting witness, did not help out the case for the State. The proof and allegations must substantially agree. The failure of allegation is as fatal as the failure of proof. The court was not at liberty, upon such a record, to submit the case to the jury, but properly instructed them peremptorily to find for the defendant, the Commonwealth not offering to re-commit the case to the grand jury in order that a sufficient indictment might be framed.

Nor is the indictment good as charging a breach of the peace, although in the descriptive part of the indictment it is stated that the defendant "used same in a threatening and boisterous manner." The descriptive part of the indictment is always construed with relation to the charging part. The defendant in this case was charged with the statutory offense (section 1308, Kentucky Statutes), of drawing a deadly weapon upon another or pointing a deadly weapon at another, or using, holding or flourishing a deadly weapon in a threatening or boisterous manner. It is not clear from the language used in the indictment which of the features of the statute was intended to be covered by it. There is no provision in the statute against "willfully assaulting another person with a deadly weapon." Still we are inclined to construe the language in the accusative part of this indictment, where the word assaulting is used, as being the equivalent of drawing a deadly weapon upon another, or pointing it at him. Under this construction, which is as favorable to the Commonwealth as the language would seem to admit, the clause in the descriptive part that the weapon was used in a threatening and boisterous manner, was a part of the description of the specific offense charged above, and which the defendant was notified that he would be called upon to answer.

The judgment of the circuit court being in conformity with this opinion, is affirmed.

CLARK v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed April 16, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Appeals—Dismissal of—This appeal is dismissed because of the failure of appellant to file the record within the time prescribed by the Code.

J. W. Wright for appellant.

James Breathitt and Chas. H. Morris for appellee.

Appeal from Clay Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker, affirming.

The appellant was indicted by the grand jury of Clay county charged with the offense of carrying concealed a deadly weapon. On a plea of not guilty the trial resulted in a verdict of guilty and the infliction of a fine of twenty-five dollars and ten day's confinement in the county jail. The judgment of the court was entered on this verdict on the 21st day of January, 1908. On the 23d day of January motion and grounds for a new trial were filed and overruled by the court, and on the same day an appeal was prayed to this court and granted. The record was filed in this court on the 28th day of March, 1908, more than sixty days after the rendition of the judgment.

Section 348, of the Criminal Code, provides: "The appeal must be prayed during the term at which the judgment is rendered, and shall be granted upon the condition that the record be lodged in the clerk's office of the Court of Appeals within sixty days after the judgment."

The motion of the Commonwealth, to dismiss the appeal because of the failure of the appellant to file the record within the time prescribed by the Code, must be sustained (Commonwealth v. Howard, 4 Ky. Law Rep., 674; Stratton v. Commonwealth, 84 Ky., 190; Adkins v. Commonwealth, 102 Ky., 94; Mackey v. Commonwealth, 80 Ky., 345; Stamper v. Commonwealth, 30 Ky. Law Rep., 1296; Farris v. Commonwealth, 31 Ky. Law Rep., 118), and it is so ordered.

ALSIP, &c. v. MORGAN.

(Filed April 16, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Wills—Construction of—A will providing that "all my estate, both real and personal," shall descend to my wife "her life time, to manage and dispose of as she may see cause," invested her with an absolute estate. To limit it to a life estate, it would be necessary to take from the other parts of the will their fair and legitimate meaning. The will does not stop with the words "her life time," but in investing her with the power "to manage and dispose of it as she may see cause," she is clothed with the power to convey the fee.

L. L. Pence and R. L. Pope for appellants.

R. L. Stephens for appellee.

Appeal from Whitley Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, reversing.

The only question in this case is whether or not Polly Alsip was limited to a life estate in the land devised to her in the following will:

"I, Alexander Alsip, being of sound mind and disposing memory, do publish this my last will and testament, to-wit: I will and bequeath to my wife, Polly Alsip, all my land and farming implements belonging thereto, in short, all my estate, both real and personal, her life time, to manage and dispose of as she may see cause."

Polly Alsip was the sole object of the testator's bounty. No other person is mentioned or referred to in the will. There is no devise over, no estate in remainder. With the exception of the words "her life time," there is no expression tending to show that he did not give her the absolute and unquestioned fee in the estate. The words "her life time" are not left unexplained, nor do they convey the idea that the testator intended to limit her interest to a life estate. Following these words, she is given the right to manage and dispose of the estate as she may see cause. To limit her interest to a life estate, it would be necessary to take from the other parts of the will their fair and legitimate meaning. What the testator intended, was that his wife should take all his estate, with the right to dispose of all or any part of it in any manner she saw proper. If the will had ended with the words "her life time," it would be manifest that the testator intended to invest his wife only with a life estate, but it does not stop there. Following these words is the power "to manage and dispose of as she may see cause." There is no limitation whatever upon her power of alienation. She took more than a life estate and was clothed with the power to convey the fee.

In Page on Wills, section 466, the rule generally adopted in the construction of wills similar to the one under consideration is thus stated: "Under ordinary circumstances, a man makes a will to dispose of his entire estate, or, at least, of his estate as it exists at the time he makes the will. If, therefore, a will is susceptible of two constructions, by one of which the testator disposes of the whole of his estate, and by the other of which he disposes of a part of his estate only, and dies intestate as to the remainder, the courts will prefer the construction by which the whole of the testator's estate is disposed of, if this construction is reasonable and consistent with the general scope and provisions of the will." (Snider v. Baer, 13 L. R. A., 359.)

This construction is in harmony with section 2342 of the Kentucky Statutes, which provides that: "Unless a different purpose appear by express words or necessary inference, every estate in land created by deed or will, without words of inheritance, shall be deemed a fee simple or such other estate as the grantor or testator had power to dispose of."

And is supported by Dills v. Adams, 19 Ky. Law Rep., 1169, in which it was held that Mrs. Dills took the fee, the will providing that: "After all my just debts are paid, I will all my real estate, consisting of lands and lots, and all my personal assets, to my beloved wife, Anna Dills, * * * her natural life, for her support and maintenance, and to be disposed of at her pleasure."

And Constantine v. Moore, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 369, in which the court held that Cascada F. Constantine took the fee under a will, reading: "In consideration of the love and affection I have for my beloved wife, Cascada F. Constantine, I give and bequeath unto her all my property I may die possessed of, of every description, real, personal and mixed, to have the same for her benefit, to control the same during her life as she may see proper, free from the claim of every person or persons, and to dispose of the same as she may see proper at her death."

The will before us is easily distinguishable from the will construed in Pedigo v. Botts, 28 Ky. Law Rep., 196, and the line of cases cited therein, for the reason that in the Pedigo and similar cases there was a devise over. Here, there is none.

The judgment of the lower court holding that Polly Alsip took only a life estate is reversed, with directions for further proceedings in conformity with this opinion.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO. v. GILMORE'S ADM'R.

(Filed April 16, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Railroads—Lookout—Negligence—At the time of appellee's intestate's death, the bell was being rung, the train was making a loud noise, it was about 5 o'clock in the afternoon, in July, and the slightest care, as the evidence shows, on the part of the deceased, would have enabled her to escape. The fireman had been keeping a lookout, but at the time had withdrawn to coal the engine. And it can not be said that because he withdrew to perform this duty that appellant was guilty of negligence.

2. Same—Whether it was because of intestate's deafness, or that her mind was so intent upon something else, it was her misfortune that she failed to hear it. She walked in front of an approaching train at such time as that no diligence on the part of those in charge of the train could have prevented or discovered her peril.

Helm & Helm, Benjamin D. Warfield and H. L. Stone for appellant.

Forcht & Field and Dodd & Dodd for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas Branch, Third Division.

Opinion of the court by Wm. Rogers Clay, Commissioner, reversing.

T. M. Gilmore, administrator of Julia Gilmore, instituted this action against appellant, Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., to recover damages for the death of Julia Gilmore, which is alleged to have resulted from the negligence of appellant. From a judgment for $5,000 in favor of appellee, this appeal is prosecuted.

The death of Mrs. Gilmore occurred under the following circumstances: Appellant maintains double tracks between Louisville and Cincinnati, which, in the former city, parallel Frankfort avenue, a public thoroughfare, for a distance of about two miles, the street being on the south and the tracks on the north. Running northwardly from Frankfort avenue and crossing appellant's tracks are various public streets. One of these streets, Bailey avenue, which is located about three-fourths of a mile within the eastern limits of Louisville, extends from Frankfort avenue two squares northward to Field avenue. At the time of the accident double tracks were also maintained on Frankfort avenue by the Louisville Railway Co. These tracks, at a point opposite Bailey avenue, merge into a single track, and then thereafter continues eastwardly for several hundred feet, and then changes into a double track opposite Crescent avenue. About 160 feet west of Bailey avenue is an alley extending from the north to the right of way of appellant on the south, and opening thereon. Immediately opposite the mouth of this alley, and on the south side of Frankfort avenue, is Moore's drug store. At the time of the accident there was a plank opposite the mouth of the alley, which led across a ditch on the north side of appellant's right of way. On the south side of appellant's right of way there was a ditch, across which a log or cross-tie was placed. Beginning at a point some 200 or 300 feet east of Bailey avenue the tracks of appellant describe a curve, the outer rim being to the north and ending between Bailey avenue and the alley. On the line between Frankfort avenue and the right of way are telephone, telegraph, electric light and trolley poles. The street is slightly elevated above the tracks. At a point about 1,000 feet east of the place of the accident the elevation is about 5 feet.

The death of Mrs. Gilmore occurred about 5 o'clock on the afternoon of July 4, 1905. The testimony shows that she left the rear of her premises and crossed the tracks of appellant and Frankfort avenue, and went to Moore's drug store, on the south side of Frankfort avenue. Leaving the drug store, at which time it was broad daylight, she allowed an interurban car of the Pewee Valley line to pass. At the time there was a Fourth of July picnic in progress at a Catholic institution in the neighborhood, and a great many street cars of the Louisville Railway Co. were passing two and fro. Children of the neighborhood were shooting fire-crackers and torpedoes on the sidewalk and in the street adjacent to the drug store, and considerable confusion prevailed. Mrs. Gilmore walked rapidly across the street, a distance of 64 feet; thence 20 feet more on to the first or southernmost track of appellant; thence 10 feet more, close to, but not on the second track, where she was struck. The train that struck Mrs. Gilmore was a freight train consisting of an engine, 22 loaded and 2 empty cars, and a caboose. It was on time and was running at about 12 to 15 miles per hour. When the accident occurred the engineer was keeping a lookout, and the bell of the engine was ringing. The fireman was also on a lookout until the engine was within a few feet of Bailey avenue. After looking ahead and seeing no one either on or approaching Bailey or Hite avenues, he stepped down in the deck to put coal in the furnace. As he ceased shoveling and stepped to the gangway he saw the body of Mrs. Gilmore fall from the pilot beam. He then notified the engineer, and the train was stopped.

The evidence conduces to show that the pathway leading from the mouth of the alley across appellant's tracks to Moore's drug store had been used by the public for such a length of time as to raise the presumption of knowledge or acquiescence on the part of appellant. It is not contended that the engineer saw, or could have seen Mrs. Gilmore in time to prevent the accident, for, being on a curve, his view to the left was cut off; but it is contended that it was the duty of appellant to keep a lookout for persons using the pathway in question, and that the negligence of appellant consisted in the fireman's withdrawing his lookout at a time and place where the lookout by the engineer was practically of no avail.

Assuming that the evidence was sufficient to impose upon appellant the duty of keeping a lookout at the place of the accident, was it negligence on the part of the fireman to coal the engine under the circumstances?

From the evidence in the case it appears that one of the principal duties—if not the chief duty—of the fireman is to fire the engine. Schedules must be maintained and trains run on time; otherwise the safety of the passengers and employes would be greatly imperiled. In order that trains may keep their schedules and run on time, it is absolutely necessary that the engines be properly coaled. We are unable, therefore, to say that, because the fireman withdrew his lookout for the purpose of performing another duty equally important and necessary, the appellant was guilty of negligence. (Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. Creighton, &c., 106 Ky., 42.) Nor do we think it negligence on the part of appellant not to have had a third person present to assist in keeping a lookout when the fireman was otherwise engaged. The lookout required by law is a reasonable one to be kept by those in charge of the engine. Because of the condition of the tracks, or of the fact that obstructions sometimes intervene, it may be that such lookout will not always be perfect: but all the law requires, or should require, is that it shall be as good as the circumstances of the case will permit. To require an additional person to keep a lookout when the fireman is engaged in coaling the engine, would be to place almost the entire responsibility for accidents on the railroad company. The law does not go to this extreme. There is no liability where those charged with the duty of keeping a lookout keep such a lookout.

But even assuming the extreme position, that it was negligence on the part of the fireman to stop keeping a lookout while he fired the engine, the appellee could not recover unless Mrs. Gilmore's death was due to such negligence. The evidence shows that the train was running about 15 miles an hour. Mrs. Gilmore was walking rapidly across the street and tracks, moving at the rate of about 3 miles an hour. If the fireman then had been upon the lookout and had seen Mrs. Gilmore crossing the street, he would have had the right to presume that she would not step in front of the approaching train until it became reasonably apparent from her manner that she intended to do so. (Ford's Adm'r v. Paducah City Railway, 30 Ky. Law Rep., 644; Johnson's Adm'r v. Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., 91 Ky., 651.) There was a space of 13 feet between the north and southbound tracks of appellant. When Mrs. Gilmore reached the north rail of the southbound track she was 13 feet from the south rail of the northbound track. The engine was then about 65 feet distant. If the fireman had seen her at this point, and it was then reasonably apparent that she was unconscious of the approach of the train, he would then have had to call the attention of the engineer to the fact, and the engineer would then have had to blow the whistle or stop the train in time to have prevented the accident. This, we think, would have been a physical impossibility.

It may be that the accident happened because of Mrs. Gilmore's deafness, or it may be that her mind was so intent upon something else, or that her attention was so absorbed, that she failed to notice the approaching train. It was her misfortune that she failed to hear it. It was a large freight train, consisting of 24 cars and a caboose. The bell on the engine was being rung, the train itself was making a loud noise and the slightest care on her part would have enabled her to escape danger. The accident, deplorable and unfortunate though it was, was not due to any negligence on the part of appellant. It is simply a case of one's walking in front of an approaching train at a time when no diligence or efforts on the part of those in charge of the train could have discovered or prevented her peril.

We are, therefore, of the opinion that the trial court should have peremptorily instructed the jury to find for appellant. No other questions raised on this appeal are decided. The judgment is reversed and cause remanded, for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

HUESMAN, FOR USE, &c. v. DERSCH.

(Filed April 17, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Claim for Street Improvement—Assignment of Right of Action—H. has a right to prosecute an appeal from a judgment dismissing his petition, for the reason that the city to which he had assigned his claim was entitled to all of his rights, and the appeal was prosecuted in both his name and that of the city. A lien on land being asserted an appeal lies to this court although the amount is less than $200.

2. Ordinances—All the members of the council voted for the ordinance attacked here, and, upon the authority of Hedger v. Roebke, 30 Ky. Law Rep., 1092, it is valid.

Orlando P. Schmidt for appellants.

Hall & McLean for appellee.

Appeal from Kenton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, reversing.

On June 25, 1904, the board of council of the city of Latonia enacted an ordinance directing the improvement of Golding street. A contract was let to Joseph Huesman for the work. He made the improvement; the work was accepted by the council and the cost was apportioned to the property holders. Thereupon Huesman brought this suit against Henry Dersch and the city of Latonia, Dersch having failed to pay his apportionment; judgment was prayed enforcing a lien on Dersch's property for the amount of the apportionment, and if for any reason, this could not be done, then judgment was asked against the city. An answer was filed by Dersch in which he pleaded that the ordinance had not been properly passed and that the apportionment had not been properly made. The case being submitted, the court dismissed the petition as against Dersch and gave judgment against the city. From this judgment Huesman and the city prosecute the appeal before us. In this court the appellee has entered a motion to dismiss the appeal and in support of that motion has filed a writing made between Huesman and the city by which Huesman assigned to the city, since the judgment in the court below, his claim against the property of Dersch, the city paying him the amount of the claim. It is insisted that Huesman has no further interest in the case, and that the city can not appeal.

Huesman had a right to prosecute his appeal from the judgment dismissing his petition against Dersch. When he subsequently assigned his right of action to the city, the city was entitled to all his rights, and the appeal before us being prosecuted, both in the name of Huesman and the city, the motion to dismiss it is overruled. In cases of this sort, as a lien on land is asserted, an appeal may be taken to this court, although the amount of the claim is less than $200. (Central Covington v. Busse, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 2179; Mackin v. Wilson, 20 Ky. Law Rep., 218; Bitzer v. O'Bryan, 107 Ky., 590.) The judgment of the circuit court dismissing the plaintiff's petition as to the property owner was based on the ground that the ordinance was invalid because it had been passed by the council at only one meeting. All the members of the council voted for the ordinance. In Hedger v. Roebke, 30 Ky. Law Rep., 1092, decided by this court since this case was decided in the circuit court, it was held that such an ordinance is valid. The ordinance in this case was passed in the same way as the ordinance in that case. It is insisted for the appellee that the opinion in that case should be overruled, but we see no reason for departing from the rule we then laid down. We, therefore, conclude that the circuit court erred in dismissing the plaintiff's petition.

As to the apportionment, if an error was made in this matter it may be corrected in the circuit court by a proper apportionment. The rule is that an answer complaining of an apportionment is bad unless it shows that under the proper apportionment a less amount would have been assigned to the defendant than was assigned to him. This the answer before us does not do, and, therefore, a demurrer to this part of the answer should have been sustained. (McHenry v. Selvage, 99 Ky., 232; Dumesnil v. Stone Co., 109 Ky., 1; Barber Asphalt Co. v. Gaar, 115 Ky., 334.)

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, for further proceedings consistent herewith.

CHARLES v. HURLEY, SR.

(Filed April 17, 1908—Not to be reported.)

P. B. Stratton for appellant.

Roscoe Vanover for appellee.

Appeal from Pike Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn, affirming.

This appeal is from a verdict and judgment in behalf of appellee for $350, recovered in an action for slander.

The evidence is not in the record, nor is there a bill of exceptions; consequently, there is nothing for the court to consider except the sufficiency of the pleadings. This has been too often decided by this court to need citation of authorities. We have examined the petition and amended petitions and find that a cause of action is clearly stated therein in behalf of appellee, and we must presume that the evidence authorized the verdict.

For these reasons the judgment of the lower court is affirmed, with damages.

BOARD OF EQUALIZATION OF CAMPBELL COUNTY v. L. & N. R. R. CO.

(Filed April 15, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Railroads—Taxation—Assessment of Bridge Property—The question involved upon this appeal is as to the mode of assessment of appellee's bridge, whether it should be assessed by the railroad commission, or the local authorities in Campbell county. After the consideration of authorities cited, it is held that the power of the Legislature to vest in a state board the assessment of property for local taxation is no longer an open question, and further that the fact that the bridge in question is used for purposes other than the railroad's use of it, does not render it any less "railroad property."

2. Same—Question One of Ownership—The question here is one of ownership. If it is railroad property used in connection with the operation of a railroad, it is assessable by the railroad commission, and the fact that a portion of the bridge is used for other purposes does not give the local officers the right to assess it.

John W. Heuver and Brent Spence for appellant.

H. L. Stone, C. H. Moorman and Benjamin D. Warfield for appellee.

Appeal from Campbell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Wm. Rogers Clay, Commissioner, affirming.

The question involved on this appeal is, whether or not the bridge formerly owned by the Newport & Cincinnati Bridge Company, but now the property of appellee by virtue of a conveyance executed by the former to the latter on July 26th, 1904, should be assessed for taxation by the Railroad Commission or by the local authorities in Campbell county.

The property in question was assessed by the Board of Equalization of Campbell county, at $1,500,000. From this action of the board, an appeal was taken by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, to the county court. There it was adjudged that the assessment was invalid, and that the same be stricken from the assessment book. From that judgment an appeal was prosecuted to the circuit court of Campbell county. There it was adjudged that, at the time of making the assessment, there was no power in the board of equalization, or in the county assessor, to assess the property in question, and that at said time all such power was in the railroad commission and not elsewhere. The judgment further directed that the assessment be stricken from the assessor's book, and that the sheriff of Campbell county collect no taxes thereon. From this judgment the Board of Equalization of Campbell county prosecutes this appeal.

For a number of years prior to the adoption of the present constitution, it was the settled policy of this State that railroad property should be assessed as an entirety. By an act of 1864 the railroads were assessed at $20,000 per mile, and were required to pay annually the same rate of tax on that assessment as was levied by law on real estate. In the case of Applegate v. Ernst, 3 Bush, 648, the court held that fragmentary taxation of railroads would be unjust, injurious, and contrary to public policy, and that, under the above act, they were taxable for State revenue and were not a fit subject for local taxation. By an amended act, of March 17th, 1876, (1 Acts 1876, page 78) local taxation of railroads was authorized, and the assessment thereof by local assessors was provided for. Evidently this method of assessment was soon found to be unsatisfactory, for by an act of April 3rd, 1878 (1 Acts 1878, page 82), it was provided that the assessment of railroad property, whether for State, county or other purposes, should be made by a board of equalization appointed by the Governor for that purpose. By an act of April 19th, 1882 (1 Acts 1881-1882, page 66) the power of assessment was vested in a railroad commission.

In the case of C., N. O. & T. P. R'y. Co. v. Commonwealth, 81 Ky., 492, this court gives the reason why railroad property should not be assessed by the local officers of each county, but should be assessed by a central board, and in the opinion it is said:

"The principal object of the Legislature in having this board of commissioners to assess and supervise the taxing of such corporations was, that no injustice might be done the companies by subjecting their property to fragmentary assessments, subject to the revision of the supervising board of each county through which the road might run. Fragmentary taxation of the same line of road by a dozen or more different assessors would scarcely produce that uniformity in assessment so absolutely essential to produce equality in taxation, and the legislative purpose was to obviate such an objection and have a uniform assessment of this class of property, and no wiser suggestion could have been well made than to place the valuation in the hands of intelligent free-holders, to be selected by the executive of the State, thus removing the question of value from local influences and prejudices that often result in imposing upon such corporations oppressive burdens."

Thus it will be seen that, at the time of the adoption of the present Constitution in 1891, it was the settled policy of the State that local taxation of railroads should be based entirely upon the assessment made by the railroad commission.

Section 182 of the Constitution adopted in 1891 is as follows: "Nothing in this Constitution shall be construed to prevent the General Assembly from providing, by law, how railroads and railroad property shall be assessed and how taxes thereon shall be collected. And, until otherwise provided, the present law on said subject shall remain in force." Thus it will be seen that the framers of the Constitution recognized the propriety of providing that railroad property should be assessed in a manner different from the assessment of property generally. Prior to the adoption of the present Constitution, it was differently assessed, and by the section above referred to, the power was expressly given to the General Assembly to provide, by law, how railroads and railroad property should be assessed; and it was further provided that the law then in force should remain until it should be changed by the Legislature. Since that time the Legislature, instead of changing the system, has practically continued it in force, and such continuation has been repeatedly recognized and enforced by this court. (Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. City of Louisville, 16 Ky. Law Rep., 796; Commonwealth, By, &c. v. Union R. T. Co., 26 Ky. Law Rep., 23.)

By the act of March 16th, 1906 (Acts of 1906, page 139), it is provided that "the president or chief officer of each railroad company, or other corporation owning or operating a railroad line, in whole or in part, in this State, and all railroad bridge companies owning or operating the bridge spanning a river constituting the boundary of this State shall, on or before the first of August in each year, return to the Auditor of Public Accounts of the State, under oath, the total length of such railroad, including the length thereof beyond the limits of the State," &c. Counsel for appellant insist that this act does not place the power in the railroad commission to assess for taxation the bridge in question. It is unnecessary to determine whether or not the expression "all railroad bridge companies" includes the bridge of appellee. The record shows that the bridge in question was conveyed to appellee in the year 1904, and is now the property of appellee. By the acts in force prior to the act of 1906, all railroad property was subject to taxation by this State, and the assessment thereof was to be fixed by the railroad commission alone. It was not intended that any property belonging to a railroad company should be exempt from taxation. In our opinion, therefore, the bridge in question, being owned by appellee, was taxable even prior to the act of 1906; and being taxable as railroad property, it was proper that the assessment thereof be made by the railroad commission.

It is contended by counsel for appellant that, under section 181 of the Constitution, the Legislature can not vest in the railroad commission power to assess for taxation property not strictly "railroad property," as that section provides that "the General Assembly shall not impose taxes for the purposes of any county, city, town or other municipal corporation, but, may, by general laws, confer on the proper authorities thereof, respectively, the power to assess and collect such taxes;" it being argued that it is clear by this language that the power is constitutionally vested in the local authorities, and can not be placed elsewhere, the only exception being in regard to railroads and railroad property; and it is insisted that "railroad property," within the meaning of this constitutional provision, is only such property as is necessarily incident to the operation of a railroad. In this connection, our attention is called to the fact that the bridge in question is used not only for the purpose of accomodating the trains of appellee, but that it has two tracks upon which street cars run; also a wagon-way and paths for foot passengers. In the first place, we may say that the construction placed upon section 181 by counsel for appellant, is not the one adopted by this court.

In the case of South Covington & Cincinnati Street Railway Co. v. Town of Bellevue, 105 Ky., 283, this court said: "The fallacy of this argument lies in the meaning given to the word 'assess.' In the place used, it means to levy a tax, and does not mean the valuation of property for taxation. That the constitution makers did not intend to forbid the valuation of property for local taxation by the State board is apparent from their continuing in force that method of valuation of railroads for taxation, and which is now in force." Again, the power of the Legislature to vest the State board with power to assess tangible property for local taxation by counties, cities, towns and taxing districts was upheld in City of Louisville v. Louisville Public Warehouse Co., 107 Ky., 184. In that case, this court held that the city assessor of Louisville had no power to assess distilled spirits in bonded warehouses, but that the assessment of such property must be made by the State Board of Valuation and Assessment, not only for State, but county, city, town and district taxation.

From these authorities it will be seen that the power of the Legislature to vest in a State board the authority to assess either tangible or intangible property for local taxation is no longer an open question. Furthermore, the fact that the bridge in question is used for other than railroad purposes does not make it any the less "railroad property." So long as the railroad is permitted to, and does, own the bridge, it should be taxed as any other railroad property. It is suggested that, under section 192 of the Constitution and section 567 of the Kentucky Statutes, the appellee has no power to own or operate a structure of this character. It does not appear from the record, however, that by owning and operating the bridge in question the appellee has engaged in a business other than that expressly authorized by its charter or the law under which it was organized, nor that it holds any real estate except such as is proper for carrying on its legitimate business; nor does it appear that the bridge has been owned by appellee for a longer period than five years, nor is there anything in the record to indicate what appellee's charter rights are with respect to owning or operating a bridge of this character. Furthermore, we could not determine in this proceeding the question, whether or not appellee has the right to own and maintain a bridge of the character of the one in question.

Counsel for appellant cite several cases in support of the position that a bridge like the one under discussion is not "railroad property," and should not, therefore, be assessed by the railroad commission; among them, the cases of St. Louis & S. V. R'y. Co. v. Williams, (Ark.), 13 S. W., 796; St. Joseph & G. I. R. Co. v. Devereux, Sheriff, 41 Fed. Rep., 14; Chicago & Alton R. Co. v. People, Ex Rel., 29 L. R. A., 69; State v. Mississippi River Bridge Co., 19 S. W., 421, and Cass County v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 41 N. W., 246.

In the case of St. Louis & S. V. R'y. Co. v. Williams, supra, it was contended that the bridge in question should be assessed for taxation to the appellant railway, on the theory that it was used by said railway. In the opinion the question is thus stated: "The question is, does the railway own or operate the bridge as a part of its road, or is it owned or operated independently?" In passing upon this point the court said: "There is nothing to show that the railway company is the substantial owner of the bridge by reason of owning the stock, and the case is therefore unlike that of State v. Depot Company, 43 N. W. Rep., 840, which the appellant relies upon."

In the case of St. Joseph & G. I. R. Co. v. Devereux, Sheriff, supra, it does not appear how the bridge was acquired by the appellant, whether by purchase or by acquisition of all its stock. The court, in holding the bridge subject to taxation, said: "It is a costly structure, used for purposes of general travel; and the fact that the railroad company has its rails upon it and runs its cars across it does not destroy its character as an independent structure."

In the case of Chicago & Alton R. Co. v. People, Ex Rel., supra, appellant claimed the right to assess as railroad property a bridge. Its claims of ownership of this property was based on a lease. The lease was forever, provided the lessee should keep and perform its terms and conditions, but if it failed, the lessor had the right to re-enter and take possession of the property. The decision turned on the ownership of the property. The court said: "Whether objector had the right to demand that the assessment should be against it as for railroad property, in our view of the case, depends upon the ownership of the property. If the railroad company was the owner, it could not be lawfully assessed under section 1, chapter 120, supra, but only by the State Board of Equalization, as railroad track." And, again, in holding the property subject to local taxation, the court said: "Either from necessity or of its own volition, appellant has never become the absolute owner of the property, but has left the real title to the same in the Mississippi Bridge Company, and it is therefore subject to taxation against the latter by the township assessor of the town in which it is located."

In the case of State v. Mississippi River Bridge Company, supra, it was held that "a railroad bridge may lawfully be segregated, for the purpose of taxation, from a railway line in connection with which it is used, where its ownership is separate from the railway." It was held that the bridge should be taxed to the bridge company, as the legal title was in that company. In the opinion it is said: "It is clear, from this statement of the substance of the instrument, that, notwithstanding the long term of tenancy may normally endure, the paramount title remains in the bridge company. The lease is subject to a defeasance, in event of any failure, on the part of the lessee, to meet all of its requirements, and its entire scope and effect exclude the notion of any attempt at a transfer of the title outright. This view of it results in the ruling that the property is yet 'owned' by the bridge company, within the meaning of the section for the taxation."

The cases of Cass County v. Chicago B. & Q. R. Co., 41 N. W., 246, and Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. School District No. 1, Id., 249, held that the Nebraska Statutes does not require the return to the State board of a bridge constructed across the Missouri River; that said river being a navigable stream, the right to bridge it can be obtained only by law of Congress and not by authority from the State. The opinions hold that such bridges, when constructed, are not parts of the roadbeds or superstructures. It is also held that such bridges are not assessable by the State Board of Equalization for the reason that section 40 of the Nebraska Statutes specifically declares that said board, in making their assessment and valuation, "shall not assess the value of any machine or repair shop, or general office buildings, storehouses, or any real or personal property, situated outside of the right of way or depot grounds of such company." The court held that this exception to the general law excluded the bridge property from assessment by the State Board of Equalization and Assessment.

It will be seen, therefore, that these cases are different from the case under consideration in that the language defining the character of property assessable by the State board, as well as the statutory exceptions thereto, are not similar to ours.

By the decided weight of authority, we think the whole question depends upon the ownership of the bridge in question. If it be railroad property used in connection with the operation of a railroad, it is then assessable by the railroad commission. The fact that a portion of the bridge may be used for other than railroad purposes does not, we think, give the right to the local officers of the county to assess the same.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

KENNEDY v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed April 15, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Jury—Statement by Member of—Effort to Discharge—A statement by a member of the jury during the trial of appellant to the court that he desired to hear the evidence, evidencing some impatience at a wrangle of the lawyers, while it may have been indiscreet, was not sufficient cause to warrant the court to discharge the jury.

2. Grand Jury—Member of May Disclose Evidence Before It—By the provisions of section 113 Criminal Code, a member of the grand jury may be required to disclose testimony given before it, and as the defendant had undertaken to impeach a witness by one member of the grand jury, the Commonwealth was properly permitted to sustain him by another. (Former appeal, 31 Ky. Law Rep., 546.)

M. C. Saufley, G. B. Saufley, C. C. Williams, T. H. Shanks and W. H. Shanks for appellant.

James Breathitt, Tom. B. McGregor and Chas. H. Morris for appellee.

Appeal from Lincoln Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, affirming.

James Kennedy shot and killed Milton Estes. He was indicted on the charge of murder and being tried was found guilty and his punishment fixed at imprisonment in the penitentiary for life. He appealed to this court and the judgment was reversed. (Kennedy v. Commonwealth, 31 Ky. Law Rep., 546.) On a return of the case to the circuit court it was tried a second time. The jury again found him guilty as charged, and fixed his punishment at imprisonment in the penitentiary for life. The court refused to grant a new trial, and he appeals.

The court did not err in refusing to discharge the jury on the ground of misconduct on the part of the jury and of the Commonwealth attorney. The misconduct on the part of the jury consisted in this, that one of the jurors said at one point in the proceedings that a question had been asked a number of times before during the introduction of the Commonwealth's evidence, exhibiting impatience with the controversy that was going on between the lawyers; at another time during a similar discussion he said "Judge we want to hear the evidence" or words to that effect. The jurymen may have acted indiscreetly, but there was nothing in his conduct to warrant the court in discharging the jury. The misconduct charged to the Commonwealth attorney was in his repeating to the jury a statement made by a witness and smiling at the time. What he meant by smiling we do not know, but as he only used the words of the witness, there was nothing in this to impair the defendant's having a fair trial.

The Commonwealth proved by a number of witnesses that Kennedy threatened to kill Estes. Kennedy proved by about the same number that Estes had threatened to kill him. He offered to prove by John Payne, that, about six weeks before the homicide he had a rifle which he proposed to sell Estes and while they were talking Kennedy rode by, and Estes then said, "I would like to have a rifle now to put one just where his suspenders cross his back." The court refused to allow the evidence to be given on the ground that it was not a threat but only a statement showing hatred. The evidence, if admitted, could not have affected the result; for there was abundant evidence of threats made by Estes against Kennedy on the day of the homicide and on other days previous to it, which was uncontradicted and this evidence, if admitted, would have added nothing to what was already shown in the case.

The court allowed the defendant to prove that the alley for ten or twelve years had been open and was not closed up. It also allowed him to state that he regarded it as a public alley and went into it for this reason. If the other evidence offered by him as to the use of the alley by the public, had been admitted, it would have thrown no light upon the merits of the homicide, and therefore the exclusion of the evidence was in no manner prejudicial to the defendant's substantial rights.

The defendant filed an affidavit for a continuance on the ground that P. E. Parrish, a witness for him, was sick and could not be present at the trial. The court allowed the statement of the affidavit to be read as the deposition of Parrish. In it Parrish stated that he was a member of the grand jury who found the indictment, that Bud Payne, Babe DeBorde and Harvey Foley testified before the grand jury, and in effect stated that they did not see the shooting or know how it occurred. Bud Payne, Babe DeBorde and Harvey Foley were introduced on the trial as witnesses for the Commonwealth. They testified that they did see the shooting and stated in effect that Kennedy began the difficulty by drawing his pistol and shooting first at Estes. After the Commonwealth had closed its case, the defendant read to the jury the deposition of Parrish to contradict these three witnesses. After the deposition of Parrish was read the Commonwealth was allowed to introduce another member of the grand jury who testified in substance that he had heard the testimony of Payne, DeBorde and Foley before the grand jury and that their testimony before the grand jury was the same as on the trial. The defendant objected to this evidence, but we do not see that he has any substantial grounds for complaint. By section 113 of the Criminal Code, a member of the grand jury may be required to disclose the testimony of a witness before the grand jury for the purpose of ascertaining the consistency of the testimony given by the witness on the trial. As the defendant had undertaken to impeach the Commonwealth's witnesses by one member of the grand jury the Commonwealth was properly permitted to sustain its witnesses by other members of the grand jury. It is true that the court should have admonished the jury as to the purpose for which the evidence was allowed, and that this he failed to do, but the examination did not bring out any fact which the witnesses had not stated on the trial. The whole of the inquiry was directed to ascertain whether the Commonwealth's witnesses referred to, had testified before the grand jury as they testified on the trial. The jury could not have misunderstood the purpose of the evidence, and as nothing new was brought out, the defendant could not have been prejudiced by the failure of the court to admonish the jury as to the purpose for which the evidence was admitted. In the cases in which this court has held it error not to give such admonition, the witness stated facts which had not otherwise appeared, but in the case at bar the members of the grand jury stated that the witnesses had said nothing more than they had testified to on the trial. The court instructed the jury as follows:

"If you believe from the evidence that at the time James Kennedy shot at and killed the defendant, Milt Estes (if you shall believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that he did so), he believed and had reasonable grounds to believe, that he was then and there, in danger of death or the infliction of some other great bodily harm at the hands of the deceased, and that it was necessary or was believed by the defendant in the exercise of a reasonable judgment to be necessary to shoot at and kill the deceased in order to avert that danger, real or to the defendant apparent, then you will find the defendant not guilty on the ground of self defense and apparent necessity thereof; but if you shall believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant, when he was in no danger, or apparent danger of death or great bodily harm at the hands of Estes, began the difficulty by shooting at Estes or making demonstration to shoot at him, and so made the danger to himself excusable on the part of Estes in his necessary or apparently necessary self defense, or if the combat was voluntarily engaged in by both, then in each event the defendant can not be acquitted on the grounds of self-defense."

This instruction is verbatim the instruction which this court directed to be given on the former appeal. We can not see that it was in anywise erroneous. The jury were elsewhere told that if upon the whole case, they had a reasonable doubt that the defendant had been proven guilty, they should find him not guilty. They could not therefore find him guilty under this instruction unless they believed the facts herein set out beyond a reasonable doubt. (Oday v. Commonwealth, 30 Ky. Law Rep., 848.) The opinion delivered on the former appeal is the law of the case. The facts of the case appear in the opinion delivered on the former appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

BURTON v. MONTICELLO AND BURNSIDE TURNPIKE CO.

(Filed April 15, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Turnpikes—Action to Recover Tolls—The fact that a turnpike was insufficient can not be shown in an action to recover tolls paid. The remedy that the statute provides must be followed.

2. Transfer of Actions—This was simply an action to recover money had and received and the court below did not err in transferring it to the common law docket.

Virgil P. Smith for appellant.

Harrison & Harrison for appellee.

Appeal from Wayne Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, affirming.

Chas. H. Burton runs two vehicles from Burnside to Monticello and paid the Monticello and Burnside Turnpike Co., the tolls demanded by it. He brought this suit against the turnpike company, charging that within five years before the filing of the petition he had so paid it in tolls $4,824; that the charges were excessive and not warranted by law, and he prayed judgment for the excess which had been collected of him beyond that which the company was authorized to charge. The court transferred the action from the equity to the common law docket, and on final hearing dismissed the petition. From this judgment he appeals.

If the turnpike was not as wide as the law required or if it was not maintained in proper condition, the remedies provided by statute must be followed. The fact that the pike was insufficient can not be shown in an action like this to recover tolls paid. (Kennedy v. Crum, 16 Ky. Law Rep., 257; 26 S. W., 190; Shewmaker v. Turnpike Co., 18 Ky. Law Rep., 221, 35 S. W., 1040.)

One of the appellant's vehicles left Monticello every morning, making the trip to Burnside and back that day. It had seats within for nine passengers. On this vehicle the turnpike company charged 55 cents toll at each toll gate. Appellant's other vehicle left Burnside every morning, for Monticello, returning the next morning; it had seats within for six passengers. The turnpike company charged 35 cents toll on this vehicle at each gate. Section 4724 Kentucky Statutes, regulating the rate of toll on turnpikes, contains, among other things, the following:

"For each pleasure carriage or hackney coach drawn by two horses or mules 25 cents."

"For each stage coach having seats within for six passengers, 35 cents. For same for nine passengers 55 cents."

The statute recognizes a distinction between pleasure coaches or hackney coaches on one hand and stage coaches on the other. A hackney coach is a coach which is hired out; a stage coach is one which is used by the owner to carry passengers from one point to another. A stage coach is not hired out. It remains in the possession of the owner. Under the agreed facts, appellant's vehicles were stage coaches and were properly charged toll as such.

They were used for the carrying of passengers, express matter, and the mails between Burnside and Monticello. The larger vehicle was drawn by four horses and the smaller one by two horses. The vehicles were not hackney coaches or pleasure carriages, but stage coaches in which the owner conducted his business as a common carrier.

The court did not err in transferring the action from the equity to the common law docket as it was simply an action to recover money had and received. There was no necessity for taking an account.

Under the agreed facts the plaintiff has no cause for action.
Judgment affirmed.

CLINGER'S ADM'X v. CHESAPEAKE & OHIO OF KENTUCKY, &c.

(Filed April 15, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Railroads—Removal of Causes—Petition—Allegations—Conclusions—Jurisdictional Facts—In a petition by a party to remove a case from the State court to the Federal court an allegation "that its co-defendants were not necessary, nor proper parties to the action, and that the sole purpose of the plaintiff in making other parties defendants was a fraudulent one to deprive the petition of its constitutional rights," amounts only to a conclusion of the pleader, and the allegation that "the negligence charged in the petition against its co-defendants was untrue, and known by the plaintiff to be untrue," does not state any jurisdictional fact. The question of negligence or no negligence was an issue solely within the province of the jury to hear and determine.

2. Same—Negligent Injury—Joint Liability of Defendants—In an injury is inflicted by two or more wrongdoers, an action may be maintained against one or all of them. While several may be guilty of several distinct negligent acts, yet if their concurrent effect is to produce an actionable injury they are all liable therefor.

3. Same—Resident and Non-resident Defendants—Joint Action Against—Where, in an action for damages for an injury alleged to have been caused by the negligence of a non-resident railroad company, and its resident conductor who are jointly sued, this court can not assume that the conductor is not guilty, from its general knowledge of his powers and duties, but if on the trial it should appear from the evidence that the plaintiff had no reasonable grounds to believe that he was guilty when the petition was filed, the court should give a peremptory instruction to find for him, and the case should then be remanded to the Federal court.

4. Same—Acts of Incorporation—Legality—Effect of Lease—Section 769, Kentucky Statutes, providing among other things, that a railroad company "may make any agreement or arrangement, not inconsistent with law, with any other railroad company" is not in conflict with section 573, Kentucky Statutes, providing "that all provisions of charters and articles of incorporation which are inconsistent with the provisions of chapter 32, of the Kentucky Statutes, stand repealed to the extent of such conflict," and under the contract of lease by the C. & O. R'y Co. in Ky. to the C. & O. R'y Co. in Virginia, it did not relieve the Kentucky railroad from its responsibility existing before the enactment of section 573, Kentucky Statutes.

Allen D. Cole and Thomas R. Phister for appellant.

Worthington & Cochran and W. H. Wadsworth for appellees.

Appeal from Mason Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn, reversing.

This appeal is from an order of the circuit court transferring this case to the Federal court for trial.

The plaintiff (appellant) instituted this action for $25,000 in damages against appellees for the alleged negligent killing of her husband, who, at the time he was killed, was crossing appellees' road on a street in the city of Maysville, Kentucky. She charged that it was by the joint gross negligence of the three appellees in the management and operation of its train of cars that resulted in the death of her husband; that appellee, the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co. of Kentucky, a Kentucky corporation, was the owner of the road and had leased it to appellee, Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co. of Virginia, a foreign corporation, and that appellee, Shannon Hall, was the conductor on the train that killed Clinger.

The order of removal was made upon the petition of appellee, the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co. of Virginia, a foreign corporation. It was alleged in the petition, in substance, that it and the plaintiff were citizens of different States; that its co-defendants, the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co. of Kentucky and Shannon Hall, were not necessary nor proper parties to the action, and that they were made defendants for the sole purpose of preventing a removal of the cause to the Federal court, thereby unlawfully and fraudulently depriving the petitioner of a right conferred upon it by the Constitution and laws of the United States; and averred that the allegations of negligence contained in plaintiff's petition, as to its co-defendants, were untrue and known to be so by her when this suit was brought. It was further alleged that the petition of plaintiff stated no cause of action at all against its co-defendants or either of them.

The charge that its co-defendants were not necessary nor proper parties to the action, and that her sole purpose in making them defendants was a fraudulent one to deprive it of its constitutional right, amounts only to a conclusion of the pleader. She could, possibly with the same propriety, have stated that they were necessary parties, and that the petition of appellee for removal was for the fraudulent purpose of depriving her of the right to a trial of the case at her residence; and this is also true of the allegation in the petition for removal that the negligence charged in her petition, against its co-defendants, was untrue and so known by plaintiff at the time she filed her petition. This allegation, and the others referred to, did not state any jurisdictional fact. The question of negligence or no negligence was an issue solely within the province of the jury to hear and determine. (Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co. v. Dixon, 179 U. S., 131; Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway Co. v. George Bohon, 200 U. S., 221; Rutherford v. Illinois Central R. R. Co., &c., 27 Ky. Law Rep., 397, 85 S. W., 199, and Illinois Central R. Co. v. Sheegog's Adm'r, 31 Ky. Law Rep., 691, 103 S. W., 323.)

This brings us to the last proposition made in the petition for removal, to-wit: That no cause at all was stated in plaintiff's petition against its co-defendants, or either of them. All the defendants were charged jointly with gross negligence, which she alleged produced the death of her husband; and it is a well established rule that if the injury inflicted is produced by two or more wrongdoers an action may be maintained by the person so injured, either against one or against all of them. The liability of the wrongdoers is joint and several. The injured person may elect whether he will proceed against one or all of them. While several may be guilty of several distinct negligent acts, yet if their concurrent effect is to produce an actionable injury, they are all liable therefor. The action, properly speaking, is not to recover for the negligent act or acts, but it is to recover damages for the injury which they produced. (Pugh v. C. & O. Ry. Co., 101 Ky., 77, and the cases above cited.)

It was alleged in plaintiff's petition that the C. & O. R'y Co. in Kentucky was a Kentucky corporation, and owned the road, but had leased it to the C. & O. R'y. Co. in Virginia, which operated it as its agent or lessee, and that Shannon Hall was the conductor of the train which was so negligently managed and operated that it produced the death of her husband while he was passing along a street in the city of Maysville. It does not appear in the record why the lower court made the transfer, but, from the brief of counsel for appellees, we presume that the lower court determined that the C. & O. R'y. Co. in Kentucky, although admitted to be the owner of the road, was not operating it, and that Shannon Hall was only the conductor, and by reason of his position he could not and it was not his duty to keep a lookout for persons at street crossings. Although it is alleged in the petition that the conductor, by gross negligence, so managed and operated the train that it resulted in the death of Clinger, we were asked to assume that this is not true because of our general knowledge of the position of a conductor on a train. We also have some general knowledge of the powers of a conductor, although his regular place upon a train is in the caboose. It may be that a conductor has all the power and authority over the management and operation of a train that his title implies; that is the conductor and controller of it. On the trial it may be made to appear that the train was being run at an excessive and dangerous rate of speed through the city of Maysville at the time Clinger was killed, and which caused his death, and that the conductor had some power or control over the matter of speed and could have, by due care, prevented such a rate of speed; or the evidence might show that he was guilty of actionable negligence in some other respect; but if upon the trial it should appear from the evidence that plaintiff had no reasonable grounds to believe, when she filed her petition, that the conductor was negligent in any manner which produced the death of Clinger, then, under the rule in the cases of Illinois Central R. R. Co. v. Coley, 28 Ky. Law Rep., 336; Dudley v. Illinois Central R. R. Co., 29 Ky. Law Rep., 1029, and Underwood v. Illinois Central R. R. Co., 31 Ky. Law Rep., 595, the court should give a peremptory instruction in behalf of Shannon Hall, and the case should be removed to the Federal court, unless the Kentucky corporation, C. & O. R'y Co. in Kentucky, the owner of the road, is jointly liable with the C. & O. R'y Co. in Virginia, for the negligent acts of any of the servants in charge of the train which produced the injury and death of Clinger.

The only question remaining to be determined is, whether the C. & O. R'y Co. in Kentucky is responsible in damages, with the C. & O. R'y Co. in Virginia, for the death of plaintiff's intestate. Appellees' counsel virtually concede that if the provisions of the charter of the Maysville & Big Sandy Railroad Co., which charter the C. & O. R'y Co. in Kentucky took when it was incorporated, with reference to its power to lease the road are in full force and effect under the authority of the case of McCabe's Adm'x v. Maysville & Big Sandy R'y Co., 112 Ky., 861, the C. & O. R'y Co. in Kentucky would be responsible jointly with the lessee, the Virginia corporation. But contend that this provision of the charter of the Maysville & Big Sandy Railroad Co. stands repealed by section 573 of the Kentucky Statutes, which in effect, says: That all provisions of charters and articles of incorporation, which are inconsistent with the provisions of chapter 32 of the Kentucky Statutes, stand repealed to the extent of such conflict; and claims that the lease made by the C. & O. R'y Co. in Kentucky to the Virginia corporation was made under the provisions of section 769, of the Kentucky Statutes. The first part of this section deals with the construction of spurs, tracks or branches of roads by railroad companies organized in Kentucky; and also authorizes such corporations to purchase the property and franchise of any other railroad company not a competing or parallel line; then authorizes such corporations to sell its franchise and property to any other company not a competing or parallel line, or not otherwise prohibited by law to purchase; and after speaking of other matters, not germane to the matter under consideration, the section closes with these words: "And may make any agreement or arrangement, not inconsistent with law, with any other railroad company."

There is no claim that the C. & O. R'y Co. in Kentucky sold its property and franchises to the C. & O. R'y Co. in Virginia; but appellees claim that the lease was made under the clause of section 769 above quoted, and that it exempts the C. & O. R'y Co. in Kentucky from all responsibility while the C. & O. Ry. Co. in Virginia controls and operates the road. We deem it unnecessary to consider and determine whether the provision of the charter referred to in the McCabe case, supra, was repealed or not by the enactment of section 573 of the Kentucky Statutes; for the reason that, in our opinion, if the lease was made under the authority of section 769 of the Kentucky Statutes, it did not have the effect to relieve the C. & O. R'y Co. in Kentucky from the same responsibility as existed under the charter of the Maysville & Big Sandy Railroad before the enactment of section 573. There is nothing in the language of section 769 exempting it from liability in such a case. In the case of Gilbert Logan v. N. C. R. R. Co., 116 N. C., 940, the court held that a railroad company could not escape responsibility for negligence by leasing its road to another company, unless its charter or a subsequent act of the Legislature exempts it from such liability.

In the case of The Central & Montgomery R. R. Co. v. Morris & Crawford, 68 Texas, 49, the court said: "It is well established that a railroad company can not transfer or lease the right to operate its road, so as to absolve itself from its duties to the public, without legislative authority. Nor will a lease duly authorized by law release the company from a failure to discharge its charter obligations, unless the law giving the power contains a provision to that effect. (Abbott v. Horse Co., 80 New York, 27; Ohio & Mississippi Railroad Co. v. Dunbar, 20 Illinois, 623; Nelson v. Vermont & Canada Railroad Co., 26 Vermont, 717; Macon & Augusta Railroad Co. v. Mayes, 49 Georgia, 355; Railroad Co. v. Brown, 5 Wallace, 90; 1 Rorer on Railroads, 605, et seq.; 1 Redfield on Railways, chapter 22, page 616, star page 587; Pierce on Railways, 283, 496.)"

In the case of Eliza Chollette v. Omaha & Republic Valley Railroad Co., 26 Neb., 159, the court in considering a question like the one we have before us, quoted with approval from the case of Nelson v. R. R. Co., 26 Vt., 717, as follows: "The lessor must, at all events, be held responsible for just what they expected the lessee to do, and possibly for all which they do do, as their general agents. For the public can only look to that corporation to whom they have delegated this portion of public service. Certainly they are not bound to look beyond them, although they may doubtless do so."

In the case of Pennsylvania Co. v. Ellett, 132 Ill., 654, the court said: "The law has become settled in this State, by an unbroken line of decisions, that the grant of a franchise, giving the right to build, own and operate a railway, carries with it the duty to so use the property and manage and control the railroad as to do no unnecessary damage to the person or property of others; and where injury results from the negligent or unlawful operation of the railroad, whether by the corporation to which the franchise is granted, or by another corporation, or by individuals whom the owner authorizes or permits to use its tracks, the company owning the railway and franchise will be liable." (Leshner v. Wabash Navigation Co., 14 Ill., 85; Chicago, St. Paul & Fon du Lac R'y Co. v. McCarthy, 20 Id., 385; Ohio & Mississippi R'y Co. v. Dunbar, Id., 623; Illinois Central Railroad Co. v. Finnigan, Id., 646; Illinois Central Railroad Co. v. Kanouse, 39 Id., 272; Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw Ry. Co. v. Rumbolt, 40 Id., 143; Peoria & Rock Island Railroad Co. v. Lane, Adm'x, 83 Id., 448; Pittsburg, Chicago & St. Louis Ry. Co. v. Campbell, 86 Id., 443; Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railway Co. v. Shacklett, 105 Id., 364; Balsly v. Railroad Co., 119 Id., 68.)"

In the case of Bower v. The B. & S. W. R. Co., 42 Iowa, 546, the court held that a railroad corporation can not escape liability for an accident occurring while its road is being operated, even though in fact it might have been leased, and was at the time controlled by another party.

In the McCabe case, supra, this court in discussing the charter of the Maysville & Big Sandy Railroad, under which the C. & O. R'y Co. in Kentucky is operating, said: "By its acceptance of the franchises conferred by the State the corporation assumed the corresponding burdens thereby imposed. These franchises it could not transfer to another without distinct legislative authority. The grant of power to lease its property is one thing; the grant of absolution from its responsibility is another, and is not to be inferred from a mere power to lease the road, where the corporation still retains its existence and the enjoyment of its franchises in the rents. For such grants are strictly construed, and, as against the public, are never extended by construction. There is nothing in the provision to show that the Legislature had in mind authorizing the company to divest itself of its franchise, or permitting it, while enjoying them or their fruits, to be acquit of responsibility for their abuse, without regard to the financial ability of the lessee or his amenability to suit."

In the same case this court quoted, with approval, from the case of Driscoll v. Railroad Co., 65 Conn., 254, as follows: "A grant to a corporation of a right to lay out, construct, and operate a railroad is the grant to the corporation of the capacity to exercise a portion of the powers of sovereignty for the purpose of making pecuniary profit to itself. This is its franchise. Such grants are never made except at the request of the corporation: In return, the corporation is held to have promised to pay just damages to any person injured by any want of care in using the right so granted. As the grant is of a public right, in which every one of the public is a sharer, so the promise is to each one of the public. A due regard for the public rights obviously requires that a corporation which has asked for and received such a grant shall not be absolved from its promise except by an act of the Legislature to that effect so distinct and unequivocal as not to be open to mistake. Nothing should be left to inference." (York & M. R. R. Co. v. Winans, 17 Howard, 39, and Thomas v. R. R. Co., 101 U. S., 83.) This rule is established and adhered to by the courts of almost all the States, and is a just one. If the rule were otherwise, the inducement would be great for all domestic corporations to lease their roads to foreign corporations and avoid litigation in the State courts; and the probability would be, under such rule, that no citizen of a State could have his rights determined in a State court when the amount in controversy exceeded $2,000. The rule, as above stated, was adhered to in the case of Illinois Central R. R. Co. v. Sheegog's Adm'x, 31 Ky. Law Rep., 691, 103 S. W., 323; but in that case the question considered and determined was as to the liability of the lessor to an employe of the lessee, who was killed by negligence, and the lessor was made responsible because of defective roadbed. That case is unlike this. Clinger was not an employe, but a member of the public traveling on one of the streets of the city of Maysville.

Appellees' counsel contends that the cases of Harper v. N. N. & M. V. R'y Co., 90 Ky., 360, and Sinkhorn v. Lexington, H. & P. Turnpike Co., &c., 112 Ky., 205, establish a different rule and have the effect to release the lessor from liability for the negligence of appellees' servants in the operation of trains. The Harper case was decided September, 1890, and it appears that the employes of the N. N. & M. V. R'y Co. (a lessee) caused the injuries to Harper; but it does not appear whether Harper was an employe of that company or a third party. The presumption is that he was an employe. If otherwise, the opinion would be against the trend of all the authorities. The Sinkhorn case was one wherein Sinkhorn received his injuries by reason of a defective bridge on a turnpike road after the county had become the owner of it under legislative authority, after a vote by the people of the county. When Sinkhorn was injured the turnpike company did not own the road or the franchise, the county owned both. The county was relieved from responsibility on the general principle that a county could not be made liable for such torts. Of course, the turnpike company was not liable, because it had no interest in the road at the time Sinkhorn was injured; and the court, in substance, said that when the turnpike company had surrendered all ownership and control to the county it was not responsible for the torts of the county.

In our opinion the court erred in removing the case to the Federal court, and the judgment is reversed and remanded, for further proceedings consistent herewith.

Whole court sitting.

COMMONWEALTH v. CHESAPEAKE & OHIO RAILWAY CO.

(Filed April 15, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Railroads—Indictment for Nuisance—Obstructing Street—Sufficient Allegations—An indictment for a nuisance against a railroad company which charges that "on the 12th day of September, 1907 in the county of Clark, and in the city of Winchester, within twelve months before the finding of the indictment, it unlawfully and willfully suffered and permitted its cars attached to passenger and freight trains, to be placed on and across Main street in said city of Winchester, said street being a public highway, and did suffer them to be and remain on and across said street for an unreasonable length of time, thereby obstructing travel on said street," is a good indictment under section 124, of the Criminal Code.

2. Same—Bill of Particulars—Requirement of Commonwealth—Response—Time Allowed—On the return of an indictment against a railroad company for obstructing a street in a city by permitting its cars to remain in and across said street for an unreasonable length of time, the court did not abuse its discretion, on motion of the defendant, to require the Commonwealth's attorney to file a bill of particulars, stating the time as near as he could, when the offense was committed, but the court should not require such response to be filed until the attorney had obtained the presence of the Commonwealth's witnesses from whom he could ascertain the particular facts to be relied on in sustaining the prosecution.

3. Same—Sufficiency of Response—The law does not require the prosecution to give facts which are within the knowledge of the defendant, nor to give the particular hour or day or even the week in which the offense was committed, nor the particular train or number of it, unless the witness can remember same. The law only requires an honest effort on the part of the prosecution to obtain and give to the defendant all the necessary information it reasonably can, to enable it to show as far as possible the particular act or acts relied on for a conviction.

James Breathitt, Theo. B. Blakey, T. B. McGregor, Chas. H. Morris and B. A. Crutcher for appellant.

D. L. Pendleton for appellee.

Appeal from Clark Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn, reversing.

This appeal is from a judgment sustaining a demurrer to and dismissing the following indictment (omitting the formal parts):

"The grand jury of Clark county, in the name and by the authority of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, accuse the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company of the offense of suffering a nuisance committed as follows, viz: That said the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company on the 12th day of September, 1907, in the county aforesaid, and at a time other than mentioned in indictment No. 1, and within twelve months before the finding of this indictment, it, the said Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company being a corporation, incorporated under the laws of the State of Virginia and owning and operating a railroad in and through the county of Clark and the city of Winchester, in said county, did unlawfully and willfully suffer and permit its cars attached to passenger and freight trains belonging to said railway company, to be placed on and across Main street, in the city of Winchester, Kentucky, it, the said Main street, being then a public highway, and did suffer and permit said cars to be and remain on and across said Main street for an unreasonable length of time, thereby obstructing said street and rendering travel along said street dangerous and unsafe to the common nuisance of all the citizens of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, and especially to persons living on and in the neighborhood of said street and passing and re-passing along same, against the peace and dignity of the Commonwealth of Kentucky."

The defendant (appellee) moved the court to require the Commonwealth to make the indictment more definite so as to show the day and time of day, the character of train and the direction in which the train was headed which obstructed Main street, as alleged therein. The court sustained this motion.

The Commonwealth's attorney filed a statement as follows:

"The undersigned states that he is unable to give the time of the committing of the alleged nuisance, as mentioned in indictment No. 2, against the C. & O. R'y Co., more definite than it was only three or four days before the 12th day of September, 1907."

The defendant (appellee) filed a demurrer to the statement, which the court sustained and entered the following order:

"The attorney for the Commonwealth declines to make the statement more definite and the court being of the opinion that the defendant is entitled to a more definite statement in order to be able to defend this case, it is now ordered that the indictment herein be dismissed, to which ruling the Commonwealth objects and excepts, and prays an appeal to the Court of Appeals, which is granted."

The only questions involved on this appeal are: The sufficiency of the indictment and whether the court, in its discretion, should have granted appellee's motion for a bill of particulars.

Section 124, of the Criminal Code, provides:

"The indictment must be direct and certain as regards—

"1. The party charged.

"2. The offense charged.

"3. The county in which the offense was committed.

"4. The particular circumstances of the offense charged, if they be necessary to constitute a complete offense."

The indictment under consideration meets the requirement of this section. The party charged with committing the offense is specifically named; and it is charged that the defendant had suffered and permitted its cars to be and remain on and across Main street; and rendered the travel along the street dangerous, to the common nuisance, &c. The offense was alleged to have been committed in Clark county, and in the city of Winchester. There were no other circumstances necessary to be alleged to constitute a complete offense. The suffering and permitting cars to remain across Main street, which obstructed travel thereon, completed the offense. The Commonwealth was not required to state in the indictment the particular day or the time of day, or the character of the train, or the direction in which the train was headed which obstructed the street. To require the Commonwealth to allege and prove these particular facts and circumstances would, in most cases relieve defendants from conviction for such offenses.

The indictment in the case of the Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co v. Commonwealth, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1452, was as follows:

"The said Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co., in the said county of Hopkins, on the 16th day of May, 1903, and on many other days before the finding of this indictment, did create, suffer and maintain a common nuisance in the city of Earlington, Hopkins county, Kentucky, by placing and running railroad cars, flats, box cars and steam engines, and making up trains and switching cars and changing cars unnecessarily and for unreasonable lengths of time in, on and across a public street and highway of said city of Earlington, where the track and side-track of said railroad company crosses said street or highway, near said railroad company's depot, in said city, thereby obstructing said public street and highway for unreasonable lengths of time and causing the people who pass over and drive teams over said public street and highway great inconvenience and trouble and delays, and making and causing said street and highway at said crossing to be dangerous and unsafe to all people traveling along same, and to the common nuisance of all the people of the Commonwealth."

The defendant in that case was convicted, and on appeal the case was reversed because the indictment was defective, in that it failed to name the street of Earlington which was obstructed. The indictment in that case was equally as indefinite in the matters referred to as the indictment in this case; but the defect for which the case was reversed is not in the indictment before us, for it is charged that the obstruction was of Main street in the city of Winchester, Clark county, Kentucky.

In the case of C. & O. R'y Co. v. Commonwealth, 88 Ky., 370, two indictments were found against defendant on the same day, charging it with obstructing a certain road with its cars. Each charged that the offense was committed at the same time, substantially in the same language. The defendant was acquitted under one of the indictments, and being placed on trial under the other, pleaded the judgment in the former case in bar. It was held that the judgment under the first indictment was not a bar to a proceeding under the second, unless the same obstruction which was relied on in the second case was proven, or attempted to be proven, in the first case. The court said:

"It is true the indictments were found upon the same day; they were for the same character of offense; they covered the same period of time, because the statutory limitation under our law to such a prosecution is one year; but the time named in them as being that when the offense was committed was not material, and each obstruction was a distinct offense. The State was not confined to any particular time, but had the right to show that the appellant had so offended at any time within a year previous to the finding of the indictment. This being so, a conviction or acquittal would not, ipso facto, bar another indictment found at the same time and charging the same character and offense. Whether the same act was proven, or attempted to be proven, upon the trial of the other one would be a question of fact; and the first trial would only be a bar to a further prosecution for such offenses as were then proven, or attempted to be proven. This would, of course, have to be shown by extrinsic evidence."

In the same opinion, the court further said:

"In this character of case the State could, upon the trial of one indictment, select one particular act or offense and proceed for it; and, under the other indictment, although found at the same time, it could prove a different one."

This was quoted with approval in the case supra. (Illinois Central R. R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 104 Ky., 364.) The indictment therein was very similar to the indictment in the case at bar. The court held the indictment in that case sufficient, except that it was not alleged whether the obstruction was within the city limits or not. The indictment in the case at bar is not defective in this respect. These cases are conclusive of the first question under consideration.

The remaining question is: Did the court err in requiring the Commonwealth to file a bill of particulars? This practice has not been usually resorted to in this State; but it is authorized in certain cases by Bishop on Criminal Procedure, section 643, volume 1, which is as follows:

"An indictment which the court can not pronounce ill may still be deemed wanting in detail of which the defendant is justly entitled to be informed before trial. In such a case, the judge, if applied to, orders a written specification of the things, called sometimes a bill of particulars, to be filed with the papers in the cause; and, on the trial, restricts the prosecuting officer in his evidence to the items therein set down. The application for it is addressed solely to the discretion of the court; hence its decision thereon is not generally subject to revision by a higher tribunal." (Bogard v. Illinois Central R. R. Co., 116 Ky., 429, wherein this court quoted, with approval, from the case of Tilton v. Beecher, 59 N. Y., 176, in part, as follows:

"A bill of particulars is appropriate in all descriptions of actions where the circumstances are such that justice demands that a party should be apprised of the matters for which he is to be put for trial with greater particularity than is required by the rule of pleading. They have been ordered in actions of libel, escape, trespass, trover and ejectment, and even in criminal cases, on an indictment for nuisance,' &c., and concludes as follows: 'A reference to a few of the authorities upon which these decisions were founded will show that in almost every kind of case in which the defendant can satisfy the court that it is necessary to a fair trial that he should be apprised beforehand of the particulars of the charge which he is expected to meet the court has authority to compel the adverse party to specify those particulars so far as in his power.'"

In 3 Edition of P. & Pr., 517, the author says:

"There is no inflexible rule as to the class of cases in which a bill of particulars will be granted, but it rests within the sound judicial discretion of the court, to be exercised only in furtherance of justice. But the rule is equally well established that a party will not be obliged to furnish facts already known to his adversary, nor when the means of ascertaining the facts are equally accessible to both parties."

In the case before us appellee was indicted for a nuisance, created by leaving its train of cars across a main street in a town. The affidavit filed by appellee with its motion for a bill of particulars stated that within a year before the finding of this indictment and the other referred to, appellee ran a number of trains each day over and across said Main street, and that unless the defendant is informed as to the day and time of day when the alleged obstruction occurred, and the train which obstructed the street is described, it can not properly make a defense. We realize, under the circumstances, the necessity for a bill of particulars in this case. Appellee had another indictment pending against it for a similar offense, and many trains had been run over and across this street within the year preceding the finding of the indictment. It was reasonably certain that appellee could not know in advance what particular offense or act would be relied upon by the Commonwealth in making out a case against it, as the Commonwealth had a right to prove any act of obstructing Main street within a year next preceding the finding of the indictment, and the court did not abuse its discretion in sustaining the motion for a bill of particulars. The court, however, should not have required the prosecuting attorney to respond to this motion until the Commonwealth had obtained the presence of its witnesses, from whom it could ascertain the particular facts to be relied upon by it in the prosecution. The law does not require the prosecution to give facts which are within the knowledge of the other party, nor to give the particular hour, or day, or even week, in which the offense was committed, nor the particular train, or number of it, unless the witnesses can remember same. The law only requires an honest effort, on the part of the prosecution, to obtain and give to the defendant all the necessary information that it reasonably can, to enable it to know, as far as possible, the particular act or acts relied upon by the prosecution for a conviction.

For these reasons the judgment of the lower court is reversed and remanded, for further proceedings consistent herewith.

GLOBE BANK AND TRUST CO. v. RIGGLESBERGER.

(Filed April 15, 1908—Not to be reported)

1. Actions—Pleadings—Liens—The judgment herein in favor of appellee was proper in view of the pleadings and proof. The bank sued to recover of appellee upon an account for lumber sold, the transaction was between appellee and her son, alone, and neither the trustee nor the bank knew anything about it. The facts proved were insufficient to establish a promise on the part of appellee to pay for the lumber.

2. Same—While appellee signed an agreement not to force or demand payment of her debt out of R.'s property in charge of the trustee, yet if they permitted a bill of lumber to be sold her as a credit on a debt, which R. owed her, there seems to be no reason why she should not accept it without incurring liability to the bank under the pleadings in this case, for nothing is set out in the petition upon which to base the debt claimed.

D. G. Park for appellant.

Wheeler, Hughes & Berry for appellee.

Appeal from McCracken Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle, affirming.

In this action appellant sought to recover of appellee upon an open account $856.73, which amount, it was alleged, appellant "advanced to her at her special instance and request, and which she agreed to pay plaintiff with interest from the date of such advancement until paid."

By an amended petition, filed before appellee's answer, appellant alleged that the sum sued for was due it from appellee for lumber it furnished her at her request, and for which she promised to pay. Appellee's answer traversed the affirmative matter of the petition as amended.

By agreement of the parties a trial by jury was waived and the cause submitted to a special judge of their selection, who, after hearing the evidence and considering the questions of law involved, rendered judgment, dismissing the action at appellant's cost, of which judgment, and the refusal of the court to grant it a new trial, it complains, hence this appeal.

On July 27th, 1904, the firm of Rigglesberger Brothers, composed of the two sons of appellee, being indebted to appellant in the sum of $21,000.00, to their mother in the sum of $9,400.00 and to other creditors in the sum of $3,000.00 made a deed of trust to R. H. Noble, whereby he was nominally put in charge of the property and business of the firm; the property consisting of their mill plant, lumber, accounts, &c. The purpose of this conveyance was to provide for the payment of the indebtedness of the firm of Rigglesberger Brothers. By a separate writing appellee consented that appellant's debt might have priority of hers. The deed of trust provided, however, that the members of the firm were to be consulted by the trustee in the conduct of the business. In fact the firm was permitted by the trustee to retain the property conveyed and control of the business practically as they had done before the deed of trust was executed.

By May 25th, 1907, appellant's debt had been reduced from $21,000.00 to $10,000.00. On that day the firm of Rigglesberger Brothers, by Noble as trustee, executed to appellant their note for $10,000. Shortly thereafter suit was brought by appellant upon this note and judgment was taken against the firm and each member thereof for the amount of the note, with interest. When a suit was filed appellant obtained an attachment against the firm property. What property the attachment was levied upon, what was realized from its sale, or what disposition was made of the attachment does not appear from this record.

R. H. Noble was not a party to that action and appellant's petition as amended does not rely upon or mention that action or claim any right or lien under the attachment or judgment therein or by virtue of the deed of trust. Indeed, there is no claim in the petition that Rigglesberger Brothers are insolvent or that they are indebted to appellant.

Several months after the appellant obtained the judgment in question against the firm of Rigglesberger Brothers, the latter being still in charge of their mill and business, sold to their mother, the appellee, $856.73 worth of lumber, which she used in repairing one house and erecting another on her lot. The sale was made with the understanding that the price of the lumber should be credited upon the indebtedness of the firm to appellee, and it was so credited.

If R. H. Noble had joined in this action as a plaintiff, and it were alleged in appellant's petition and shown by proof, that the lumber sold by the Rigglesberger Brothers to appellee was under a lien in appellant's favor by virtue of the deed of trust, or the attachment procured by the latter in the other action, and that the sale was without the consent of R. H. Noble, trustee, and resulted from fraud or collusion between the members of the firm and appellee to enable her to obtain a preference and payment on her debt, in violation of her written agreement to be postponed as a creditor until appellant's claim and those of the other creditors named in the deed of trust, should be paid, a state of case greatly differing from that before us would have been presented. But the case actually presented is that appellant sues to recover the price of lumber it claims to have sold appellee upon her agreement to pay therefor the price charged.

In order to sustain the cause of action relied on, it was necessary for appellant to allege and prove either its complete ownership of the lumber sold, or that it had a lien upon it, and that it made the sale in its corporate capacity, or through the trustee and with the approval of the firm of Rigglesberger Brothers, and further that there was a promise, express or implied, upon the part of appellee to pay it (appellant) for the lumber. These facts were neither alleged nor proved. On the contrary, the evidence showed that neither appellant nor Noble, the trustee, knew anything about the sale of the lumber when made, and it was not made to appear that the latter knew anything about it at the time of the trial. The transaction was between appellee and her son, J. W. Rigglesberger, alone.

The effort of appellant to prove an implied promise upon appellee's part to pay it for the lumber by the introduction in evidence of the deed of trust and the separate writing executed by appellee, was unavailing, in the absence of proper averments in its petition joining the trustee as a plaintiff, setting forth these instruments and charging fraud or collusion between appellee and Rigglesberger Brothers in the sale to the former of the lumber, and that it was for the purpose of giving her a preference as a creditor of which she had previously deprived herself by the writing executed at the time of the execution of the deed of trust.

As before stated, the petition fails to allege that the firm of Rigglesberger Brothers is insolvent. It was not alleged or proved that the firm did not have on hand at the time of the trial enough property to pay the balance due upon appellant's debt, or even alleged that its debt had not been fully paid. The facts proved by appellant were insufficient to establish a promise, express or implied, on the part of appellee, to pay it for the lumber.

As said in the written opinion of the special judge: "The trustee took no active part in the management of this trust property. He permitted the Rigglesbergers to operate the business, buy and sell lumber from and to whom they desired and pay off their debts, not only the debt to the bank, but other debts as well, out of the profits. Rigglesberger Brothers owed this defendant (appellee) a large sum of money, and while it is true that in the contract which she signed she agreed not to force or demand the payment of her debt out of the trust property, yet if the trustee permitted the owners to use the discretion which he seems to have allowed them in the operation of the business, and they sold the defendant a bill of lumber and agreed to and did receive credit on the debt they owed her, there seems to be no reason why she could not accept it, without incurring any liability to the bank under the pleadings in this case. * * * It is not claimed that defendant owes the bank anything except by reason of a debt Rigglesberger Brothers owes it and this indebtedness is not alleged. Yet the petition sets up an entirely separate and distinct cause of action against defendant without setting forth any predicates upon which to base such indebtedness. How could the court render judgment against the defendant, with any degree of intelligence for the amount sued for or any part of it? The court would have no jurisdiction to apply any judgment rendered against the defendant here upon any indebtedness Rigglesberger Brothers might owe the bank. None is alleged. It is not shown by the proof or the pleadings whether the other debts referred to in the deed of trust have been paid, nor by what right or authority the Globe Bank and Trust Company claims to be the sole beneficiary of this property."

Counsel for appellant complains that the court erred in refusing to allow it to file, during the trial, a second amended petition making Noble, the trustee, a party to the action. This ruling of the court was not error. The mere making of the trustee a party, without setting forth the deed of trust, and other facts manifesting appellant's right to the proceeds of the lumber sold appellee by Rigglesberger Brothers, would not have entitled appellant to a judgment against appellee.

In view of the state of the pleadings and proof, the judgment complained of was proper. Wherefore, it is affirmed.

CALOR OIL & GAS CO. v. FRANZELL, &c.

KENTUCKY HEATING CO., &c. v. CALOR OIL & GAS CO.

(Filed March 26, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Eminent Domain—Action in County Court—Dismissal—Appeal to Circuit Court—Trial De Novo in a proceeding by a corporation in the county court against a land owner for a right of way to lay a pipe line for gas, which was dismissed on the ground that the corporation did not have the right of eminent domain, on appeal to the circuit court the case stood for trial de novo, and the whole controversy was to be tried in the circuit court.

2. Laying Pipe Line—Contract With Land Owner—Exclusive Privilege—Validity of Contract—A contract made by a corporation with a land owner for the "exclusive right and privilege of laying pipe and pipe lines for any and all purposes whatever, on, across, in or upon said land," is void as being in contravention of public policy.

3. Corporations—Organization—Validity Challenged—Collateral Attack—When a corporation is organized as provided in Kentucky Statutes, sections 540 and 542, neither its purpose nor its validity can be inquired into collaterally, and any proceeding which challenges its right to exist must be instituted and maintained by the government under whose laws it is organized.

4. Natural Gas—Waste—Legitimate Use—Effect on Adjacent District—While one who unlawfully wastes or destroys the gas of a district may be punished under the criminal statutes of the State, all parties owning gas wells in the district are free to make any legitimate use of the gas they choose, and the fact that this legitimate use tends to exhaust the supply, gives the other owners of gas wells in the district, no just grounds of complaint.

5. Same—Excessive Verdict—Where a railroad has the right of way through a farm, 1,450 feet long and 27 feet wide, in which strip a ten-inch pipe line, for carrying natural gas, is proposed to be buried, where the whole farm through which this strip is condemned is listed at $2,000, a verdict of a jury awarding the owner $4,000 in damages is flagrantly excessive and out of all proportion to the real damages sustained.

6. Right of Way—Additional Servitude—Measure of Damages Recoverable—Where a railroad company owns the exclusive right of way through a farm, there can be no resulting damages to the remainder of the farm by the laying of a pipe line by another party along this easement, and in such case the measure of damages recoverable by the owner of the land is such sum which the owner, who desired to sell, but was not compelled to do so, would take for it in its present condition, and what a purchaser, who desired to buy, but was not compelled to have it, would give for it under the circumstances.

L. A. Faurest, J. S. Wortham and Humphrey & Humphrey for Calor Oil & Gas Co.

Matt O'Doherty, McQuown & Brown, J. W. Lewis and J. M. Richardson for Kentucky Heating Co., &c., and Nicholas Franzell, &c.

Appeals from Meade Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker, affirming in part and reversing in part.

These two appeals grow out of the same transactions; both the plaintiff and the defendants below appealed from the judgment of the circuit court, and filed copies of the record here. These, by order of this court, were heard together, and will be treated in this opinion as one case.

Nicholas Franzell and wife own a farm in Meade county, Kentucky, between the natural gas fields and the city of Louisville. The Kentucky Heating Company is a corporation owning and operating natural gas wells in Meade county, and is engaged in the business of piping the gas from the wells to the city of Louisville, and there selling it to its customers, under a franchise which it owns and holds to lay its pipes through the public streets. The Louisville Gas Company is a corporation engaged in the business of manufacturing gas in the city of Louisville and selling it, both for lighting and heating purposes, under a franchise which it owns of laying its pipes through public ways of the city of Louisville. This latter corporation is not a party to this record, but it is a rival, to some extent, at least, of the Kentucky Heating Company, and it is the theory of the heating company that the Calor Oil & Gas Company is but a branch of the Louisville Gas Company, and that the latter was incorporated, among other things, to enable the Louisville Gas Company, by indirection, to pipe natural gas from the gas fields of Meade county to the city of Louisville, and in this way unlawfully compete with the Kentucky Heating Company in its business. We shall not enter very deeply into this phase of the case, for reasons which will appear further on in the opinion.

The Calor Oil & Gas Company is a corporation having power and authority, under its charter, to buy and lease oil and gas lands, dig wells, construct pipe lines, and do any and all other things connected with such business. The questions which arise for adjudication upon the transcripts before us grow out of an attempt on the part of the gas company to condemn a strip of land across the farm of appellants, Franzell and wife, for the purpose of laying therein a pipe line, to convey natural gas from its wells in Meade county, Kentucky, to the city of Louisville. The proceeding is under section 3766a, Kentucky Statutes, and sections 835, 836, 837, 838 and 839 and 840, Kentucky Statutes. The statement which was filed in the clerk's office of the county court of Meade county, fully described the strip to be condemned, and, thereupon, the judge of the Meade County Court appointed three commissioners, who, after having duly qualified as required by law, viewed the land and made report, assessing the damages which would accrue to the owners by reason of the condemnation thereof. Upon the trial of the case before the county court, on the exceptions of the owners of the land to the report of the commissioners, the court held that the corporation did not have the power of eminent domain, and dismissed the proceedings. From this judgment the corporation appealed to the circuit court of Meade county, where, upon a trial de novo, as provided by statute, the circuit court held that the corporation did possess the right of eminent domain, and submitted the question of damages to the jury, with the result that they returned a verdict of $4,000.00 in favor of Franzell and wife; and from this judgment all the parties, as said before, have prosecuted appeals for its reversal.

The first question which is raised by the defendants below on this appeal is, that, after the judgment in the circuit court, that the Calor Oil & Gas Company possessed the right of eminent domain under its charter, the case should have been sent back to the county court, and there tried out before a jury on the question of the amount of damages. We can not agree to this proposition. When the county court decided that the corporation did not possess the right of eminent domain, it was forced to appeal to the circuit court to get from under the ban of that adverse adjudication; and, having appealed to the circuit court, under the statute (section 839, Kentucky Statutes), the case came on for trial de novo, and the whole controversy was to be tried out there. This is what a trial de novo means; and there is nothing in the statute which indicates that the Legislature intended to impose upon the parties the burden of the case's being sent back to the county court for a retrial, after an appeal to the circuit court. On the contrary, all the language of the section (839) indicates an intention that, upon appeal to the circuit court, the whole case is to be there tried and settled, subject, of course, to a right of appeal to this court.

The Kentucky Heating Company was made a party defendant to the condemnation proceedings because it claimed, under a written contract with Franzell and wife, the owners of the land, the "exclusive right and privilege of laying pipe and pipe lines for any and all purposes whatsoever, on, across, in, or upon said land;" the consideration of which was an annual rental of two hundred and sixty-two dollars, so long as the Kentucky Heating Company "shall continue to occupy and use any part of the above described land under this agreement." In addition to this exclusive privilege, it had, under this contract, certain mineral rights in the land, which need not be set forth here, as the proposed right of way sought by the Calor Oil & Gas Company in nowise infringed upon or involved them. So far, then, as the Kentucky Heating Company is concerned, the only question in this case in which it is interested is the validity of its claim to an exclusive right to construct or operate a pipe line across the Franzell farm.

Obviously, this contract is void, as being in contravention of public policy. This position needs little elucidation or argument. Undoubtedly the public welfare requires the freest competition in all things pertaining to the common interest; and it has always been contrary to law to establish a monopoly such as is involved in the contract between the Franzells and the Kentucky Heating Company. What would be thought, for instance, of the proposition that a railroad corporation could lease from the owners a belt of land surrounding a municipality, and provide in the lease that it should have the exclusive right to operate a railroad across the land in question? And yet, the supposed proposition differs in principle in nowise from the contract between the Kentucky Heating Company and the Franzells.

In 1 Lewis on Eminent Domain, section 137, it is said:

"An exclusive franchise or privilege in a matter of public concern can be created only by the sovereign power. It can not be secured by contract with individuals or corporations. Thus, the grant by a railroad company of the exclusive right of maintaining a telegraph line along its right of way, or the grant by an individual of the exclusive right of constructing pipe lines over his lands for the transportation of oil, is void, as against public policy."

And again, in volume 2, section 289a, it is said:

"It is held that the grant of an exclusive right of way for a use of a public nature, such as a railroad, or pipe line, or telegraph, is against public policy and void, so far, at least, as the exclusive feature is concerned."

To the same effect is West Virginia Transportation Co. v. Ohio River Pipe Line Co., 22 W. Va., 626, 46 Am. Rep., 527; Kettle River R. Co. v. Eastern R. Co., 6 L. R. A., 111; 41 Minn., 461; W. U. T. Co. v. A. U. T. Co., 38 Am. Rep., 781; 65 Ga., 160; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. B. & S. W. Ry. Co., 11 Fed. Rep., 1; W. U. T. Co. v. B. & O. Tel. Co., 23 Fed. Rep., 12.

From the foregoing authorities, and upon principle, it is manifest that the lease from the Franzells to the heating company is void, so far as it undertakes to grant an exclusive right to lay pipe lines in or across the land involved here. Being void, it can constitute the basis for no claim for compensation, either upon the part of the Franzells or the heating company, as a void contract can give rise to no legal right. In 2 Lewis on Eminent Domain, section 484, it is said: "Nothing can be allowed on account of the loss or impairment of a gratuitous privilege, which the owner has been enjoying by the sufferance of another, or contrary to law or public right." (Kingsland v. New York, 110 N. Y., 569; 18 N. E. Rep., 435; Ranlet v. R. R. Co., 62 N. H., 561.)

It follows that the Kentucky Heating Company had no interest whatever in this condemnation proceeding; it being patent that the rights which the Calor Oil & Gas Company were seeking did not, in anywise militate against, or infringe upon, the mineral rights of the heating company in the Franzell farm; and, as we have already said, it had no right whatever to the exclusive privilege of laying pipe lines across the farm. The commissioners and the jury correctly refused to award it any damages by reason of the condemnation of the right of way, and the court erred in permitting any evidence as to the damages that would accrue to the Franzells by reason of the loss of rental under their contract with the Kentucky Heating Company, based upon the abandonment by the heating company of the lease.

The appellee, both by traverse and affirmative allegation, placed in issue the existence of the Calor Oil & Gas Company. When the corporation introduced in evidence a properly certified copy of its charter, which was regular on its face, and showed a compliance on its part with the statutory requirements, this evidence established its existence. Section 540, of the Kentucky Statutes, provides: "Said articles, or a certified copy thereof, may be used as evidence in any action for or against such corporation." And, in section 542, it is provided: "When the articles are filed and recorded, as provided, * * * the corporation shall be deemed to be organized for the purpose of transacting, promoting or carrying on the business or purpose for which it was created; and shall, thereupon, become a body corporate." When the corporation is organized as the statute requires, neither its purpose nor its validity can be inquired into collaterally, and any proceeding which challenges its right to exist must be instituted and maintained by the government, under whose laws it is organized. It would produce confusion and hardship if the right of a corporation to exist could be called in question by every litigant with whom it came in contact during its business career, and, therefore, the principle is wisely established, that, after a corporation is organized as by law required, no adverse litigant can, in a collateral proceeding, challenge its right to exist. In the case of Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Louisville Home Telephone Co., 114 Ky., 892, on this very question, we said:

"Appellee has not only been incorporated in the State of Delaware, but it has been recognized by the authorities of the city of Louisville as a corporation, and has been granted by it an important and valuable franchise. It is, at least, a de facto corporation, and the rule seems to be that, when an association of persons is exercising corporate franchises under color of legal organization, the existence of the corporation can not be inquired into collaterally, but only in a direct proceeding by the government. The reason of the rule is that it would produce endless confusion, and destroy the corporation if the legality of its existence could be drawn in question in every suit in which it was a party, for then no judgment could be rendered which would finally settle the question."

The same principle is enunciated in Turnpike Co. v. Bobb, 88 Ky., 226; Lawson on Rights, Remedies and Practice, volume 1, section 370; Wright v. Shelby R. R. Co., 16 B. Mon., 5, Lafin & Rand Power Co. v. Sinsheimer, 46 Md., 315; Central of Georgia R. Co. v. U. S. & N. R. Co. (Ala.), 39 Southern, 473; 144 Ala., 639; Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. O. S. L. R. Co., 23 Utah, 474; Parker v. Bethel Hotel Co., 96 Tenn., 252.

It follows, from what we have said above and from the foregoing authorities, that the trial court should not have permitted any inquiry into the motives or bona fides of the gas company in this proceeding, and a fortiori should have excluded all attempt to bring into question whether the venture of the Gas Company, in piping natural gas from Meade county to Louisville, would or not be profitable. With that the Franzells had nothing to do, nor did the Kentucky Heating Company, because, as above shown, the latter had no legal interest in the property that was involved in the condemnation proceedings. The right of the gas company to pipe the natural gas from its own wells in Meade county, and transport it to Louisville for sale, was a legitimate exercise of its property right, and this the Kentucky Heating Company could not successfully challenge, although it may be detrimental to its interest. If it be true, as said in the briefs, that the natural gas in the district of Meade county is contained in a common reservoir, underlying the whole area, of necessity it follows that the gas company's use of its wells tends to exhaust the wells of the heating company; and it is equally true, that the piping of gas by the heating company from its wells tends to exhaust the gas company's wells; and, undoubtedly, the operation of two gas companies in the same field (assuming that the quantity of gas is limited) will exhaust it sooner than one of them would. But each has the legal right to the legitimate use of the gas underlying its own property, and neither can complain of such use by the other. We have already held, in the cases of Commonwealth v. Trent, &c., 117 Ky., 34, and Calor Oil & Gas Co. v. McGehee, 117 Ky., 71, that one who illegitimately wastes or destroys the gas of a district may be punished under the criminal statutes of the State, and may also be enjoined from committing such wrongful acts; but all parties owning gas wells in the district are free to make any legitimate use of the gas they choose; and the fact that this legitimate use tends to exhaust the supply, gives the other owners of gas wells in the district no just ground of complaint. The court knows, as a part of the history of the country, that natural gas districts, after flourishing for a while, are frequently entirely exhausted, and that manufacturing and power plants established in the district, and dependent upon the use of the gas for fuel, are forced to move elsewhere. This may happen to the district under consideration; but, as said before, if this results from legitimate sales by the various owners to their customers, no one of them has a just ground of complaint. They have all enjoyed the property while it existed, and, when it is exhausted, they, of course, can no longer enjoy it. The right of the Calor Oil & Gas Company to transport its gas to Louisville and sell it, is as high as the right of the Kentucky Heating Company, and neither has a monopoly of the field.

The real issue in this case was much obscured by a consideration of the effect upon the heating company of the gas company's piping its gas to Louisville—a question which had no valid place in the procedure. If the gas company makes an illegitimate use of its wells or pipe line, and unlawfully attempts to destroy the gas fields by unnecessarily or fraudulently wasting the gas, the Kentucky Heating Company, as a joint owner in the common field, will have a remedy, both by injunction and by an action for damages, and undoubtedly the doers of the wrong will be subject to the penalty provided in the criminal statutes forbidding the wrong. But these are considerations which should not have been superimposed upon the simple issues as to (1) whether or not the Calor Oil & Gas Company had, under its charter, the right of eminent domain, and (2) what damage accrued to Franzell and wife by reason of its exercise in the manner sought in this case.

The question of the constitutionality of section 3766a, of the Kentucky Statutes, which gives the right of eminent domain to the owners of gas and oil wells for the purpose of piping their products to market, is not now an open one. The constitutionality of the act was recognized in the case of Paine's Guardian, &c. v. Calor Oil & Gas Co., 31 Ky. Law Rep., 754, and is clearly established by the reasoning of the opinions in Chesapeake Stone Co. v. Moreland, 104 S. W., 762, and Kirk-Christy Co. v. American Association, Incorporated, decided March 4, 1908.

The fact that the Louisville Gas Company owns a majority, or, even all, of the stock of the Calor Oil & Gas Company does not vacate or destroy the charter or corporate rights of the latter corporation. The Calor Oil & Gas Company retains its separate corporate entity, and has all the powers and rights which it would otherwise have if its stock was in the hands of a number of individual holders. (Louisville Gas. Co. v. Kaufman & Straus, 105 Ky., 158; City of Louisville v. Louisville Water Co., 26 Ky. Law Rep., 425; Bell, Sheriff v. City of Louisville, &c., decided January 21, 1908; Parker v. Bethel Hotel Co., 96 Tenn., 252; McTighe v. Macon Construction Co., 94 Ga., 306.)

It follows, from what we have said, that the purpose of the Louisville Gas Company in purchasing the stock of the Calor Oil & Gas Company, can not be inquired into in this collateral proceeding, and that it is immaterial here whether or not it is seeking to evade the provisions of section 190 of the Constitution, which requires pre-existing corporations to accept the provisions of the Constitution before they shall enjoy the benefits of future legislation. If either the Louisville Gas Company or the Calor Oil & Gas Company is violating its charter, that question may not be inquired into in a collateral proceeding, but, as said before, can only be challenged in a direct proceeding, instituted by the Commonwealth, through its proper officers. It is also immaterial, in this proceeding, whether or not the Calor Oil & Gas Company has obtained from the city of Louisville a franchise to distribute its gas to the public through its streets. It can not obtain its whole right of way at once. Some part of the proceeding must have priority in point of time. It is possible, of course, that the city may not grant the franchise at all, or the price for it may be so high that the venture will have to be abandoned. But this does not affect the Franzells, who, if this happens, will have their money for the right of way over their land, without the burden of a pipe line upon it. Nor is it material that appellant proposes to sell all of its gas to the Louisville Gas Company, and in this way distribute it to the citizens of Louisville. The statute gives the appellant the right to condemn a pipe line from its wells to the market for its produce. It contains no restrictions upon the manner of sale; it evidently being the belief of the Legislature that the public interest will be best subserved by affording the owner of the gas an opportunity to sell it upon the market.

This brings us to the question of the excessiveness of the verdict. The laying of the pipe line on the strip of land in question will be an additional servitude upon the right of way of the Louisville, Henderson & St. Louis Railroad Company, which runs through the Franzell farm. The railroad owns a perpetual and exclusive right of way through the farm, and the strip of ground in question here is within this easement, and is one thousand, four hundred and fifty feet long and twenty-seven feet wide. In this strip a pipe line ten inches in diameter is to be buried, and for this privilege the jury returned a verdict of four thousand dollars in damages. It can not be claimed that the laying of the pipe line injures in any way, or damages, the remainder of the farm. The railroad, as said before, has a perpetual and exclusive franchise of the whole strip for railroad purposes. The pipe is to be sunk along the railroad track. The commissioners appointed to assess the damages, in their report, fixed the damages at twenty-one dollars and seventy-five cents. The whole farm, it is said, is assessed for taxation at two thousand dollars; and yet, a jury assessed the damages for taking the strip, of which the owner of the fee—leaving out of view the bare possibility of a reverter—can never make any use, at four thousand dollars. This verdict is flagrantly excessive and out of all proportion to the real damages sustained. The question was not what the property was worth to the Calor Oil & Gas Company as a pipe line, and no consideration of its availability for this purpose should have been allowed to enter into the problem.

In the case of West Virginia, &c. R. Co. v. Gibson, &c., 94 Ky., 234, which was a condemnation proceeding on the part of the railroad, in establishing the measure of damage, the court said:

"The issue in such a case is not what the land is worth to the appellant, nor how profitably it may use it in its business; nor the cost and expense that it would be compelled to incur in obtaining other property or fitting it for its business, if it failed to obtain that particular property. (See Lewis on Eminent Domain, section 479, and authorities there cited.) The law should be given to the jury without including the evidential matters indicated; they are evidence only. But, in such cases, the jury should be admonished not to let those matters indicated as not evidence influence them."

In the case of Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 52 S. W., 108, the Supreme Court of Texas, in speaking of the condemnation of the right to put telegraph poles on the railroad right of way, said:

"Under no conceivable state of facts could the value of the use of the right of way to appellee (the telegraph company) be made the measure by which to determine the damages sustained by appellant."

To the same effect is V. & T. R. Co. v. Elliott, 5 Nev., 358; Sullivan v. LaFayette County, 61 Miss., 271; Union Depot, &c. Co. v. Brunswick, 31 Minn., 297.

The case of Madisonville, Hartford & Eastern Railroad Co. v. Ross, 31 Ky. Law Rep., 584, involved the condemnation of appellee's home for railroad purposes, and we there held that his measure of damages was the market value of the property taken, and that the inconvenience to the owner of moving or finding another home could not be allowed as an element of damages. On the subject of the measure of damages, we said:

"Lewis, in his work on Eminent Domain, 2 edition, section 463, the proper measure of damages. A fair equivalent for any entire tract is taken: 'This case presents but little difficulty, and, so far as we have observed, there is no difference in the authorities as to the proper measure of damages. A fair equivalent for any entire piece of property is its market value in money.'

"In section 478, it is said: 'In estimating the value of property taken for public use, it is the market value of the property which is to be considered. The market value of property is the price which it will bring when it is offered for sale by one who desires, but is not obliged to sell it, and is bought by one who is under no necessity of having it.'

"In the Cyclopedia of Law and Procedure, volume 15, page 685, the rule is thus stated: 'The measure of damages, when the whole of any particular piece of property is taken for a public use under the power of eminent domain, is the market value of it. Market value means the fair value as between one who wants to purchase and one who wants to sell, not what could be obtained for it under peculiar circumstances, when a greater than its fair price could be obtained, nor its speculative value, nor a value obtained from the necessity of another; its present value at a sale which a prudent owner would make if he had the power of election as to the time and terms.' * * *

"The Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 2 edition, volume 10, page 1151, on the subject in hand, says: 'In determining the compensation to be paid to the land owner for land taken under the power of eminent domain, there are many elements that must be considered. The principal rule, which is to be applied, as far as possible, is that, whenever property is taken, the fair market value of the property at the time of the taking should be paid for it. The market value of land is usually declared to be, not what the land would bring at a forced sale, but what it would bring in the hands of a prudent seller, at liberty to fix the time and conditions of sale. What property would bring at a fair public sale, where one party wanted to sell and another wanted to buy, may be taken as a criterion of its market value.' "

In the above case, it is true, the whole of appellee's property was taken, and, in the case at bar, only a strip of ground running across the farm is sought to be condemned. Ordinarily, in the case of an easement, such as a railroad right of way, or the easement involved here, the incidental question arises as to the damages accruing to the remainder of the property. In the case at bar, however, that question is eliminated by the peculiar situation. As the railroad owns the exclusive right of way across the farm, and the appellant is seeking to lay its pipe line along this easement, there can be no resulting damage to the remainder of the property of the Franzells. This being true, what we said in the case last cited above is pertinent to the establishment of the proper measure of damages here. We think the court should have told the jury, substantially, that the measure of damages for the taking of the strip of land in question was its fair market value; being that sum which the owner who desired to sell, but was not compelled to do so, would take for it in its present condition, and what a purchaser who desired to buy, but was not compelled to have it, would give for it under the circumstances.

What we have said in regard to the measure of damages in this case does not conflict with the principle enunciated in Boom Company v. Patterson, 98 U. S., 403. In that case, it was held that where the property sought to be condemned had a peculiar adaptability and an increased market value because of its suitability as sites for log booms, that this adaptability was to be considered in ascertaining the market value of the property. There is nothing in the case before us which affords grounds for the application of this principle. The land sought to be condemned is on the direct route from the Meade county gas wells to Louisville; but there was no special reason for desiring it more than any other direct route between the wells and the city.

For the reasons indicated, the judgment is affirmed, on the appeal of the Kentucky Heating Company, Nicholas Franzell and wife, and reversed on the appeal of the Calor Oil & Gas Company, for a new trial, under principles consistent with this opinion.

LOUISVILLE VENEER MILLS CO. v. CLEMONTs.

(Filed April 16, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Master and Servant—Injury to Servant—Contract of Settlement—Avoidance—Consideration—The mere fact that a person is in such financial distress or so hard pressed about money matters as that he would be willing to sell his property at a sacrifice or surrender a claim for an inadequate consideration, is not in itself sufficient to avoid a contract that its free from fraud, overreaching or misrepresentation.

2. Same—Appliances—Duty of Master to Furnish—A master is not required to furnish his employes the latest or the best appliances or those that are in general use. He is only charged with the duty of furnishing the servant with reasonably safe appliances, and where the servant is injured by the use of such appliances, the question as to whether they were reasonably safe is one for the jury.

Bennett H. Young and Marion W. Ripy for appellant.

Robert L. Page and Harry Robinson for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas Branch, Second Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, reversing.

Appellee, who was injured by a rip saw he was operating in the mill owned by appellant, brought this suit to recover damages. We are asked to reverse the judgment rendered in his behalf because of the assigned errors of the trial court in failing to give a peremptory instruction to find for appellant and in misinstructing the jury. The request for a peremptory instruction was rested upon two grounds, first, that appellee, in consideration of thirty-six dollars paid him, agreed to and did release it from liability for the injury sustained, and, second, because he failed to tender the money received before instituting the action to recover damages.

Appellee was injured on April 25, 1905, when four of his fingers were cut off by the rapidly revolving saw which came in contact with his hand. He was taken to the Deaconess Hospital, where he remained until May 1, 1905. On this date the physician in attendance discharged him from his care. On the day he was dismissed by the physician, but before he left the hospital, he was visited by Harry Kline, manager of appellant's mill, and Sherley Crawford, an attorney and agent of an indemnity company in which appellant was insured against loss on account of injury to its employees. These gentlemen went to see appellee for the purpose of settling with him any claim for damages he might have against the company. There is sharp conflict between the statements of appellee and those made by Kline and Crawford as to what took place at the interview between them that resulted in appellee signing the following paper: "For the sole consideration of the sum of thirty-six dollars this 1st day of May, 1905, received from Louisville Veneer Mills, I do hereby acknowledge full satisfaction in discharge of all claims accrued, or to accrue, in respect to all injuries or injurious results, direct or indirect, arising, or to arise, from an accident sustained by me on or about the 25th of April, 1905, while in the employment of the above."

Appellee testified that Crawford and Kline told him that he was entitled to twenty-five dollars accident insurance. That Mr. Kline, the manager of the company, had kept up his insurance. That the paper they wished him to sign was a receipt showing that he had received from the insurance company that amount of money. That he did not read the receipt, nor was it read to him, and he signed it upon their representations as to what it contained; and did not know that it purported to be a compromise or settlement of any claim he might have for damages against the company. That he relied entirely upon the statements made by them as to the contents of the paper, and would not have signed it had he known that it was a settlement of his claim.

Kline and Crawford say that the paper was read to appellee, and its contents fully explained to him. That he signed it with full knowledge of its purport and meaning. That it was understood eleven dollars was to be paid to the hospital for medical attention received by appellee, and twenty-five dollars was to be paid to him. That the amount due the hospital was paid, and twenty-five dollars given to appellee.

There was evidence conducing to show that appellee at the time he signed the paper was an intelligent, sensible man, although not well educated, and that he was not suffering from any mental or physical disorder that would render him incompetent to form an opinion about a matter of business, although he was somewhat distressed and disturbed about the condition of his financial affairs.

It will thus be seen that the issue upon the question as to what occurred when appellee signed the paper was purely one of fact. Upon this point the court instructed the jury as follows: "You will find for the defendant, Florence C. Kline (who was the owner of the appellant company), unless you believe from the evidence that the paper shown you as of the 1st day of May, 1905, was signed by plaintiff, William Clemonts, under the belief that the paper was a release or receipt for insurance allowed to him, and that such representations were made by the defendant's agent or an agent of the Aetna Insurance Co., that such was the fact, and Clemonts relying upon them, believing such representations, so signed the paper; or, unless you shall believe from the evidence that at the time Clemonts signed the paper he was in such distress of mind, or in such great financial distress as that he would make undue sacrifice of his rights under and by reason of such condition and surrender the same for an inadequate consideration, and such condition, if it existed, was known to the defendant or her agent, or the agent of the Aetna Insurance Co., and such agent, one or both of them, took advantage of such condition and under those circumstances and by reason thereof procured from Clemonts the paper which has been shown you; if you do believe these things that I have submitted to you under this instruction, under the evidence, then you will disregard such paper in your deliberations, and consider Clemonts not bound thereby."

If appellee's version of the manner in which the receipt was procured, and the representations made to him at the time by Kline and Crawford to induce him to sign it, were true, the paper was not binding upon him, and it was proper to submit this issue to the jury. Upon the question as to the validity of this receipt there was only one substantial issue, made by the evidence, and that one is fairly stated in the first paragraph of the instruction. So much of the instruction as reads: "Or unless you shall believe from the evidence that at the time Clemonts signed the paper he was in such distress of mind or in such great financial distress as that he would make undue sacrifice of his rights under and by reason of such condition and surrender the same for an inadequate consideration, and such condition, if it existed, was known to the defendant or her agent or the agent of the Aetna Insurance Co., and such agent, one or both of them, took advantage of such condition and under those circumstances and by reason thereof procured from Clemonts the paper which has been shown you," should be omitted from it on another trial of the case, if the evidence is the same as on this trial. There was not sufficient evidence to authorize the submission of the question as to whether appellee's distress of mind growing out of his financial condition or for other causes was taken advantage of. Aside from this, the mere fact that a person is in such financial distress, or so hard pressed about money matters, as that he would be willing to sell his property at a sacrifice or surrender a claim for an inadequate consideration, is not in, and of itself sufficient to avoid a contract that is free from fraud, overreaching or misrepresentation. It often happens that persons are obliged by their necessities to dispose of their property at a grossly inadequate price, and generally, when persons are so unfortunate as to be placed in this position, there is a purchaser waiting for just such an opportunity, ready and willing to take advantage of it. But, a purchase, under circumstances like these, will not be cancelled at the suit of the seller, merely because his poverty obliged him to sell and the purchaser took advantage of his situation to buy.

Crawford was the attorney and agent of the insurance company that had obligated itself to indemnify appellant against any loss it might sustain on account of injuries to its employees, including appellee. The money paid to appellee was the money of the insurance company. Appellee, before the institution of the action tendered to the general agent of the company the amount received by him, which the general agent refused to accept. A tender should, of course, be made to the person paying the money, to the person making the tender or to some person representing him. And as the insurance company had obligated itself to protect the appellant company from loss on account of injury sustained by Clemonts, and its agent on account of this obligation had paid the money to Clemonts, it was proper that the tender should have been made to the general agent of the company. When the general agent of the company refused to accept the amount tendered, it was paid into court by appellee. It was necessary to enable appellee to maintain an action that he should pay, or offer to pay, the money he had received, and in this respect he did all under the circumstances he could do.

There was evidence conducing to show that the rip saw plaintiff was working with should have been protected by a guard and provided with what is called a "spreader," and that these implements were generally used in operating similar machinery. On the other hand, there was testimony to the effect that neither a guard nor a spreader was necessary, and that it was not usual to have them attached to saws like the one plaintiff was injured by. With the evidence in this condition, the court gave to the jury instruction No. 3, reading as follows: "The court instructs the jury that it was the duty of the defendant company to have and maintain the rip saw in the evidence referred to in a condition reasonably safe for use, and to adopt and provide such appliances as would make it reasonably safe for use by the operator; and if you believe from the evidence that there were any such appliances in general use at the time the injury to plaintiff occurred, if it did occur, and that such appliances were known to the defendant, or its agents in charge of its factory, and charged by defendant with the duty of supervising its machinery, or could have been known by the exercise of ordinary care, and by reason of such failure upon their part, if there was any, the plaintiff sustained the injuries alleged, in that event the law is for the plaintiff, and the jury should so find; unless, as in the other case stated in the second instruction, the jury should be of the opinion and believe from the evidence that the plaintiff failed to exercise ordinary care for his own safety, and such failure on his part so far contributed to his injury but that for such failure he would not have been injured, in which latter event the law is for the defendant, and you should so find."

Appellant objects to so much of the instruction as reads: "And if you shall believe from the evidence that there were any such appliances in general use at the time that the injury to plaintiff occurred, if it did so occur, and that such appliances were known to the defendant or its agent in charge of its factory, and charged by defendant with the duty of supervising this machinery, or could have been known by the exercise of ordinary care."

In our opinion this objection is well taken. In cases of this character the master is not required to furnish the latest appliances, or the best appliances, or appliances that are in general use. He is only charged with the duty of furnishing the servant with reasonably safe appliances. Whether the appliances furnished are reasonably safe or not is a question of fact to be determined by the jury from the evidence. And to the end that the jury may intelligibly consider and dispose of this question, it is competent for the parties to show, by evidence, the character of appliances furnished, as well as the character of appliances in general use in similar employments, so that the jury may determine whether or not the appliances furnished are reasonably safe. This identical question was before this court in the case of Dow Wire Works Co. v. Morgan, 29 Ky. Law Rep., 854, in which an instruction similar to the one being considered was condemned; and it was said that: "The court should have told the jury that it was the duty of appellant to have and maintain the rip saw in a reasonably safe condition to work with, and to provide it with such appliances as would make it reasonably safe for use by the operator."

The same rule was announced in Louisville & Atlantic R. Co. v. Wilson, 30 Ky. Law Rep., 734, in which it was said: "The rule in this State, and the one generally prevailing, is that while the master is not required to furnish the servant with absolutely safe or faultless machinery, or provide the latest or most modern appliances, he is required to furnish reasonably safe appliances and reasonably safe places for the use of the servant." (New Galt House Co. v. Chapman, 30 Ky. Law Rep., 692.)

110 MOSELEY'S ADM'R V. BLACK DIAMOND COAL & MIN. CO.

The rule laid down in these cases has been approved in many others, and it is prejudicial error to go outside of it in instructions in cases like this.

For the errors mentioned in the instructions, the case must be reversed, with directions for a new trial, and it is so ordered.

MOSELEY'S ADM'R v. BLACK DIAMOND COAL & MINING CO.

(Filed April 16, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Master and Servant—Dangerous Premises—Mining Shafts—Statutory Provisions—Gates Required—Under Kentucky Statutes, section 2731, providing that "at every mine operated by a shaft there shall be provided an approved safety catch, and a sufficient cover overhead, on all cages used for lowering and hoisting persons, and at the top of every shaft a safety gate shall be provided, and an adequate brake attached to every drum or machine used in raising or lowering persons in all shafts and slopes," the statutory duty is not complied with by furnishing gates that can not be closed. The gates contemplated are such as will either automatically close, or can easily be closed by persons using them.

2. Same—Death of Servant—Negligence of Master—Liability—In an action against a mining company for causing the death of an employe by falling into a shaft which the statute requires should be provided with safety gates the company was guilty of negligence in permitting coal and other material to be placed and accumulate around the gates in such manner as to prevent them from being closed, and a failure to provide such gates for the safety of employes and other persons rightfully using the premises can not be neglected without subjecting the owner to liability for damages thereby caused.

3. Same—Evidence—Statement of Mining Boss—Competency—In an action against a mining company for damages for negligently causing the death of an employe, evidence of a statement made by the mine boss some time after the accident, that he had told the deceased to go to the shaft for instructions, was incompetent, not being a part of the res gestae.

4. Defective Premises—Knowledge of Servant—Where an injury results in death and the action is brought by the personal representative of the servant, it is not necessary to a recovery to show that the deceased knew, or might by ordinary care have discovered, the dangerous or defective condition of the premises.

S. R. Crewdson for appellant.

Gordon, Gordon & Cox and Forcht & Field for appellee.

Appeal from Muhlenberg Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, reversing.

James Moseley was employed as night fireman and engineer by the appellee company. The engine was situated some sixty feet from the mouth of a shaft sunk from the top of the ground to the coal stratum, about one hundred feet below the surface. The opening of this shaft on the surface of the ground was sixteen by sixteen feet. It was divided into two compartments, in each of which was a cage or elevator used for hoisting and lowering the employes and material from and into the mines. When a person in the bottom of the shaft desired the elevator to be lowered or hoisted, he could notify the engineer by blowing a whistle which could be heard by the engineer. Moseley was not the regular engineer or fireman, and was only temporarily in charge of the engine on the night he met his death. On that night, a party of young people had gone down into the mine, in company with Tilden Bridges, who was one of the bosses. After the party went down in the shaft, the regular engineer went off duty, leaving Moseley alone in charge of the engine. A short time after this, Bridges, who was at the bottom of the shaft, blew the whistle to notify the engineer to hoist the elevator, and at this moment, or immediately afterwards, Moseley fell into the shaft from the top, landing in the bottom, fatally injured. He never recovered consciousness, nor made any statement as to how the accident happened.

In this action by his personal representative to recover damages for his death, the trial judge, at the conclusion of the evidence for appellant, who was plaintiff below, directed the jury to return a verdict for appellee. The correctness of this ruling depends upon the question whether or not there was any evidence conducing to show that Moseley's death was caused by the negligence or carelessness of the appellee company.

Section 2731, of the Kentucky Statutes, provides in part: "And at every mine operated by a shaft there shall be provided an approved safety catch, and a sufficient cover overhead, on all cages used for lowering and hoisting persons, and at the top of every shaft a safety gate shall be provided, and an adequate brake shall be attached to every drum or machine used in lowering or raising persons in all shafts and slopes."

The appellee company partially complied with this statute by enclosing the opening or mouth of the shaft with a fence, provided with gates, through which persons desiring to go in or come out of the shaft might enter, but there was evidence tending to show that the gates were constantly left open, and could not be closed on account of coal and other material that had accumulated and was allowed to remain about the gates. The statutory duty imposed upon mine owners is not complied with by furnishing gates that can not be closed. The company was guilty of negligence in permitting coal and other material to be placed and accumulate around these gates in such a manner as to prevent them from being closed. The safety gates contemplated by the statute are gates so arranged that they will either automatically close themselves when opened, or can easily be closed by persons using them. To provide a gate and then permit it to be and remain in such a condition, for any cause, that it can not be closed, is the same as if no gate had been provided or maintained. The Legislature deemed the establishment and maintenance of safety gates of sufficient importance to make it the mandatory duty of mine owners to provide them for the safety of the employes, and to prevent persons rightfully using the premises from falling into the mine shaft, and this statutory duty can not be neglected or disobeyed without subjecting the owner to liability for damages suffered by persons rightfully using the premises. (Andricus v. The Pineville Coal Co., 28 Ky. Law Rep., 704.) We may, therefore, properly treat this case as if the appellee company had not provided any safety gates at all. Accepting this view as correct, the question remains—was the failure of the company to perform this statutory duty such negligence as would authorize a recovery in this case? Upon this point, the argument is made in behalf of the company that, although it may have been negligent in failing to provide safety gates, yet its negligence in this respect does not render it liable in damages for the death of Moseley, because his duties as engineer and fireman did not require him to leave the engine room, or go to the shaft. It is said that, in going to the shaft, he was not in the performance of any duty owing to the company, or acting within the scope of his employment. That if he had remained at the place where his duties required him to be, he would not have fallen into the shaft or have been injured by its negligence in failing to properly protect the opening. Why Moseley went to the shaft does not appear in the record. Appellee offered to prove that Bridges, the mine boss, said, sometime after the accident, that he told Moseley when the whistle was sounded, he should go to the shaft to receive instructions. This offered evidence was properly excluded by the court. Direct evidence by any person who heard Bridges so instruct or direct Moseley would be competent, but the statements made by Bridges after the accident were not a part of the res gestae, and could not be used as evidence against the company. But, aside from the failure of proof upon this point, Moseley's duties as engineer and fireman placed him in charge of all the machinery connected with the lowering and hoisting of the elevators by the engine. It was as much a part of his duties to see that the pulleys and cables attached to the elevators and by which they were raised and lowered, were in working order and good condition, as it was to see that the fires in the boilers were kept up, or that a sufficient supply of water was on hand, or that the machinery directly attached to the engine was in proper condition. It can not be said that his duties were confined exclusively to the engine house, or that he had no right to go about the shaft where the elevators operated by the engine were located. He was not a trespasser, but was rightfully on the premises. Nor was he outside the fair line of his duties in going to the shaft. The rule laid down in the line of cases holding that a servant can not recover for injuries sustained by him acting outside of the line of his duties and going in or about places where his employment does not require him to be or go, is not applicable to the facts of this case. It has been often held that the duty imposed upon the master of furnishing for the use of the servant reasonably safe premises is limited to those premises where the servant, in the performance of the duties for which he is engaged requires him to labor, and does not extend to other parts of the establishment, where the servant is not obliged to be or go. Thus, in Mitchell & Tranter Co. v. Ehmett, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1788, it was held that the helper of a brick-layer could not recover for injuries sustained by falling through a roof that was unsafe, and this upon the ground that, in getting upon the roof, the servant was a volunteer and the master owed him no duty to keep the roof in safe condition, and its failure to do so was not, as to him, actionable negligence. And, in L. & N. R. Co. v. Hocker, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 982, it was held that Hocker, an employe of the company, who was injured by a train of cars, could not recover because he was at a place where his duties did not require him to be, and the company did not owe him any duty, except to avoid injuring him after his perilous condition was discovered.

Whether or not the company, in failing to maintain sufficient gates, would be guilty of actionable negligence as to any other of its employes who had the right to be upon and about its premises in the night time, although his specific duties may not have called him to the shaft, if he had fallen into it, we express no opinion. It is not necessary, under the facts of this case, in order to fix liability on the appellee, that the doctrine of responsibility for a failure to perform a statutory duty intended for the protection of human life, should be extended to embrace employes whose duties did not require them to go about the shaft.

The night was very dark, and there was evidence showing that the premises about the shaft were not lighted. To fall into the shaft, it was necessary that Moseley should have walked through the open gate or have climbed the fence that surrounded the shaft at other places than where an opening was left for the gates. Although there is no evidence to show whether Moseley walked through the opening or climbed over the fence, it is fair to assume that he did not do the latter, and that, when he went to the shaft, he walked through the open gate. We are aware of the rule laid down by this court in Hughes v. C. N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co., 91 Ky., 526, and Wintuska's Admr. v. L. & N. R. Co., 14 Ky. Law Rep., 579, and Visman v. Southern Ry. Co., 28 Ky. Law Rep., 429, to the effect that, in order to recover damages against the master, the servant must produce some evidence conducing to show that it was caused by the negligence of the master or some one having authority to represent him. That negligence will not be presumed. And where an injury or accident may have happened in two or more ways, in one of which the master would be liable, and the other not, and the presumptions as to how the injury or accident happened are equal, a recovery will be denied. But here, with the exception of the gates, the opening in the shaft was enclosed by a fence, and it is not probable or reasonable that the deceased, who was in his right mind and a sensible man, would have climbed a fence and deliberately precipitated himself into a hole one hundred feet deep. There is no suspicion in the record that Moseley desired to commit suicide, or that he was laboring under any mental disease; and the only reasonable explanation of the manner in which he came to his death is that he walked through the open gate and fell into the open shaft. (L. & N. R. Co. v. Mulfinger, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 3.)

In this connection it is also well to keep in mind that the rule that the servant before he can recover for injuries sustained by defective appliances or premises must show that he did not know, or could not have known of the dangerous or defective condition of the place or appliances where he is at work, has no application to a case like this. When the injury results in death, and the action is brought by the personal representative of the servant, it is not necessary to a recovery to show that the deceased knew, or might by the exercise of ordinary care have discovered, the dangerous or defective condition of the premises. (Brown v. C. N. O. & T. P. R. Co., 29 Ky. Law Rep., 146; Willie v. East Tennessee Coal Co., 27 Ky. Law Rep., 335; Lexington & Carter County Mining Co. v. Stephens, 104 Ky., 502; Tanner v. W. A. Wickliffe Coal Co., 32 Ky. Law Rep., ante.)

Nor, in view of the darkness of the night and the failure to have the premises lighted, can it be said that the shaft into which Moseley fell was so obviously dangerous, or the hazard in going about it so apparent, that a person of ordinary prudence would not incur the risk. Hence, the line of cases like Wilson v. Chess & Wymond Co., 117 Ky., 567; McCormack Harvester Co. v. Liter, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 2154; Duncan v. Gernert Bros. Lumber Co., 27 Ky. Law Rep., 1039; Shemwell v. Owensboro & Nashville Ry. Co., 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1671; are not pertinent.

We are of the opinion that there was evidence sufficient to authorize a submission of the case to the jury, and the judgment is reversed, with directions to grant a new trial, in conformity with this opinion.

SEBREE, &c. v. SEBREE.

(Filed April 17, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Judgments—Correction of After Becoming Final—(30 Ky. Law Rep., 670, for authority to maintain this action.) It appearing that appellee did not agree to the disposition of the attached tobacco, or authorize her attorney to act for her, its disposition being the result of a mistake on the part of her attorney, as appellant had parted with nothing to get the tobacco, he must be required to restore the proceeds of it to appellee.

W. A. Lee for appellants.

Charles Strother for appellee.

Appeal from Owen Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice O'Rear, affirming.

Appellee sued her husband, J. L. Sebree for divorce and alimony. She procured an attachment against his property which was levied upon his half interest in a crop of tobacco. Subsequently appellant Taylor caused an execution against J. L. Sebree to be levied upon the same interest, but subject to the attachment. Before judgment in the action for divorce appellee and J. L. Sebree effected a compromise of their property rights, in which it was agreed that the tobacco levied upon was to be applied first to the payment of certain costs of the action, and the remainder to be applied upon such debts as both the parties were bound upon. But instead of this being done, by mistake of appellee's counsel probably, it was recited in an agreement, signed by him, that the proceeds of the tobacco, after paying the costs alluded to, were to be applied to the debt owing to appellant Taylor by J. L. Sebree, but without the knowledge of appellee. When she learned of it, after the judgment of the court confirming it had become final, she brought this suit to correct that part of the judgment. On a former appeal, it was held that her action could be maintained. (30 Ky. Law Rep., 670.) The facts are, so the chancellor found, and we concur, that appellee did not authorize the disposition made of the tobacco proceeds by the agreement signed by her attorney. Nor was there consideration for it. The whole thing was a mishap, to say the least of it, which she was ignorant of at the time, and which she disavowed as soon as she learned of it. Appellant Taylor, through his representative in the transaction, had full notice of the error, and as he has parted with nothing, he should restore what he got. The circuit court so adjudged, which is affirmed.

N. C. & ST. L. RY. CO., &c. v. BEAN'S EX'OR.

(Filed April 17, 1908—To be reported.)

Appeals—Replevied—Right of Appeal—A defendant in a judgment may prosecute an appeal from it, although he may have replevied it or paid it.

Wheeler, Hughes & Berry for appellants.

Hendrick & Miller for appellee.

Appeal from Marshall Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice O'Rear, overruling motion.

Appellee recovered a judgment for money against appellants. Without superseding the judgment, appellants have prosecuted this appeal.

Appellee having caused an execution to issue upon the judgment and to be levied upon certain of appellants' property, the latter replevied the judgment by executing bond as authorized by sections 1667-1669, Kentucky Statutes. The judgment was replevied after the appeal was granted and transcript filed in this court.

Appellee has filed an answer in bar of the appeal, based upon section 757 of the Civil Code, which provides that the appeal shall be dismissed if the appellants' right to further prosecute it had ceased. He contends that, as the Code provides for a stay of proceedings upon a judgment appealed from by supersedeas only (section 747, Civil Code), and as the effect of the replevy is to merge the judgment, it is a voluntary waiver by appellant of its right to appeal, as holding otherwise would be a stay of a judgment on appeal by replevy in addition to supersedeas. A defendant in a judgment may prosecute an appeal from it, although he may have paid it. (Elbridge v. Wilson, 4 Ky. Law Rep., 982; Figg v. Richardson, 5 Ky. Law Rep., 510; Shannon v. Paget, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 1281; Pike-Morgan v. Wathen, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1264; Kellar v. Williams, 10 Bush, 216.)

The appeal does not affect the judgment until it is reversed. Hence, if the appellant were unable to give the supersedeas bond required by the Code in order to obtain a stay of the execution, pending the appeal, he would be under the necessity of suffering his property to be seized and sold by the sheriff, with added costs and possible sacrifices. Yet, in that event, his right of appeal would not be affected, as otherwise the right of appeal would be valuable only to the rich, who could make the supersedeas bond, and to the very poor who were execution proof. What one may be compelled to do, he may do without compulsion, without impairing his legal rights. So it is held, if he pays off the judgment, he may, nevertheless, prosecute an appeal from it, and, if it is reversed, may have restitution of what he has paid, with interest.

The statute allows any judgment for money (except in certain instances, not here involved) to be stayed for three months by replevy. This is not only a privilege, but it is a legal right of the defendant, as much as it is the right of the plaintiff, to have an execution against the defendant's property issue upon the judgment. The judgment is subject to that right of the defendant. The latter may appeal from it if the amount gives the Appellate Court jurisdiction. That is also an incident of the law which gives the judgment. There is no prohibition upon the right of appeal, either because the defendant pays off the judgment, or replevies it. Nor is there perceived any sound reason why there should be a distinction in favor of those who pay as against those who replevy. It is said, for appellee, that the execution of the replevin bond merges the judgment. And so it does. Likewise, the payment satisfies it. A judgment merged into a replevin bond is no more beyond the corrective process of the Appellate Court than one discharged by payment. It is argued, by way of illustration that the execution of a replevin bond by one of the judgment debtors would operate to discharge a surety upon the debt not signing the bond, or to discharge a lien securing the debt. So would the payment of the judgment. We think the analogy is clear and the principle just that the replevy and payment alike do not affect the defendant's right of appeal. (Kellar v. Williams, 10 Bush, 216.)

The demurrer to the answer of appellee is sustained, and his motion to dismiss the appeal is overruled.

CITY OF LEXINGTON v. WALBY, &c.

(Filed April 17, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Street Improvements—Liability of Property Owner—Law in Force at Time the Work Was Done—The liability of a land owner for a street improvement must be determined by the law in force at the time the work was done. The Legislature may change the rule as to how the liability of the property owner may be created, but the new rule can only operate as to work after the legislation is had.

Allen & Duncan for appellant.

Forman & Forman, Don Forman and James H. Mulligan for appellees.

Appeal from Fayette Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, affirming.

By the act April 13, 1890, the general council of the City of Lexington was authorized to provide by ordinance for the construction and reconstruction of the streets of the city, the cost to be paid in either of two ways: (1) The council might levy a special tax on the abutting property sufficient to pay two thirds of it; or, (2) "at the request of parties liable for special taxes," a tax might be levied for the entire cost of construction, divided into ten annual payments, bonds of the city to be issued for the amount, the property owners to pay the entire cost in ten annual payments, and the city to pay the interest on the bonds. (Lexington v. Bowman, 119 Ky., 840.) Under this act, the general council of the city passed an ordinance No. 196 approved February 24, 1892, directing that South Broadway street from the line of Main street to the city limits be constructed with brick; the street to be improved by blocks. One of these blocks ran from the center line of Water street to the center line of High street. A part of this block was a steep ascent. The original plans and specifications for that portion of the street provided that a strip ten feet wide on each side of the street railway tracks should be constructed of crushed granite, six inches in depth after being rolled. The excavating and other work to be done under the surface was the same on these strips as on other parts of the street, the only difference being that instead of putting on brick on top they were to put on six inches of crushed granite after it was rolled. The reason for using the crushed granite at this point was to furnish a better foot way for horses as the ascent was steep. After the contract had been let for the work, opposition developed among the property owners against the use of the granite on these strips, on the ground that it would be washed away by rains and would not be durable. Finally the Mayor, the city engineer and the improvement committee of the general council took up the matter, and, the contractor agreeing, it was ordered that the entire street should be paved with brick. No property owner objected to the brick being used, and the contractor then went on and did the work according to the contract as thus modified. When the work was completed no action had been taken by the council in regard to the substitution of brick for granite on these two strips ten feet wide; and the council with a view of ratifying what its committee had done, adopted the following ordinance No. 288 approved December 15, 1892:

"That section one of ordinance No. 196, approved February 24, 1892, and entitled 'An ordinance to cause the roadway of South Broadway from the center line of its intersection with Main street to the line of its Intersection with the city limits to be reconstructed with brick', be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting after the words 'in accordance with the profiles, plans, specifications and estimates of cost of the city surveyor for the reconstruction of said street,' the following, to-wit: 'except that the portion of the said street ten feet in width on each side of the electric railway between the south side of Vine street and station 15 shall be constructed and paved with brick in all respects as is provided with regard to the other portions of said railway, instead of with crushed granite, as provided in said specifications.'

"Section 2. That the mayor and Joint Improvement Committee are hereby authorized to enter into a contract with the Standard Construction Company, modifying the terms of the contract made with said company under joint resolution No. 83, so as to provide for the construction of said portion of said street as herein required: Provided, That the same shall be done at not exceeding the sum of $2.25 per square yard: And, provided further, That said Standard Construction Company shall agree to indemnify the city against any inability to collect from the abutting property holders the special tax levied for the reconstruction of said street so far as such inability may result from this amendment."

After this, by an ordinance approved January 31, 1893, the council accepted the work.

By an ordinance approved March 20, 1893, the cost of the improvement was apportioned among the property owners. This ordinance, as a basis for its action, contains the following recital:

"Whereas, the owners of the property fronting on said street liable for the cost and expense of said improvement, did petition the general council of the city of Lexington to have said improvements of said street with brick made on the ten-year plan, as provided for in the amendment to the city charter, as aforesaid, and having obligated themselves to pay their respective assessments for said improvements, and requested the general council to lend them the credit of the city for a period not exceeding ten years for an amount sufficient to pay the entire cost of the improvement, and said request being granted, therefore be it ordained, &c."

The third section of the ordinance is in these words:

"Section 3. The entire cost and expense of reconstructing said street shall be paid for on the ten-year plan by the property holders on said street, who have requested and been granted the credit of the city in ten equal annual payments, payable one-tenth each year, and which is so levied on the assessed value of the property made liable for said improvement. The first payment of one-tenth shall be due and payable on the first day of July, 1893, and the other payments of one-tenth shall be due and payable respectively on the same day of each year thereafter until said tax shall be paid in full."

By another ordinance, approved March 20, 1893, the general council directed the bonds of the city to be issued for the cost of the improvement, this ordinance containing also a preamble as to the request of the property owners similar to that quoted above. William Walby owned a lot fronting on the block referred to. On October 31, 1898, he filed a petition in the Fayette Circuit Court against the city of Lexington and the delinquent tax collector, in which he alleged that the change had been made in the construction of the street, as above stated, in that the two strips ten feet wide had been surfaced with brick and not with crushed granite; that the change had been made without authority, and that the work of construction had not been done as provided by the contract. He also alleged that the tax collector was about to sell the tax bills for an installment of the tax. He prayed and obtained an injunction restraining further proceedings. The city filed an answer, and after this Walby died. The action was revived in the name of his representatives. To the answer and counterclaim of the city, in which it prayed the court to enforce its taxes, they filed a reply pleading limitation, on the ground that Walby had not requested that the taxes be paid on the ten-year plan. The city pleaded that he had so requested in writing, but that the writing was lost. The city was unable to produce the writing, or to produce any proof that Walby had signed such writing, and the case being submitted, the court perpetuated the injunction. The city appeals.

An agreement as to the facts was filed in the action which sets out the facts above stated and conclusions as follows:

"It is further agreed that the contract with the Standard Construction Company was fully and fairly performed in every particular according to the original specifications except as to the two ten-foot strips above mentioned. The excavation, grading, curbing, concrete foundation from curb to curb, sewer, catch basin, surfacing with the specified brick, &c., were constructed in accordance with the terms of the company's contract.

"The cost of the work from Water street to High street was $6,150. The cost of the work, as required by the contract under the original specifications, excluding the two ten-foot strips to be surfaced with crushed granite was $5,352; the cost of surfacing these ten-foot strips with brick was $798, and the cost of surfacing these strips with crushed granite would have been $565.25. The difference between the cost of completing the street with brick instead of with crushed granite was $232.75.

"No protest or complaint was made to the general council or officers of the city by petition or by legal proceedings, or otherwise, by any of the property owners affected by the change against the use of brick instead of crushed granite, nor was any protest or complaint made at the time or during the progress of the work by any one as to the power of the Mayor, City Surveyor and Joint Improvement Committee of the General Council who authorized the change in the specifications to order such change, nor as to the authority of the General Council to pass ordinance 288, nor as to the validity of that ordinance or the validity of the tax levied to pay for the cost of the work until after the work had been completed, and after the tax was levied, the bonds issued and the contractors were paid."

In Henderson v. Lambert, 14 Bush, 24, the contractor had not constructed the space occupied by the railroad tracks as required by the contract. In this condition of things the council accepted the work as done according to the contract. It was held that there is no common law liability upon lot owners to pay for the improvement of an adjacent street; that their liability is created by statute, and that there is no liability where the statute is not complied with. The rule laid down in this case was in effect laid down in Hydes v. Joyes, 4 Bush, 466; Murphy v. Louisville, 9 Bush, 189; Murray v. Tucker, 10 Bush, 241. It has been followed by the court in a number of subsequent cases. Appellant relies on Gleason v. Barnett, 106 Ky., 125; Richardson v. Mehler, 111 Ky., 408; Barbour Asphalt Co. v. Gaar, 115 Ky., 334; Orth v. Park, 117 Ky., 779; Lindsay v. Brawner, 97 S. W., 1. But these cases all rest upon provisions of the Kentucky Statutes enacted by the Legislature for the purpose of changing the rule declared in the former cases. The court has not departed from the former cases in any manner except as the Legislature has, by statute, changed the rule. The work in the case at bar was done in the year 1892, and before the passage of the statute referred to. The liability of the land owner must be determined by the law in force at the time the work was done; for if there was then no liability on the part of the land owner the Legislature could not, by a subsequent statute, make his property liable for the cost of the work which had already been done. The Legislature may change the rule as to how the liability of the property owner may be created, but the new rule can only operate as to work done after the legislation is had. For the same reason the council could not, by an ordinance enacted after the work had been done, impose a liability upon the property owner for the work which had thus been done. No work was done under the ordinance of the council passed for the purpose of curing the irregularity. When the council passed this ordinance and then, at a subsequent meeting, accepted the work, the legal effect of the transaction was the same as it would have been if the work had been accepted without any new ordinance having been passed. What the council could not do directly, it could not do indirectly under the form of a new ordinance.

We, therefore, conclude that as the contract was not complied with, and the street was not made as required by the contract, the property owner was not liable for the cost of the improvement, and that the circuit court properly dismissed the petition under the well-settled rule obtaining in this State before the recent legislation on the subject, which has been had since this work was done. This conclusion makes it unnecessary for us to consider other questions raised on the appeal. As no lien had been created on Walby's property by the proceedings, a lien upon it could not be created by what subsequently occurred.

Judgment affirmed.

OCHSNER v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed April 17, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Witnesses—Impeachment—Party Defendant—Previous Conviction of Felony—Defendant Required to Testify—Under section 597, Criminal Code, providing that a witness may be impeached "by the examination of a witness, or record of a judgment that he had been convicted of a felony," where a party to a felony offers himself as a witness he is subject to the same rules as any other witness, and for the purpose of impeaching his testimony he may be required to testify that he had previously been convicted of a felony.

2. Evidence—Incompetency—Failure to Save Exception—Waiver—The failure of the accused, or his counsel, to save an exception, where one is necessary, in order to present the question for review on appeal, is deemed in law, as it is in fact, a waiver of the question.

3. Joint Indictment—Dismissal as to Same—Competency as Witness—Accomplices—On the trial of one indicted with two others for a felony, where before the beginning of the trial the indictment was dismissed as to the other two, they are not accomplices of the defendant on trial, in the meaning of section 241, of the Criminal Code.

H. D. Gregory for appellant.

James Breathitt and Theo. B. Blakey for appellee.

Appeal from Kenton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice O'Rear, affirming.

Appellant was convicted of the crime of robbery. His punishment was fixed at confinement in the penitentiary for the term of ten years. On his appeal he relies on three principal alleged errors: One because the court permitted the Commonwealth to require the appellant, while on the witness stand, to testify in detail as to the facts of a former conviction of a felony over the objection of the defendant.

The other, because the court erred in failing to instruct the jury that they should only consider the fact of his former conviction as affecting his credibility as a witness, and, third, "because the court erred in failing to instruct the jury that the evidence of the Commonwealth's witnesses, Gausepohl and Bush, should not be considered unless corroborated by other testimony connecting defendant with the crime." As to the first assignment: Appellant offered himself as a witness in his own behalf. On cross-examination he was asked if he had not previously been convicted of a felony. He admitted that he had been. He was then asked if he had not been charged in that matter with holding up Joe Rehling, in Austinburg, and taking from him $80.50. The proceedings from this point were as follows:

"Counsel for defendant: I now move that what Mr. Galvin has stated before the jury be excluded."

"The court: He has not said anything except to ask a question."

"Witness: Judge, your Honor, I don't like to answer anything that is done past or any thing like that. I was guilty of that one, yes, sir."

The complaint is that by requiring the defendant to answer the questions concerning the particular transactions as to his former conviction of a felony the court allowed the prosecution to go too far in that matter. Section 151, Criminal Code, adopts the provisions of the Civil Code of Practice in criminal cases touching the production of evidence except as limited in the former. By section 597, Civil Code, a witness may be impeached in four ways: (1) By contradictory evidence; (2) by showing that he had made statements different from his present testimony; (3) by evidence that his general reputation for untruthfulness or immorality renders him unworthy of belief, and (4) by showing "by the examination of a witness, or record of a judgment, that he had been convicted of felony." The last ground is in itself an exception to the general rule that evidence of particular wrongful acts is inadmissible to impeach a witness. The party desiring to impeach an adversary witness may resort to two methods under the last ground: One, by proving the fact of a former conviction of felony by any witness (which of course includes the witness to be impeached) or the other by the production of the record containing the judgment of conviction. If the latter had been resorted to the indictment, verdict and judgment of conviction would have been admissible. In that event, the record would have disclosed the identical facts detailed in the foregoing quotation from appellant's testimony. That which could have been shown by the record it was equally competent to show by parol, under section 597, Civil Code. That a party is himself the witness to be impeached makes no difference, as when he offers himself as a witness he is subject to the same rules as any other witness.

The trial court did not admonish the jury that the sole effect they could give the impeaching evidence was such bearing as it might have upon the credibility of the witness. That the defendant was entitled to, as otherwise it might have been received by the jury as substantive evidence of his guilt of the principal charge. (Fueston v. Commonwealth, 91 Ky., 230.) It is never permissible to prove that one on trial charged with a particular offense has committed some other offense, except to show motive, or where it is part of the res gestae, unless the defendant has offered himself as a witness, when he may be impeached by evidence of his having been convicted of another crime that is a felony. (Section 954, Roberson's Crim. Law; Welsch v. Commonwealth, 111 Ky., 530; Powers v. Commonwealth, 110 Ky., 386; Howard v. Commonwealth, 110 Ky., 356; Pennington v. Commonwealth, 21 Ky. Law Rep., 406.) But in this case the defendant did not request the court to admonish the jury as to the proper effect to be given the evidence objected to, nor did he except to the ruling of the court on the subject. His objection to the evidence, as we have indicated, was not well taken; it was admissible for a particular purpose. When received, the court should have admonished the jury as to its legal effect. Either party may except to any decision of the court by which his substantial rights are prejudiced except challenges to the penal and for cause, upon motion to set aside an indictment, and upon motions for new trial. (Sections 280-281; Criminal Code.) All exceptions at the trial must be shown upon the record by bill of exceptions. (Section 282, Criminal Code.) A party can not rely for reversal upon an erroneous decision or ruling unless there was an exception to it at the time. (Branson v. Commonwealth, 92 Ky., 330.) While it is true that a distinction has been recognized between other rulings and the giving of instructions to the jury, as to the latter it being held that it is the duty of the court to give the whole law of the case whether requested to do so or not, and that an exception is not necessary to save the question of erroneous instructions. (Buckles v. Commonwealth, 113 Ky., 795; Thompson v. Commonwealth, 28 Ky. Law Rep., 1137; Cook v. Commonwealth, 10 Ky. Law Rep., 222; Trimble v. Commonwealth, 78 Ky., 176; Heilman v. Commonwealth, 84 Ky., 157), and while it is also true that all instructions to the jury must be in writing (section 225, Criminal Code), an admonition or instruction limiting the effect of testimony is not within the definition of instruction as used in that section of the Code, and in the cases cited. There may arise frequent occasions during the trial when the court should admonish the jury concerning their duty, as for example, when evidence tentatively or erroneously admitted was finally withdrawn from the jury by the court. In that event a simple admonition to disregard the evidence would be sufficient, though of course there could be no objection if it was in writing. Or, if in the course of argument, counsel transcended his privilege and went out of the record, a parol admonition to the jury by the court would be as effective as if in writing, although it in one sense would be an instruction to the jury concerning the law of the case. But it is not necessary to multiply examples. The purpose of this opinion is to define the practice on this subject. It has been held a number of times that such admonition or instruction limiting the effect of evidence was necessary, and that its omission was prejudicial error. (Fueston v. Commonwealth, 91 Ky., 230; Collins v. Commonwealth, 15 Ky. Law Rep., 691; Jones v. Commonwealth, 22 Ky. Law Rep., 355; Ashcroft v. Commonwealth, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 488.) Yet the question here decided does not seem to have been presented before. It arises now upon a proper application of the authorities above, namely that instructions to the jury must be in writing, and that evidence of the character just discussed is admissible for a limited purpose only which should be explained to the jury. As in this case such evidence unexplained was admitted, it is urged that the error was prejudicial, and the judgment of conviction should, on that account, be reversed. But there are other provisions equally binding upon the court and parties, which should have been observed, in order to legally present the error for consideration on appeal. For it is not every error that will justify the reversal of a judgment of conviction in a criminal case; for the Code of Practice, by which the rights of litigants and the duty of the courts are regulated, expressly requires certain steps to be taken in order to preserve and present alleged errors for review on appeal; among them, is the necessity for excepting to the rulings complained of, to be shown by a properly prepared bill. Nor is this an idle requirement. If the trial court's attention were called at the time to what is frequently a mere omission, it would have been corrected. To allow reversals for such lapses is to put a premium upon sharpness rather than tend to the just and fair administration of the law. The failure of the accused, or his counsel, to have an exception where one is necessary in order to present the question for review on appeal, is deemed in law, as it evidently is in fact, a waiver of the question.

The witnesses, Gausepohl and Bush, were jointly indicted with the defendant. The evidence failed to connect them with the commission of the offense. Before the beginning of the trial the indictment was dismissed as to them. As was held in Sizemore v. Commonwealth, 10 Ky. Law Rep., 1: "It is not the mere fact that a person is charged with a crime in connection with another that makes him an accomplice, within the meaning of section 241, of the Criminal Code. In order to make him an accomplice it is necessary that his criminal participation in the crime charged should be shown by the evidence."

The instructions fairly submitted the questions of fact constituting appellant's guilt to the jury.

We do not see any prejudicial error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

DEVON v. CINCINNATI, COVINGTON & ERLANGER R'Y CO.

(Filed April 17, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Railway—Synonymous with Railroad—While the term "railroad," as used in section 835, Kentucky Statutes, has not been construed by this court, we are clearly of the opinion that the word "railway" has the same meaning.

2. Electric Interurban Railway—Right to Condemn Land—An electric interurban railway authorized by its charter to construct and operate its line for a distance of ten miles from a city, has the same right and powers, under Kentucky Statutes, sections 842a and 835, to condemn land for a right of way, that may be exercised by steam railroads, and the fact that the entire ten miles has not been completed, does not affect the question.

3. Same—Condemnation Within City—The articles of incorporation of an interurban railway company, authorizing it to run a railway from the city of C. to E., and points beyond, includes the right to condemn land within the city of C. for the construction of its road.

Herbert Jackson for appellant.

Ernst, Cassatt & McDougall for appellee.

Appeal from Kenton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle, affirming.

Appellee is a railroad corporation, organized under the laws of Kentucky, for the purpose of constructing and operating an electric railway from Covington to Erlanger, and other points beyond, not exceeding ten miles in distance, from Covington.

Appellee's articles of incorporation provide: * * * "The undersigned have and do hereby associate themselves together to form an incorporated company, under the statutes of Kentucky, for the purpose of constructing a line of railway, as hereinafter stated. * * *

Third. The business of said company shall be the construction maintenance and operation of a line of railway not exceeding ten miles long, with a single or double track, and with all the usual and convenient appendages and appurtenances thereunto belonging, including the right to erect, maintain and operate electric poles and wires over and along said railway and with the privilege of operating a line of telegraph or telephone on and over the line of said railway. Said railway is to be constructed and operated from the city of Covington, Kenton county, Kentucky, to the town of Erlanger, in Kenton county, Kentucky, and to such further points beyond said town of Erlanger as may hereafter be determined upon, and over, along and upon such bridges, streets, roads, highways, and such private property, as said company may, by due process of law, acquire the right to lay its tracks and other appliances and appendages upon. Fourth. Said railway shall be operated by electricity or other improved methods of rapid transit."

In constructing its line of railway appellee found it necessary to cross upon and over a parcel of real estate owned by the appellant, and which is situated partly within and partly without the corporate limits of the city of Covington. The land in question was unoccupied by buildings and consisted mainly of a steep hillside which rendered it partially, if not wholly, unfit for cultivation.

Being unable to contract with appellant for a right of way for its railway line over this land, appellee, in March, 1901, filed in the county court its petition, asking the condemnation of such right of way as provided by section 835, Kentucky Statutes; following which, commissioners were appointed by the court to view the premises and make and report the necessary assessment of damages to which appellant would be entitled by reason of the construction and operation of the railway upon her land. This duty was performed by the commissioners whose report fixed her damages at $454.50. Appellant filed exceptions to the report, making objection to its confirmation on certain legal grounds, as well as on account of the smallness of the damages; and on the trial of the exceptions in the county court they were overruled, except as to the question of damages, the amount of which was increased from $454.50 to $575, and appellee adjudged entitled to occupy the ground condemned for the right of way, upon the payment by it to appellant or into court, of the damages awarded. Appellee thereupon tendered the $575 damages to appellant, which she refused to accept; it was then paid into court after which appellee began the construction of its railway bed and track over appellant's land upon the right of way adjudged it, and in a short time commenced to operate, and is operating electric cars thereon as far as the cemeteries, which lie about three miles out of Covington and on the way to Erlanger.

Appellant being dissatisfied with the judgment of the county court prosecuted an appeal to the circuit court, and on the trial in that court, the jury returned a verdict fixing her damages at $450; the court thereupon overruled appellant's objections to the proceedings, and by the judgment rendered, required her to accept the damages awarded, and confirmed appellee's right to the land condemned for the use and operation of its railway line. The circuit court refused appellant a new trial, and from the judgment of that court she prosecutes this appeal.

It was contended by appellant, both in the county and circuit courts, and she yet contends, first, that no right or authority is conferred by the statute upon electric railroads, street railways, or trolley lines, to condemn land for the purposes of constructing roadbeds, laying tracks, or operating cars; that only steam railroads possess such right, therefore, the county and circuit courts were without jurisdiction to entertain the proceeding whereby appellee obtained the right of way over her land; and that the judgment appealed from is in violation of that provision of the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution, which declares that the citizen can not be deprived of his property without due process of law. Second, that appellee can not in any event, by condemnation, obtain a right of way for its road over land lying within the corporate limits of the city of Covington. Third, that the circuit court admitted incompetent evidence on the trial.

As it is not denied that appellee was unable to contract with appellant for the right of way over her land, or that the land in question is necessary for the construction and operation of its railway, and no complaint is made that the proceedings in the circuit court did not conform to the statute or that the damages allowed appellant are inadequate, it only remains to be determined whether appellee is a railroad that may condemn land as provided by section 835, Kentucky Statutes. It will hardly be questioned that appellee's articles of incorporation authorize it to construct and operate a railroad and to that end to run over, along and upon "such bridges, streets, roads, highways, and such private property as said company may, by due process of law, acquire the right to lay its tracks and other appliances and appendages upon." While the term "railroad," as used in section 835, Kentucky Statutes, has not been construed by this court, we are clearly of opinion that the word "railway" has the same meaning.

The words, "railway, transfer, belt line," and "railway bridge companies," are used in sections 213, 214, 215 and 216, of the Constitution, and this court has held that the provisions of section 216, of the Constitution, embrace street railroads as well as steam railroads. The language of that section is as follows: "All railway, transfer, belt lines, and railway bridge companies, shall allow the tracks of each other to unite, intersect and cross at any point where such union intersection, and crossing is reasonable or feasible."

In passing upon the question of whether a street railway in process of construction between Ashland and Catlettsburg, a distance of four miles, should be allowed to cross a steam railroad at grade in Ashland, as provided by section 216, Constitution, this court said: "It is urged, however, that the appellee (street railway) is not a railway company in the meaning of the section of the Constitution quoted. We think, whatever may be said of street railways in general, that the charter of this company puts it in the class indicated by that section. The railway was to connect two cities. It might use steam, horse, or other propelling power on said car route in the transportation of freight and passengers." (Elizabethtown, &c., R. R. Co. v. Ashland, &c., Street R'y Co., 96 Ky., 347; Johnson's Adm'r v. Louisville City R'y Co., 10 Bush, 231; L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Bowling Green R'y Co., 23 Ky. Law Rep., 274.)

The appellee railway, like the Ashland railway company, mentioned in the case supra, is of the class indicated by section 216, of the Constitution, as it is to connect two cities, may carry freight as well as passengers, and use steam instead of electricity, steam being one of the "improved methods of rapid transit."

While appellee's cars pass through Covington to Cincinnati and return, its railway is not, strictly speaking, a street railway, but rather an interurban electric railway, which is, or may be, operated a distance of ten miles from Covington, and beyond Erlanger.

As said in Johnson v. Milwaukee Electric R'y Co., 99 Wis., 83: "A street railway in its inception is a purely urban institution. It is intended to facilitate travel in and about the city from one part of the municipality to another and thus relieve the sidewalk of foot passengers and the roadway of vehicles. It is thus an aid to the exercise of the easement of passage. Strictly a city convenience for the use of the city by people living or stopping thereon, and fully under the control of the municipal authorities who have been endowed with ample power for that purpose. * * * The urban railway has developed into the interurban railway and threatens soon to develop (as in the case at bar) into the interstate railway. The small car which took up passengers at one corner and dropped them at another, has become a large coach in size and has become a part, perhaps, of a train, which sweeps across the country from one city to another, bearing its load of passengers ticketed through, with an occasional passenger picked up on the highways. The purely city purposes which the urban railway embraces, have developed into and are being supplanted by an entirely different purpose, namely, the transportation of passengers from city to city, over long distances and stretches of intervening country." * * *

Kentucky Statutes, section 842a (Act of March 11, 1902), provides: "All interurban electric railroad companies authorized to construct a railroad ten or more miles in length, heretofore or hereafter incorporated under the general railroad laws of this Commonwealth, shall be under the same duties and responsibilities, so far as practicable, and shall have the same rights, powers and privileges as is now granted to or conferred upon railroad companies existing, operated or incorporated under existing laws of this Commonwealth, or under laws that may hereafter be enacted."

Appellee being an electric interurban railroad and authorized by its charter to construct and operate its line for a distance of ten miles from the city of Covington, has the same right and powers under the section, supra, and section 835, Kentucky Statutes, to condemn land for a right of way, that may be exercised by steam railroads; and has not yet been completed by appellee, does not affect the question; there being nothing in the record to show that it is not its purpose, in good faith, to complete the line as authorized.

In Diebold v. Kentucky Traction Co., 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1275, section 842a, Kentucky Statutes, was given the same construction we now place upon it.

It is contended by counsel for appellant that as appellee's articles of incorporation authorize it to run a railroad from Covington to Erlanger and points beyond, this means that land for the use of its railway lying within the corporate limits of the city of Covington, can not be condemned by it. We see no force in this contention, and no authority is cited in support of it. Manifestly, a railroad charter which authorizes the railroad to connect two towns, will authorize it to run from a point within either town, and not limit it to the corporation line, or boundary. The strained construction contended for by appellant would tend to defeat the purpose of such a grant by making it inconvenient for the citizens of the town to use the road, and would be inconsistent with the provisions of the articles of incorporation which permit the road to run "over, along and upon bridges, streets, roads, highways, &c." Clearly the meaning of the articles of incorporation is, that appellee's railroad may, and was intended to, operate from a point within the city of Covington, to a point within and beyond the city of Erlanger.

Only a small portion of the land condemned in this case lies within the city of Covington, and such as there is seems to have been used for nothing but an entrance to a quarry long since abandoned.

The Supreme Court of the United States in Union Pac. R. R. Co. v. Hall, 91 U. S., 343, in passing upon this question declared, that "authority to construct a railroad, or turnpike from A. to B., or beginning at A. and running to B., is held to confer authority to commence the road at some point within A. and to end it at some point within B., the words 'from,' 'to' and 'at,' are taken inclusively, according to the subject-matter."

Objection is also made by appellant that in questioning witnesses as to the value of the land condemned for the use of appellee's railway, the court did not require that they be asked as to its market value, the word "value" in that connection being mainly used. We find no merit in this contention. Of course the market value of the land was the thing to be ascertained, and while the word "value" was principally used by both counsel and witnesses with respect to the land, the term "market value" was also sometimes used. We do not think the witnesss or jury were misled by the manner in which these questions were framed.

There seems to have been no incompetent evidence presented to the jury, and the record as a whole discloses no error upon the part of the circuit court that can be said to have been prejudicial to appellant's substantial rights.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

While court sitting.

TERRY v. TERRY.

(Filed April 21, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Boundary Line—Failure of Court to Make Statement of Conclusions—This action relates to a disputed boundary line, trial by jury was waived and the court failed to make a statement of its conclusions of the law and facts, there having been no motion to that effect. But, waiving this error, the judgment of the lower court in a case like this is entitled to the same weight as the verdict of a properly instructed jury, and it not appearing that the finding was flagrantly against the evidence, the judgment will not be disturbed.

Hazelrigg, Chenault & Hazelrigg, Pollard & Redwine and T. T. Cope for appellant.

J. J. C. Bach for appellee.

Appeal from Breathitt Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn, affirming.

The parties to this action are brothers, and each owns a survey of land lying between Bowman Fork and Roberts Fork of Turkey creek. Appellee's land is covered by the Tabitha Caudill patent, and appellant's by the R. M. Rose patent, which is the elder. Each of these patents extends over a dividing ridge between the two forks, thereby conflicting with each other. About fifteen acres of the Rose patent extends over the ridge onto the Bowman Fork side, and a greater number of acres covered by the Caudill patent extend over this ridge onto the Roberts Fork side. But appellee concedes, as the Rose patent is the elder, he is barred from recovering it.

Appellee, about twenty-five years ago, extended his farm and fence so as to include about five acres of land covered by the Rose patent; that is, he cleared and fenced about five acres of the fifteen acres covered by the Rose patent which extends over the dividing ridge referred to, and has had it under fence ever since, using and cultivating it, claiming it as his own and adversely to every one, as he alleges and proves.

Appellant's contention is that appellee enclosed this land by the consent of his father, Isaac Terry, and with the understanding that he should pay his father rent therefor until the year 1898, when appellant purchased the land covered by the Rose patent from his father, Isaac Terry, but appellee never claimed this land as his own until after this conveyance.

It appears from the record that appellant's only claim of title to the land for which he sues, is a deed from his father, Isaac Terry, and it is apparent that this deed does not include the land in controversy; but, on the contrary, it calls for a line along the dividing ridge referred to and leaves the fifteen acres on the Bowman Fork side of the ridge not included in the deed; but, for some reason not explained, appellee failed to deny that the deed covered the land in controversy, but admitted that the deed by his father included the land in controversy.

This is a common law action, and the parties had a right to a trial by jury; however, this right was waived by the parties and by agreement the case was tried by the court, and the court failed to make a statement of its conclusions of law and of the facts, there having been no motion made to that effect. But, waiving this error, the judgment of the lower court, in a case like this, is entitled to the same consideration as a verdict of a properly instructed jury; that is, it should be permitted to stand, unless flagrantly against the evidence, and we are unwilling to say this with reference to the judgment of the court in this case.

For these reasons the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

CITY OF COVINGTON v. REGENTHAL.

(Filed April 21, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Streets—Action as to Ownership—Pleading—This is an action as to the ownership of a certain street, and appellant complains that the court erred in admitting oral and written evidence to contradict and explain a plat of an addition to appellant city. The plat, however, formed no part of the pleadings, and was not referred to in them, it was only introduced to sustain the allegations of the petition and the rule of pleading referred to does not apply.

2. As to the Issue—The issue was as to the location of the road at the time of appellee's purchase of the land, and the evidence considered and held that the jury was authorized to find for the appellee.

F. J. Hanlon for appellant.

Robert C. Simmons for appellee.

Appeal from Kenton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn, affirming.

Appellant city instituted this action in ejectment against appellee to recover a portion of a street known as the "Old Lexington State Road." The city alleged that the street was dedicated to it, and that appellee was in possession of a portion of it without its permission or consent. Appellee answered, denying all the affirmative allegations of the petition. A trial was had, which resulted in behalf of appellee.

Appellant does not complain of the instructions of the court to the jury, but says that the court erred to its prejudice in permitting incompetent evidence to be introduced. That is, it allowed oral and written evidence to be introduced to contradict and explain a plat of Morten's addition to the city of Covington, which had been filed and recorded in the county court clerk's office in 1870, without alleging in the pleading that there were any mistakes therein. This plat formed no part of the pleadings in this action, and was not referred to therein; it was only introduced by appellant as evidence to sustain the allegations of its petition, and the rule of pleading referred to does not apply.

It was developed by the evidence that appellee's husband had purchased this property abutting on the "Old Lexington State Road," from Morten, in January, 1871; that an old slaughter-house on same had been turned around, enlarged and made into a residence, and the property then enclosed by a fence which had been maintained on the same line to the time of trial. The ground in controversy forms the front of appellee's property; the city claiming that the alleged street included enough to take off ten or twelve feet of her house. Appellee contends that the road was not established at that place, and that it was only thirty feet wide, and there was evidence authorizing the jury to find for appellee on this point.

The Morten plat, referred to, on its face, shows that it was not made by an expert. It appears that Morten had a boundary of land surveyed and laid off into streets and lots, giving the dimensions of each, and dedicated the streets and alleys to the public, other than the "Old Lexington State Road," which was one of the boundaries of the survey, and in which he stated it was forty feet wide. He did not attempt to dedicate this road and the proof shows that it had been established seventy-five or a hundred years. The plat represents this road as running, in part, from west to east, and then turning in a northeastern direction, as shown by the proof, ascending a hill. It appears that appellee owns several lots of the Morten addition abutting this road on the hill side. Taking the lines of this road, as represented on the plat, they are straight; but, taking the calls of the lines of the lots, as they appear on the plat, evidently the road was not straight at the time the plat was made. The lots abutting upon this road, owned by appellee, are represented on the plat as of the same width, each being extensions of twenty-five foot lots from Linden avenue to the road. There is an obvious contradiction between the straight line, as represented on the plat, forming the boundary of the "Old Lexington State Road," abutting these lots, and the figures representing the length of the side lines of these lots. Because, if the street line were straight, the dividing lines between the lots would increase uniformly in length as the depth of the lots increased. This will be readily understood, for the lines of the lots running from Linden avenue to the road run in a north and south course, and the "Old State Road," at that point, runs in a northeastern course; but, instead of such uniformity, it appears from the plat that while the line between lots ninety-one and ninety-two is fourteen feet longer than the line between lots ninety and ninety-one, the dividing line between lots ninety-two and ninety-three is twenty-six feet longer than the dividing line between lots ninety-one and ninety-two. Then we find that between the next lots, ninety-three and ninety-four, the increase in length again is fourteen feet, and that between the next two, the increase is thirteen, which is the same as the increase in the line between lots ninety-five and ninety-six. According to the recorded length of the side lines of these lots, which were evidently measured with great care, and which doubtless conformed to the road as it existed when the plat was made, a curve appears which is exactly identical with that shown on the Kennedy plat, filed as evidence in the action.

Witness Kennedy was, at the time of trial, seventy-two years of age, was a civil engineer, and had repeatedly surveyed this land, and had made a plat for the party owning the land on the opposite side of the State Road from Morten's. He knew the location of the "Old Lexington State Road" at the time Morten's plat was made, and stated that the line of the road was not straight, but curved, as represented by appellee's line abutting thereon. Appellee purchased to the "Old Lexington State Road." The issue was as to the location of this road at the time appellee purchased. If the location of the road was as indicated by the straight line in the plat, then appellee has a portion of the "Old Lexington State Road;" but if its location is governed by the description of the lots as represented in the plat, and other evidence, then the jury was authorized to find in behalf of appellee.

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

INDEX

	Page.
ACTIONS —See Detinue.
AFFIDAVIT AND DEMAND —See Assigned Estates APPEALS —
1. Dismissal of—This appeal is dismissed because of the failure of appellant to file the record within the time prescribed by the Code. Clark v. Commonwealth ..	72
2. Replevied Judgment—Right of appeal—A defendant in a judgment may prosecute an appeal from it, although he may have replevied it or paid it. N., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Bean's Ex'or ..	114
ARRAIGNMENTS —See New Trials, 5.
ASSIGNED ESTATES —
1. Management—Duties of Assignee—Liability for Negligence—In the management of an assigned estate the assignee is bound to exercise the same care that an ordinarily prudent person would use in his own affairs under like circumstances, and for such losses, deficiencies or injuries as may be caused by his affirmative or negative violation of this rule and the duties it imposes, he is answerable for the loss thereby inflicted. Comingor v. Louisville Trust Co., &c ..	53
2. Same — Fraud of Assignee — Compensation — Where it is shown by the evidence that the assignee of an estate fraudulently accepted the position at the instance of the assignor with the view of aiding him in concealing his property and selling it to a pretended purchaser, who turned it over to the assignor at a greatly reduced price, the circuit court properly refused to allow him any compensation in his fraudulent management of the estate. Idem ..	54
3. Action for Settlement — Jurisdiction of Chancellor—Necessity for Jury—In an action for the settlement of an assigned estate, where the assignee is charged with fraud, the issues of fact as to the questions of fraud and value are but incidental to the main purpose of the action to compel an accounting of the assignee, and the chancellor having exclusive jurisdiction thereof, such jurisdiction carries with it the power to decide all other issues raised without the intervention of a jury. Idem ..	54
4. Claim—Affidavit and Demand—Failure to Make—Delay in Objecting—The failure of the plaintiff to comply with the statutory requisition as to affidavit and demand must be objected to by the defendant before he interposes his defense on the merits, by filing an affidavit showing that the preliminary proof and demand had not been made by the plaintiff and asking a rule for its compliance. Idem ..	54
BURDEN OF PROOF —See Contracts, 4
COLLATERAL ATTACK —See Eminent Domain, 3.
COMMON LAW —See Contracts, 3.
COMPENSATION —See Assigned Estates, 2.
CONSTRUCTIVE TRUSTS —See Life Insurance, 2.

CONTRACTS—	Page.
1. Contracts Made in One State to be Performed in Another— [Validity—Where Determined — While there is occasional conflict of authority as to which law prevails where a con- tract is made in one State and is to be performed in another, the authorities are uniform that where the con- tract is not only made in one State, but by its terms is to be performed there, its validity must be determined by the laws of the State where it is made, and is to be performed. Arnett v. Pinson, &c	36
2. Same—Application to Peddlers' Notes—Section 4223, Ken- tucky Statutes, relating to peddlers' notes has no extra- territorial effect. It does not apply to peddlers' notes exe- cuted and delivered in another State. Idem	36
3. Common Law—Application in Different States—Presump- tion—In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the pre- sumption is that the common law of the State where the contract is made is the same as that of the State where the contract is sued on, but this presumption does not extend to the statute laws. Idem	36
4. Action on Notes—Defense Controverted—Burden of Proof —In an action in this State on two notes executed in West Virginia, the defendant pleaded: first, no consider- ation; second, that they were "peddlers' notes" and were not so endorsed on their face as required by Kentucky Statutes, section 4223; third, fraud, which plea was con- troverted of record Held—That the burden was on the defendant to show that they were invalid under the laws of West Virginia, and were fraudulent and without con- sideration. Idem	36
5. Made in Name of a Company—Liability of Individuals— Persons who make a contract are bound by it although they make it in the name of a company. Kennedy v. Fulton Mercantile Co., &c	60
6. Same — Proposed Corporation — Failure to Organize—Lia- bility as Partners—Where those who propose to form a corporation make a contract in the name of the proposed corporation, they are bound as partners upon the contract when the corporation is not organized. Idem	60
CONTRACT OF SETTLEMENT—See Master and Servant, 1, 2.
CORPORATIONS—See Contracts, 6.
CRIMINAL LAW—See Indictments; New Trials.
DETINUE—

Action for Specific Articles—Recovery for Aggregate Sum—Validity of Verdict—In an action by a claimant of certain specified articles of household furniture, against one he alleged had wrongfully taken them, to recover same or their value and for damages for their detention, where the value of each item was separately stated in the petition, a verdict of the jury awarding the plaintiff the aggregate value of all the items as set out in the petition, was not erroneous in that it did not fix the separate value of each article detained. Black Raven Coal Co. v. Ed- monson

3

EMINENT DOMAIN—See Railroads, 4; Railways, 1, 2, 3—

1. Action in County Court—Dismissal—Appeal to Circuit Court—Trial De Novo—In a proceeding by a corporation in the county court against a land owner for a right of way to lay a pipe line for gas, which was dismissed on the ground that the corporation did not have the right of eminent domain, on appeal to the circuit court the case stood

EMINENT DOMAIN—Continued—	Page.
for trial de novo, and the whole controversy was to be tried in the circuit court. Calor Oil & Gas Co. v. Franzell, &c	98
2. Laying Pipe Line—Contract With Land Owner—Exclusive Privilege—Validity of Contract—A contract made by a corporation with a land owner for the "exclusive right and privilege of laying pipe and pipe lines for any and all purposes whatever, on, across, in or upon said land," is void as being in contravention of public policy. Idem ...	98
3. Corporations—Organization—Validity Challenged—Collateral Attack—When a corporation is organized as provided in Kentucky Statutes, sections 540 and 542, neither its purpose nor its validity can be inquired into collaterally, and any proceeding which challenges its right to exist must be instituted and maintained by the government under whose laws it is organized. Idem	98
4. Natural Gas—Waste—Legitimate Use—Effect on Adjacent District—While one who unlawfully wastes or destroys the gas of a district may be punished under the criminal statutes of the State, all parties owning gas wells in the district are free to make any legitimate use of the gas they choose, and the fact that this legitimate use tends to exhaust the supply, gives the other owners of gas wells in the district, no just grounds of complaint. Idem	99
5. Same — Excessive Verdict — Where a railroad has the right of way through a farm, 1,450 feet long and 27 feet wide, in which strip a ten-inch pipe line, for carrying natural gas, is proposed to be buried, where the whole farm through which the strip is condemned is listed at $2,000, a verdict of a jury awarding the owner $4,000 in damages is flagrantly excessive and out of all proportion to the real damages sustained. Idem	99
6. Right of Way—Additional Servitude—Measure of Damages Recoverable—Where a railroad company owns the exclusive right of way through a farm, there can be no resulting damages to the remainder of the farm by the laying of a pipe line by another party along this easement, and in such case the measure of damages recoverable by the owner of the land is such sum which the owner, who desired to sell, but was not compelled to do so, would take for it in its present condition, and what a purchaser, who desired to buy, but was not compelled to have it, would give for it under the circumstances. Idem	99
EVIDENCE —See Master and Servant, 5; New Trials, 1, 2, 3, 4; Witnesses, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.
EXCESSIVE VERDICT —See Eminent Domain, 6
EXCLUSIVE PRIVILEGES —See Eminent Domain, 2.
FORFEITURES —See Land, 1.
FRAUD —See Assigned Estates, 2, 3.
GATES —See Railroads, 1, 2.
GRAND JURIES —See Juries.
HUSBAND AND WIFE —See Married Women.
IMPEACHMENT —See Witnesses, 3.
INCRIMINATING TESTIMONY —See Witnesses, 1, 2
INDICTMENTS —See Railroads, 13, 14, 15—
1. Descriptive of the Offense Charged—This indictment is defective in that it fails to describe the instrument claimed to be a deadly weapon. It might have been a pistol,

- INDICTMENTS—Continued— Page.
- or it might have been some other weapon. Under such an indictment a defendant is not apprised of the circumstances he is required to meet. Commonwealth v. White, 70
2. Same—Not Sufficient to Charge Breach of Peace—Nor is such an indictment sufficient to charge a breach of the peace, for it is not clear from the language used which of the features of the statute it was intended to cover. Idem 70
- INJURY TO PROPERTY—
1. Negligence—Interest on Damages—Discretion of Jury—Exemplary Damages—Where personal property is injured by negligence, wrongful or unlawful acts and the owner is deprived of its possession and use, he is entitled, in a suit for damages for its loss, to recover its value with interest thereon in the discretion of the jury, but this rule can not be applied when it is sought to recover unliquidated damages, or in cases where no certain sum is claimed, and the jury may assess any amount in their discretion; and in cases where exemplary damages are recovered, the plaintiff is not entitled to interest thereon. Schulte v. L. & N. R. R. Co., &c. 31
2. Property—Injured—Damages for Its Use—Special Plea—Where a party desires to recover for the value for the loss of the use of property injured, it should be specially pleaded, and where damages are sought for the injury done the property, as well for the deprivation of its use, interest is not allowable, as the recovery for the use takes the place of interest. Idem 31
- INSURABLE INTEREST—See Life Insurance, 1, 2, 3.
- INTEREST—See Partnerships—Injury to Property.
- INTERPRETERS—See New Trials, 2, 3, 4.
- INTERSTATE COMMERCE—See Local Option.
- JOINT INDICTMENT—See Witnesses, 5.
- JOINT LIABILITY—See Railroads, 10, 11.
- JUDGMENTS—
- Correction of After Becoming Final—(30 Ky. Law Rep., 670, for authority to maintain this action.) It appearing that appellee did not agree to the disposition of the attached tobacco, or authorize her attorney to act for her, its disposition being the result of a mistake on the part of her attorney, as appellant had parted with nothing to get the tobacco, he must be required to restore the proceeds of it to appellee. Sebree, &c. v. Sebree 114
- JUDGMENT REPLEVIED—See Appeals.
- JUDICIAL SALES—See Life Insurance, 1, 2, 3.
- JURIES—
1. Jury—Statement by Member of—Effort to Discharge—A statement by member of the jury during the trial of appellant to the court that he desired to hear the evidence, evidencing some impatience at a wrangle of the lawyers, while it may have been indiscreet, was not sufficient cause to warrant the court to discharge the jury. Kennedy v. Commonwealth 83
2. Grand Jury—Member of May Disclose Evidence Before It—By the provisions of section 113 Criminal Code, a member of the grand jury may be required to disclose testimony given before it, and as the defendant had undertaken to impeach a witness by one member of the grand jury, the Commonwealth was properly permitted

JURIES—Continued—	Page.
to sustain him by another. (Former appeal, 31 Ky. Law Rep., 546.) Idem	83

JURISDICTION—See Contracts, 1, 2.

LAND—

1. Forfeiture for Taxes—Redemption—Penalties and Interest—It was competent for the Legislature to provide in the revenue act of March 15, 1906, that the amount paid to remove cause of forfeiture, where land was sold for unpaid taxes, should be the taxes without interest or penalties for the years named, and if in adding penalties and interest the Legislature exceeded its constitutional authority, the act would be void only in so far as it exceeded such authority and the penalty and interest would be eliminated. Ky. Union Co. v. Commonwealth..... 9
2. Same—Recovery of Land—Deed—Boundary—Exclusions—The rule is universal that where one seeks to recover land under a grant or deed which does not convey all the land within the boundary described, he must show that the land sought to be recovered is within the boundary and without the exclusions. Idem..... 9
3. Same—Petition—Allegations—In an action for the forfeiture of and for non-payment of taxes under the act of March 15, 1906, it is not necessary for the petition to describe more than the tract of land, the title to which is sought to be forfeited. Idem 9
4. Large Boundary—Many Occupants—Judgments—Description—Partial Sale—In an action for the forfeiture of a large boundary of land on which there are many occupants, it is not necessary for the judgment to ascertain and describe the parts of the land held by the several occupants. If at the hearing it should appear that the title as to certain parts only of the tracts would pass to the purchaser under a sale, the statute would be complied with by a sale of the title covering those parts alone. In any event, it is the duty of the court to prescribe what parts thereof shall be sold, if less than the whole is to be sold. Item 9.
5. Re-purchasing Land—Time Allowed—Under the provision of the act the defendant has until the close of the first term after the judgment of forfeiture is entered in which to file his petition and bond to purchase back the land, and it was error of the court to order a sale of the land before the time elapsed in which defendant could file such petition. Idem 9
6. Divisional Lines—This is a controversy over a divisional line, the instructions fairly submitted the question to the jury, the evidence was conflicting, and the verdict of the jury will not be disturbed.
7. Boundary Line—Failure of Court to Make Statement of Conclusions—This action relates to a disputed boundary line, trial by jury was waived and the court failed to make a statement of its conclusions of the law and facts, there having been no motion to that effect. But, waiving this error, the judgment of the lower court in a case like this is entitled to the same weight as the verdict of a properly instructed jury, and it not appearing that the finding was flagrantly against the evidence, the judgment will not be disturbed. Terry v. Terry 126

LIFE INSURANCE—

Page.

1. Insurance Policies—Sale of—Interest Acquired—Assignment—Purchaser—Insurable Interest in Assured—A purchaser of a policy of insurance on the life of one in whom he has no insurable interest, except as creditor, will hold the proceeds of the policy, over and above his debt, in trust for the beneficiaries of the policy, and an assignment of the policy to such purchaser will operate, at most, only as a pledge that he will hold the proceeds, over and above the amount he has paid for it with interest, in trust for the beneficiaries of the policy. Irons, &c. v. U. S. Life Ins. Co. of N. Y...... 46
2. Same—Judicial Sale—Effect—The doctrine of constructive trusts applies no less to judicial sales than to private sales. Where property is impressed with a trust, the trust is enforceable as well against the purchaser at a judicial sale as at a private sale. Idem..... 46
3. Same—In a judicial sale of a life insurance policy, the court making the sale does not inquire, sua sponte, whether the purchaser has an insurable interest in the life of the insured. The order confirming the sale, where no exceptions are filed, does not establish that the purchaser is not a trustee for the parties, nor that he has capacity to take the property absolutely; and, to show such fact, in a subsequent suit, in no wise impeaches the judgment in the former suit. Idem..... 46

LOCAL OPTION—

Interstate Commerce—The appellant did not violate the local option statute in shipping whisky from Nashville, Tennessee, where it was paid for, to Burksville, Cumberland county, and the fact that he conducted a whisky business in Bowling Green did not lessen his right to do so. He had a legal right to take advantage of the interstate commerce law in a case like this and what a man has a legal right to do is not a trick or device in the meaning of the Kentucky Statutes. Doores v. Commonwealth... 69

MARRIED WOMEN—

Contract—Note for Worthless Stock—Saving Husband from Prosecution—Validity of Contract—Ratification—Estoppel—Where a note was executed by a married woman for stock in a pants factory, which was at the time worthless, which fact was unknown to her, and because of representations made to her that if she did not purchase the stock her husband would be prosecuted on a charge of burning the factory, in an action thereon it was competent for the wife to testify to statements made to her by her husband to induce her to sign the note and thereby save him from a prosecution for arson, such evidence being competent for the purpose of showing her condition of mind at the time she signed the note; and the fact that she subsequently made a payment on the note when in the same condition of mind, did not amount to a ratification of the contract, or estop her from making defense to the remainder, or to recover back the sum paid. Slaughter v. Ditto..... 5

MASTER AND SERVANT—

1. Injury to Servant—Contract of Settlement—Avoidance—Consideration—The mere fact that a person is in such financial distress or so hard pressed about money matters as that he would be willing to sell his property at a sacrifice or surrender a claim for an inadequate consideration,

MASTER AND SERVANT—Continued—

Page.

- is not in itself sufficient to avoid a contract that is free from fraud, overreaching or misrepresentation. Louisville Veneer Mills Co. v. Clemonts..... 106
- 2. Same—Appliances—Duty of Master to Furnish—A master is not required to furnish his employes the latest or the best appliances or those that are in general use. He is only charged with the duty of furnishing the servant with reasonably safe appliances, and where the servant is injured by the use of such appliances, the question as to whether they were reasonably safe is one for the jury. Idem. 106
- 3. Dangerous Premises—Mining Shafts—Statutory Provisions—Gates Required—Under Kentucky Statutes, section 2731, providing that "at every mine operated by a shaft there shall be provided an approved safety catch, and a sufficient cover overhead, on all cages used for lowering and hoisting persons, and at the top of every shaft a safety gate shall be provided, and an adequate brake attached to every drum or machine used in raising or lowering persons in all shafts and slopes," the statutory duty is not complied with by furnishing gates that can not be closed. The gates contemplated are such as will either automatically close, or can easily be closed by persons using them. Moseley's Adm'r v. B. D. C. & M. Co..... 110
- 4. Same—Death of Servant—Negligence of Master—Liability—In an action against a mining company for causing the death of an employe by falling into a shaft which the statute requires should be provided with safety gates, the company was guilty of negligence in permitting coal and other material to be placed and accumulate around the gates in such manner as to prevent them from being closed, and a failure to provide such gates for the safety of employes and other persons rightfully using the premises, can not be neglected without subjecting the owner to liability for damages thereby caused. Idem. 110
- 5. Same—Evidence—Statement of Mining Boss—Competency—In an action against a mining company for damages for negligently causing the death of an employe, evidence of a statement made by the mine boss some time after the accident, that he had told the deceased to go to the shaft for instructions, was incompetent, not being a part of the res gestae. Idem 110
- 6. Defective Premises—Knowledge of Servant—Where an injury results in death and the action is brought by the personal representative of the servant, it is not necessary to a recovery to show that the deceased knew, or might, by ordinary care have discovered, the dangerous or defective condition of the premises. Idem..... 110

MINES AND MINING—See Master and Servant, 4, 5, 6.

MOTIVE—See Witnesses, 2.

NATURAL GAS—See Eminent Domain, 4.

NEGLIGENCE—See Assigned Estates; Injury to Property, 1, 2; Railroads, 5, 6.

NEW TRIALS—

- 1. Newly Discovered Evidence—Probable Effect on Another trial—To entitle one to a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, such evidence should be of such a controlling and decisive character as to convince the court that it will probably have a preponderating influence upon another trial. Nium v. Commonwealth..... 62

NEW TRIALS—Continued—

Page.

2. Same—Foreigner—Trial for Felony—Appointment of Interpreter—Authority of Court—A foreigner on trial for maliciously cutting another, who does not understand the English language, and had to have an interpreter to translate his testimony to the jury, is not entitled to a new trial after conviction, on the ground that there is no statute in this State authorizing the appointment of an interpreter except in bastardy cases (sec. 181) and courts of continuous session (sec. 1034). Courts, in the absence of statutory authority, have the inherent power to appoint an interpreter when the ends of justice require it. Idem. 62
3. Same—Failure to Swear Interpreter—Absence of Objection—Consideration on Appeal—Where an interpreter was permitted by the court to be used on the trial of one for felony, who was introduced and used by the defendant to translate his testimony to the jury, the fact that he was not sworn, to which no objection or exception was made by defendant until the filing of his grounds for a new trial, such error or oversight can not be considered on appeal. Idem. 62
4. Same—Qualification of Interpreter—Where an interpreter was introduced by a defendant on trial for a felony and used by him to interpret his testimony before the jury, to which no objection was made by the Commonwealth, the court had a right to assume that he was qualified to act, and it was not error in the court to fail to examine into his competency as an interpreter. Idem. 63
5. Arraignment of Defendant—Showing of Record—Grounds for New Trial—On the trial of one for a felony, the fact that the record fails to show that the defendant was arraigned, or that a formal arraignment was waived, or that his plea was entered, is not cause for reversal, unless such failure is made a ground for a new trial. Idem. 63
6. Grounds for New Trial not in Record—Sufficiency of Petition—As appellant's motion and grounds for a new trial are not in the record, the court can not know what errors were complained of in the lower court. Such being the condition of the record, and the petition being sufficient to support the judgment, it will not be disturbed. Falls City Woolen Mills v. Pike, by, &c. 67

NUISANCE—See Railroads, 13, 14.

OBSTRUCTING STREETS—See Railroads, 13, 14, 15.

PARTNERSHIPS—

1. Acts Constituting—Where three men mutually agree to go in together and buy a large tract of mineral and timbered land and hold it for a profit, each to furnish some of the money and expense, and to do certain work, and, after the sale of the land, each shall have the money he advanced, with 7 per cent. interest thereon and his expenses refunded, and to share equally in the balance of the sale money, they are partners in contemplation of law. Boreing, &c. v. Wilson & Moss. 14
2. Settlement of a Partnership—Sharing of Profits—Where in the settlement of a partnership formed for the purchase and sale of land, it is shown that one of the partners sold 500 acres of the partnership land and 500 acres of his individual land in a body at an agreed consideration for the whole 1,000 acres such partner is bound to account to his co-partners in the 500 acres for one-half of the price he

PARTNERSHIPS—Continued—	Page.
received for the whole tract, and the fact that the partner, in making such sale, received a part of the consideration in corporation stock, did not require his co-partners to accept such stock in payment for their interest in the 500 acres of partnership land sold. Idem	15
3. Same—Interest Paid on Advancements—Like Interest on Settlement—Where, in the formation of a partnership, it is agreed that each partner shall be allowed eight per cent. interest on advancements made, which was enforced in the settlement of such advancements, it would be equitable and proper in the distribution of the proceeds of the partnership to require each of the partners, on final settlement, to account for eight per cent. interest on the amount due from each from the time the same was received. Idem	15
PARTNERS—See Contracts, 6.
PEDDLERS' NOTES—See Contracts, 2, 3, 4
PERSONAL INJURIES—
1. Actions—Owner of Property—Liability of for Accidents—In this action by B. for damages for injuries sustained by falling through an elevator shaft, Dunn was not liable because it is shown by the record that his purchase of the property was not complete at the time of the accident. Baker v. Best	1
2. Same—The verdict against Mrs. B., the owner, seems to be supported by the evidence, and it must be upheld. The evidence complained of could not have prejudiced appellant's rights. Idem	1
PLEADINGS—See Detinue, 1; Injury to Property, 2—
1. Filing Amendments During Trial—Discretion of Court—Trial on Merits—The trial court has a large discretion in allowing amended pleadings to be filed during the progress of the trial, and this discretion should be exercised with great liberality when the purpose of enabling the party offering it is to obtain a fair trial of the case on its merits. Schuke v. L. & N. R. R. Co., &c.	31
2. Actions—Pleadings—Liens—The judgment herein in favor of appellee was proper, in view of the pleadings and proof. The bank sued to recover of appellee upon an account for lumber sold, the transaction was between appellee and her son, alone, and neither the trustee nor the bank knew anything about it. The facts proved were insufficient to establish a promise on the part of appellee to pay for the lumber. Globe B. & T. Co. v. Rigglesberger	96
3. Same—While appellee signed an agreement not to force or demand payment of her debt out of R.'s property in charge of the trustee, yet, if they permitted a bill of lumber to be sold her as a credit on a debt, which R. owed her, there seems to be no reason why she should not accept it without incurring liability to the bank under the pleadings in this case, for nothing is set out in the petition upon which to base the debt claimed. Idem	96
4. Streets—Action as to Ownership—Pleading—This is an action as to the ownership of a certain street, and appellant complains that the court erred in admitting oral and written evidence to contradict and explain a plat of an addition to appellant city. The plat, however, formed no part of the pleadings, and was not referred to in them,

PLEADINGS—Continued—	Page.
it was only introduced to sustain the allegations of the petition and the rule of pleading referred to does not apply. City of Covington v. Regenthal	127
5. As to the Issue —The issue was as to the location of the road at the time of appellee's purchase of the land, and the evidence considered and held that the jury was authorized to find for the appellee. Idem	127
PIPE LINES —See Eminent Domain, 2, 6.
PRESUMPTIONS —See Wills, 2.
RAILROADS —See Railway—
1. Gates Across Highway—Protection to Public—Joint Use by Different Railroads—Liability for Injury —Where a gate is necessary across a street in a city for the protection of the traveling public across a railroad track, it is the duty of every railroad company using the track to protect the public from injury from its trains, and each company, and the owner of the track, is jointly and severally liable to the public for injuries committed by its trains due to failure to perform this duty, and the duty of protecting such crossing can not be delegated to one of the companies using the track, or to the owner, so as to absolve the company whose trains commit the injury from liability to the person injured. Schulte v. L. & N. R. R. Co., &c. .. .	31
2. Gates Raised—Invitation to Cross—Presumption—Care Required —When gates are maintained at a crossing, and are closed when trains are approaching and kept open for traffic when they are not, the fact that they are up and open is an invitation to the public to cross, and persons have a right to assume they can do so without danger by using ordinary care for their safety. Idem	31
3. Contract for Constructing Roadbed—Conclusiveness of Contract —The fact that a contract by a railroad company with a contractor employed to construct its road bed only called for one track, is not conclusive that the railroad company did not intend to build another track thereon. Warden v. M. H. & E. R. R. Co.	38
4. Eminent Domain—Necessity to be Shown—Circumstances to be Considered —There must always exist necessity for the appropriation of land sought to be condemned for railroad purposes, and in determining this necessity, the court should take into consideration all the facts and circumstances in the case. The right to condemn is not confined to the land that may be absolutely required at the time of the taking, but extends to so much as the present plans and purposes of the railroad company show will be reasonably necessary to construct and operate the road in accordance with such plans. Idem	38
5. Lookout—Negligence —At the time of appellee's intestate's death, the bell was being rung, the train was making a loud noise, it was about 5 o'clock in the afternoon, in July, and the slightest care, as the evidence shows, on the part of the deceased, would have enabled her to escape. The fireman had been keeping a lookout, but at the time had withdrawn to coal the engine. And it can not be said that because he withdrew to perform this duty that appellant was guilty of negligence. L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Gilmore's Adm'r. .. .	74

RAILROADS—Continued—

Page.

6. Same—Whether it was because of intestate's deafness, or that her mind was so intent upon something else, it was her misfortune that she failed to hear it. She walked in front of an approaching train at such time as that no diligence on the part of those in charge of the train could have prevented or discovered her peril Idem..... 74
7. Taxation—Assessment of Bridge Property—The question involved upon this appeal is as to the mode of assessment of appellee's bridge, whether it should be assessed by the railroad commission, or the local authorities in Campbell county. After the consideration of authorities cited, it is held that the power of the Legislature to vest in a State board the assessment of property for local taxation is no longer an open question, and further that the fact that the bridge in question is used for purposes other than the railroad's use of it, does not render it any less "railroad property." B'd Equalization Campbell Co. v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 78
8. Same—Question One of Ownership—The question here is one of ownership. If it is railroad property used in connection with the operation of a railroad, it is assessable by the railroad commission, and the fact that a portion of the bridge is used for other purposes does not give the local officers the right to assess it. Idem..... 78
9. Removal of Causes—Petition—Allegations—Conclusions—Jurisdictional Facts—In a petition by a party to remove a case from the State court to the Federal court an allegation "that its co-defendants were not necessary, nor proper parties to the action, and that the sole purpose of the plaintiff in making other parties defendants was a fraudulent one to deprive the petitioner of its constitutional rights." amounts only to a conclusion of the pleader, and the allegation that "the negligence charged in the petition against its co-defendants was untrue, and known by the plaintiff to be untrue," does not state any jurisdictional fact. The question of negligence or no negligence was an issue solely within the province of the jury to hear and determine. Clinger's Adm'r v. C. & O. Ry. in Ky...... 86
10. Same—Negligent Injury—Joint Liability of Defendants—If an injury is inflicted by two or more wrongdoers, an action may be maintained against one or all of them. While several may be guilty of several distinct negligent acts, yet, if their concurrent effect is to produce an actionable injury, they are all liable therefor. Idem..... 87
11. Same—Resident and Non-resident Defendants—Joint Action Against—Where, in an action for damages for an injury alleged to have been caused by the negligence of a non-resident railroad company, and its resident conductor, who are jointly sued, this court can not assume that the conductor is not guilty, from its general knowledge of his powers and duties, but if, on the trial, it should appear from the evidence that the plaintiff had no reasonable grounds to believe that he was guilty when the petition was filed, the court should give a peremptory instruction to find for him, and the case should then be remanded to the Federal court. Idem..... 87
12. Same—Acts of Incorporation—Legality—Effect of Lease—Section 769, Kentucky Statutes, providing among other things, that a railroad company "may make any agreement or arrangement, not inconsistent with law, with any other railroad company," is not in conflict with section 573, Ken-

RAILROADS—Continued—	Page.
tucky Statutes, providing "that all provisions of charters and articles of incorporation which are inconsistent with the provisions of chapter 32, of the Kentucky Statutes, stand repealed to the extent of such conflict," and under the contract of lease by the C. & O. R'y Co. in Ky., to the C. & O. R'y. Co. in Virginia, it did not relieve the Kentucky railroad from its responsibility existing before the enactment of section 573, Kentucky Statutes. Idem	87
13. Indictment for Nuisance—Obstructing Street—Sufficient Allegations—An indictment for a nuisance against a railroad company which charges that "on the 12th day of September, 1907, in the county of Clark, and in the city of Winchester, within twelve months before the finding of the indictment, it unlawfully and willfully suffered and permitted its cars attached to passenger and freight trains, to be placed on and across Main street in said city of Winchester, said street being a public highway, and did suffer them to be and remain on and across said street for an unreasonable length of time, thereby obstructing travel on said street," is a good indictment, under section 124, of the Criminal Code. Commonwealth v. C. & O. R'y Co.	92
14. Same—Bill of Particulars—Requirement of Commonwealth—Response—Time Allowed—On the return of an indictment against a railroad company for obstructing a street in a city by permitting its cars to remain in and across said street for an unreasonable length of time, the court did not abuse its discretion, on motion of the defendant, to require the Commonwealth's attorney to file a bill of particulars, stating the time as near as he could, when the offense was committed, but the court should not require such response to be filed until the attorney had obtained the presence of the Commonwealth's witnesses, from whom he could ascertain the particular facts to be relied on in sustaining the prosecution. Idem	92
15. Same—Sufficiency of Response—The law does not require the prosecution to give facts which are within the knowledge of the defendant, nor to give the particular hour or day, or even the week, in which the offense was committed, nor the particular train or number of it, unless the witness can remember same. The law only requires an honest effort on the part of the prosecution to obtain and give to the defendant all the necessary information it reasonably can, to enable it to show as far as possible, the particular act or acts relied on for conviction. Idem	92
RAILWAY—
1. Synonymous with Railroad—While the term "railroad," as used in section 835, Kentucky Statutes, has not been construed by this court, we are clearly of the opinion that the word "railway" has the same meaning. Devon v. C. C. & E. Ry. Co.	122
2. Electric Interurban Railway—Right to Condemn Land—An electric interurban railway authorized by its charter to construct and operate its line for a distance of ten miles from a city, has the same right and powers, under Kentucky Statutes, sections 842a and 835, to condemn land for a right of way, that may be exercised by steam railroads, and the fact that the entire ten miles has not been completed does not affect the question. Idem	122

RAILWAY—Continued—

Page.

3. Same—Condemnation Within City—The articles of incorporation of an interurban railway company, authorizing it to run a railway from the city of C. to E., and points beyond, includes the right to condemn land within the city of C. for the construction of its road. Idem..... 122

RATIFICATION—See Married Women.REMOVAL OF CAUSES—See Railroads, 19.*RIGHTS OF WAY—See Eminent Domain, 5, 6*SPECIAL JUDGES—

1. Judges—Affidavit of Disqualification—Sufficiency—An attorney appointed by the Governor as a special judge of a court, may properly refuse to vacate the bench upon an affidavit by a litigant that he and the opposing counsel of the litigant happen to be attorneys for the same railroad, though in different parts of the State. Boreing, &c. v. Wilson & Moss 14
2. Same—Likewise a judge is not disqualified to sit in a case because he may be socially entertained by the opposing counsel of one of the litigants, or because he expressed an opinion upon a preliminary motion in the case after hearing the argument thereon and congratulated the opposing counsel on his argument on the motion. Or because of his supposed intention to appoint a receiver in the case, who was not friendly to a deceased party whose estate is involved in the action. Idem..... 14

STREET IMPROVEMENT—

1. Claim for Street Improvement—Assignment of Right of Action—H. has a right to prosecute an appeal from a judgment dismissing his petition, for the reason that the city to which he had assigned his claim was entitled to all of his rights, and the appeal was prosecuted in both his name and that of the city. A lien on land being asserted, an appeal lies to this court, although the amount is less than $200. Huesman, for, &c. v. Dersch..... 77
2. Ordinances—All the members of the council voted for the ordinance attacked here, and, upon the authority of Hedger v. Roebke, 30 Ky. Law Rep., 1092, it is valid. Idem. 77
3. Liability of Property Owner—Law in Force at Time the Work Was Done—The liability of a land owner for a street improvement must be determined by the law in force at the time the work was done. The Legislature may change the rule as to how the liability of the property owner may be created, but the new rule can only operate as to work after the legislation is had. City of Lexington v. Walby, &c. 116

TAXATION—See Railroads, 7, 8.TURNPIKES—

1. Action to Recover Tolls—The fact that a turnpike was insufficient can not be shown in an action to recover tolls paid. The remedy that the statute provides must be followed. Burton v. M. & B. Turnpike Co...... 85
2. Transfer of Actions—This was simply an action to recover money had and received and the court below did not err in transferring it to the common law docket. Idem..... 85

WAIVER—See Witnesses, 4.

Page.

WILLS—

1. Construction—Intention of Testator—Favorable to Disposition of Entire Estate—That construction of a will will be favored, which disposes of the entire estate, and prevents the testator from dying intestate as to any part of it, when it is apparent, from the whole will, that such was the intention of the testator. Newcomb v. Fidelity Trust Co., &c...... 41
2. Same—Estate by Implication—Presumption—The weight of authority is to the effect that an estate by implication will not be presumed or created by strained construction, but must grow out of the fair intendment of the instrument under consideration, looking at all its parts. Idem...... 41
3. Construction of—A will providing that “all my estate, both real and personal,” shall descend to my wife “her life time, to manage and dispose of as she may see cause” invested her with an absolute estate. To limit it to a life estate, it would be necessary to take from the other parts of the will their fair and legitimate meaning. The will does not stop with the words “her life time,” but, in investing her with the power “to manage and dispose of it as she may see cause,” she is clothed with the power to convey the fee. Alsip, &c. v. Morgan...... 72

WITNESSES—

1. Party Accused—Incriminating Testimony—Commission of Separate Offense—When the accused testifies as a witness in his own behalf, he stands as any other witness and can not be required to disclose public offenses committed by him other than that for which he is on trial. Welch v. Commonwealth 51
2. Same—Motive—Evidence of—On the trial of one for malicious shooting, the motive, being a material element of the shooting, may be shown by facts proven, though they involve the commission of another offense by the defendant, but such proof must be established by other witnesses than the defendant. Idem...... 51
3. Impeachment—Party Defendant—Previous Conviction of Felony—Defendant Required to Testify—Under section 597, Criminal Code, providing that a witness may be impeached “by the examination of a witness, or record of a judgment that he had been convicted of a felony,” where a party to a felony offers himself as a witness, he is subject to the same rules as any other witness, and for the purpose of impeaching his testimony he may be required to testify that he had previously been convicted of a felony. Ochsner v. Commonwealth. 119
4. Evidence—Incompetency—Failure to Save Exception—Waiver—The failure of the accused, or his counsel, to save an exception where one is necessary, in order to present the question for review on appeal, is deemed in law as it is in fact, a waiver of the question. Idem...... 119
5. Joint Indictment—Dismissal as to Same—Competency as Witness—Accomplices—On the trial of one indicted with two others for a felony, where, before the beginning of the trial the indictment was dismissed as to the other two, they are not accomplices of the defendant on trial, in the meaning of section 241, of the Criminal Code. Idem...... 119

LAW DEPARTMENT

University of Louisville

In continuous and successful operation since the
year 1847.

Refers to its graduates all over the Union.

PROFESSORS EMMET FIELD, C. B. SEYMOUR
AND W. O. HARRIS.

For Catalogues, apply to

W. O. HARRIS, DEAN
LOUISVILLE, KY.

Jefferson School of Law

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

FACULTY.

HON. SHACKELFORD MILLER, DEAN.

(Judge Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch)

Professor of Equity, Constitutional Law and Corporations.

HON. THOS. R. GORDON.

(Judge Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas Branch.)

Professor of Torts, Evidence and Insurance.

BENJAMIN F. WASHER, LL. B.

Professor of Common Law, Code and Equity Pleading and Practice, Elements of Law, Personal Relations, Wills and Administration.

NORTON L. GOLDSMITH, LL. B.

Professor of Criminal Law and Procedure, Bailments and Real Estate.

ELLIOTT K. PENNEBAKER, LL. B., SECRETARY,

Professor of Contracts, Sales and Partnership, Agency and Negotiable Instruments.

L. EDMUND HUBER, LIBRARIAN.

BOARD OF REGENTS.

Gov. J. C. W. Beckham.

Theodore Ahrens,
Young E. Allison,
Ex-Gov. W. O. Bradley,
Charles J. Doherty,
Judge Alexander Dowling,
Reuben T. Durrett,
Rabbi H. G. Enelow,
Bruce Haldeman,
Thomas L. Jefferson,

Rev. Carter Helm Jones.
Charles B. Norton,
Judge Matt O'Doherty,
Rev. E. L. Powell,
Joshua D. Powers,
Judge J. E. Robbins.
Henry L. Stone,
Dr. T. Hunt Stucky,
Bennett H. Young.

Full course covering two years.

Classes conducted at night.

Record attendance last year.

Catalogues and detailed information to be had upon application.

JEFFERSON SCHOOL OF LAW,

Lecture Room,
First and Chestnut Streets.

Secretary's Office,
Kenyon Building.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Oct. 1-17.

Beginning Sept. 1, 1908, when the Court of Appeals reconvenes, the Magazine Edition of the Kentucky Law Reporter will be issued weekly instead of semi-monthly.

July 15, 1908

VOL. 33

NO. 2

Pages 129-256

Magazine Edition

Kentucky Law Reporter

Frankfort, Ky.

RATES:

Subscription	$5 Per Year
Binding Each Volume	$1.00

A Semi-Monthly Magazine, Reporting in
Full All the Decisions of the Court of Appeals

The Frankfort Printing Co.

Incorporated

Publishers

1908

We are sparing no means to make the Kentucky Law Reporter the best publication of its kind in existence, and we kindly ask you to compare the present publication with the previous ones.

Arrangements have been made whereby the Judges of the Court of Appeals will edit their several opinions, thus securing a degree of accuracy that can not be obtained in any other manner.

Table of Cases.

	Page.		Page.
Adkisson's Adm'r v. L. H. & St. L. Ry. Co.....	204	Landy v. Moritz.....	223
Aldridge v. Aldridge, &c.....	246	L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Gormley..	188
Asher v. Ford Lumber & Mfg. Co.	222	L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Lambert..	199
Bankers' Fraternal Union, &c. v. Donahue.....	196	Louisville Cooperage Co. v. Farmer, by, &c.....	180
Baugh, &c. v. Baugh's Adm'r..	148	Louisville & Interurban Ry. Co. v. Bally, &c.....	179
Borders, &c. v. Allen.....	194	Louisville Ry. Co. v. Williams.	168
Bowe, &c. v. Richmond, &c....	173	May v. May, &c.....	193
Brashears, &c. v. Brashears...	233	Nat. Bank of Cynthiana v. Hume's Ext'x.....	162
Burchett v. Clarke.....	240	Nelson v. Commonwealth.....	143
City of Latonia, &c. v. Latonia Agl. Ass'n.....	138	Payne v. Commonwealth.....	229
Clarke v. McDowell's Adm'r..	177	Potter, &c. v. Potter, &c.....	129
Combs, Mayor, &c. v. Bonnell	219	Rally v. Roberts.....	221
Commonwealth v. Byers.....	252	Roberts v. Adams & Son Co... 207
Commonwealth v. Murphy....	141	Russellville Home Tel. Co. v. Commonwealth	132
Commonwealth v. Louisville Property Co.....	225	Sagamore Coal Co. v. Clarke, &c.	134
Crooke v. Hume's Ext'x, &c... 162		Southern Ry. in Ky. v. Commonwealth	252
Fidelity Trust Co., &c. v. Shelbyville Water & Light Co... 202		Southern Ry. in Ky. v. Grady	183
Freeman, &c. v. Bow.....	254	Summers Fiber Co. v. Walker.	153
Fuson, &c. v. Chestnut, &c.... 249		Taylor & Crate v. Burt & Brabb Lumber Co.....	191
Guhy, &c. v. Nicholls-Shepherd Co.	237	U. S. F. & G. Co. v. Howes. &c.	131
Harding's Adm'r v. Weiseiger.. 170		U. S. F. & G. Co. v. Milstead.	186
Highland Land & Bldg. Co., of Dayton, Ky. v. Audas.....	214	Ventura Hotel Co. v. Pabst Brewing Co.....	149
Howes v. Wells.....	212	Walsh v. Parr's Ex'r, Trustee.	242
Jaillette, &c. v. Bell, &c..... 159

The Triple Expansion Ledger.

"BEST ON EARTH."

BECAUSE of the following features of merit, the sales of the Triple Expansion Ledger are increasing rapidly, and our agents are unanimous in saying it deserves the name "Best on Earth."

It has an expansion of nearly 200 per cent. You know the value of this feature, the ease in inserting sheets, and the great increase in capacity for additional accounts, as the business demands.

It is the lightest ledger made to-day; weighing less than half as much as aluminum back ledgers. You know that excess weight is unnecessary, and that bookkeepers do not like to handle a ledger weighing four or five pounds.

It has no exposed metal parts to mar the desk, a feature appreciated by all users.

It has strong, positive, quick-acting mechanism.

It is made of absolutely the best materials obtainable, the highest grade of leather and corduroy, with the finest nickel-plated finish.

The price is right, enabling the dealer to meet competition.

THE FRANKFORT PRINTING CO.
(Incorporated.)

Frankfort, Ky.

Magazine Edition

Kentucky Law Reporter

Vol. 33

July 15, 1908

No. 2

COURT OF APPEALS OF KENTUCKY.

POTTER, &c. v. PORTER, &c.

(Filed April 21, 1908.—Not to be reported.)

Trustees—Judgment Against Cestui Que Trust—Duty of Trustee—It is incumbent upon a trustee to keep an accurate account of his doings and no judgment will be entered by the chancellor against his cestui que trusts, where, upon the showing made by the trustee, the mind is left in doubt as to how the account really stands. To keep an accurate account is a primary duty, and the chancellor will afford him no relief against his trust estate when there is doubt as to the standing of the account.

Sims & Grider for appellants.

Thomas W. Thomas and Samuel D. Hines for appellees.

Appeal from Warren Circuit Court.

Opinion of the Court by Judge Hobson, reversing.

On October 25, 1890, E. H. Porter was appointed trustee of the estate of James Hilton by the Warren Circuit Court, Hilton being dissipated and unfit to manage his estate. Porter qualified and gave bond and collected from the administrator of Hilton's father $16,683. After this, on Jan. 11, 1892, he collected from the administrator $11,351.74, the two sums so collected amounting in all to $28,034.74. On Dec. 22, 1896, Hilton and wife filed this suit against Porter, as trustee, and his surety, alleging that he had never settled his accounts and praying that he be required to settle his accounts, disclosing what property he had in his hands, and that judgment be entered for balance due them. At the February term, 1897, Porter resigned as trustee, and J. Whit Potter was appointed as trustee in his stead. Potter as trustee, was joined as party-plaintiff in the action; and the case was referred to a commissioner to make a settlement of the accounts of Porter, as trustee. The commissioner filed his report on May 25, 1897. In this report he showed that Porter, as trustee, had received in money $28,595.61; that $6,700 of this was invested in real estate; that he had otherwise expended $20,794.68, leaving a balance in his hands of $1,100.92. The plaintiffs and the present trustee filed exceptions to this report at that term, but these exceptions seem to have been lost and are not in the record. They also filed an amended petition and the case was referred back to the commissioner to take evidence and report further. At the December term, 1898, the papers in the case having been lost it was referred to the commissioner to supply the lost record, and at this term the commissioner filed supplemental report in which he showed what part of the estate had been turned over by Porter as trustee to his successor. The estate received by Porter as trustee consisted of certain Louisville city bonds and certain railroad bonds. The papers had been burned more or less and were in bad condition. The only thing that Porter turned over to his successor was the real estate and certain of the bonds which for one reason or another he had been unable to collect. At the February term 1904, nothing further having been done in the meantime, the case was reinstated upon the docket and the defendant Porter filed exceptions to the master's report. By these exceptions he showed that the estate was indebted to him in the sum of $4,872.91. At the May term, 1905, Porter filed amended exceptions, which he accompanied with a statement of his accounts from the beginning which showed that the estate was indebted to him in the sum of $1,662.76. On Nov. 20, 1906, the commissioner under an order of the court, revised his report of settlement in which he corrected some minor errors but brought out Porter to be in debt to the estate on practically the same amount as before. Exceptions were filed to this report by Porter and the case being heard by the court the exceptions were sustained, and it was adjudged that the estate was indebted to Porter in the sum of $1,362.76 with interest from May 25, 1897. From this judgment the plaintiffs appeal.

It is manifest from the proof that the appellee Porter has no adequate idea how he in fact stands with this estate. In one of his exceptions, as shown, he claimed that the estate owed him $4,872.91. In his statement of the account which he afterward filed he made the balance due him $1,662.76. The court entered a judgment in his favor for $1,362.76. He kept no proper account of his doings as trustee. He kept only a cash account and this cash account was so kept as to be of little value in the settlement for the reason that he frequently paid debts with stocks and bonds and credited himself for paying in cash. He has furnished us with no list of the stocks and bonds which he received and he furnished no adequate statement of what he did with the stocks and bonds, so that no intelligent statement can be made of his accounts from the data furnished by the record. In addition to this we are satisfied from the evidence that when Porter turned over the estate to his successor, in 1897, he did not conceive that the estate owed him $4,800 or $1,600 or $1,300 or any other sum. He may not have known then accurately how he stood but there is nothing in the record to indicate that he at any time understood that he was advancing money to Hilton outside of what was in his hands. It is incumbent on a trustee to keep an accurate account of his doings as such and no judgment will be entered by the chancellor against his cestui qui trusts, where, upon the showing made by the trustee, the mind is left in doubt as to how the account really stands; for to keep an accurate account is one of the primary duties of a trustee and if he has not kept an accurate account as trustee, the chancellor will give him no relief against his trust estate, when there is doubt as to how the account in truth stands. The evidence in the case at bar is not sufficient to warrant us in giving a judgment against the trustee; but the credits which he asks are involved in so much doubt that no judgment should be entered in his favor against the trust estate.

The judgment of the circuit court is reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to that court to enter a judgment offsetting the claims of the plaintiffs against the defendant and adjudging each party to pay one-half the cost in the circuit court.

UNITED STATES FIDELITY & GUARANTY COMPANY v. HOWES,
&c.

(Filed April 21, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Attachments—Wrongfully Sued Out—Where an attachment is wrongfully sued out, attorneys' fees may be recovered by the defendant on the bond. It is common in such cases to offer proof as to what is a reasonable fee, but the jury are not concluded by the evidence and may fix the fee at a different sum.

2. Clerical Error—It is manifest from the record that the use of the word "mineral" was a clerical error, and the case was properly taken from the jury and continued so as to have the order of the United States Circuit Court corrected in which suit was brought upon the attachment bond.

D. W. Steele, Jr., J. J. Montague and L. T. Everett for appellant.

C. B. Wheeler for appellees.

Appeal from Boyd Circuit Court.

Oponion of the court by Judge Hobson, affirming.

On February 27, 1902, the Kentucky Coal, Timber, Oil and Land Company brought an action in the United States Circuit Court for the eastern district of Kentucky against appellees to recover the sum of $2,800, and took out an attachment which was levied upon their property. To obtain the attachment it executed an attachment bond with the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company as its surety. During the progress of the action the court discharged the attachment, after which this action was brought by appellees against the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company upon the attachment bond to recover the damages which they had sustained by reason of the wrongful attachment which they alleged amounted to $1,175. The defendant filed answer controverting the allegations of the petition. The case was put on trial before a jury, and on the trial the plaintiffs, to sustain their allegation that the attachment had been discharged, offered in evidence an order of the United States Circuit Court in the caption of which the plaintiff was stated to be "The Kentucky Coal, Timber, Oil, Mineral & Land Co." It was insisted for the defendant that this order did not show that the attachment sued for had been discharged as the word, "Mineral," did not occur in the corporate name of the Kentucky Coal, Timber, Oil & Land Company, the plaintiff in that action. Upon a hearing of the motion to exclude the testimony, the court rejected the evidence, and thereupon, on the motion of the plaintiffs, withdrew the case from the jury and continued it for the purpose of giving the plaintiff an opportunity to have the order corrected in the court in which it was entered. The plaintiff filed an amended petition alleging that the word "Mineral" was a clerical error and that the order was in fact entered in the action referred to. At the next term of the court, the case came up for trial again and the plaintiff introduced evidence showing that the order was made in the action referred to and that the word "Mineral" in the corporate name of the plaintiff was an error of the clerk in entering it. On this evidence, which was uncontradicted, the jury found for the plaintiff in the sum of $550. The court entered judgment on the verdict and the defendant appeals.

It is manifest from the record that the order was entered in the case referred to and that the use of the word "Mineral" in the order was simply a clerical error. The circuit court erred, on the original trial, in excluding the evidence and, on the second trial, he properly admitted the evidence and submitted the case to the jury. The order of the court in connection with the opinion of the judge, which was a part of the record, and the other proceedings in the case, made out for the plaintiff a prima facie case without any other evidence. The copy of the attachment with the return made upon it showed that the plaintiff's property was levied upon, and sustained the allegations of the petition as to these matters. The deposition of the officer was properly admitted, however, to show more fully what he did and the nature of the loss sustained by the plaintiffs from the locking up of the store. As the plaintiffs made out their case on the first trial and the court erred in excluding the evidence, the defendant can not complain that the court set the case over for trial at another term.

Where an attachment is wrongfully sued out and is discharged, the defendant in the attachment may recover, on the attachment bond, his reasonable counsel fees in procuring the discharge of the attachment. While the evidence does not show that it would be a reasonable fee it does not show what the attorneys did and the amount of the fee which was paid them; and from this the jury were warranted in fixing a reasonable fee. It is common to offer proof in such cases by attorneys as to what is a reasonable fee, but when the lawyers have given their opinion the jury are not concluded by them and may fix the fee at a different sum. And so where there is no testimony by lawyers as to what is a reasonable fee, but it is shown what the lawyers did and how much they were paid, there is enough to warrant the submitting of the case to the jury; for, in the end, the jury must decide what is a reasonable fee.

The jury only allowed $550 for damages. The store was locked up from the time the attachment was levied until it was discharged, a period of 43 days. The defendants had to go to Covington, and were at considerable expense there in making their defense to the attachment issue. Their lawyers' fee was $350. In view of the expense the plaintiffs were at, the length of time the store was locked up, and their business was suspended, we can not say that the verdict for $550 is excessive.

Judgment affirmed.

RUSSELLVILLE HOME TELEPHONE CO. v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed April 21, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Telephones—Indictment for Cutting Down Shade Trees—Order Changing Name of Defendant—It was not error to permit the name of appellant to be changed from the one under which it was indicted to its true corporate name. (Section 125, Criminal Code.)

2. Shade Trees—Consent of Supervisor of Roads—Evidence—As the supervisor of roads did not know the boundary of the highway where the trees were cut, little importance is attached to his consent that they might be cut.

B. R. Crewdson for appellant.

James Breathitt and Theo. B. Blakey for appellee.

Appeal from Logan Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle, affirming.

Appellant was indicted, convicted and fined $60.00 in the court below, for cutting down three shade trees on the land of H. E. Orndorf without his consent. It is insisted by its able counsel that the conviction of appellant was illegal, and several grounds are urged for a reversal of the judgment of conviction.

First, it is contended that the indictment having been returned against the Home Telephone Company, it was error for the trial court to allow an order to be entered of record changing the name of the defendant to the Russellville Home Telephone Company, which is admitted to be the true corporate name of appellant. The change of name was properly made because expressly authorized by section 125, Criminal Code, which provides:

"An error as to the name of the defendant shall not vitiate the indictment, nor proceedings thereon, and if his true name be discovered at any time before execution, an entry shall be made on the record of the court of his true name, referring to the fact of his being indicted by the name mentioned in the indictment, and the subsequent proceedings shall be in the true name."

In Jenkins v. Commonwealth, 115 Ky., 62, it was held: "Jeff Jenkins, having been indicted under the name of Albert Jenkins, the style of the prosecution may be changed to Jeff Jenkins on the record, though a person by the name of Albert Jenkins lived in the county, and by mistake was first arrested."

(International Harvester Company v. Commonwealth, 30 Ky. Law Rep., 716; 99 S. W., 627.)

It is further contended by appellant that the trees cut were not shade trees. Section 1257, Kentucky Statutes, under which appellant was indicted, reads as follows:

"If any person shall willfully and unlawfully cut down or destroy, by belting, topping, or otherwise, any fruit or shade trees of another * * * destroy or injure the vegetables, trees, or shrubbery of another person, he shall be fined not less than $5.00 nor more than $500.00."

Manifestly, the two oaks and hickory tree appellant was charged with cutting were shade trees within the meaning of the section, supra. They stood upon Orndorff's land on the border of the public highway, and trees upon the highway are valuable for the shade they make for the benefit of those who travel the highway; and the owner's right to protect them from the axe was not lessened by the fact that other persons using the highway in common with him got the same enjoyment he received from the shade afforded by the trees when standing.

It is further contended by appellant that the trees in question were cut by the permission of the owner, Orndorf. This contention is not sustained by the record. It is true the telephone poles and attached lines had previously been erected at that point and from there through other parts of Orndorf's land, under an agreement that he should be paid for the damages resulting to the land; but the trees were cut sometime after the construction of the telephone line, in removing the telephone poles from where they were first planted and again putting them on his land. It is also true that Orndorf had theretofore recovered judgment against the telephone company for the damages resulting to his land by the construction of the telephone line, but this fact did not authorize the changing of the line upon his land after its erection, without his consent. In other words, Orndorf's consent that the telephone line might be constructed on one part of his land did not authorize the telephone company to thereafter change it to another part of the land over his objection.

The only serious objection made by appellant to its conviction is that the cutting of the trees in question was done by the employes of the Central Telephone Construction Company and not by appellant. On this question the proof is scant. S. J. Rose and those acting under his orders, in cutting the trees in question, claim to have represented and been in the employ of the Central Telephone Construction Company, and to have had permission of the supervisor of county roads to do the cutting. The testimony shows, however, that at that time Rose was also the manager of the appellant company, and further that the latter then had its wires upon and attached to the telephone poles which had previously been erected by the other company, including those changed when the trees were cut. It is true Rose also stated that the appellant company had not then commenced operating its line, though it was making arrangements to do so, and shortly thereafter did begin its operation. From this testimony it would appear that it was as much to the interest of the appellant company to change the poles and cut the trees, as that of the Central Telephone Construction Company. In other words, appellant's lines being then upon the poles, gave it an interest in them, and made it as necessary for the cutting of the trees to be done in its behalf as if its line were actually in operation at the time. It does not appear from the evidence whether appellant became the successor of the Central Telephone Construction Company in the ownership of the poles and lines in question, or whether the poles were thereafter used by both companies. In any event it had, at the time of cutting the trees, the same right to use the poles that was possessed by the other company. It can not be said, in view of the foregoing facts, that there was not some evidence authorizing the belief upon the part of the jury that appellant was responsible for the destruction of the three trees on Orndorf's land. This testimony, though slight, seemed to justify the submission of the case to the jury, and they, having found appellant guilty, we are not disposed to interfere with the verdict.

We attach little importance to the consent given by the supervisor of roads to the cutting of the trees in question, as his testimony conclusively shows that he did not know the boundary of the highway at the point of the cutting and could not say whether the trees were in the highway, or outside of it. He did express the opinion that they stood a few feet within the highway, which, if true, would have given him authority to have them cut and removed; but to show such authority it should have been made to appear, either from the records of the county court establishing the road, or other sufficient evidence, that the trees were upon the highway, and no such evidence was introduced.

The instructions are not objected to. They express with exceptional clearness and brevity the entire law of the case.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

SAGAMORE COAL COMPANY v. CLARK, &c.

(Filed April 21, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Contracts—Pleadings and Proof—Profits—In this action by appellee for damages occasioned by the alleged breach of a contract to remove stumps and pillars from a coal mine, the pleadings and proof show it to be a case where profits are recoverable.

2. Instructions—Measure of Damages—The instructions advised the jury that if they found for appellees they should allow them such a sum in damages as they would have earned under the contract by way of profits over and above the expense incurred in the work, and this instruction is approved. Appellant can not complain of an instruction given which was asked by it.

3. Pleading—The demurrer to the petition should have been overruled as the petition stated a good cause of action for the breach of the contract.

Rhorer, Ainsworth & Dawson and Chas. J. Dawson for appellant.

O. V. Riley for appellees.

Appeal from Bell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle, affirming.

This is an appeal from a judgment entered upon a verdict for $500.00 damages awarded appellees against appellant in the court below for a breach of contract.

The contract in question and breach thereof constituting appellees' cause of action are set forth in the petition as follows:

"Plaintiffs state that in the early part of the year, they and the defendant entered into a contract which had for its subject matter the removal of the stumps, pillars and all the coal in place, remaining in two parts of defendant's coal mine in Bell county, where entries, cross-entries, rooms and other mining openings had been previously made in obtaining that body of the coal therefrom; that the first of said parts from which said coal was to be removed, or in the language of coal mining operations, "robbed," consisted of the stumps, pillars and the coal in place in that part of defendant's mine which was between rooms numbers 1 to 12 inclusive, on the first right entry, and that the second of said parts, where said remaining coal was to be gotten out, according to said contract, consisted of the coal in stumps, pillars and walls in that part of defendant's mine which was on both sides of the main straight entry for the distance of 990 feet, and included the coal in the stumps and pillars between the rooms opening from said entries and that in the walls of the air course running parallel therewith.

Plaintiffs say that by the terms of said contract the said coal from the said first part of defendant's mine was to be first removed, and then the coal from the said second part was to be taken out; that the coal in said second part was near the side track, cleaner, more easily mined and hauled out and could have been gotten out by plaintiffs at much less cost than the coal in said first part, and that in said second part there was coal enough, which was to be removed, to have made or yielded 20,000 mining cars.

Plaintiffs say that in consideration of both said parts of defendant's mine being included in said contract, and in consideration of their getting to pull all of the coal from both of said parts, they agreed to mine, load, and haul out the coal in the said first part before commencing on the second part, at the price of 75 cents per car, for all of said coal; that the defendant agreed to allow the plaintiff to get out all of the coal in the said two parts; first removing the coal from the first part of its mine and then the coal from the second part, and it agreed to pay them the aforesaid price per mining car for all the coal, in both parts. That the "robbing" of the first part of defendant's mine was to begin and be completed as soon as plaintiff could reasonably do it, and the second part "robbed" as expeditiously as was reasonable.

Plaintiffs say that they employed a sufficient force of laborers, provided the necessary tools and other equipments and began the work of removing the coal in the stump, pillars and walls in the first part of defendant's mine in the month of February of said year and completed same on the 26th of June following; that they were then ready, willing and able to mine and haul out all the coal in the stumps, pillars and walls in the second part of the mine and offered to do so, and to begin same immediately upon the completion of the removal of the coal from the first part, but the defendant refused at the time to permit them to do so, or perform their part of said contract as to said second part of its mine, and has ever since refused to allow them to remove the coal therefrom."

"Plaintiffs further say that the actual cost of mining, loading and hauling out of the coal from said second part was and would have been only 65 cents per mining car, and had the defendant permitted them to have removed said coal from said second part of its mine, they would have realized as certain and net profit on the work, above the actual cost and necessary expense in performing their contract, the sum of $2,000, and by the defendant's refusal to perform the contract, it has damaged them in the sum of $2,000."

Appellant's answer admitted the contract as to part No. 1, of the mine, but denied that it extended to or included any agreement as to part No. 2. During the hearing of the evidence on the trial appellant tendered and was permitted to file an amended answer containing a denial of the averments of the petition as to the quantity of coal in part No. 2 of the mine, and charging an abandonment by appellees of the work as to part No. 2. The affirmative matter of the answer as amended was controverted by reply.

Appellant asked a new trial, and now asks a reversal of the judgment, upon the grounds, first, that the court erred in overruling its demurrer to the petition; second, in instructing the jury; third, in refusing the peremptory instruction asked by appellant.

Manifestly, the demurrer should have been overruled as the petition stated a good cause of action for a breach of the contract therein set forth.

The instructions given by the trial court, with one exception, to which attention will later be called, conformed to the issues made by the pleadings and were, therefore, proper, if there was any evidence upon which to base them, and there undoubtedly was such evidence. According to the testimony of appellees and their witnesses, appellees were employed by appellant's mine manager to remove from the mine the coal in the stumps, pillars and walls of parts numbered 1 and 2; number 1 to be worked first, and number 2 next, and that for the work they were to be paid at the rate of 75 cents per mining car for all the coal gotten out. Some of appellees' testimony was to the effect that as an inducement to appellees to undertake the contract, appellant's mine manager assured them they would make a profit of $2,000.00, on the work in part number 2. According to the evidence "robbing" a mine is more dangerous than ordinary mining, as the work of removing stumps and pillars constituting supports to the mine roof, to get the coal they contain often leaves the roof or upper walls of the mine without sufficient support and causes them to fall, to the great peril of the miners, hence, better compensation is allowed for such work, than in ordinary mining.

It is true that appellant's testimony differed from that of appellees, as it tended to prove that the contract between them and appellant did not include the removing of stumps, pillars, &c., from part number 2 of the mine, but this conflicting testimony was properly allowed to go to the jury and it will not do to say that appellees' version of the contract was unsupported by evidence. If the jury believed appellees and their witnesses, as they evidently did and had the right to do, there was ample testimony to authorize the verdict.

There was also a contrariety of evidence as to the quantity of coal in part number 2 of the mine, but it conduced to prove that little, if any, profit was made by appellees in mining part one and was sufficient to show that if appellees had been permitted to work part number 2 as provided by the contract, their profits therefrom, allowing 75 cents per car for getting out and removing the coal and deducting 65 cents per car as the cost of the work, would have amounted to a much larger sum than the verdict allowed them.

Appellant's testimony also tended to show that its mine manager had not authority to contract with appellees as to the coal in part 2 of the mine. On the other hand that of appellees' conduced to prove that he had such authority and that his act in including part number 2, was within the apparent scope of his powers as agent. So as to this feature of the case there was evidence to authorize the verdict. There was no evidence that conduced to prove an abandonment of the contract by appellees.

After the foregoing outline of the evidence it is hardly necessary to add that the peremptory instruction asked by appellant was properly refused by the trial court.

It is insisted for appellant that the jury should have been advised by the first instruction given, that in order to find for appellees they must not only believe from the evidence that the contract in question entitled them to remove the stumps and pillars of coal from part number 2, of the mine, but also that they were able, and ready and offered to do so, but were refused permission by appellant to do the work.

There is no ground for such a contention. The petition averred the ability and readiness of appellees to do the work in part number 2, and their offer to do so, and that appellant refused the offer and would not permit them to do the work. We do not find that any of these averments were denied by the answer, hence, there was no issue of fact on these points to submit to the jury. Appellant further complains that the instructions were wrong as to the measure of damages; that instead of advising the jury as was in substance done, that if they found for appellees, they should allow them damages in such sum as the evidence might show they would have earned under the contract by way of profits, if any, in working part number 2 of the appellant's mine, over and above the labor and other expense they would have incurred in such work, they should have been told that appellees could only recover the actual loss sustained by being deprived of working part 2 by the act of appellant, and that if during the time they would have been engaged in working part number 2 but for appellant's violation of the contract, they obtained and performed other mining work which paid them as much as they would have made by way of profits in working part number 2 of appellant's mine, they should find for appellant.

We can not sustain this contention, as it does not meet our view of the law. However, instruction number 4, given by the trial court, to which reference was earlier made in the opinion, practically conforms to the theory of appellant's counsel as to the measure of damages, of which instruction appellant cannot complain as it was highly prejudicial to appellees.

In our opinion the pleadings and proof in this case show it to be one in which profits are recoverable.

In Blood, &c. v. Herring, &c., 22 Ky. Law Rep., 1725, one of the questions involved was as to the measure of damages; the case being one in which the appellees, for a stipulated price, agreed to saw for appellants 400,000 feet of lumber and put it on barges; after appellees had sawed and placed in barges 186,000 feet of lumber appellants refused to permit them to saw any more under the contract. Appellees then sued to recover of appellants the damages resulting from their violation of the contract. With respect to the criterion of damages the court held (quoting from the syllabus): "That the profits are recoverable as the direct and immediate fruits of the contract and must have been in the contemplation of the parties when the agreement was entered into, but the court should have instructed the jury that the true test was the difference between the actual cost to appellees of putting the lumber on the barges and the contract price. The court properly directed the jury to disregard the appellees' claim for loss of time as they can not recover both the estimated profits and for the loss of time." (Elizabethtown and Paducah R. R. Co. v. Pottinger, 10 Bush, 188.)

The two cases cited above are decisive of the case at bar in so far as the measure of damage is concerned.

The record disclosing no error by which appellant's rights have been prejudiced, the judgment is affirmed.

have realized as certain and net profit on the work, above the actual cost and necessary expense in performing their contract, the sum of $2,000, and by the defendant's refusal to perform the contract, it has damaged them in the sum of $2,000."

Appellant's answer admitted the contract as to part No. 1, of the mine, but denied that it extended to or included any agreement as to part No. 2. During the hearing of the evidence on the trial appellant tendered and was permitted to file an amended answer containing a denial of the averments of the petition as to the quantity of coal in part No. 2 of the mine, and charging an abandonment by appellees of the work as to part No. 2. The affirmative matter of the answer as amended was controverted by reply.

Appellant asked a new trial, and now asks a reversal of the judgment, upon the grounds, first, that the court erred in overruling its demurrer to the petition; second, in instructing the jury; third, in refusing the peremptory instruction asked by appellant.

Manifestly, the demurrer should have been overruled as the petition stated a good cause of action for a breach of the contract therein set forth.

The instructions given by the trial court, with one exception, to which attention will later be called, conformed to the issues made by the pleadings and were, therefore, proper, if there was any evidence upon which to base them, and there undoubtedly was such evidence. According to the testimony of appellees and their witnesses, appellees were employed by appellant's mine manager to remove from the mine the coal in the stumps, pillars and walls of parts numbered 1 and 2; number 1 to be worked first, and number 2 next, and that for the work they were to be paid at the rate of 75 cents per mining car for all the coal gotten out. Some of appellees' testimony was to the effect that as an inducement to appellees to undertake the contract, appellant's mine manager assured them they would make a profit of $2,000.00, on the work in part number 2. According to the evidence "robbing" a mine is more dangerous than ordinary mining, as the work of removing stumps and pillars constituting supports to the mine roof, to get the coal they contain often leaves the roof or upper walls of the mine without sufficient support and causes them to fall, to the great peril of the miners, hence, better compensation is allowed for such work, than in ordinary mining.

It is true that appellant's testimony differed from that of appellees, as it tended to prove that the contract between them and appellant did not include the removing of stumps, pillars, &c., from part number 2 of the mine, but this conflicting testimony was properly allowed to go to the jury and it will not do to say that appellees' version of the contract was unsupported by evidence. If the jury believed appellees and their witnesses, as they evidently did and had the right to do, there was ample testimony to authorize the verdict.

There was also a contrariety of evidence as to the quantity of coal in part number 2 of the mine, but it conduced to prove that little, if any, profit was made by appellees in mining part one and was sufficient to show that if appellees had been permitted to work part number 2 as provided by the contract, their profits therefrom, allowing 75 cents per car for getting out and removing the coal and deducting 65 cents per car as the cost of the work, would have amounted to a much larger sum than the verdict allowed them.

Appellant's testimony also tended to show that its mine manager had not authority to contract with appellees as to the coal in part 2 of the mine. On the other hand that of appellees' conduced to prove that he had such authority and that his act in including part number 2, was within the apparent scope of his powers as agent. So as to this feature of the case there was evidence to authorize the verdict. There was no evidence that conduced to prove an abandonment of the contract by appellees.

After the foregoing outline of the evidence it is hardly necessary to add that the peremptory instruction asked by appellant was properly refused by the trial court.

It is insisted for appellant that the jury should have been advised by the first instruction given, that in order to find for appellees they must not only believe from the evidence that the contract in question entitled them to remove the stumps and pillars of coal from part number 2, of the mine, but also that they were able, and ready and offered to do so, but were refused permission by appellant to do the work.

There is no ground for such a contention. The petition averred the ability and readiness of appellees to do the work in part number 2, and their offer to do so, and that appellant refused the offer and would not permit them to do the work. We do not find that any of these averments were denied by the answer, hence, there was no issue of fact on these points to submit to the jury. Appellant further complains that the instructions were wrong as to the measure of damages; that instead of advising the jury as was in substance done, that if they found for appellees, they should allow them damages in such sum as the evidence might show they would have earned under the contract by way of profits, if any, in working part number 2 of the appellant's mine, over and above the labor and other expense they would have incurred in such work, they should have been told that appellees could only recover the actual loss sustained by being deprived of working part 2 by the act of appellant, and that if during the time they would have been engaged in working part number 2 but for appellant's violation of the contract, they obtained and performed other mining work which paid them as much as they would have made by way of profits in working part number 2 of appellant's mine, they should find for appellant.

We can not sustain this contention, as it does not meet our view of the law. However, instruction number 4, given by the trial court, to which reference was earlier made in the opinion, practically conforms to the theory of appellant's counsel as to the measure of damages, of which instruction appellant cannot complain as it was highly prejudicial to appellees.

In our opinion the pleadings and proof in this case show it to be one in which profits are recoverable.

In Blood, &c. v. Herring, &c., 22 Ky. Law Rep., 1725, one of the questions involved was as to the measure of damages; the case being one in which the appellees, for a stipulated price, agreed to saw for appellants 400,000 feet of lumber and put it on barges; after appellees had sawed and placed in barges 186,000 feet of lumber appellants refused to permit them to saw any more under the contract. Appellees then sued to recover of appellants the damages resulting from their violation of the contract. With respect to the criterion of damages the court held (quoting from the syllabus): "That the profits are recoverable as the direct and immediate fruits of the contract and must have been in the contemplation of the parties when the agreement was entered into, but the court should have instructed the jury that the true test was the difference between the actual cost to appellees of putting the lumber on the barges and the contract price. The court properly directed the jury to disregard the appellees' claim for loss of time as they can not recover both the estimated profits and for the loss of time." (Elizabethtown and Paducah R. R. Co. v. Pottinger, 10 Bush, 188.)

The two cases cited above are decisive of the case at bar in so far as the measure of damage is concerned.

The record disclosing no error by which appellant's rights have been prejudiced, the judgment is affirmed.

CITY OF LATONIA, &c. v. LATONIA AGRICULTURAL ASSOCIATION.

(Filed April 22, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Municipalities—Streets—Adverse Holding—Notice—Limitation—Statutory Provision—Construction—Section 2546, Kentucky Statutes, provides, "that limitation shall not begin to run in respect to action by any town or city for the recovery of any street or other public easement until the trustees or council have been notified by the party in possession to the effect that such possession is adverse to the right of such city or town, and until such notice is given all such possession shall be deemed amicable," Held—That to meet the requirements of the statute the easements must exist as public highways and must be in the city during the period of adverse holding in order to prevent the statute from running.

2. Same—Dedication of Streets—Acceptance—Presumption—Continued Possession—Record of Plat—The dedication of a street or alley to the use of the public to be effectual must be accepted by the corporation, and the presumption of acceptance is rebutted by the fact of the continued possession thereof by the original proprietor and his vendees although such dedication be evidenced by the recording of a plat of the town and the sale of lots.

3. Enclosure of Street or Alley—Possession—Limitation—After the enclosure and use of an alley for 15 years it is too late for the trustees of a town to urge an acceptance of its dedication to the public or to assert a right to the land.

Hazelrigg, Chenault & Hazelrigg, O. P. Schmidt and J. L. Elliston for appellants.

Harvey Meyers for appellee.

Appeal from Kenton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker, affirming.

The question involved in this record is the authority of the city of Latonia (sixth class) to open certain named streets which it is claimed run through the property of the Latonia Agricultural Association.

The litigation arose as follows: The authorities of Latonia, under ordinance, were about to, or were threatening to tear down the fences and other improvements of the appellee for the purpose of opening and extending the streets through its grounds. To prevent this, appellee filed a bill in equity to obtain an injunction restraining these alleged wrongful acts. The city answered, among other things, alleging that the streets in question were public streets or highways; that the appellee was wrongfully in possession of them, and was wrongfully withholding their use from the public.

The claim of the city to the streets in question is deduced as follows: In 1869 one George W. Jones (his wife being the owner in fee), made a plat of her farm, which was situated in Kenton county, outside of the limits of the city of Covington, laying off the land into what were called town lots and dividing them by named streets and alleys. This plat was called Jones' sub-division of South Covington, and was recorded in the county court of Kenton county. Mrs. Jones (the wife) did not join in this attempted dedication of her land to public use, but afterwards she joined her husband in conveying some of the lots to purchasers, and in the deeds the plat was recognized by describing the lots. And this, it is said, fully ratified the original act of the husband, if that was necessary.

In 1894 the town of Latonia was organized as a city of the sixth class, and afterwards, in 1900, its boundaries were so extended as to annex a part of the property of the appellee corporation, and thereupon the city claims arose its right, theretofore in abeyance, to open the streets in question.

The appellee, on the other hand, alleges the following claim to the streets and alleys involved in this litigation: It was chartered, and fully authorized to do the various things it afterwards did, in 1882. It bought from Jones and wife something less than two hundred acres of land, being all of the former town site except a few lots which had been sold to various people prior to appellee's purchase. It bought all of the lots owned by outside purchasers, so as to solidify its boundary, and then it enclosed the whole of its property with a close plank fence about eight feet high, and upon the enclosure laid off a regulation mile track, built a grandstand, betting sheds, stables, &c., and has there operated and maintained a race track, called by the public "The Latonia Race Track," ever since.

As we see it, the main question in this case will readily turn upon the plea of limitation, and we will proceed to examine that issue.

The plaintiff pleads and relies upon adverse possession for more than fifteen years in bar of the city's right to open the streets through its grounds, and there can be no sort of doubt that the evidence shows, without attempt at contradiction, that it has had the whole property enclosed with a high plank fence since 1882, and during all of the time, without intermission, it has occupied it as a race track under a claim of adverse right to all the world. It only remains, therefore, to see whether there is anything in the statute of limitations which prohibits its running against the claim of the city to open the streets. The provisions of the statute bearing on the subject are as follows:

"Section 2546. The limitations mentioned in the first article of this chapter shall not begin to run in respect to actions by any town or city for the recovery of any street, alley, or other public easement, or any part of either, or the use thereof in such town or city, until the trustees, or the council or the corporation, by whatever name known or called, have been notified, in writing, by the party in possession, or about to take possession, to the effect that such possession will be adverse to the right or title of such town or city. Until such notice is given, all possession of streets, alleys and public easements, or any part of either, in any town or city, shall be deemed amicable, and the person in possession the tenant at will of such town or city.

"Section 2547. Limitation shall not begin to run in favor of any person in the possession of any public road, or of any part thereof, until written notice shall be given to the county court of the county in which the road is situated, that such possession is adverse to the right of the public to the use of such road."

It will be observed that the operation of the first of the foregoing sections is limited to the right of a municipality to bring an action to recover the use of a street, alley, or other public easement in the city. To meet the requirements of the statute, the easements must exist as public highways, and must be in the city during the period of adverse holding in order to prevent the statute from running; and, under the provisions of the second section above quoted, the road must exist as a public highway of the county, while being adversely held, to stop the statute from running against the county. The object of both sections is clearly to prevent the secret appropriation of public highways by adverse possession. The important question, then, is: Were the streets involved here ever public highways, either of the city or the county?

Assuming, for the purposes of the case, that Jones and wife, by what they jointly and severally did in the premises, dedicated the streets and alleys shown on the plat of the Jones sub-division to public use as far as they had the power so to do, did they thereby become public highways within the meaning of the sections of the statute above quoted? There is no pretense that the county of Kenton, or the city of Latonia, or any other public authority, ever expressly accepted the streets in question, or ever did such work on, or exercise such supervision over, them as would imply an acceptance. The question of law, then, arises: Can a public highway be established by dedication except by an acceptance, either express or implied, by the public?

In the case of Trustees of Lagrange v. Bain, &c., 4 Ky. Law Rep., 256, the very question we have here arose, and it was there held by this court that the dedication of streets and alleys to the use of the public, to be effectual, must be accepted by the corporation; and that the presumption of acceptance by the corporation is rebutted by the fact of the continued possession by the original proprietor, and particularly his vendees, although the dedication be evidenced by the recording of a plat of the town and sale of lots. After the inclosure and use of an alley for fifteen years, it is too late for the trustees of the corporation to urge an acceptance of its dedication to the public or to assert a right to the land.

In the case of Wilkins v. Barnes, &c., 79 Ky., 323, it is said: "And, therefore, where a dedication is claimed to have been made to the public, reason and authority require, as a protection to the land owners, the acceptance of the dedication to be made by the constituted representative of the public in its organic capacity, upon its records, or by such acts of control or recognition as will furnish a presumption of their existence."

The foregoing excerpt was cited, and the principle it contains approved in Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. Survant, 96 Ky., 197; and in addition it was said: "A public road can only be established in two ways. One is in the manner prescribed by the statute, the other by dedication; and in the latter case it must be accepted by the county court."

In the case of Gedge, &c. v. Commonwealth, 9 Bush, 61, the court said: "The right in Wall to make the dedication of the ground to be used as a street or highway is unquestioned, but such a dedication does not compel the town of Cynthiana to improve the street or keep it in repair. If the act dedicating the land makes it a street or highway, then it is within the power of any person to compel a town or county to improve or keep in repair a highway, whether desired or not. There must be some acceptance of the dedication, by the town if a street, or by the county court if a public road, before an indictment can be maintained against those whose duty it is to keep the street or road in repair, or against one or more for a nuisance in obstructing the travel, &c." (Cochran v. Town of Shepherdsville, 19 Ky. Law Rep., 1192.) It follows from this authority, that the so-called streets in question were not technically highways, and the adverse possession of appellee for the statutory period, barred appellant's right to accept and open them after the land was annexed.

The case of City of Covington v. Hall, 30 Ky. Law Rep., 356, does not militate against the principle herein established. It is true there is some general resemblance in the facts of that case and the case at bar. It was held in the case cited, that Mrs. Hall was estopped by the recitation in the deed under which she held her property, that St. Louis street was a public highway of the city of Covington, there having been conveyed to her only so much of the property "as is not dedicated for streets and alleys by the plat of land of said Patch."

The principle established there has no application here. The property in question was outside of the city of Latonia at the time of the attempted dedication by the Jones plat. The attempt to establish a town on the Jones farm had been abandoned. The appellee purchased all the property platted except a few lots, buying out all adverse interests of lot holders within its boundary. It held the property adversely for more than fifteen years before the right of the city of Latonia (assuming it to have a right) to claim the streets arose, or could have arisen. The bar of the statute was complete long before the city of Latonia annexed the property of appellee. It has erected upon the land improvements said to be worth from two hundred thousand to two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. To permit the city to project the streets in question through its property now would be to entail upon it a complete loss of the property as a race track. No court would permit this to be done without the establishment on the part of the city of a clear legal right so to do. This the city has failed to do, and we concur in the opinion of the chancellor, that the injunction restraining the public authorities from interfering with the property of the appellee should be perpetuated.

Judgment affirmed.

COMMONWEALTH v. MURPHY.

(Filed April 22, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Criminal Prosecution—Total Failure of Proof—Peremptory Instruction—Duty of Court—The trial court has the same authority to give a peremptory instruction in a criminal prosecution as in a civil action, and where the evidence by the Commonwealth wholly fails to incriminate the defendant it is not only the right, but the duty of the trial judge to instruct the jury to return a verdict of not guilty.

2. Same—Slight Evidence—It is not, however, within the province of the trial court to take from the jury a criminal prosecution if there is any evidence, however slight, conducing to show the guilt of the defendant in any of its degrees mentioned in the Criminal Code.

Loraine Mix and James Breathitt for appellant.

Aaron Kohn and J. T. O'Neal for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Criminal Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, certifying the law.

The appellee was indicted in the criminal division of the Jefferson Circuit Court, presided over by Judge Joseph Pryor, charged with the murder of Catherine L. Bryant, caused in producing, or attempting to produce, an abortion upon her.

Upon the conclusion of the evidence for the Commonwealth the trial judge directed the jury to return a verdict of not guilty, resting his conclusion upon the ground that there was a total failure of proof upon the part of the Commonwealth to connect the accused with the commission of the crime. The trial judge has the same right and authority to give a peremptory instruction in a criminal proceeding that he has in a civil action. And if the evidence introduced in behalf of the Commonwealth fails to incriminate the defendant, or is wholly insufficient to show that he is guilty of the offense charged, it is not only the right, but the duty of the trial judge to instruct the jury to return a verdict of not guilty. It is not, however, within the province of the trial court to take from the jury a criminal prosecution if there is any evidence, however slight it may be, conducing to show that the defendant is guilty of the offense charged, or any of its degrees mentioned in the Code. This rule of practice is not found directly in either the Code or the Statutes, but it is firmly established as a part of the criminal jurisprudence of the State, and is uniformly applied by this court in considering appeals in criminal cases when a reversal is asked because the verdict is flagrantly against the evidence, or is not supported by sufficient evidence and should control the lower courts in the disposition of criminal cases. (Vowels v. Commonwealth, 83 Ky., 193; Patterson v. Commonwealth, 86 Ky., 313; Green v. Commonwealth, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 1221; Martin v. Commonwealth, 32 Ky. Law Rep., 657.)

Although the disposition of this appeal will not affect the accused, as the verdict of acquittal under the direction of the court operated to free her from the accusation, and to prevent a subsequent prosecution for the same offense, yet, as an appeal has been prosecuted by the Attorney General of the State, under section 337, of the Criminal Code, providing in part that "if the Attorney General, on inspecting the record, be satisfied that error has been committed to the prejudice of the Commonwealth, upon which it is important to the correct and uniform administration of the criminal law, that the Court of Appeals should decide * * * he may take an appeal."

We have examined, with great care, the evidence for the purpose of determining whether or not there was any testimony conducing to show that appellee Murphy was guilty of the crime charged against her. Our conclusion is that there was not, and that the trial judge correctly directed the jury to return a verdict of not guilty. Under the indictment, it was indispensable to make out a case for the Commonwealth authorizing a submission to the jury that some evidence should be introduced tending to establish, first, that Catherine L. Bryant's death was produced by an abortion or an attempted abortion; second, that appellee Murphy was guilty of producing, or attempting to produce, the abortion from which she died, if this was the cause of her death, although proof of either, or both of these facts, could have been made by circumstantial evidence. (Johnson v. Commonwealth, 81 Ky., 325; Laughlin v. Commonwealth, 18 Ky. Law Rep., 641; Flinchem v. Commonwealth, 28 Ky. Law Rep., 653; Roberson's Criminal Law, section 151.) There is some evidence by Drs. Weidner and Spears, who made an examination of the organs of the deceased several days after her death, after the post mortem examination had been held, and the organs examined by them had been subjected to other tests, that there were slight indications of injury, such as might have been produced in an attempt to commit an abortion, although Dr. Woody, the surgeon who performed the autopsy on the body of the deceased for the purpose of ascertaining the cause of her death, testified that there were no evidences whatever of an attempt to commit an abortion, or that her death resulted from this cause. While it is doubtful if the evidence of Drs. Weidner and Spears was sufficient to show that Catherine L. Bryant came to her death from an attempt to commit an abortion upon her person, yet conceding it was, this would not be sufficient to authorize a submission of the case in the absence of some evidence conducing to show that the abortion, or the attempted abortion, was committed by the accused. Upon this point, there was a total failure of proof. There was no evidence whatever tending, in any degree, to establish that the accused either committed, or attempted to commit, an abortion upon the person of the deceased.

This opinion is ordered to be certified to the lower court as the law of this court.

NELSON v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed April 22, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Attorneys at law—Disbarment—Power of Courts—Section 97, Kentucky Statutes, provides that “no person convicted of reason or felony shall be permitted to practice in any court as counsel or attorney at law.” Section 98, sub-section 2, requires that “a person desiring to practice law in this State shall first procure a certificate from the county judge of the county of his residence that he is a person of honesty, probity and good moral character.” In this State the courts have the power, independent of the statute, to disbar an attorney who has been guilty of forgery, upon the ground that the commission of the offense shows that he is lacking in those qualities which are necessary for him to possess in order to continue as an attorney at law.

2. Same—Conviction for Forgery—Pardon by Governor—Effect of Disbarment—While the effect of a pardon by the Governor, of an attorney who has been convicted of forgery, is to relieve him of the penal consequences of his act, it could not restore his character or re-invest him with those qualities which are absolutely essential for an attorney at law to possess.

C. H. Wilson and G. W. Landrum for appellant.

James Breathitt and Chas. H. Morris for appellee.

Appeal from Livingston Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Wm. Rogers Clay, Commissioner, affirming.

By a judgment of the Livingston Circuit Court, entered on December 16, 1907, the appellant, M. C. Nelson, was disbarred from the practice of the law in all the courts of this Commonwealth. From that judgment he prosecutes this appeal.

It appears from the record that appellant, at the April term, 1907, of the Livingston Circuit Court, was indicted for the crime of forgery. At the December term of said court the case was called for trial. Appellant waived formal arraignment and entered a plea of guilty. A jury was impanelled, and, after hearing the evidence and being instructed by the court, returned the following verdict: “We, the jury, fix the defendant’s punishment at two years in the State penitentiary.” During the same term appellant filed a pardon from the Governor of Kentucky. Excluding its formal provisions, the pardon is in words and figures as follows:

“Now, know ye, that in consideration of the premises and by virtue of the power vested in me by the Constitution, I do hereby grant unto the said M. C. Nelson a full and free pardon for said offense, and do order that he be forthwith liberated from confinement, and released from all liability in consequence of said judgment of conviction, and I direct that all officers of this State respect this pardon.”

Upon the filing of the pardon the court ordered appellant released from custody. At the same time the court ruled Nelson to appear and show cause why he should not be disbarred as an attorney at law. At the hearing of the disbarment proceedings appellant introduced and re-filed the pardon theretofore obtained. The trial court held that the pardon was no defense to the disbarment proceedings, and entered judgment accordingly. The record does not disclose what occurred at the hearing; it simply shows that appellant was made to appear, and upon his appearance tendered his pardon. The only error complained of is the failure of the court to adjudge that the pardon was a bar to the disbarment proceedings; we are, therefore, confined to a consideration of that question alone.

It is the contention of appellant that, by the terms of the pardon, he was released from all liability and consequences of the judgment of conviction; that section 97, Kentucky Statutes, provides that "no person convicted of treason or felony shall be permitted to practice in any court as counsel or attorney at law;" that this statute creates a liability which is connected with the offense of which appellant was convicted, and that the pardon, therefore, released him from such liability. We must admit that there are very respectable authorities which support, or tend to support, the position of appellant. Thus in the case of Penobscot Bar v. Kimball, 64 Me., 150, where an attorney was guilty of having forged a deposition and of having offered the same in court, and produced a pardon from the executive for the offense of forgery, the court held that the effect of the pardon was not only to release the attorney from the punishment prescribed for that offense and to prevent the penalties and disabilities consequent thereupon, but also to blot out the guilt thus incurred, so that in the eye of the law he was as innocent of that offense as if he had never committed it; that the pardon made a new man in respect to that particular offense, and gave him a new credit and capacity; that to exclude him from the office he held when he committed the offense would be to enforce a punishment for it notwithstanding the pardon. The court, however, upheld the disbarment proceedings upon the ground that the attorney had offered the forged deposition in court, and that this was a violation of his official oath, and another offense for which he had not been pardoned.

In the case of Scott v. State, 6 Tex. (Civ. App), 343, the court held that under the statutes of Texas, a pardon for an offense was a complete bar to and disbarment proceedings on account of that offense.

Likewise it has been held that the effect of a pardon, unless limited by its terms, is to restore to the offender personal rights and privileges forfeited by his conviction, and these include the privilege to follow his professional calling or means of livelihood. Thus, where by statute a conviction of felony worked a disqualification to sell liquors by retail, it was held that a pardon removed the disqualification. (Hay v. Justices, 24 Q. B. D., 561.) And where, by participation in rebellion against the Federal government an attorney at law, practicing in the Federal courts, became disqualified, it was held that by accepting a full pardon from the President and taking the required oath of allegiance he became entitled to resume practice. (Ex. p. Law, 35 Ga., 285 U. S. Dist. Ct., So. Dist. of Ga.)

On the contrary, it has been held that while the general effect of a pardon, as to the restoration of rights and privileges and the creating of a new credit and capacity may be conceded, the fact that a pardon has been granted to a person convicted of an offense can not warrant the assertion that such a person is as honest, reliable and fit to hold a public office as if he had constantly maintained the character of a law-abiding citizen; hence it has been held that the fact that a person has been convicted of offenses disqualifying him to hold the position of a police officer is not altered or affected by the pardon, and he may still be held unfit for the office. (Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law, volume 24, page 588; State v. Hawkins, 44 Ohio St., 117.)

In the matter of "E," formerly an attorney, 65 How. Pr. (N. Y.), 171, it appears that "E" had been twice convicted of perjury, and had been warned to appear and show cause why he should not be disbarred. While the matter was pending, the Governor pardoned "E," who afterwards moved the court to vacate the order by which he had been disbarred, on the ground that he had been pardoned. The court, in passing upon this ground, said:

"In the matter of Niles (48 How., 246), it was held that by conviction and sentence for a crime punishable in the State Prison, the office of an attorney and counselor was forfeited, that such forfeiture was like that of the forfeiture of any other public office, and was not a temporary suspension. If this view is sound, and we are inclined to think that it is, then the conviction and sentence had worked a forfeiture to 'E' of the office of attorney and counselor, and the pardon does not re-instate him. In that view he stands very much as if he had held some office, as for instance that of county judge, his pardon would not have re-instated him in office."

In the matter of ———, an attorney, 86 N. Y., 563, where the attorney disbarred had been tried and convicted of forgery, the learned Chief Justice very ably discussed the question involved, and we quote from him at length as follows:

"It is contended that the executive pardon of that offense had wholly blotted it out, and has given him new credit and capacity, and that, in the eye of the law, he is as innocent as if he had never committed the offense. (Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall, 380; In re Deming, 10 Johns, 232, 483.) Doubtless the effect of the pardon is that, so far as the violation of the criminal law, the offense against the public, is concerned, he is to be looked upon as innocent thereof. The pardon does reach the offense for which he was convicted, and does blot it out, so that he may not now be looked upon as guilty of it. But it can not wipe out the act that he did, which was adjudged an offense. It was done, and will remain a fact for all time. Notwithstanding the extensive language used in Ex parte Garland (supra) and In re Deming (supra), and that which we have used, there are limits to the effect of such a pardon. The word pardon includes a remission of the offense, or of the penalties, forfeitures or sentences growing out of it.' (Per Edmonds, J., The People v. Potter, 1 Park, Cr. 51.) The pardoned man is relieved from all the consequences which the law has annexed to the commission of the public offense of which he has been pardoned, and attains new credit and capacity, as if he had never committed that public offense. (In re Deming, supra.) Yet the pardon does very little toward removing the other consequences which result from the crime. (Per Bronson, J., 5 Hill, supra.) It does not restore offices forfeited, or property or interests vested in others in consequence of the conviction and judgment (Ex parte Garland, supra; In re Deming, supra); and it has been said that it does not restore the capacity for civil office. (Commonwealth v. Fugate, 2 Leigh. [Va.], 724.) We do not, at this time, follow that case to that length. It can not take away the right of an informer to his part of a fine or penalty fixed by the law upon the commission of the offense (3 Inst., 238; Rowe v. State, 2 Bay, S. C., 565); nor the perfected right to a moiety of the penalty going to the custom-house officer U. S. v. Lancaster, 4 Wash., C. C., 64); nor the costs of the prosecution. (Holliday v. People, 5 Gilman, Ill., 214; 2 Bay, supra; Ex parte McDonald, 2 Whart, 440; The King v. Amery, 2 T. R., 515, 569.) Judge Thompson, of the United States Supreme Court bench, charged a jury, that though a pardon restored the person to competency as a witness, it did not give back credibility to him, and that they should not believe a witness in that plight unless his testimony was corroborated. (U. S. v. Jones, 2 Wheeler's Cr. Cas. 461.) And so Bronson, Jr., said in Baum v. Clause, (5 Hill, 196), 'Pardon removes the legal infamy of the crime, * * * but can not * * * wash out the moral stain;' 'the crime still goes to the credit of the witness,' citing 1 Phil. on Ev., 35; 1 Strakie on Ev. (ed. of 1842), 100. Elghmy v. The People, 78 N. Y., 330.) The effect of a pardon is to protect from punishment for the crime committed, and for no other. (Case of Nicholas, Foster's Cr. Law, 64.) That case shows, too, that though the pardon would wipe out the offense against the public of an act in one stage of progress of the effects of it, it will not affect the public offense of the same act in a further stage of its progress. The act there was giving poison. The subject languished, but did not die. An act of Parliament was meanwhile passed, pardoning public offenses, with some exceptions among which was murder. Had the subject not died from the poison, the act of Parliament would have taken in the guilty man's case, and freed him from the legal consequences of his act. But, after the passage of the act, and within a year and a day, the subject died from the poison, and then the giving of it was murder. It was held that the general pardon by the act of Parliament did not relieve the felon from the penalty of his act, though it did relieve him until the death ensued.

"Though it is held that one pardoned for a larceny may maintain an action of slander against him who says he is a thief, and that justificatory proof of the thieving act is overcome by proof of the pardon (Cuddington v. Wilkins, Hobart, 67, 81b), yet it is said there that Wilkins might say that Cuddington had been a thief. (Id. 81b.) It is also said in the case in Hobart (supra) that it might well be said that a man, not knowing of the pardon, might justify apprehending him for the felony because it was for the advancement of justice. A justification thus made would, of necessity, be on proof that would show the criminal act and the former guilt of the pardoned man.

"We have cited these instances to maintain, by authority, our position that, though the pardon obliterates the offense against the public the infraction of the criminal law, relieves the offender from the punishment affixed to it by that law, washes him white from the guilt that the criminal law saw in the act, and frees him from the disabilities consequent upon the act as a guilty act against the public; it does not annul the act and relieve from all consequences of it. For a pardon can not take away the consequences of the act where private justice is principally concerned. (4 Bl. Com. 398.)"

To the same effect is the case In re Davis, 93 Pa. St., 116.

By the statutes in force in this State, it is necessary to procure from the county judge of the county of the residence of the applicant a certificate to the effect that the applicant is a person of honesty, probity and good moral character, before obtaining a license to practice law; and the license so obtained only authorizes the person to whom it is granted, to practice as an attorney or counselor at law for and during good behavior in said practice.

In the recent case of Underwood v. Commonwealth, 105 S. W., 151. wherein the county attorney of Barren county had been twice convicted of the offense of retailing intoxicating liquor in violation of the local option law, and had also been indicted for accepting a bribe to shield others from prosecution, this court held that he was properly disbarred from the practice of the law, and, in discussing the case, said:

"The charge of bribery may be laid out of the case. It was denied. There was no evidence. A mere indictment is not enough to justify disbarment of an attorney. He must be at least guilty of the offense charged in the indictment, and, while neither indictment nor conviction of the offense is essential as a prerequisite to the proceedings to disbar an attorney (Baker v. Commonwealth, 10 Bush, 592), guilt of some act which shows him to be unfit, or no longer entitled to confidence, must be established. To be admitted to the bar, a person must not only be learned in the law, but possess a character of honesty, probity, and good demeanor. A certificate of such character, furnished by the county court of his residence, is a prerequisite to the granting of the license. It is the possession of the character described that entitled him to admission to the bar, allowing that, he is able to pass the requisite examination touching his learning. The continued possession of character is as essential to maintain his relation as an attorney at law, as it is to have it in the first instance to be admitted. The office is one peculiarly of confidence. Not only do his clients repose trust in his integrity, but as an officer of the court in the matter of administering justice, his privileges and duties are such as to constantly call for the exercise of fidelity, both to his client and to the State. A lawyer without good character is not only a reproach to his profession, but he brings into public distrust, and is a very menace to, the administration of justice itself. All courts have, as an incident to the power to admit attorneys to their bar, the power to disbar them for such conduct as shows they are not longer worthy of confidence. It is not necessary that the misconduct should be such as would render him liable to criminal prosecution. If it shows that he is unfit to discharge the duties of his office, is unworthy of confidence, even though the conduct is outside of his professional dealings, it is sufficient. If he is not honest, if he is not moral, if he is not of good demeanor, he may be disbarred, and should be. His office is a very badge of respectability, a patent of trustworthiness, derived from his position on the court's roll of counsel. He ought not to be suffered to pass for what he is not."

Thus it will be seen that, while the Kentucky Statute provides that no person convicted of treason or felony shall be permitted to practice law, this statute is simply confirmatory of the right and power already existing in the courts to disbar an attorney who does not possess a character for honesty, probity, and good demeanor. We think a careful analysis of those decisions holding that an attorney can not be disbarred for an offense for which he has been pardoned, shows that the rule is confined to those cases where disbarment is a part of the penalty for the offense, and the courts have no inherent power to disbar except for a conviction of the offense. In this State, however, the courts have the power, independently of the statute above referred to, to disbar an attorney who has been guilty of forgery, upon the ground that the commission of the offense shows that he is lacking in those qualities which are necessary for him to possess in order to continue as an attorney at law. As is well said in the case last cited, "neither indictment nor conviction of the offense is essential as a prerequisite to the proceedings to disbar an attorney," but "guilt of some act which shows him to be unfit, or no longer entitled to confidence, must be established." In this case appellant pleaded guilty. This plea was made in the presence of the court. No other evidence was necessary to show his moral unfitness. While the effect of the pardon was to relieve him of the penal consequences of his act, it could not restore his character. It did not reinvest him with those qualities which are absolutely essential for an attorney at law to possess. It could not rehabilitate him in the trust and confidence of the court. Lawyers are officers of the court. They are agents through whom justice must be administered. They should always be worthy instruments of justice. Courts should never hesitate to disbar those who are morally unfit to act as such agents.

For the reasons given, the judgment is affirmed.

BAUGH, &c. v. BAUGH'S ADM'R.

(Filed April 22, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Parent and Child—Action by Latter for Care of Parent—Contract—Pleading—In this action to recover for services rendered in caring for their father during his latter years, the petition was properly dismissed because it was not alleged that there was a promise on the part of the parent to pay for the services. While the services were necessary, under the repeated decisions of this court, in the absence of an express contract, there can be no recovery for them.

Browder & Browder for appellants.

S. R. Crewdson for appellee.

Appeal from Logan Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lassing, affirming.

Appellants sued the administrator of their father's estate to recover the sum of $1,700.00 for services alleged to have been rendered to their father during the last seventeen years of his life-time in waiting on, caring for and nursing him. It is alleged that these services were rendered by appellants to their father at his special instance and request. That they were reasonably worth the sums charged therefor, to-wit: $100 per annum. That their father was old, feeble and infirm, and that his condition required that the services be rendered. They proved the extent and value of the services by the affidavits of neighbors familiar therewith, and presented the proof of their claim to the administrator and demanded payment thereof. This was refused. They thereupon filed their suit setting up the facts and prayed judgment for the amount of their claim. The administrator demurred to their petition and the demurrer being sustained they declined to amend. Their petition was dismissed and they appeal. The sole question is the sufficiency of the petition.

The question raised here has been many times before this court, and it has been invariably held that in order to support a cause of action for services of this character, rendered a parent by a child, it must be alleged and proven that there was a direct, positive and unequivocal promise on the part of the parent to pay for such services, otherwise it is presumed that the services were gratuitously rendered. In the case of Reynolds' Adm'r v. Reynolds, 92 Ky., 556, wherein it was shown that a daughter, after reaching her majority, had remained with her father and rendered valuable services to him in his home, this court held that she was not entitled to compensation therefor, although it recognized that the services which she rendered were not only valuable but deserving, and, in denying her right to recover, said:

"If this daughter or the children of any parents were permitted to claim compensation on such facts as are here presented, then the question would constantly arise between them as to the merits of their several claims, and the obligation on the parent to pay each child claiming to have contributed more than another, and all enjoying the comforts, the support and the enjoyments of the same parental home. * * * We are not inclined to concur in the doctrine that after the child arrives at age the law raises a promise to pay for such services, although some of the authorities go to that extent. In this case the children, save the appellee, had left the parental roof, and she was mistress of the household. * * * The filial devotion of this plaintiff to her parent is to be admired, and whatever may be said, and truly said, of her real worth, still if a precedent should be established by which the mere declaration of the parent, that his child should be well paid for her services, and she deserved pay, and he intended to provide for her, is to be regarded as a contract, or as evidence sufficient upon which to infer that such a contract existed, then almost every child could make out a case against parents for services rendered after arriving at age, and in families with many children would result, in almost every instance, after the death of the parents, in litigation and strife."

In the case of Price v. Price's Ex'r, 101 Ky., 28, a claim was presented by appellant against the administrator of her brother's estate, for services rendered at his especial instance and request, and, in compliance with his earnest entreaty, in house-keeping, cooking, washing, and nursing and waiting on him for some time prior to his death. In denying her right to recover this court said:

"It may be conceded that her services were such as to justify her in expecting that her brother would provide for her liberally. But the relationship between the parties was such as to raise the legal presumption that they lived together as a matter of mutual convenience, and, with such relationship existing, the law will not imply a promise of compensation. * * * The law implies no contract to compensate for services rendered by one person to another when the parties stand in relation of parent and child or brother and sister. Much stricter proof is and should be required in such cases than in cases arising between strangers."

And, in the case of Wallace v. Denny's Adm'r., 28 Ky. Law Rep., 978, in which a son sought to recover for services rendered his mother during the after years of her life, this court held:

"Where the relationship of the parties is such as to raise the presumption that they lived together as a mutual convenience the law does not imply a promise that compensation will be made for services thus rendered."

It may be admitted that the services rendered by appellants to their father in his declining years were necessary and were valuable, yet, in the absence of an express contract and agreement on his part to compensate them for same, under the authority of the cases above cited, it must be conceded that they can not recover therefor, nor do the facts alleged in the pleading justify the conclusion that at the time this service was being rendered appellants contemplated making a charge therefor.

For the reasons indicated the judgment is affirmed.

VENTURA HOTEL CO. v. PABST BREWING CO.

(Filed April 22, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Landlord and Tenant—Sale of Leased Premises—Right of Purchaser to Collect Rent—By a sale of a house the purchaser acquires all the rights of his vendor and is entitled to collect the rents of that part of the premises occupied by any tenant thereof so long as such tenant continues in occupation under his contract with the former owner.

2. Same—At the expiration of a tenant's lease, though there may be no contract for a renewal thereof, if he remains in possession for ninety days after the expiration of his term he thereby acquires the right to remain the whole year, and so on, year after year, until he is turned out or abandons the premises or makes a new contract.

John W. Woods and S. S. Willis for appellant.

Brown & Malin for appellee.

Appeal from Boyd Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker, reversing.

The appellee, The Pabst Brewing Company, by a written lease, rented of G. W. Wagner (the then owner) a room in the northwest corner of the Ventura Hotel building, in Ashland, Kentucky, for a term beginning August 1st, 1901, and expiring August 1st, 1902, with a provision that the lessee, by giving notice to the lessor in writing thirty days prior to the expiration of the lease, should have the option of extending to June 1st, 1903. During the term of the lease, in January, 1902, the Ventura Hotel Company purchased the property, and the lease was assigned to it by Wagner. Pending the first year of the lease the Pabst Brewing Company placed Josselson Brothers in possession of the rented premises as its tenants, and they held and occupied the same up to and after the commencement of this litigation. The lease in question is as follows:

"This lease between George W. Wagner, of Ashland, Kentucky, party of the first part, and Samuel Fine, manager of Cincinnati branch of the Pabst Brewing Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, party of the second part:

"Witnesseth, That the party of the first part, in consideration of a monthly rental of sixty-five ($65.00) dollars per month, payable on the last day of each and every month from and after August 1st, 1901, by the party of the second part to the party of the first part.,

"Does hereby let, lease and rent unto the party of the second part, the following described premises, to-wit:

"The northwest corner room on the ground floor of the Hotel Ventura building, in Ashland, Boyd county, Kentucky, and fronting on the south side of Winchester avenue, between 12th and 13th streets in said city, and being the same room formerly occupied by the Tripple State Natural Gas and Oil Company.

"For a period of one year from and after August 1st, 1901, with the privilege of occupying same thereafter until the 30th day of June, 1903, at a monthly rental of seventy-five ($75.00) dollars per month, payable monthly from and after August 1st, 1902.

"Provided, however, That the lessee will surrender this lease and vacate these premises to the lessor upon twelve months notice, in the event of a sale of the property thereby leased at any time during the continuance of this lease.

"Should the party of the second part elect to occupy said premises longer than August 1st, 1902, he shall give to the party of the first part written notice of such intention at least thirty days prior to August 1st, 1902, and the giving of such notice shall extend this lease until June 30th, 1903, unless terminated by sale of property as herein provided, and the rental after August 1st, 1902, at seventy-five ($75.00) dollars per month as hereinbefore provided.

"Should the party of the second part fail to pay his rental as same becomes due, the party of the first part may, at his election, require the party of the second part to surrender and give possession of said premises upon ten days notice that such possession is desired.

"In witness whereof, this contract has been executed in duplicate, this 29th day of July, 1901.

"PABST BREWING COMPANY,
"Cincinnati Branch,
"SAMUEL FINE, MG'R,
"GEORGE W. WAGNER."

The Pabst Brewing Company did not extend the lease by giving thirty days' notice in writing as provided by its terms, but the subtenants, Josselson Brothers, continued to occupy the premises with the consent of appellant, as said before, up to and after this litigation commenced. After the expiration of the first year of the lease the rent was paid either by the Bapst Brewing Company or its sub-tenants up to October 1st, 1902, after which time both refused to pay further. Two suits were instituted by the appellant to recover the rent for the three months of October, November and December. One of these was instituted in the Boyd Circuit Court, and the other in the Boyd Quarterly Court; but the suit in the quarterly court was transferred to the circuit court, and there the two actions were consolidated, and thereafter treated as one action for the sum of two hundred and twenty-five dollars, being the aggregate of rent claimed to be due for the three months at seventy-five dollars per month.

In the answer to the action originally instituted in the Boyd circuit court the appellant undertook to traverse all of the material allegations of the petition, but subsequently withdrew all of the material denials of its answer, and for all practical purposes stood upon the defense alleged in the answer and counter-claim filed originally in the quarterly court, but transferred to the circuit court as before said.

In its petition the appellant, in stating its cause of action for the rent due, alleged affirmatively that the appellee failed to take advantage of that provision of the lease which entitled it to an extension thereof by giving to the lessor thirty days' written notice of its desire so to do; but that appellant had entered into a verbal agreement with the appellee for it to remain in the demised premises until January, 1903, at a rental of seventy-five dollars per month. This allegation was controverted by the answer. In the answer, filed originally in the quarterly court—transferred as before said, and which may now be treated, for all practical purposes, as a second paragraph of the original answer—the defendant sets out the lease between the parties, in extenso, and alleges that, with the consent of the lessor, it had sublet the premises to Josselson Bros.; that Josselson Bros. had obtained the consent of the lessor to remain in possession of the demised premises until January, 1903, and that they had paid the rent to the lessor until it wrongfully broke the lease by depriving the sub-tenants of the use of the lavatory of the hotel, thereby partially evicting them and seriously injuring their business. In its counterclaim appellee claims damages in the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars, accruing to it by reason of the injury to its sub-tenants, and alleges that the latter are proper parties, and calls on them to come in and answer, which they did, setting up the same facts with regard to the sub-leasing of the premises to them, and their payment of the rent to the landlord, except for the months of October, November and December, and alleging the wrongful deprivation of the use of the lavatory and their consequent injury. A general demurrer was sustained to the pleading of the sub-tenants, and they, failing to amend, their petition was dismissed without prejudice to their right to bring another action for the same cause at another time; and of this judgment they are not complaining.

Afterwards, the appellant filed what it calls a substitute petition, which, as we understand it, in nowise changed the issues between it and appellee.

Upon the trial, after the evidence of the appellant was in, the trial court sustained a motion for a peremptory instruction to the jury to find for the appellee, which was done; and to test the correctness of this judgment the appellant has prosecuted this appeal.

The pleadings in this case are more than usually confused, but, after carefully considering them, we are convinced that this case was allowed to go off on a wholly immaterial issue. It seems to have been considered by the trial court that the appellant's cause of action rested upon the verbal agreement set out in the petition, by which it alleged that it permitted the Pabst Brewing Company to remain in the demised premises after August 1st, 1902, until January 1st, 1903. This allegation was wholly immaterial. The lease speaks for itself. When the appellant purchased the property, as is not denied, it became entitled to all the rights of its vendor under the existing lease both by the assignment of the lease to it and also under the provisions of section 2304 of the Kentucky Statutes. Whether the lessee took advantage of the right to extend the lease for an additional year by giving the thirty days' notice in writing, is immaterial. As a matter of fact, it retained possession of the premises through its sub-tenants, Josselson Brothers, and until they surrendered the premises it was liable for the rent. The possession of the sub-tenants was the possession of appellee, and, as long as they remained in the premises, appellee was liable for the rent stipulated in the written contract. Of course, we do not mean that the sub-tenants, with the consent of appellant might not have surrendered possession at the end of the term and taken out a new lease for themselves; but this is not alleged to be true. The allegation, that the sub-tenants obtained the right to stay in the premises until January, 1903, does not constitute an allegation of a tenancy in their name. There is nothing inconsistent between this allegation and Josselson Brothers holding on as sub-tenants of appellee. The court and counsel for appellee seem to have been under the impression that it was necessary, in order that appellant could recover, that it should be able to establish the verbal contract alleged by it, that appellee might remain in the premises until January, 1903; and the court held that it failed to do this because it was not able to show that the agent with whom the verbal contract of extension was made, was authorized to bind his principal (the appellee) in the matter of the extension; wholly overlooking the fact that whether or not appellee obtained permission to remain in the leased premises after August, 1902, that, as a matter of fact, it did remain in possession of the premises thereafter, and the cause of action of appellant was based upon the actual occupancy of the premises, and not upon the verbal consent of appellant that this might be done.

Assuming that there was no verbal contract between appellant and appellee, by which the latter acquired the right to remain in possession of the leased premises from August 1st, 1902, to January 1st, 1903, under the statute (section 2295 of the Kentucky Statutes), if it remained in possession ninety days after the expiration of the term, it would have obtained the right to remain the whole year, holding under the contract, and so on from year to year, until the premises were abandoned, or it was turned out of possession, or made a new contract. And certainly it will not be questioned, that, if it did remain in possession, it was bound for the rent.

Not only is it not alleged that the sub-tenants rented the premises on their own account after August 1st, 1902, but the contract for appellee to remain in possession until January, 1903, is specifically pleaded by the appellee. After setting forth the written lease between Wagner and it, the appellee in its answer makes the following statement:

"But said leased premises had theretofore, with the consent of said Wagner, been sub-let to Frank and Alex Josselson to have and to use and enjoy in accordance with said lease, and thereafter and before the assignment claimed by the plaintiff from said Wagner, said thirty days' notice, provided by said agreement, being waived, this defendant being interested in having said Josselsons occupy same, said Wagner and Fine and Josselsons made an additional agreement, to-wit: That the said lease should be and was extended to and terminated January 1st, 1903, and that said Josselsons should have, hold and enjoy same as he then was using and having same and appurtenances for said time and to pay this defendant, and this defendant pay said Wagner therefor, the sum of $75.00 per month."

For all practical purposes this allegation of defendant's answer is the very allegation made by the appellant in its petition and its substitute petition, and which the court non-suited the plaintiff because it could not prove; the only difference between the allegation in the answer and that in the petition being that in the petition the extension is said to have been granted by appellant, and in the answer it is said to have been granted by appellant's assignor.

Upon the whole case, we are of opinion that if the appellee has a defense at all, it is because of the alleged partial eviction of its subtenants by the wrongful acts of the landlord. We do not pass upon the merit of this defense—it not being necessary to do so; but assuming (without deciding) that the counter-claim contains a cause of action for a violation of the lease on the part of the landlord, these affirmative allegations were placed in issue by the reply, and the burden of proof was upon the appellee, and, in default of establishing the counter-claim, the appellant was entitled to a judgment for the rent it claimed—it not having been claimed that payment thereof had been made.

For these reasons, the judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent herewith.

SUMMERS FIBER CO. v. WALKER.

(Filed April 22, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Contracts—Action on—Breach or Rescission—Facts Authorizing—Remedy Sought—It is not every case of breach of contract or a failure to perform stipulated contract duties with reference to an article, that will authorize a rescission of the contract. Generally the parties must look to an action in damages for a remedy. Rescission may be invoked when no other remedy will afford adequate relief and the parties can not obtain reasonable satisfaction in damages.

2. Same—Sale of Hemp—Contract to Stack—Care Implied—Action for Breach—Proper Remedy—In an action by the purchaser for damages for a breach of contract for the sale of a lot of hemp at a stipulated price, which the seller agreed to haul and stack in good condition by a named date, alleging that it was negligently stacked and exposed to the weather and thereby injured in value, Held—That although the contract did not provide that the hemp should be taken care of, and stacked in a careful and prudent manner, the contract implied that the seller would care for it in the usual and customary manner, and the proper action of the purchaser was for a breach of the contract, and not for a rescission.

3. Same—Acceptance by Purchaser—Condition not Discernible—Right of Inspection—In this action the purchaser having paid a large part of the purchase price of the hemp and not being able to ascertain the exact damage done to it until the stacks were opened and the hemp examined had the right to accept it and bring an action to recover the damages sustained by the failure of the seller to put the hemp in proper condition, according to the contract.

4. Same—Damages Recoverable—Negligence of Purchaser—Consideration of Sale—In such case, however, if after the seller put the hemp in stacks, the purchaser permitted it to remain in stacks for an unreasonable length of time and it was damaged by his failure to remove it, he could not recover for such damage, neither could the purchaser show on the trial or recover damages for the use for which the hemp was intended, as such use formed no part of the consideration of the sale.

J. A. Sullivan for appellant.

J. Tevis Cobb for appellee.

Appeal from Madison Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, affirming.

The Summers Fiber Company in 1903 and 1904 had established in Madison county a plant for the purpose of converting hemp, in its raw state, into fiber, to be used in making binding twine, and on December 21, 1903, it entered into the following contract with the appellee, Walker, a Madison county farmer:

"This agreement by and between James Walker, of the first part, and the Summers Fiber Company, of the second part, Witnesseth: The party of the first part has this day sold to the party of the second part 45 and 21-100 net acres of hemp at $36 per acre.

"The party of the first part agrees to haul the hemp to the second party situated on the border of the Arbuckle farm, nearest the mill of the second party, and stack same in stacks, approved by the second party, where second party may designate, as soon as the hemp is in suitable condition for stacking.

"The first party hereto further agrees to haul the clean fiber manufactured from this hemp from the mill of the second party to the Silver Creek freight station of the L. & N. R. R. Co., free of expense to the second party. In consideration of the above, the second party agrees to pay to the first party on the second day of January, 1904, $406 and 89-100 dollars ($406.89), on the first day of March $610 and 33-100 dollars, and on the first day of April $610 and 33-100 dollars.

"It is further agreed by parties hereto that any damage to the hemp, resulting from the first party's neglecting to haul the hemp as soon as it is in suitable condition to stack, shall be deducted from the purchase price herein specified."

The hemp was not stacked by Walker until the last days of March, the stacking being completed by the 1st of April, 1904. Before the hemp was stacked, and while it was in the shock, and in January and February, 1904, the fiber company wrote several letters to Walker, calling his attention to the fact that the shocks had blown down and that the hemp was being damaged by the condition in which it was permitted to remain, and on March 26, 1904, it wrote the following letter:

"We wish to call your attention to the fact that your prolonged delay in stacking and caring for the hemp has caused a heavy depreciation in value. The shocks have been allowed to remain down and bad weather has weathered the hemp from this cause. Furthermore, you went over your field and tied the hemp in bundles, thus exposing the inside of the shock to the weather and left the hemp in this state until a large percentage of the hemp is badly weathered. We have frequently called your attention to this fact without effect.

"We wish to advise you that the final payment will not be made until you stack the hemp as per contract, and will hold you responsible for the loss occasioned by this negligence."

On April 24, 1904, Walker sent to the company the following reply to the above letter:

"Yours of the 26th last to hand and contents carefully noted, so would like to have you come there by May 1, 1904, and receive my hemp, settle with me, and the writer will turn it over to you."

On May 26, 1904, the company wrote Walker the following letter:

"Pursuant to your request, I called you on the telephone before leaving for the North, confirming conversation of to-day we beg to state.

"That we have made you two propositions, both of which you have refused. We offer to settle arbitrarily for $300 of contract price. We further made you the proposition to let the hemp stand where it is until we can run it through and gauge the damage by actual results. As an element of good faith, we agree to pay you $200 on account, if this proposition was accepted.

"Having made you a proposition for arbitrary settlement and another by which we could gauge the damage, we think we have done all one could reasonably expect. This we consider especially true, as the fault lies with you. You have repeatedly admitted that the hemp was damaged and that the damage was due to yourself, or your agent's negligence.

"Our Mr. White will be pleased to see you at any time and receive from you a proposition, in case you should care to make one. We beg to again state to you that we would be pleased to have this matter settled and are ready to settle at any time the damage can be reasonably appraised. We can not accept an arbitrary figure unless it is sufficient to protect us."

Walker declined to accept the propositions of settlement contained in this letter, but offered to deduct $100 from the purchase price, which the company refused to accept.

It is convenient here to state that the hemp was stacked on premises owned by or in the control of Walker, and that the company had paid to him the installments on the purchase price payable in January and in March, leaving due the payment of $610.33 that was payable on April 1.

After the correspondence above mentioned between the parties, no further action was taken by either until August, 1904, when the company filed its petition in equity, in which it charged that Walker failed to put the hemp in suitable condition for stacking, and failed to bundle the hemp and haul the same as soon as it was in suitable condition, or to properly stack it. That after the contract was made, many of the shocks blew down, others were partially disarranged, and Walker left it in this condition, exposed to the weather until much of it became badly weather-worn and rotten, and when re-shocked it was so negligently done as to leave the hemp in bad condition—the result of his careless handling and failure to give it proper attention being that the hemp was unsuitable for the purpose for which it was bought. It further charged that Walker had refused to deliver any of the hemp until the last payment was made, and it refused to make said payment or receive the hemp because of its condition. It further set out that the extent to which the hemp was injured and reduced in value was uncertain and impossible of accurate ascertainment until after the fiber could be extracted and manufactured. It asked that the contract be rescinded, and for a judgment against Walker for the recovery of the payments made to him.

The lower court sustained a general demurrer to this petition upon the ground that it did not present a state of case authorizing a rescission of the contract. Thereupon the company filed an amended petition, setting out the contract and the alleged breaches thereof by Walker, and that the salable value of the hemp had been damaged $1,000, for which sum it asked judgment. When this pleading was filed, the action was transferred to the ordinary docket, and the pleadings completed—Walker making his answer a counterclaim against the company, and seeking to recover from it the $610.33 due on April 1, no part of which had been paid. Upon a trial before a jury, the company was allowed $300 in damages—Walker recovering on his counterclaim, except to this extent.

We are asked to reverse the judgment on this verdict, first, because of the assigned error of the lower court in sustaining a general demurrer to the petition, seeking a rescission of the contract; second, in misinstructing the jury; third, in striking from the petition the allegations as to the purpose for which the hemp was purchased and Walker's knowledge thereof, and in refusing to admit evidence upon this point.

At the very outset, it may be remarked that although the contract did not provide that the hemp should be shocked, taken care of and stacked in a careful and prudent manner, yet it was nevertheless the duty of Walker to have done this. The contract implied that he would care for the hemp in the usual and customary manner. This was evidently contemplated by the parties and may be considered as much a part of the contract as if expressly stipulated in it. It may also be conceded that the hemp was not given proper attention in the field and that it was defectively stacked, and further that a considerable portion of it was damaged by the failure of Walker to use due care in these particulars. When the suit was brought the hemp was in the possession of Walker. He refused to deliver or surrender it until the last payment was made. This payment was long over-due when the action was instituted, as the company would not accept the hemp except on the terms mentioned in its letter of May 26. Looking at the case from this standpoint, which states in substance the averments of the petition, the first question is, did the lower court err in sustaining a demurrer to the petition, which was in effect ruling that the company was not entitled to a rescission of the contract. It is manifest from the letter, written by the company on May 26, that it did not regard the hemp worthless or consider that Walker, by his failure to give it proper attention, had wholly destroyed its value. Nor is this claim made in the petition. The company in the petition which stated the case in its behalf as strong as the facts warranted, did not show itself entitled to a rescission of the contract. The respective rights and remedies of the buyer and seller of commodities of this character under facts like these can be ascertained and fixed with reasonable certainty in an action at law for damages. It is not every case of a breach of contract or a failure to perform stipulated contract duties with reference to an article that will authorize a rescission of the contract. Generally, the parties must look to an action in damages for a remedy. Rescission goes to the very root of the contract. It proceeds upon the theory that the contract should be entirely set aside and the parties restored to the position they occupied before the contract was made. It is more frequently resorted to in matters involving real estate, although the doctrine may be invoked in controversies concerning personal property when no other remedy will afford adequate relief and the parties can not obtain reasonable satisfaction in damages.

In American & English Encyclopaedia of Law, volume 24, page 611, it is well said: "In order for the court to grant relief by way of rescission, the case presented must embrace facts bringing it within some recognized head of equity jurisdiction, such as fraud, accident, mistake, duress, undue influence, or the like, or at least, it must be shown that the complainant if denied equitable relief will sustain an injury for the redress of which a court of common law can afford no adequate remedy."

Here, it is not insisted that the contract is tainted by fraud, accident, mistake, duress or undue influence; nor is it claimed that there was a total failure of consideration; or that Walker was insolvent, or that any damages awarded could not be recovered. In short, the petition failed to state any ground of equitable jurisdiction authorizing a rescission of the contract.

It is argued that as the hemp was in the possession of Walker, and he refused to deliver it until the last payment was made, that if the company made the last payment and accepted the hemp, knowing its condition, it would waive its right to recover from him damages for his breach of the stipulations of the contract by which he was obligated to take proper care of the hemp. That Walker would have received for his hemp the full purchase price and the company be left without redress on account of the damages sustained by his breach. This is not our understanding of the law of the case. The company had paid a part of the purchase price, and refused to pay the remainder. Walker had possession of the property, and declined to surrender it until the entire purchase price was paid. Under this state of case, what were the rights and remedies of the respective parties? It is said in Munford v. Kevil, 109 Ky., 246, which was a case in many respects like this, that "The rule in this State is that where there is a contract to deliver goods or chattels of a particular description or quality, at a future day, and the vendor tenders goods not of the agreed description or quality in discharge of the contract, and the vendee, after inspecting them or having had a fair opportunity to do so, receives them in discharge of the contract, he can not thereafter maintain an action against the vendee to recover damages for the defects in the description or quality. The stipulation that goods of a certain description or quality are to be delivered is made the essential part of the contract which must be complied with by the vendor as a condition preceding the obligation of the vendee to receive the goods and pay for them. And if the goods are not of the description or quality described, the vendee has the right to reject them and hold the vendor responsible in damages. But if he inspects the goods, or after having had a fair opportunity to do so, receives them in discharge of the contract, although they are not of the description and quality sold, he waives their defects by their acceptance and is not entitled to recover damages." (Jones v. McEwan, 91 Ky., 376.)

But this general rule is subject to exceptions, one of which is illustrated by the Munford case. It is more particularly applicable when no part of the purchase money has been paid, and when the purchaser is in a position that he can refuse to accept the articles without sustaining any loss except such as might grow out of the difference between their market price and the price he agreed to pay; and if in this class of cases the purchaser, with full knowledge of the defects in the article accepts it in discharge of the contract, he will be held to have waived his right to recover damages. But, under the facts of this case, if the company could not accept the hemp, and after a thorough inspection, recover the damages they suffered by the failure of Walker to care for it as provided in the contract, the company would be, in a measure, remediless, or at least, denied the right to recover compensation for the loss sustained. The hemp being in the possession of Walker, who refused to deliver it until the full purchase price was paid, it would be a most unreasonable rule to lay down that the company could not receive the hemp without waiving its right to recover damages. The result of such a rule would be that if Walker failed or refused to take any action, it must see the hemp for which it had paid two-thirds of the purchase price rot in the field and become totally worthless, thereby possibly causing it to lose the money it had advanced, or else by accepting the hemp, waive the right to the damages it ought to recover.

Our view of the law applicable to this case is, that on the one hand, Walker might, at any time after the hemp was stacked, have brought a suit against the company to recover the balance of the purchase price. On the other hand, the company, having paid a large part of the purchase price, and not being able to ascertain the exact damage done to the hemp until the stacks were opened and the hemp examined, had the right to accept it and bring an action against Walker to recover the damages sustained by his failure to put the hemp in proper condition, according to the contract; or it might have applied to the court to appoint a receiver to take charge of the hemp, if it was in danger of being lost or materially injured, for the purpose of preserving it, until the rights of the respective parties could be adjudged. We think this remedy is allowable under section 298, of the Civil Code, as the purchaser who has paid a part of the purchase price has a lien as between the parties upon the property purchased.

A number of witnesses were introduced, and there was conflict in the testimony, as to the condition of the hemp, and the extent of the damage done it; and the court instructed the jury that: "If they believed from the evidence that the defendant, Walker, after selling his hemp to the plaintiff, failed to use such diligence in caring for same as the jury might believe from the evidence was reasonably necessary, in order to preserve the hemp, and bring it to a reasonably suitable condition for stacking, or fail to haul and stack same as soon as it was in a suitable condition to stack, or that he failed to stack said hemp in such manner that met the approval of plaintiff; and if the jury further believe from the evidence that by reason of defendant's failure to so care for said hemp or to so haul same, or to so stack same, said hemp was damaged and rendered less valuable, the jury should allow the plaintiff such a sum in damages as they may believe from the evidence will fairly and reasonably represent the depreciation, if any, in the value of the hemp, due to the defendant's failure, if any, to use such diligence as is above defined to preserve said hemp and bring it to a reasonably suitable condition for stacking, or to defendant's failure, if any, to so haul same, or to his failure, if any, to stack said hemp in the manner that met the approval of plaintiff, not exceeding $1,000, the amount claimed by plaintiff on that account. But, if the jury believe from the evidence that the plaintiff kept said hemp in the stack for an unreasonable length of time after it was delivered to plaintiff, the jury should not allow the plaintiff any damages which they might believe from the evidence occurred to said hemp, if any, by its being kept in the stack for an unreasonable length of time."

This instruction is criticised by counsel for appellant because it virtually fixed the date when the hemp was put in stacks as the time when the damage should be estimated and directed the jury that if the company permitted the hemp, to remain in the stacks for an unreasonable length of time, they should not allow any damages accrued after it was stacked. Walker's obligation was to put the hemp in stacks, and if after that time the company permitted it to remain in the stacks and it was damaged by the failure to remove it, it could not recover from Walker this damage. Walker could not control the action of the company after he stacked the hemp. If it was stacked properly his duty in this particular was completed. If it was not properly stacked, the company had a right to look for redress to the remedies heretofore pointed out. Walker should not be held responsible for anything that happened to the hemp after it was stacked, due to the failure of the company to remove it within a reasonable time.

Nor did the court err in striking from the petition, or in failing to permit the appellant company to show the use for which the hemp was intended, or that this was known to Walker. Walker was bound by the contract to take reasonable and proper care of the hemp, and this was the full measure of his duty. The use for which it was intended was entirely immaterial. It did not affect the question of damages, because the measure of damages was, as stated by the court, the depreciation in the value of the hemp sustained by reason of the failure of Walker to use reasonable care in attending to and stacking it.

The point is made that the company under the verdict and judgment is required to pay the whole costs, when it should have had a judgment for its costs on so much of the issue as related to the question of damages, as it recovered $300 in damages, and there was no dispute about the fact that the last payment for the hemp was due and unpaid. Upon this issue the court instructed the jury in substance that if they allowed the company damages, they should take the difference between the damage allowed and the $610.33 admitted to be due by it; and if the amount of damage awarded was less than $610.33, they should find for Walker the difference, and if it was over $610.33, they should deduct the $610.33, and give the company a judgment for the remainder. This instruction was proper, and under it a verdict in favor of either of the parties would carry the costs of the entire action. In short, there were two actions, in one of them the company sought to recover a judgment for $1,000 damages, and in the other Walker sought to recover judgment for $610.33 against the company. These two actions were heard and tried together, as they should have been under the pleadings and the provisions of the Code, and the costs, as in other cases, followed the judgment. (Moore v. Caruthers, 17 B. Mon., 669.)

Wherefore, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

JAILETTE, &c. v. BELL, &c.

(Filed April 22, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Land—Devise to Daughter—Contingent Remainder to Children—Sale of Property Interest of Children—Testator, by his will, devised a certain fund to his daughter, Lucy, "to be invested, upon her marriage, in a home for her, and upon her death to pass to her issue, if she should leave issue living, at her death." She subsequently married and had three children. A part of said fund was invested in a home by her trustee which it became necessary to sell. Held—That no present interest passed to her children under the will, their interest being a contingent remainder therein, and the purchaser at the sale acquired a valid title to the property.

W. A. Perry, A. J. Bizot and Edward Bloomfield for appellants.

Gregory & McHenry for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, First Division.

Opinion of the court by Wm. Rogers Clay, Commissioner, affirming.

George W. Hall died in Fayette county in the year 1877, leaving a will, the third clause of which is as follows:

"I hereby give to my unmarried daughter, Lucy W. Hall, for her sole and separate use, free from the marital rights and control of any husband she may have, the like amount of five thousand dollars in money and five hundred dollars in furniture. While unmarried the said money is to be loaned or otherwise invested for her use, and upon her marriage is to be invested in a home for her if she should desire such investment. But, however invested, it may be sold by executors or the survivor and reinvested from time to time as the said Lucy may prefer. The fund, however invested, is upon her death to pass to her issue, if she should leave issue living at her death. Should the annual income from said five thousand dollars be insufficient for the comfortable maintenance of said Lucy while unmarried, then in such case the deficiency while she is unmarried is to be made up out of the residue of my estate. On her marriage this charge on the residue of my estate is to cease. The furniture given to said Lucy, as above, is to consist of the furniture heretofore given to her by me, and of a wardrobe in addition corresponding in style with the furniture heretofore given to her by me as above."

By the fifth clause the testator's wife, Elizabeth S. Hall, and E. D. Sayre are appointed executrix and executor, and also trustees of his daughter Lucy.

A part of the money devised to Lucy W. Hall was used in purchasing a home for her on Haldeman avenue, in the city of Louisville. The property was conveyed by James E. Bell and wife to Elizabeth S. Hall as trustee for her daughter, Lucy Van Dalsem. The purchase price of the property was $1,300, of which $600 was paid in cash and lien notes executed for the balance. The deferred payments on the property not having been made, the vendor instituted suit against Lucy Van Dalsem and her mother, as executrix of the will, and as her trustee. The property was sold, and purchased by appellee, James E. Bell.

At the time of the institution of the action Lucy Van Dalsem had three children, the plaintiffs below, Roberta Jaillette (formerly Roberta Van Dalsem), Bessie Van Dalsem and William Van Dalsem, who subsequently conveyed his interest in the property aforesaid to appellants, Perry and Bloomfield. After the property had been bought in by appellee, James E. Bell, he subsequently conveyed it to his co-defendant, Carrie Gough, who thereafter mortgaged the property to Bell.

In this action it is contended that, as the children of Lucy Van Dalsem were not made parties to the above suit, in which a lien for the deferred purchase money was enforced, the only estate which appellee, James E. Bell, procured by the judgment in that action was the life estate of Lucy Van Dalsem; that she being dead, appellants are now entitled to the property. The chancellor entered judgment against the contention of appellants, and from that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

The first question to be determined is, what kind of estate in remainder was created by the will of George W. Hall? The distinction between a vested and contingent remainder, is that in the former the interest must vest immediately, but the right to the enjoyment of the property is made to depend on some future event. In the latter, the interest does not vest immediately, but is made to depend on some uncertain future event. In this case the vesting of the estate depended upon Lucy Van Dalsem's having issue and upon the issue surviving her. No present interest passed to her children under the will. Unless they survive their mother, they took no estate whatever in the property in question. There can be no doubt that the remainder thus created was a contingent one. (Augustus, &c. v. Seabolt, &c., 3 Met., 162; White's Trustee v. White, &c., 86 Ky., 602; Whallen, &c. v. Kellner, &c., 31 Ky. Law Rep., 1285.)

The next question to be determined is, whether or not the children of Lucy Van Dalsem were necessary parties in the action to enforce the lien. In the recent case of Whallen, &c. v. Kellner, &c., supra, the rule applicable to such cases, is thus stated: "It is sufficient in such cases if there is before the court the life-tenants, or those having vested interests, whose duty and interest it would be to defend the action if necessary to protect the estate, their interests and the remaindermen's being identical. Such contingent interests must in such state of case be represented by the life-tenant, or tenant of the estate in possession, who is deemed the representative in estate of those contingently entitled, whether born or not, as otherwise it would be impossible to ever bring them all before the court during the existence of the life estates. So long as the life-tenant lived, it could not be ascertained with any legal certainty, who would be the one entitled to take at the period of distribution." (Hermann v. Parsons, &c., 117 Ky., 239.)

But counsel for appellant contend that the above rule of law does not apply in this case for the reason that the vendor of the property,

James E. Bell, was not a stranger to the instrument by which the contingent limitations upon the title to the property were created, according to the principle laid down in Johnson, &c. v. Jacob, &c., 11 Bush, 646. It will be observed, however, that the deed from appellee Bell to Lucy Van Dalsem simply conveyed the property upon the trust and conditions prescribed in the will of George W. Hall. The deed did not purport to establish the conditions or limitations of the trust, but merely conveyed the property upon the same trust created by the will. Appellee Bell was not a party to those conditions; he had neither the power nor right to prescribe or alter any of the limitations. It would have been a breach of trust on the part of the trustee to have invested any portion of the $5,000 devised to Lucy Van Dalsem except upon the terms and conditions prescribed in the will. Appellee Bell could not have sold the property in question without having conveyed it subject to those limitations. The deed did not create the trust and contingent remainder; it simply conveyed the property subject to the trust and imitations already imposed by the will. This rule was recognized by this court in the case of Lewis, &c. v. Citizens National Bank, 95 Ky., 79. In that case the trust fund had been invested under the deed upon other conditions than those prescribed in the will creating the trust, and the court said: "The character of the holding by the trustee, therefore, and the ultimate disposition of the interest of Georgette at her death, are matters to be controlled by the will of Garnett Duncan. The chancellor seems to have regarded this deed of November, 1878, as alone creating this trust, and from this premise correctly construed the holding to be in fee. But this instrument, though it declared, did not create any trust. The will of Garnett Duncan alone did that." Thus it will be seen that appellee Bell was an absolute stranger to this trust, and had no voice whatever in prescribing its terms. As the holder of the vendor's lien upon the property to secure the unpaid purchase money, he, therefore, clearly had an "outstanding paramount title," which, under the express language of Johnson, &c. v. Jacob, &c., and Hermann v. Parsons, &c., supra, he was entitled to enforce without bringing before the court the contingent remaindermen. It would manifestly be unjust to hold that he, in order to get all the purchase money to which he was entitled, would have to postpone his action until the termination of the life estate, to determine what remaindermen to bring before the court, for, prior to that time, this could not be determined. If he had made the children of Lucy Van Dalsem parties to the action, they might not, as a matter of fact, have been the parties entitled to any interest in the estate upon the death of their mother; they might have died and the remainder interest have vested in other parties. As the trust and contingent remainder were created alone by the will of George W. Hall, and the deed executed by appellee Bell simply conformed to the trust already created, and as the life tenant and her trustee were properly before the court, and it was then impossible to determine who the contingent remaindermen would be, we are of opinion that all the necessary parties were before the court in the action in question, and that the judgment was sufficient to pass to the purchaser all the title to the property involved in this action.

Judgment affirmed.

CROOKE v. HUME'S EX'TX, &c.,
NATIONAL BANK OF CYNTHIANA v. HUME'S EX'TX, &c.

(Filed April 22, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Fraudulent Conveyances—Conveyance or Devise by Parent to Child—Void as to Existing Creditors—A father can not by his will give to his child property to the detriment of his creditors, and such gifts or conveyances, where they are in the shape of real estate, will be set aside at the suit of existing creditors as fraudulent.

2. Same—Rule as to Subsequent Creditors—Intent Must be Shown—While all voluntary conveyances are, under the statute, void as to existing liabilities, a different rule obtains as to subsequent creditors, and in order that such conveyance may be successfully assailed by a subsequent creditor it must be shown that it was made with a fraudulent intent.

3. Creditor and Debtor—Return of "No Property"—Necessity Therefor—Under Kentucky Statutes section 1907a, enacted in 1896, the old rule of practice was abrogated and an entirely new rule substituted therefor, so that now a creditor upon learning that his debtor is disposing of his property and conveying away his real estate with making provision for the payment of his debt, he may go into a court of equity and subject the property so conveyed without first having reduced his claim to a judgment and had return of "no property found," thereon.

Hazelrigg, Chenault & Hazelrigg and Wm. McKee Duncan for appellant, National Bank, of Cynthiana.

C. H. Breck and W. S. Prior for appellant, Crooke.

A. R. Burnam & Son, C. J. Wimberly and L. B. Herrington for appellees, W. S. Hume's Ex'tx, &c.

Appeals from Madison Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lassing, reversing.

These appeals involve a common question and are, therefore, considered together.

In the Spring of 1906, Virginia Crooke filed a petition in equity in the Madison Circuit Court against the Executrix, heirs-at-law, &c., of W. S. Hume, wherein she alleged, in substance, that W. S. Hume, a resident of Madison county, Kentucky, died in August, 1885, the owner of a large landed and personal estate. That he left a will by the terms of which he directed his wife, whom he named as Executrix, to keep his estate intact until his youngest child, a daughter, became 18 years of age, when the estate should be settled up and divided among his children and heirs-at-law. At the time of his death, W. S. Hume was operating a distillery on Silver Creek, known as W. S. Hume & Company, and was the owner of practically all of its capital stock. The stock of this distilling company constituted the bulk of his personal estate. Under his will, he directed that his executrix continue to operate the distillery until the period for distribution should arrive. That in accordance with the express provisions of the will, the executrix did so operate the distillery, and, as authorized by the will of her deceased husband, she borrowed a sum of money from one, Patty M. Hume, to be used in operating the distillery. That the note evidencing this loan was renewed from time to time, until, on the 20th day of February, 1902, with accrued interest, it amounted to $5,237.86. That on said date W. S. Hume & Company, together with E. B. Hume, S. B. Hume and E. M. Hume, the Executrix, executed to said Pattie M. Hume a renewal note for the amount of the debt then due. Said note was drawn due twelve months from date with interest from date until paid, and was subsequently assigned by Patty M. Hume, for value received, to plaintiff, Virginia Crooke, and that plaintiff was the owner and holder thereof. That in the year 1898, the youngest daughter of W. S. Hume, having arrived at the age of eighteen, the executrix, in accordance with the provisions of the will, sold the distillery and the real estate left by her husband, and thereafter disposed of all of the whisky on hand; receiving from the joint sales of real and personal property of her husband approximately $300,000. That, of the money so realized out of the sale of the real and personal estate of her husband, she invested something like $12,000 in a house and lot in Richmond, Kentucky, taking the deed thereto in her own name, and invested the further sum of $25,787.56 in a farm of 391 acres in Madison county, Kentucky, taking the deed thereto in the name of one of her daughters, Mary Chenault. The house and lot and the farm are described and set out in the petition by metes and bounds.

The petition further alleges that the executrix had distributed the estate of her deceased husband among his children and heirs-at-law and made the investments in favor of herself and her daughter, as above indicated, and settled the firm of W. S. Hume & Company, leaving the debt of plaintiff wholly unpaid. She prayed for the settlement of the affairs of W. S. Hume & Company and of the estate of W. S. Hume, and for the payment of her debt, interest and cost, and for all proper and necessary relief. A demurrer was sustained to this petition and thereafter the plaintiff filed an amended petition in which the allegations of the original petition were set out with more particularity, and it was further pleaded that the executrix had made an assignment for the benefit of her creditors to her son-in-law, Harvey Chenault, husband of the defendant, Mary Chenault, to whom the farm of 391 acres had been conveyed, and that Harvey Chenault, as assignee, had sold the Richmond property to Mrs. Annie Collins for about $8,600.00, and that the purchaser had executed her bonds therefor, and that this purchase money represented a part of the assets of W. S. Hume & Company, or of the estate of W. S. Hume.

In this amended petition she prayed judgment against W. S. Hume & Company, E. B. Hume and E. M. Hume for her debt, and asked that she be adjudged a lien for the amount of her judgment and debt upon the 391 acres of land described in the original petition, and upon the proceeds arising from the sale of the house and lot in Richmond, which was fully described in the original petition. Copies of the will of W. S. Hume and of the deed to Mary Chenault were filed with these pleadings. Demurrers were filed on behalf of the several defendants to the petition as amended, and, upon hearing, these demurrers were sustained with leave to amend. The defendants, E. B. Hume and E. M. Hume, filed their answers pleading their discharge in bankruptcy, and asked to be dismissed. The defendant, Patty M. Hume, pleaded that the note was assigned by her to plaintiff without personal recourse, and she asked to be dismissed.

Thereafter the plaintiff appeared in court and asked leave to withdraw the amended petition filed by her and file a new amended petition in lieu thereof. To this motion the defendants objected, the court overruled the objection, the amended petition was withdrawn and a new amended petition was filed in lieu thereof. In this amended petition she sets out fully the incorporation of the company of W. S. Hume & Company, the sale of its corporate business and property, the investment of the sums of money made by it in the house and lot and farm, as fully set out in the original petition, and, pleaded that, with a full knowledge on the part of the officers of the company of the existence of her debt, they wrongfully and illegally misapplied and paid out all of the assets of the company and left nothing with which to satisfy her debt, and refused to pay same or any part thereof. She prayed as in the original and amended petition. The demurrer was renewed by the defendants and sustained. Plaintiff was given judgment against the firm of W. S. Hume & Company for the full amount of her debt with interest and cost. This was at the October term, 1906, and on the 9th day of January following execution was issued thereon and on the 10th day of January was returned "no property found." Thereafter the plaintiff filed another amended petition wherein she set up the recovery of the judgment against W. S. Hume & Company, the issual of the execution thereon, and the return of "no property found." She further, in this amendment, pleaded the purchase out of the funds of W. S. Hume & Company of the property described in the original petition, and prayed that it be subjected to the payment of her debt. To the petition, as thus amended, a demurrer was filed and sustained, in so far as plaintiff sought to have subjected to the satisfaction of her debt the farm or the proceeds arising from the sale of the house and lot in Richmond. The amended petition, which set up the recovery of the judgment, the execution thereon and the return of "no property found" was, on motion of the defendants, Mary Chenault, &c., stricken from the file and the petition was, as to all the defendants, except the firm of W. S. Hume & Company, dismissed.

Shortly after the institution of the suit, as above set out, by the plaintiff, Virginia Crooke, the National Bank of Cynthiana; filed its petition to be made a party, in which, after alleging its incorporation with capacity to sue, &c., it adopted the allegations of the petition of the plaintiff, Virginia Crooke, as amended, and alleged further that on the 27th day of May, 1905, the defendant, W. S. Hume & Company, executed and delivered to E. H. Taylor, Jr. & Sons, their promissory note, whereby they promised and agreed to pay to the said E. H. Taylor, Jr. & Sons, four months after date, at the Richmond National Bank, in Richmond, Kentucky, the sum of $2,983.62, for value received and that prior to the maturity of said note it was sold, discounted and transferred by E. H. Taylor, Jr. & Sons to the National Bank, of Cynthiana and that it was then the owner and holder thereof. It asked that its petition be taken as its answer and made a cross-petition against the defendants to said suit. Demurrers were filed to this petition to be made a party by the several defendants. These demurrers were sustained with leave to amend. The said National Bank, of Cynthiana, thereupon filed an amended pleading wherein it alleged that the firm of W. S. Hume & Company was insolvent, and that certain of its creditors were seeking to have it adjudged a bankrupt, and, that the assets remaining in its hands were not more than sufficient to pay the costs of the litigation in the bankrupt court. A demurrer was sustained to this pleading with leave to amend. The petitioner declining to plead further, the petition was dismissed.

The correctness of the ruling of the trial judge in dismissing the petition of the plaintiff, Virginia Crooke, and the petition of the National Bank, of Cynthiana, to be made a party, are the only questions to be determined upon this appeal.

The petition in this case, while somewhat involved and awkwardly drawn, presents the following state of facts. W. S. Hume died in 1885, leaving a will, by the terms of which he directed his wife to take charge of his property, manage his firm and operate his distillery until his youngest daughter arrived at the age of eighteen, when he directed his estate to be distributed among his wife and children. In order that she might properly and successfully operate and conduct the distilling business he gave her ample power to pledge his estate in her hands, as though it was willed to her in fee, should it become necessary. She did so manage the business and operate the distillery, and, in the conduct of the distilling business, borrowed a sum of money from Patty M. Hume in the name of the firm and the note evidencing this indebtedness was renewed from time to time, the last time it was renewed being on the 20th of February, 1902, when it amounted to $5,237.86. That this note was for a valuable consideration assigned to the plaintiff, who was, at the date of the institution of this suit, the owner and holder thereof. That the assets of the firm of W. S. Hume & Company had been illegally, improperly and wrongfully appropriated by the executrix and one of the devisees, and that the assets so improperly appropriated had been invested in the house and lot and a farm, both of which are described with such particularity as that they could be readily identified. Under this state of facts she asks that this property be subjected to the payment of her debt. The pleading does not give the date upon which the loan was originally made, but, inasmuch as it alleges that the money was used in the conduct of the distilling business, and the note was renewed from time to time as it fell due prior to February 20th, 1902, this is in substance an allegation that this money was borrowed before the date of the sale of the distilling business in 1898 or 1899.

The deed to the 391 acres of land which it is sought to have subjected to the satisfaction of this debt shows that this land was purchased for the defendant, Mary Chenault, in April, 1901, or some years after the money in question was borrowed from Patty M. Hume.

The pleadings do not show when the house and lot in Richmond was purchased, but it is stated by counsel in brief, and not contradicted, that this transaction took place about 1889, or at least, many years before the institution of this suit.

Under the rule that pleadings be construed most strongly against the pleader, in the absence of any allegation in the petition or its several amendments which could be taken as even inferentially declaring that the Patty Hume debt was created prior to the purchase of the house and lot, it must be presumed that it was created subsequent thereto. The debt of the National Bank of Cynthiana was created in 1905, or something like four years after the purchase for Mary Chenault of the farm in question and many years after the purchase of the house and lot by the executrix and many years after all of the other transactions complained of therein.

By the terms of the will of W. S. Hume, his wife, as executrix, was to conduct the affairs of his business until his youngest daughter arrived at the age of eighteen. The pleadings show that she arrived at this age in the fall of 1898, or the spring of 1899, at which time, in accordance with the provisions of the will, the executrix proceeded to sell the property and distribute the estate. After this time the executrix had no further right, power or authority, under his will, to continue to operate the distilling business and it was her plain duty, as executrix and trustee of the estate, to make distribution thereof according to the terms of the will. No trust was created by the will for the purpose of operating the business of W. S. Hume & Company. The most that can be claimed for appellant in regard thereto is that the executrix, by the terms of the will, was authorized to pledge the estate of her husband to enable her to secure funds to properly conduct the business during the years when she was authorized to so conduct it. In other words, it was the desire of the decedent, W. S. Hume, that his wife should conduct the distilling business and manage his property, as he himself had done, until his youngest child arrived at eighteen years of age, at which time he wanted his estate settled up and divided among his children.

For appellants it is insisted that the purchase of the house and lot in Richmond, and of the farm in Madison county, by the executrix with the funds of W. S. Hume & Company was in direct violation of the provisions of section 1907, of the Kentucky Statutes, which provides that: "Every gift, conveyance, assignment, transfer, or charge made by a debtor, of or upon any of his estate, without valuable consideration therefor, shall be void as to all his then existing liabilities." * * *

And, that the said executrix, or W. S. Hume & Company, had no more right or authority, in law, to make these voluntary conveyances or settlements than W. S. Hume himself, if living, would have had. The correctness of this contention, as to debts created prior to the date of the voluntary conveyance, is too well settled to admit of argument, for in the cases of Trimble v. Ratliff, 9 Ben. Monroe, 511; Enders v. Williams, 1 Met., 346; Duhme v. Young, 3 Bush, 343; Loury v. Fisher, 2 Bush, 70, and Rucker v. Abell, 8 Ben Monroe, 566, this court has expressly held that a father could not give to his child or children property to the detriment of his creditors, and such gifts or conveyances, where they are in the shape of real estate, will be set aside at the suit of existing creditors as fraudulent. It is true that there are instances in which this court has upheld a reasonable settlement by a husband or father upon his wife or child (Stokes v. Coffey, 8 Bush, 533, and Thompson v. Cundiff, 14 Bush, 566), but in these and kindred cases it was expressly held that, where the settlement or advancement was not reasonable, taking into consideration the financial condition and circumstances of the donor, the conveyance would not be upheld.

In the case at bar, for the purposes of the demurrer it is admitted that, since the purchase of the house and lot and the farm in question, there remains nothing whatever with which to satisfy the debts of the plaintiff and petitioner herein, hence, under the present condition of the pleadings in this case, a consideration of that class of cases which would permit a settlement of a reasonable sum upon the widow or child, without violating the provisions of the statute, will not be entered into.

The purchase of the house and lot having been made prior to the creation of the debt, of which plaintiff's note is a renewal, plaintiff is not in a condition to complain of the ruling of the trial judge, in so far as this conveyance is concerned, but not so as to the farm; her debt was created before the purchase of the farm, and, at the date of its purchase, was an existing liability against the firm of W. S. Hume & Company, and was a debt which, under the express provision of the will of W. S. Hume, his wife, as executrix, was authorized to create, and this being true, the purchase of the farm and voluntary conveyance thereof to the appellee, Mary Chenault, taking the allegations of the petition as true, was a constructive fraud and void as to this liability. While all such conveyances are, under the statutory provision, declared to be void, as to existing liabilities, a different rule obtains as to subsequent creditors, and in order that a voluntary conveyance may be successfully assailed by a subsequent creditor it must be shown that it was made with a fraudulent intent. The mere fact that it was voluntary being held insufficient to authorize a court to set it aside. (Place v. Rhem, 7 Bush, 585; Enders v. Williams, 1 Met., 346; Hanson v. Buckner, 4 Dana, 251, and O'Kane v. Vinnedge, 21 Ky. Law Rep., 1551.) In the case at bar, while the petition of the National Bank of Cynthiana charges that the executrix is wrongfully in the possession of the Richmond house and lot, and the appellee, Mary Chenault, is wrongfully in the possession of the farm, and that each of said properties in fact constitutes a part of the estate of W. S. Hume, still the petition fails to allege, for the reason, we presume, that it is not true, that these conveyances were made with a fraudulent intent to defeat its claim, and the same may be said of the other sales and transactions, the validity of which are attacked by this petitioner, hence the trial judge correctly held that the said bank failed in its petition to state grounds which authorized a subjection of the said house and lot, farm or other property to the payment of its debts. It was manifestly upon this ground that the trial judge held the petition of the bank to be insufficient. The record does not show the ground upon which he held the petition as amended to state no cause of action. Two possible grounds are suggested. First, that plaintiff's claim bears a later date than that of either of the conveyances sought to be set aside, but it is alleged that the note evidencing this debt is a renewal of an older debt, and in the case of Loury v. Fisher, 2 Bush, 70, it was expressly held that a creditor was not deprived of his right to attack a fraudulent conveyance by reason of the fact that the note evidencing his debt had been renewed after the date of the conveyance which he sought to avoid, hence the plaintiff, being substituted to all of the rights which Patty M. Hume would have had if suing in her own proper person, this ground must fail, and, though the note bears a date later than that of the conveyance, still, under the allegations of the petition, it must be held to be a debt antecedent, at least, to the conveyance of the farm in question. The other, and apparently the real, ground upon which the trial judge held the petition to be insufficient, is one of practice.

From the briefs in the case we conclude that appellees, and the court, as well, were of opinion that, in order for plaintiff to maintain her suit at all it was necessary for her first to have reduced her debt against W. S. Hume & Company to a judgment and have a return of "no property found" thereon. That this was the ground upon which the court held the petition insufficient is further evidenced by the fact that during the progress of the trial plaintiff took a personal judgment in this suit against W. S. Hume & Company, had an execution issued thereon and returned "no property found," and thereafter filed an amended petition setting up these facts and prayed as in her original petition. Of course, if plaintiff's right to subject this property had to be based upon a return of "nulla bona," then clearly the learned judge correctly held that she stated no cause of action, for she could not, by a subsequent act, acquire a right which did not then exist and in this way cure a pleading which was fatally and wholly defective at the time she instituted her suit, as each amendment must relate to and speak as of the time of the filing of the original suit. Formerly it was held that in order for one to successfully attack and set aside a conveyance as fraudulent he must first reduce his claim to a judgment and have a return of "no property found" thereon. This return, in fact constituted the basis or foundation of the suit in equity seeking to set aside the conveyance. This procedure was necessarily tedious and frequently worked great, if not irreparable, hardships upon creditors, and to remedy this fault and give to a creditor a more speedy trial and expeditious remedy the Legislature, in 1896, enacted section 1907a, which is as follows: "That hereafter in this Commonwealth it shall be lawful for any party who may be aggrieved thereby, when any real property has been frequently conveyed, transferred or mortgaged, to file, in a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, a petition in equity against the parties to such fraudulent transfer or conveyance or mortgage, or their representatives or heirs, alleging therein the facts showing their right of action and alleging such fraud, or the facts constituting it, and describing such property, and when done a lis pendens shall be created upon the property so described, and said suit shall progress and be determined as other suits in equity, and as though it had been brought on a return of nulla bona, as has heretofore been required. All laws, or parts of laws, in conflict herewith are hereby repealed."

By this enactment the old rule of practice was abrogated and an entirely new rule was substituted therefor, so that now a creditor upon learning that his debtor is disposing of his property and conveying away his real estate without making provision for the payment of his debt can go into a court of equity and, by complying with section 1907a, Kentucky Statutes, subject the property so alienated or conveyed, without having first reduced his claim to a judgment and had a return of "no property found" thereon. The validity of this act of 1896 has been considered and upheld by this court in the cases of O'Kane v. Vinnedge, 21 Ky. Law Rep., 1551; Campbell v. Trosper, 22 Ky. Law Rep., 277, and Lochelm v. Eversole, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 1031.

We are of opinion that plaintiff, in her petition as amended, stated a cause of action in so far as it asserted a right to have subjected to the payment of her debt the land which had been conveyed to the appellee, Mary Chenault; that she did not state a cause of action against, nor show in herself a right to subject to the payment of her debt, the house and lot in Richmond.

For the reasons indicated the demurrer to the petition should have been overruled.

The case of Virginia Crooke v. W. S. Hume's Ex'tx, &c., is reversed and remanded, for further proceedings consistent with this opinion; and the case of the National Bank of Cynthiana v. W. S. Hume's Ex'tx, &c., is affirmed.

LOUISVILLE RAILWAY CO. v. WILLIAMS.

(Filed April 23, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Street Railway—Action for Tort—Amended Plea for Settlement—Responsive Plea—Tender of Money—In an action against a railway company for a tort by a passenger being negligently thrown from its car, in alighting therefrom, in which an amended answer was filed, pleading a settlement, to avoid this plea the plaintiff might show that the settlement was obtained when she was unconscious, and that she had promptly tendered the money back, and when the tender was refused, paid it into court, and, upon proof of such tender and its payment into court, the plaintiff was properly allowed to proceed with her action.

2. Witness—Employee of Railway—Offer to Compromise—Evidence of—Competency—Bias of Witness—On the trial of action against a railroad company, Dr. R. gave testimony in its defense. On cross-examination, the plaintiff attempted to show that he was in the service of the company, and, in order to show his bias, he was asked if he had not, during the trial, proposed to compromise it at $400, which he denied. Held—That the proof of such offer was competent to show the bias of the witness.

Fairleigh, Straus & Fairleigh and Greene & VanWinkle for appellant.

Bennett H. Young and Popham & Webster for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas Branch, Third Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, affirming.

Mrs. Ora Williams was on a street car going south on Walnut street in Louisville. She rang the bell to stop at Seventh street. When the car stopped, she got up and went out on the platform.

Just as she was stepping from the platform, the car was started. This caused her to miss the step, and she was thrown to the street, falling on her shoulder and head. She sustained painful injuries, for which she brought this suit. The jury to whom the case was submitted found a verdict for her, in the sum of $500, and the railway company appeals.

By an amended answer, the defendant pleaded that Mrs. Williams had compromised with it for $25, paid her by it. Mrs. Williams testified that she did not know anything about the alleged compromise, that she was suffering intensely from her injuries, and that an opiate was administered to her; that when she came to herself, the money was on the bed, and she was told it was left there by the defendant, but that she did not know anything of the transaction. According to the proof for the defendant, the compromise was deliberately made; but, under the evidence, the question was properly left to the jury. The alleged settlement was made on the day after the injury, when Mrs. Williams was suffering intensely, and after an opiate had been administered to her. (L. & N. R. Co. v. Helm, 28 Ky. Law Rep., 603.)

After the evidence was closed, the court allowed the plaintiff's attorney to be sworn, and to testify that he had tendered the $25 to the defendant. The court did not abuse a sound discretion in allowing this to be done, as an order had been made in the case, by which the $25 was paid into court, and the rejoinder which put the tender in issue was not in the papers of the case; and, in this way, the attorney was misled. The proof was not offered earlier because the attorney did not know that there was an issue on the question. No objection was made, at the time, that the tender was not made soon enough; at least, no questions were asked to show the date of the tender, the only point made, at the time, being that the evidence came too late. But, aside from this, when the defendant, by an amended answer, set up the compromise, the plaintiff was properly allowed, after tendering the money to the defendant and paying it into court, to proceed with her action. The plaintiff sued upon her cause of action for the tort. The amended answer pleaded the settlement in bar of the action. To avoid this plea, the plaintiff might show that the settlement was obtained when she was unconscious, and that she had promptly tendered the money back, and, when the tender was refused, paid it into court. The tender was made to an officer of the defendant, acting in place of the treasurer. The tender to him was sufficient. His answer, when the tender was made, is sufficient to show, prima facie, that the tender was made before the suit was brought. (Hoyt v. Byrnes, 11 Me., 475; 24 Am. & Eng. Encyc., 320; R. R. Co. v. Dupree, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 2349; Union Tel. Co. v. Parsons, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 2008.)

Dr. Ryan was introduced as a witness for the defendant, and gave testimony important in its defense. On cross-examination, the plaintiff attempted to show that he was in the service of the defendant or employed by it, and to establish his bias, asked him if he had not, during the trial of the case, proposed to compromise it at $400. He denied having made the statement and the court allowed the plaintiff to prove by another witness that Ryan had made this proposition, the court then telling the jury that the evidence was only to be considered as bearing on his credibility and not as showing a concession of liability on the part of the defendant. The evidence was properly admitted as the bias of a witness may always be shown on the question of his credibility. The evidence did not show that Dr. Ryan was a representative of the company and it was not admitted for that purpose, but it did tend to show that Dr. Ryan was taking an interest in the case for the railway company and tended to show his bias and was therefore properly admitted as affecting his credibility. (Meaux v. Meaux, 81 Ky., 423; Railway Co. v. Constans, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 158.)

Judgment affirmed.

HARDING'S ADM'R, &c. v. WEISIGER.

(Filed April 23, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Executors—Administrators—Power to Sell Under Will—When an executor or administrator, with power under a will to sell and convey real estate, institutes an action asking the aid of a court with reference to any matter connected with the settlement of the estate, he does not by that act turn over to the court the exclusive charge of the estate and thereby lose all power and control over it.

2. Interlocutory Order—Estoppel—Pending the action to settle the estate, an order sustaining exceptions to the Commissioner's report was an interlocutory order, but H., who had been paid a sum under this settlement, which she received without objection, and failing to except to the final report of the Commissioner, is estopped from claiming any rights which she might have had under the order referred to.

3. Administrator With the Will Annexed—Powers of—An administrator, with the will annexed, has all the powers of the executor named in the will, whether that executor qualifies or not.

Robert Harding and C. H. Rodes for appellants.

M. C. Sauffley and Breckinridge & Breckinridge for appellee.

Appeal from Boyle Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn, reversing.

In the year 1894 Samuel Harding, a resident of Boyle county, Ky., made and executed his will and appointed his wife, Lucy W. Harding, as executrix thereof with full power to sell and convey any and all of his real estate. Harding died in January, 1903. The will was probated, but Lucy W. Harding failed to qualify as executrix, and appellant, J. L. Bruce, was appointed by the county court administrator of the estate with the will annexed. In the month of January, 1904, appellant, after due advertisement, sold at public sale many pieces of property belonging to Samuel Harding's estate, and appellee, Weisiger, purchased at the sale twenty-one parcels of the property upon the following terms: one-third in cash, one-third payable in six months and the balance in twelve months, with interest at six per cent on the deferred payments, from the date of the sale until paid. A few days after the sale appellee directed a written communication to appellant stating that he had been advised that he (appellant) did not have the power to convey to him a good title to the property purchased by him, and requested appellant to make and present to him a deed signed by the devisees under the will of Samuel Harding, and then named all the devisees, their wives or husbands, except Lucy W. Harding, who was a sister of appellee. Appellant made and executed a deed as requested, which appellee accepted, made the cash payment and executed his notes for the deferred payments, and afterwards paid the notes due in six months, but refused to pay the last notes upon which appellant instituted this action seeking a judgment thereon against appellee and to enforce the lien upon the twenty-one parcels of land. Appellee answered denying appellant's right to prosecute the action and his authority under the will to sell and convey the property. First, for the reason that the will did not give him power to sell.

Second, because he had instituted an action in the Boyle Circuit Court, before the sale of the property, for a settlement of Harding's estate, and this action was pending and undetermined at the time the sale of the property was made, which had the effect to divest him of the right to make the sale, even if such power was conferred by the will; that the pendency of the action to settle the estate placed the power to sell the property exclusively with the court in that action; and further pleaded that the question of the power of appellant to make this sale and conveyance was settled by the judgment of the court in the action referred to to settle the estate. Appellant filed a reply to this answer controverting it and set up matters occurring in the settlement action tending to show the court and all the parties, especially Lucy W. Harding, did not regard the judgment as effective and binding and waived all rights, if any they had thereunder. To this reply the court sustained a demurrer and dismissed appellant's action.

Harding acknowledged in his will an indebtedness to his wife of $13,000.00, which he directed to be paid to her, and then devised to her one-third of all the remainder of his estate, after the payment of his debts, and then gave to her the other two-thirds during her natural life, with remainder to his brothers and sisters or their descendants. The third item of the will is as follows:

"I appoint my wife, Lucy W. Harding, executrix of this will and invest her with full power to sell and convey any and all of my real and personal estate as she may think best."

Appellee's counsel contends that appellant had no power to sell and convey this property under the will, and quotes sections 3888 and 3892 of the statutes, and argues that as Mrs. Lucy Harding never qualified as executrix of the will, that there was never an executor of the will, that no one as executor ever undertook to execute the will, that no one ever died in the office of executor of the will or vacated the office, that there must have been an executor before the power of sale conferred by the will passed to an administrator. We can not agree to this. Counsel has overlooked section 3891 of the statutes, which is as follows:

"If there be no executor appointed by the will, or if the executors therein named die, or refuse the executorship, or fail to give bond as required by law, which shall amount to such refusal, the court may grant administration, with the will annexed, to the person who would have been entitled to administration if there had been no will."

This section and the succeeding section, 3892, gives the administrator with the will annexed all power and authority given in the will to the named executor, and this power is given the administrator with the will annexed, even though he is not appointed by the court as the successor of the executor previously appointed by the court. It is plain that the administrator, with the will annexed, has all the powers of the executor named in the will, whether that executor qualified or not, if at the time of appointment the office is vacant, whether by failure to qualify or by resignation or by death after qualifying. (Gulley v. Prather, 7 Bush, 167, and Shields v. Smith, 8 Bush, 601.) Appellee's counsel also contends that the power to sell was given to Lucy W. Harding not as executrix, but was conferred on her as a donee of a special power. We think this incorrect. The language of the will shows that it was the intention of the testator that she should have that power as his executrix. It was not his intention to give her the exclusive power to dispose of all of his property as she wished without first qualifying and executing bond as executrix. Appellee further contends that the institution of the suit by the administrator to settle the estate brought the whole estate within the jurisdiction of the Boyle Circuit Court for administration and settlement, and it was alone within the power of the Boyle Circuit Court to direct a sale of the real estate, and by that act he renounced all the powers he had ever had over the estate given him by the will, and the court took complete control of the whole matter. It appears that at the time appellant instituted the action to settle the estate he had twelve or fifteen thousand dollars on hand with which to pay creditors, but all the creditors had not presented their claims properly proven, and that Lucy W. Harding, the widow, had a claim and also her brother, John Weisiger, who had failed to prove and present them. Appellant had been informed that the $13,000.00, acknowledged in the will to be due Lucy W. Harding, had been partly paid by the testator in his lifetime; and the action was brought with the view of having the creditors present their claims proven as required by the statute. The case was referred to the master commissioner to make a settlement with appellant showing the amounts he had received and paid out, and to take proof and report the claims against the estate. Lucy W. Harding presented a claim for about $42,000.00, and her brother, John Weisiger, presented one for something over $6,000.00. Both of these claims were litigated and greatly reduced.

Appellant did not describe any real estate in his petition nor ask for the sale of any. The purpose of that action was to ascertain the amount of the just claims against the estate so that he might sell enough of the real estate, taking into consideration the amount he already had in his hands, to pay them. This purpose was a commendable and proper one. By this method he saved all the cost that would have accrued had the court taken the real estate in charge and had it sold. He had no reason for asking the court to do for him what he had power, under the will, to do. It is not pretended that appellant was intending to do anything wrong, or that he sold the real estate for less than its value, or that he sold more of it than was necessary to enable him to pay the debts. In our opinion, when an executor or administrator, with power under a will to sell and convey real estate, institutes an action asking the aid of a court with reference to any matter connected with the settlement of the estate, he does not, by that act, turn over to the court the exclusive charge of the whole estate and thereby lose all power and control over the estate.

By section 428, of the Code, a representative, legatee, distributee or creditor of a deceased person has the right to bring an action for the settlement of the estate. If the principle contended for by appellee is correct, then it would follow that if a creditor brought an action it would have a like effect to place the whole estate and the settlement thereof in charge of the court. The case of Messman v. Worthington's Ex'ors, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 2116, was an action instituted under section 428, of the Code, by a creditor against the executors for a settlement of the estate. In that case the court held that a personal representative, who was empowered by the will to sell the real estate of his testator, might sell same while an action is pending to settle the estate, and that the purchaser would be required to take the property and comply with his contract of purchase; the purchaser having refused to take the property and sought to be relieved from his purchase, upon the ground that the personal representative could not sell same because there was an action pending to settle the estate when he made the purchase.

In the suit to settle the estate appellant made three settlements with the master commissioner in which he reported all the cash collected on claims due the estate, and the cash received from the purchaser of this real estate to the time of each settlement. Lucy W. Harding filed exceptions to the first two reports, and among the exceptions she filed was one excepting to the report charging appellant with the cash received and purchase money on the real estate. Upon hearing the exceptions the court entered the following order:

"The court having under consideration the exceptions of Lucy W. Harding, filed on April 19, 1906, to the master commissioner's report of settlement with the administrator with the will annexed filed on September 14, 1904, and April 17, 1906, now being advised, the exceptions of said Lucy W. Harding to the commissioner's report in which he charges said administrator with the proceeds of the sale of said real estate, are hereby sustained, to which ruling of the court the administrator excepts. The court reserves further consideration (on) second ground of exceptions."

In our opinion this was an interlocutory order (Adkisson v. Dent, 88 Ky., 628), and it was afterwards so treated by the court and all the parties to this action. The court afterwards ordered the commissioner to pay out all the money received from the sales of the real estate, which had been paid over to him by appellant, to the creditors, Lucy W. Harding being one of them, and was paid something over $21,000.00, which she received without objection or exception, and having done this and failing to except to the final report of the commissioner and to the order of the court directing the payment of this money to the creditors of the estate, she, in all events, is estopped from claiming any rights that she might have had under the order of the court referred to, if she ever obtained any rights thereunder. The order does not expressly adjudge that appellant had no right to sell the real estate, and there was no order directing the commissioner to refund to appellant the amounts turned over by him, which had been received from the sale of the real estate. It did not declare the deed made to appellee, Weisiger, ineffective or void, and did not direct him to surrender the possession of the real property which he had had since he accepted the deeds. Surely the court and parties in interest did not intend to let the purchasers hold the property and the devisees under the will be re-invested with the title to the property and the creditors of the estate to be paid by appellant out of his own means, which would be the effect of the action of the court and the parties, if appellee's contention herein be upheld.

For these reasons the judgment of the lower court is reversed and remanded, for further proceedings consistent herewith.

BOWE, &c. v. RICHMOND, &c.

(Filed April 23, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Deeds—Purchase of Land by Husband—Conveyance to Wife and Children by Said Husband—Interest of Afterborn Children—A deed to land was made by the owner, to Caroline Bowe and her children by A. J. Bowe, which was paid for by said A. J. Bowe. At the date of the deed A. J. Bowe and his wife had but two children. In a controversy between the children as to the ownership of the land, Held—That the deed conveyed to the wife of A. J. Bowe a life estate in the land, with remainder to her children by A. J. Bowe, including such as were born after the execution of the deed.

Vaughan, Howes & Howes for appellants.

C. B. Wheeler and Wells & Wells for appellees.

Appeal from Johnson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle, reversing.

This appeal involves the construction of the following deed:

"This deed between James E. Burgess and Martha M. Burgess, wife of the said J. E. Burgess, of the county of Johnson and State of Kentucky, of the first part, and Caroline Bowe and her children by A. J. Bowe, of the aforesaid county and State, of the second part, witnesseth: That the said party of the first part, in consideration of the sum of $1,000 in hand paid and $100 secured by note, payable in twelve months from this date, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, do hereby sell, grant and convey to the party of the second part, her heirs, the following described property, viz: One tract of land being in the county of Johnson, State of Kentucky, on Miller's Creek, and bounded as follows, to-wit: Beginning at a red oak on a point nearly an east course from J E. Burgess' house; thence down the point nearly a straight line by a hornbeam on a steep bank to Miller's Creek; thence down the same as it meanders to the mouth of the branch near the main road; thence up the branch as it meanders to John Richmond's line; and with this line to the gap on the ridge where the road crosses; thence with the top of the ridge and with Richmond's line to an oak, George Walter's corner, and with Walter's line to Miller's Creek to two sycamores; thence crossing the creek a straight line to a white oak, corner between said Burgess and Nancy Akers, and with their line to Peter Elliot's line and with Elliot's line to the top of the ridge and down the same as it meanders to the beginning. To have and to hold the same with all the appurtenances thereon to the second party and her heirs and assigns forever, with covenant of general warranty. In testimony whereof, witness our signatures, this the 27th day of March, 1887.

"JAMES E. BURGESS,
"MARTHA M. BURGESS."

At the time of the execution of the above deed Caroline and A. J. Bowe had two children, Laura Bowe and Lucinda Bowe, but several years thereafter Lucinda Bowe died, leaving an only child, Dewey Bowe, an infant, to whom as heir at law descended such interest, if any, as she owned in the land conveyed by the Burgess deed.

After the execution of the deed referred to three other children were born to Caroline and A. J. Bowe, viz.: Nora Bowe, Andrew Bowe, and Ollie Bowe. A. J. Bowe and Caroline Bowe, about 1901, conveyed certain mineral rights in the land in question to E. C. Jones, trustee for J. E. Rittenhouse, J. E. Jones, Moses Morgan, and T. J. Hughes, and about the same time attempted to convey James Richmond the surface of the land, the deed purporting to vest in the latter the fee simple title.

This action was instituted by Laura Bowe, Dewey Bowe, infant son of Lucinda Bowe, deceased, and Caroline Bowe, his next friend, to recover the alleged interest of Laura Bowe and Dewey Bowe in the land mentioned, it being averred in the petition that they each own an undivided one-third interest therein, under the deed from J. E. Burgess and wife to Caroline Bowe and her children, by A. J. Bowe, the other undivided one-third, constituting, as alleged, the share of Caroline Bowe in the land, having been conveyed to James Richmond, and the mineral rights in such third to E. C. Jones, trustee, by deeds from Caroline Bowe and her husband, A. J. Bowe, to them respectively. In other words, it is alleged, in the petition, that the deed from J. E. Burgess and wife conveyed a joint estate in the land in question to Caroline Bowe and Laura and Lucinda Bowe, her children by A. J. Bowe, then in being; each taking title to an undivided third, and that the subsequent deeds from Caroline Bowe to Richmond and Jones, trustee, only conveyed them the undivided one-third interest of Caroline Bowe in the land and mineral rights, respectively.

It is further alleged, in the petition, that both Richmond and E. C. Jones, trustee, are in possession of and claiming the whole of the land and mineral rights therein, adversely to the appellants, Laura and Dewey Bowe, and all others, and giving it out to the public that appellants own no part of the land, and that their (appellees') title to the land and mineral rights respectively is superior to that of appellants, which claim and statements, it is averred have cast a cloud upon plaintiffs' title, greatly depreciated the market value of the land, and thereby damaged appellants. The prayer of the petition asks that the appellants be adjudged the owners and given possession of two-thirds of the land, that their title be quieted, and for all proper, necessary and general relief.

The petition made Richmond, Jones, trustee, and his cestuis que trust, also Nora Bowe, Andrew Bowe and Ollie Bowe, children of Caroline Bowe by A. J. Bowe, born since the execution of the deed from Burgess and wife to Caroline Bowe, &c., parties to the action. Nora Bowe, Andrew Bowe and Ollie Bowe, by joint answer, counterclaim and cross-petition each, set up claim to an interest in the land in controversy upon the ground that, though born after the execution of the deed from Burgess and wife, they, by the provisions of that deed, are entitled, as remaindermen, to a third each of the land in controversy, or to share equally with their mother and sisters in the land, if the court should adjudge that the deed from Burgess conveyed it to Caroline Bowe and all her children by A. J. Bowe, jointly.

Appellees, James Richmond and E. C. Jones, trustee, and others, filed demurrers to the petition, and to the answer and cross-petition of Nora, Andrew and Ollie Bowe, which were sustained by the court, and the petition and cross-petition dismissed. From the judgment entered in conformity to this ruling of the court, the children and grandchildren of Caroline and A. J. Bowe have appealed.

We are of opinion that the circuit court erred in rendering the judgment appealed from. It was evidently based upon the idea that the deed under consideration created what, under common law, would be an estate tail, which section 2343, Kentucky Statutes, converts into an estate in fee simple, which, if true, made Caroline Bowe the sole and absolute owner of the land. This construction, we think, does violence to the language of the deed. We know no better rule of construction than that announced by Judge Kent, in Jackson v. Mayes, 3 John, 383:

"The intent, when apparent and not repugnant to any rule of law, will control technical terms; for the intent, and not the words, is the essence of every agreement. In the exposition of deeds, the construction must be upon the view and comparison of the whole instrument, and with the endeavor to give every part of it meaning and effect."

A. J. Bowe, the husband of Caroline Bowe and father of her children, paid a valuable consideration for the tract of land in controversy. The deed, though from one unrelated to the grantees, was made as directed by A. J. Bowe, the purchaser, and with the evident purpose of providing for his wife and children. In this respect, the instrument should be regarded as a deed made by the husband and father himself, or as a will by which he intended to dispose of his estate for the benefit of those who would naturally be expected to receive it because entitled to his bounty. The conveyance here is, by the direction of the husband and father, made to "Caroline Bowe and her children, by A. J. Bowe, of the second part." This expression is followed by the granting clause which says that, in consideration of $900.00 and a note of $100.00, the party of the first part "does hereby sell, grant and convey to the party of the second part," &c. What person or persons will the words "party of the second part," as here used, and the words "second party," occurring in the habendum, necessarily include? By referring to the caption which, as it is not in conflict with other parts of the deed, should be considered in arriving at its meaning, we find that they include Caroline Bowe and her children by A. J. Bowe. Neither the granting clause nor the habendum conflicts with the caption of the deed, and the word "children" being used in the caption, it does no violence to the meaning of the deed to conclude that the word "heirs," found in the granting and habendum clauses in connection with the pronoun "her," mean all the children of Caroline Bowe by A. J. Bowe, and were so intended. (McFarland v. Hatchett, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 276.)

Such words as "heirs of his body," or "heirs lawfully begotten of their body," are usually words of limitation, but not so with the word "children," which is generally held to be a word of purchase, and to embrace immediate descendants only. Such is its meaning, and also of the word "heirs," in the deed before us. The deed having been procured and the land paid for by A. J. Bowe, he had the right to control the form of the deed and select the persons to take under it; his intention, as shown by the deed as a whole, was that his wife should take a life estate, and his children, by her, the remainder in the land.

In Hall v. Wright, 27 Ky. Law Rep., 1185, the conveyance, as expressed in the caption and habendum of the deed, was to Joseph Hall and his children, without naming the latter. It was held that Joseph Hall was entitled only to a life estate in the land, and that his children then in being, and thereafter born, took the remainder in fee.

In Smith v. Smith, 27 Ky. Law Rep., 363, there was a devise of real estate from a father to "his son and his children;" this was held to give the son a life estate, with remainder to the children. In Adams v. Adams, 20 Ky. Law Rep., 655, there was a devise of land by a father to "his daughter, Martha J. Adams, and her children in their exclusive right;" this was held to vest in the daughter a life estate, with remainder to the children.

In McFarland v. Hatchett, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 276, the conveyance was from a stranger to a mother and her children, with covenant of general warranty. It was held that the mother, under this deed, took a life estate, with remainder to the children.

As said in Hall v. Wright, supra, there are many cases in which the husband made provision for the wife and children, the deed or will containing, in many instances, language very similar to that employed in the deed under consideration, and in practically all of them the wife was held to have been vested with a life estate in the realty, with remainder to the children. (Jarvis v. Quigly, 10 Ben Monroe, 104; Smith v. Upton, 12 Ky. Law Rep., 28; Davis v. Hardin, 80 Ky., 673; Frank v. Unz, 91 Ky., 621; Kaenig v. Kraft, 87 Ky., 25; Wright v. Forrester, 1 Bush, 278.)

We are of opinion that the deed from Burgess and wife to Caroline Bowe and her children by A. J. Bowe, under consideration, conveyed the mother a life estate in the land therein described, with remainder to her children by A. J. Bowe, including such of the children as were born after the execution of the deed.

As the interest of Lucinda Bowe, one of the children and remaindermen, living when the deed was made, had vested before her death, upon the happening of that event such interest descended to her only child and heir at law, the infant Dewey Bowe. It follows, therefore, that the conveyances under which the appellees, Richmond, Jones, trustee, and others, claim the land in question, only divested Caroline Bowe of her life estate therein. While the remaindermen can not have possession of the land until the death of Caroline Bowe, in view of the adverse claims set up by the appellees, now in possession of the land, they had the right to maintain this action to obtain an adjudication of their rights, and have determined what interest they have in the land.

Wherefore, the judgment is reversed, and cause remanded, that the circuit court may set it aside, and enter another, overruling the demurrers to the petition and cross-petition, and defining the interests of the parties in such manner as will conform to this opinion.

CLARKE v. McDOWELL'S ADM'R.

(Filed April 24, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Question of Fact—Rule in Such Cases—The questions involved in this case are purely of fact, and it is the uniform practice of the Court of Appeals, in cases of this character, to follow the judgment of the chancellor, if, after a consideration of the evidence, the mind is left in doubt. The judgment here must, therefore, be affirmed.

A. W. Baker and Wm. Lewis for appellant.

J. R. Llewellyn for appellee.

Appeal from Jackson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, affirming.

In September, 1905, J. E. Holcomb conveyed to appellant, Clarke, a stock of general merchandise in a store in Jackson county, and also a large body of land. In 1906, Holcomb became the surety of one Lunsford in a note executed to McDowell for $175.00. A judgment was obtained on this note against Lunsford and Holcomb, and, after an execution had been returned "no property found," this action was brought, attacking the conveyance made by Holcomb to Clarke as fraudulent. The petition proceeded upon the theory that the conveyance assailed, although purporting to be an absolute deed, was, in fact, a mortgage to secure Clarke in the payment of $1200 that he had advanced to Holcomb.

The lower court, upon a consideration of the facts, adjudged that the conveyance was intended to operate as a mortgage to secure Clarke in the payment of $1200, advanced to Holcomb, and also such other amounts of money as Clarke may have advanced before the execution of the deed. He adjudged that Clarke had a prior lien upon the land and the stock of goods to secure the debts due him by Holcomb, and ordered the land subjected to the payment of the Clarke debt as well as the debt of appellee. From that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

The evidence is very conflicting. Sometime previous to September, 1905, A. J. Smith recovered a judgment against Holcomb in the Jackson Circuit Court for the sum of $2,000, execution issued upon this judgment and had been levied upon the stock of goods and land at the time the conveyance was made to Clarke. It is conceded that Clarke paid in satisfaction of this judgment $1,200 and obtained an assignment of the judgment and execution. Shortly after this, the conveyance was made, which contained the following recital as to the consideration:

"Witnesseth: That whereas, A. J. Smith recovered a judgment against J. E. Holcomb, &c., in the Jackson Circuit Court for the sum of $2,000 and $197 costs; and, whereas, the said Smith issued an execution on said judgment; and, whereas, the sheriff of said Jackson county levied said execution on the hereinafter described stock of goods and three tracts of land; and, whereas, said W. H. Clarke paid off said execution and obtained an assignment of said judgment from Smith; now in consideration of the premises, and for the further consideration that said W. H. Clarke is to have said execution returned satisfied in full, the parties of the first part hereby sell and convey." * * *

Clarke testified that the recited consideration is not correct; that in addition to the $1,200 paid in settlement of the Smith judgment, Holcomb owed him $1,000, and he also assumed the payment of all the debts due by Holcomb to wholesale merchants, which amounted to about $1,200, making the consideration, according to his statement, $3,400. In this he is supported by the evidence of Holcomb and other witnesses. He was called on to explain in detail the facts connected with the indebtedness of Holcomb in the sum of $1,000 for money advanced previous to the conveyance, but could not furnish any written evidences of the indebtedness. It also appears that the store, after the conveyance, was conducted by the wife of Holcomb, his son-in-law, and other relatives; and that the money, or a large part of it, taken in at the store was placed in a Winchester bank to the credit of Holcomb, who had an account there, and a good portion of it applied to the payment of the debts due to wholesale merchants by Holcomb, and some of it went to discharge the individual debts of Holcomb. In short, the preponderance of the evidence tends to show that no particular change was made in the conduct or management of the store after the conveyance. It continued to be operated substantially the same as it had been. It also appears that Clarke, after the conveyance, signed and swore to an affidavit, in which he said that he was the owner of one-half of the stock of goods. These circumstances, tending to show that Clarke was not the purchaser or real owner, but only had a lien thereon, are attempted to be explained away by Clarke and the witnesses in his behalf; and their statements are entitled to serious consideration. There was also evidence tending to show that the land or stock of goods was worth $5,000, while Clarke testifies that it was not worth what he paid for it, that is, $3,400, and that he would sell it for $200 less than that sum.

It is also in evidence that Holcomb, after the conveyance, offered to sell the land, and that his family lived on it as they had always done. The weight of the direct evidence favors the contention of Clarke, but there are many circumstances, some of which we have pointed out, tending to show that the conveyance was only intended by the parties to operate as a mortgage to secure Clarke in the payment of $1,200, and other sums that he may have previously advanced to or for the benefit of Holcomb.

In view of the fact that the conveyance was made previous to the creation of appellee's debt, and before it was contemplated that said debt would be made, it can not fairly be said that there is evidence of the actual fraud, that is essential to set aside a conveyance in the interest of and for the benefit of a subsequent creditor. Nor is it necessary that we should hold that the transaction between Clarke and Holcomb was tainted by actual fraud. The lower court held that the conveyance was only intended to operate as a mortgage, and this view we are disposed to accept as correct. The questions involved in this case are ones purely of fact, and it is the uniform practice of this court in cases of this character to follow the judgment of the chancellor, if after a consideration of the entire evidence the mind is left in doubt.

We can not say that the judgment of the chancellor is contrary to the weight of the evidence, giving due consideration to all the facts and circumstances shown by the record, and it must be affirmed.

LOUISVILLE & INTERURBAN R. R. CO. v. BAILEY, &c.

(Filed April 24, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Roads and Passways—Use of—Permissive—Mistake in Erecting Poles on Road—The roadway in question is a private one, the use of the public in it is permissive, and appellant failing to show any right to have its poles erected upon it, its suit to enjoin appellees from cutting down and removing its poles was properly dismissed by the lower court.

Clarence Dallam for appellant.

R. C. Kinkead for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, Second Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lassing, affirming.

The purpose of this appeal is to test the correctness of the ruling and judgment of the Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, Second Division, in dismissing the petition of the Louisville & Interurban R. R. Company, wherein it sought to enjoin appellees from cutting down a line of poles which appellant had erected through their property.

Appellant insists that the poles were erected upon a public road, while appellees contend that they were erected along and upon their private passway, so that, the case was tried out below upon the question as to whether or not the road was a public or private road. A determination of this question necessarily disposes of the case, so far as appellant is concerned, if the finding is adverse to it, for it is admitted that the poles were erected without the consent of appellees.

The roadway in dispute extends from the Preston Street Turnpike Road to the Ash Bottom Road. Originally different members of the Phillips family owned the land extending practically from the Preston Street Road to the Ash Bottom Road. At that time there was a roadway or passway extending from one road to the other, which was used in common by the members of the Phillips family. These Phillips' farms were, many years ago, acquired by Dr. Standiford, who caused gates to be erected across this roadway, one at Preston street, one at Ash Bottom Road, and, at points between them. These gates were part of the time kept locked, and the keys in control of those occupying the land. The gates were kept across the passway until a few years ago, when one was destroyed and the others were removed; and none have since been replaced.

A great deal of testimony has been taken to show that this passway was in general use by the traveling public since before the farms passed into the hands of Dr. Standiford. There is also testimony tending to show that while it was used by the traveling public more or less, it was altogether a permissive use. It is not shown that it was used by any one as a matter of right, or that the claim was ever made by any one that it was a public way, or that any complaint was ever made by any one desiring to use it because the gates across the entrance thereto were locked; and the very fact that these gates were maintained and were kept locked and the keys placed in the possession of occupying owners or tenants of the land, is a circumstance tending strongly to show that the roadway in question was a private passway and not a public road. In an unbroken line of decisions this court has held that an unexplained and uninterrupted use by the public of a passway for a long period of time carries with it the presumption of a grant or dedication of the roadway on the part of the owner to the public, but this presumption of a dedication is overcome by the introduction of evidence tending to show that the use by the public has not been free and uninterrupted, or that it has been merely permissive, hence, each case is made to turn upon the peculiar facts and circumstances surrounding it.

The evidence introduced to the effect that many years ago this passway between the two roads was used by any one who desired to travel it, when considered in connection with the other testimony to the effect that the owners of the land, as much as thirty years ago, erected gates across this roadway and locked them, thereby denying to the public the right to pass through except with the permission of those having the keys to the gate locks in charge, can not be said to support appellant's contention that the public has had for many years the free and uninterrupted use of this roadway; but, taken as a whole, the testimony shows that the use which the public had of this road has, for the last thirty years, at least, been a permissive use.

Sometime before the poles were erected along this roadway the Louisville Railway Company obtained the permission of the fiscal court of Jefferson county to erect a line of poles along the "Phillips Lane," and appellant's employes, at the time they erected the poles in question mistook the passway through appellees' lands for the "Phillips Lane," and erected the poles thereon, believing that they were operating along and upon the "Phillips Lane," where the fiscal court had given the Louisville Railway Company the right to operate. It was clearly through a mistake on the part of the employes of appellant that the poles were erected upon the passway of appellees rather than upon the "Phillips Lane." This is plain from the record, and no doubt so appeared to the trial judge. The decided weight of the testimony in this case supports the contention of appellees that the roadway in question is a private passway and not a public road. This being true and appellant having failed to show that it had any right to erect its poles thereon, the trial court was warranted in dismissing its petition.

For the reasons indicated the judgment is affirmed.

LOUISVILLE COOPERAGE CO. v. FARMER, BY, &c.

(Filed April 24, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Master and Servant—Duty of Master in Case of Infant Employee—When an infant of tender years is put to work at a hazardous business, the master must, at his peril, see that he is made to comprehend its dangers.

2. Same—Instructions—Pleading—The petition setting up the tender age and lack of experience of appellee and that he did not know the dangerous character of the work, an instruction submitting the question as to whether plaintiff's age and intelligence were such as to induce a man of ordinary prudence to believe that he was qualified and fit for the labor at which he was put, was authorized.

3. Verdicts—Excessive Character of—Rule as to Interfering With—The rule is well settled that it is only where verdicts are palpably against the evidence, or obviously the result of passion or prejudice that courts are permitted to interfere on the ground that they are excessive.

James S. Wortham and Belcher & Sparks for appellant.

R. Y. Thomas, Jr., and W. J. Rose for appellees.

Appeal from Muhlenberg Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Wm. Rogers Clay, Commissioner, affirming.

Ellis Farmer, an infant, brought this action by his next friend, J. J. Farmer, against the Louisville Cooperage Company, to recover damages for an injury to his hand. The trial resulted in a verdict in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $3,500, and the defendant complains.

The injury occurred under the following circumstances: Appellant hired the appellee, with the permission of his father, to work at its mills in a place known as the stave-pit. On the next day appellant's superintendent directed the boy to quit work at the stave-pit and go to work at a place in the mill where there were two small saws running, called edging saws.

The only direction given to the boy was to go and clean up the wood, trash and litter that accumulated about the saws. At the time of the accident appellee was only 11 years old. Neither appellant's superintendent nor any one else warned him of the dangerous character of the machinery about which he was told to work. While the boy was at work about these edging saws, which are so small and revolve so fast that they can hardly be seen, the engine of the mill stopped and the steam was shut off. The boy, observing that the engine was stopped and the steam had been shut off, supposed that the saws had also stopped. He had not been directed in what manner or how he should get the wood and litter away from the saws, and, using his best judgment as to how he was to do this work, he reached under a table upon which the saws ran, in order to get the debris from around them. While under the table and with one arm full of wood, he laid his right hand upon the top of the table for the purpose of pulling himself up. This hand came in contact with one of the saws and was cut clear across, and the tendons thereof partially severed.

According to appellant's evidence the boy was standing up, and, while the saw was in plain view, placed his hand upon it. There was also evidence to the effect that the boy's duties did not require him to work in such close proximity to the saw as to render his work at all dangerous. It does not appear, however, as said before, that any such directions were given to the boy. So far as the record shows, he was not told how far or how close to the saws he should work. He was merely told to go there and go to work carrying out the wood and throwing it back.

For appellant it is insisted that a peremptory instruction should have gone in its favor. The rule applicable to such cases is stated in the recent case of Beckwith Organ Co. v. Malone, By, &c., 32 Ky. Law Rep., 596, wherein the court said:

"But, when an infant of tender years is put to work at a hazardous business, the master must, at his peril, see that he is made to comprehend its dangers. It is not enough that he is merely informed of them. Children are thoughtless and heedless by nature. They should be made to understand the danger to themselves of such employment, as well as understand the means provided for protection. If they are not made to do so, then they will be treated as if they did not know it, and the master's duty to furnish them reasonably safe places to work, and reasonably safe tools with which to work, will not be affected by the mere obviousness of the dangers or defects. No one has a right to put children in such perilous places and fasten upon them the consequences of the employer's inattention upon the ground that his neglect was to be seen by experienced and thoughtful persons."

The child was only 11 years of age, and the place where he was put to work was necessarily dangerous. He was not warned of the danger, nor was he even told not to go near the saws. Instead of appellant's being entitled to a peremptory instruction, we are of the opinion that the facts of this case were almost if not quite, sufficient to justify the trial court in peremptorily instructing the jury to find for appellee.

The court gave to the jury three instructions. The first submitted the question, whether or not plaintiff's age and intelligence were such as to induce a man of ordinary prudence and care to believe that he was qualified and fit for the labor at which he was put to work. By instruction No. 2 the court submitted the question of the duty of defendant to warn plaintiff. This instruction is not complained of. Instruction No. 3 submitted the question of the contributory negligence of plaintiff. Counsel for appellant, while admitting that the law embraced in instruction No. 1 is proper under certain circumstances, contend that it should not have been given in this case, for the reason that plaintiff's petition complains only of the failure of appellant to warn plaintiff, and that this was the only question of negligence that should have been submitted to the jury. The petition, however, states that plaintiff was only 11 years old, was inexperienced and had never worked around or about machinery of the character in question, and, on account of his tender age and having had no experience, was unable to realize the danger of working around and in stave and saw mills. The petition further states that plaintiff did not know the dangerous character of the work, and could not have known it by the exercise of ordinary care. We think from these averments the court was authorized to give the instruction complained of; at any rate, the giving of the instruction was not prejudicial error under the facts of this case.

But appellant complains most earnestly of the excessive damages that were awarded. It is true that appellant's witnesses testified that appellee's injury was not a permanent one, but two or three physicians did testify as to the permanency of the injury received—one of them stating that the use of the hand injured was impaired to the extent of one-half. The rule is well settled, that it is only where verdicts are palpably against the evidence, or obviously the result of passion or prejudice, that courts are permitted to interfere upon the ground that they are excessive or unauthorized by the evidence. (Danville, Lancaster and Nicholasville Turnpike Road Co. v. Stewart, 2 Met., 119.) In this case the members of the jury saw the boy; they also saw his hand. They heard the statements of the physicians pro and con. The boy was only 11 years of age. He had a natural expectancy of life of about 40 years. Several physicians testified that the boy's injury was permanent; one was of the opinion that the injury received would diminish the use of his right hand to the extent of, at least, fifty per cent. Under these circumstances, we are unable to say that a verdict of $3,500 is so excessive as to justify the conclusion that it was the result of passion or prejudice on the part of the jury.

Appellant next contends that the court erred, either in refusing to grant a continuance upon the filing of its affidavit on the ground of the absence of two witnesses, or in permitting the affidavit to be read as the depositions of the witnesses. It appears from the affidavit that subpoenas were placed in the hands of the sheriff for the two witnesses referred to, and returned endorsed "not found." The affidavit does not show that the witnesses were within the jurisdiction of the court, or that there were reasonable grounds to believe that their presence could be had if a continuance were granted. The action of the court, therefore, was proper; otherwise, it would be possible for a party who could only get the evidence of witnesses not within the jurisdiction of the court by taking their depositions to file an affidavit showing their absence, and thus secure their testimony without taking their depositions. (Benge v. Commonwealth, 13 Ky. Law Rep., 308.) For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

SOUTHERN RY. IN KENTUCKY v. GRADDY.

(Filed April 24, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Railroad—Shipment of Stock—Measure of Damages—Instructions—In this suit by appellee to recover of appellant damages occasioned by the injury to his stock on account of appellant's negligence in transporting it, it was error in instructing the jury to fix the measure of damages as the difference between the value of the stock if they had been transported within a reasonable time and without unusual delay and the amount they sold for at public sale. Appellee was entitled to recover the difference, if any, between the fair market value of the stock in the condition they would have been in if they had been transported with ordinary care, and the condition they were in when delivered in Louisville.

2. Evidence—Opinion of Witnesses—Pedigree of Colt—The pedigree of a thoroughbred colt is a material thing in fixing its value, and it was important to plaintiff that he should produce to the jury the evidence of persons acquainted with the value of pedigrees and who could inform the jury touching this feature of the question they were called upon to determine.

Field McLeod, Chas. M. Harris and Humphrey & Humphrey for appellant.

D. T. Edwards for appellee.

Appeal from Woodford Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, reversing.

The appellee, on September 5, 1906, shipped from Versailles, Kentucky, to Louisville, Kentucky, over the appellant railway, six yearling thoroughbreds. The colts were shipped to be sold at a public sale in Louisville on September 8th. They were loaded at Versailles on the morning of September 5th, and in the usual course of transportation should have reached their destination on the afternoon of the day they were shipped. They were not delivered at Louisville until the afternoon of September 6th.

Alleging that the stock were injured, and their marketable value at the sale greatly reduced by reason of the negligence of appellant in failing to transport them within a reasonable time, appellee brought this suit to recover damages for the loss sustained. A jury assessed the damage at one thousand dollars, and from the judgment on the verdict this appeal is prosecuted.

In view of the fact that there must be a re-trial of the case, we will only state so much of the evidence as is necessary to an understanding of the errors relied on for reversal.

The proof is conflicting as to the time the stock were received and when they should have been delivered in Louisville, and also as to their condition, and the loss in their marketable value sustained by the delay in their shipment. There was, however, sufficient evidence to warrant a submission of the case to the jury, and to authorize a verdict for appellee.

Serious and just complaint is made of instruction number two, which reads as follows:

"If the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant company negligently and carelessly failed to transport said six yearlings to the Central Stock Yards in Louisville, Ky., within a reasonable time, and without unusual delay, and by reason of the negligence and carelessness of the defendant company, if any proven, the said six yearlings or any of them became sick or ill or feverish or contracted a disease, and were reduced in health or strength, quality or value, they should find in damages for the plaintiff the difference, if any proven, between the fair vendable market value of said yearlings or any of them on September 8, 1906, at Douglass Park, Louisville, Ky., if the said six head of yearlings were transported to the place of their destination named in the contract of shipment in the ordinary and usual condition had they arrived there within a reasonable time and without unusual delay, and the amount said yearlings sold for in the condition they were in on the 8th day of September, 1906, not exceeding in all five thousand dollars. Unless the jury so believe, they will find for the defendant."

The radical error in this instruction is that it fixed the measure of damage as the difference between the value of the stock if they had been transported within a reasonable time and without unusual delay, and the amount they sold for at the public sale. It was competent to prove what the stock sold for at the public sale, as a circumstance tending to show their value, and to show that the fair market value was not realized for them. But, what they brought at the sale was not the test of the depreciation in their market value that should have been submitted to the jury. If the stock had been in first class condition and had been transported within a reasonable time, and with the usual care, they might not have brought at the sale one-half of their real or market value. On the other hand, they might have sold for more than their real or market value. The sale may have been poorly attended, not well advertised, held at an inopportune time or an unfavorable place, the day may not have been suitable, the persons conducting the sale may not have had the confidence of buyers. We merely mention these as a few of the many illustrations that might be given for the purpose of showing that what the colts brought at the sale was not a fair test of the depreciation in their market value caused by the delay in shipment. Appellee was entitled to recover the difference, if any, between the fair market value of the stock in the condition they would have been if they had been transported with ordinary care, reasonable diligence and within a reasonable time, and the condition they were in when delivered at Louisville. (C., N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Pendleton & Hudson, 29 Ky. Law Rep., 721; Newport News & Mississippi Valley R. Co. v. Mercer, 16 Ky. Law Rep., 555; Hutchinson on Carriers, section 1366.)

It may be conceded that this rule by which to measure the loss sustained is not by any means accurate or entirely satisfactory, but it is the best available under the circumstances. In cases like this all that the shipper is entitled to is compensation for his loss resulting from the delay of the carrier in the shipment. It will be readily agreed that the amount lost is in most instances the depreciation in the fair market value of the stock resulting from the delay, but it is often troublesome to ascertain with reasonable certainty the amount of this loss. Generally speaking, what property brings at a public sale is a fair test of its value, and in some instances it may be the only available test. For this reason it is considered competent for persons shipping live stock for sale to introduce as evidence the price they brought on the market, but this is not the only nor is it a conclusive test. It is only one of the means by which the value of the property and the loss may be ascertained. The opinion of witnesses who saw the stock, or who knew its condition, or the injury it received, or the depreciation in its market value, is also competent evidence, but neither is it conclusive. All these facts, and any others that throw light upon the condition of the stock, the injury they received, and the depreciation in the market value, the jury have the right to consider in making up their verdict. But, it is not proper to single out in an instruction by which the jury must be controlled any particular standard of value or loss other than the depreciation in the market value. The jury should be allowed, after hearing the evidence, to fix for themselves from the evidence the depreciation in the fair market value, and not be confined by the court to what the property sold for or to the opinion of witnesses as to its value.

It is further complained by appellant that the trial court permitted incompetent evidence to go to the jury. The evidence objected to was made by witnesses who had never seen the colts shipped by appellee and who were not present at the sale when they were offered. These witnesses were gentlemen engaged in the purchase, sale and breeding of race horses, and were familiar with the pedigrees and breeding of appellee's colts. After the colts had been described to them, they were asked in substance to examine the catalogue containing the description and pedigree and state what would be the fair market value of each of them on the 8th day of September, 1906, at Douglass Park, Louisville, Ky., if they had been shipped from Versailles on the morning of the 5th, and had arrived at Louisville in the usual time and in the usual condition. Their estimate of the value of the colts was based largely on the knowledge of the witnesses touching their pedigree and breeding. It is argued that this evidence was too speculative to be admissible and it is said that a witness who has never seen a colt that he is asked to fix a value on would be venturing an opinion not based on sufficient knowledge to make it competent. In this opinion we do not concur. The pedigree of a thoroughbred colt is a material factor in fixing its value, and, in the estimation of many persons, it is more important than the individuality of the animal, its style, bearing and movement, the shape of its body and limbs and general conformation. It is also true that a horse may have a fine pedigree and yet be deficient or defective in some important particulars that could only be discovered by inspection, and that the picture of a horse, whether it be a pen picture, a photograph or a word picture, might convey an inadequate idea of its value and furnish an erroneous impression as to its qualities. But these facts go more to the weight of the evidence than to its competency. There is a wide difference between the weight that a court or jury may and ordinarily will attach to evidence, but if the offered evidence is competent the question of its probative value is for the jury trying the case. Expert and opinion evidence is allowable in many cases, although the expert may have no personal knowledge of the particular thing he is called on to express an opinion concerning and may never have seen it. We do not deem it appropriate, within the proper scope of this opinion, to elaborate upon the class of character of cases in which expert and opinion evidence is allowable. It embraces a wide field and covers a variety of subjects concerning which jurors may be unable to come to a correct conclusion without the aid of the testimony of persons who have made the subject a study. But, confining our remarks to the matter particularly in hand, we may say that a trader or dealer in stock, or a person who is qualified by experience, may give evidence as to the value of cattle, hogs and other animals that have a market value although he may never have seen them. If these colts had not been thoroughbreds, it would have been admissible to prove their value by persons who had experience in the breeding or purchase and selling of colts; but, as they were thoroughbreds, and their pedigree and breeding alone were material elements in fixing their value, it was especially pertinent to allow witnesses who knew the value of the pedigree as well as the value of colts generally to testify. The breeding and care of thoroughbreds has been made a special study by many persons. It has become a business of wide importance. Registers are kept, books are written, and papers, almost daily, published devoted to explaining and exploiting the performance of sires and dams, and the value of certain strains of blood. Thoroughbreds have a market value, and it is regulated in a large measure by the pedigree, although the value is not controlled by standards as reliable or accurate as is the market value of cattle or hogs or sheep or other animals that are daily sold in the open and established markets of the country. A jury composed of persons not acquainted with the value of pedigree might be disposed to attach little importance to this well recognized factor in fixing the value of a horse. It was therefore important to plaintiff that he should produce to the jury the evidence of persons acquainted with the value of pedigrees, and who could inform the jury touching this feature of the question they were called upon to determine. (Fleming v. McClaffin, 1 Indiana Appellate Reports, 537; Miller v. Smith, 112 Mass., 470; Brown v. Hoberger, 52 N. Y., 15; Bourne v. Moore, 32 Mich., 254; Cantling v. Hannibal & St. Joseph R. Co., 54 Mo., 385, 14 Am. Rep., 476; Bowers v. Horen, 93 Mich., 420, 32 Am. Rep., 513; St. Louis Ry. Co. v. Edwards, 78 Fed. Rep., 745.)

For the error mentioned in the instruction, the judgment must be reversed with directions for a new trial consistent with this opinion.

UNITED STATES FIDELITY & GUARANTY CO. v. MILSTEAD.

(Filed April 24, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Principal and Surety—Action Against Bonding Company for Injuries Inflicted by Police Officer—Bonds—Extent of Liability—In this action by appellee against appellant for injuries received by the reckless shot of a policeman whose bond was made by appellant, the rule announced in Growbarger, &c. v. U. S. F. & G. Co. is followed, in holding that section 3752, Kentucky Statutes, must be read into the policeman's bond in order to determine the extent to which the surety may be held liable. In view of this, the amount that may be recovered is not limited to the $1,000 named in the bond.

2. Punitive Damages—Recovery of as to Whom—In such a case punitive damages may be recovered of the officer, but only compensatory damages of the surety in the bond.

3. Excessive Damages—Extent of Injury—In view of the serious character of her injuries and their permanency, it can not be said that the verdict is excessive.

L. F. Zerfoss for appellant.

R. S. Dinkle and Watt M. Pritchard for appellee.

Appeal from Boyd Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Wm. Rogers Clay, Commissioner, affirming.

On Sunday, March 25th, 1906, while appellee, Emma Milstead, was standing in the rear of the kitchen of the dwelling-house of Mrs. Tierman, in Ashland, Kentucky, a shot was fired by a man by the name of Sol Wood, the ball passing through the window of the kitchen and striking appellee in the breast. At the time he fired the shot, Wood was a policeman of the city of Ashland, and, as such, was attempting to arrest one Charlie Bryant, whom he had pursued from the city lockup from which said Bryant had escaped while incarcerated therein on a charge of drunkenness. This action was instituted in the Boyd Circuit Court by appellee against Sol Wood and his surety, the United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company, to recover damages for the injury received. The trial resulted in a verdict and judgment against the defendants below for $3,000 damages. From this judgment the United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company prosecutes this appeal.

Appellant first contends that the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury limiting the liability of appellant to $1,000, its covenant in the contract sued on. The bond executed by appellant was in the sum of $1,000. The Kentucky Statutes, section 3497, provides:

Every policeman, before he enters upon the duties of his office, shall give bond, with approved surety, before the mayor, to the Commonwealth of Kentucky, in the sum of one thousand dollars, for the faithful performance of the duties of his office; and for any unlawful arrest, or unnecessary or cruel beating or assault in making an arrest, he and his bondsmen shall be liable to the person so injured on said bond."

Section 3752 provides: * * * "And the recovery against principal and surety shall not be limited by the amount of the penalty named in such bond."

Counsel for appellant contends that these two statutes are of equal dignity and should be construed so as to give effect to both; that in order to do this, it should be held that the latter provision does not apply to municipal corporations where the Legislature has provided a different rule. This question, however, has been decided adversely to the contention of counsel in the case of Growbarger, &c. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. &c., 31 Ky. Law Rep., 555, 102 S. W., 873. In that case, Stevens, marshal of the town of McHenry, after arresting W. L. Growbarger and while having him in custody for a misdemeanor, shot and killed him. His widow and administrator instituted an action against Stevens and his surety on his official bond, to recover of them $20,000 damages. The bond executed by Stevens and his surety was similar to the bond sued on in this action, the penalty therein named being $1,000. The surety contended, as does appellant in this case, that it was liable on said bond only to the extent of $1,000. In passing upon the question this court said:

"The question is, we think, settled by section 3752 of the statutes, supra, which allows actions on such a bond as that here sued on by appellant, and in addition contains the following provision: 'And the recovery against the principal and surety shall not be limited by the amount of the penalty named in such bond.' The bond, being controlled by the section supra, must be considered in connection with it. In other words, the provisions of the statute must be read into the bond in order to determine the extent to which appellee may be held liable, in the event appellant on the trial shows herself entitled to recover at all. (Moss v. Rowlett, 112 Ky., 121, 65 S. W., 153, 358.) Treating the provisions of the section supra, as a part of the bond, we conclude that the amount that may be recovered is not limited to the $1,000 named therein, but, while this is true if appellant shows herself entitled to recover, the jury can not properly award her punitive damages as against appellee. Punitive damages may be recovered of the marshal, Stevens, but only compensatory damages can be recovered of the surety in his official bond."

The next ground relied upon by appellant is that the damages are excessive. The evidence shows that the wound was inflicted by a ball from a 38-calibre pistol. This ball penetrated the breast-bone. Appellee was chloroformed, and the physician used an auger and chisel and drilled into the breast-bone, finally extracting the ball. After the ball was removed appellee lay in bed for about two weeks. Thereafter she got up and walked around the house. Subsequently she took employment, but was compelled to quit and have another operation performed. The second operation was performed in June. The wound was cauterized, but it did not heal until the latter part of August. This trial was had in February, 1907, almost a year after the injury. The record shows that appellee could not then do heavy housework, such as sweeping and lifting or washing, and could not press her shoulders back. When it was damp weather she could not lift anything. Had pains from the injury, and could not lie on her left side. Dr. B. S. Rice, a graduate of a medical college, testified that the injury to appellee was permanent; that the operation, which consisted of drilling into the breast-bone in order to extract the bullet, necessarily weakened the breast-bone to such an extent that she could not lift anything heavy or do work that required strength, such as sweeping, washing, or any house-work; that this weakness would continue as long as she lived. It is a well-settled rule of this court not to reverse a case on the ground of excessive damages except where the verdict is so flagrantly excessive as appears at first blush to have resulted from passion and prejudice. (Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. Mitchell, 87 Ky., 327.) Appellee in this case is 28 years of age. She must have suffered intensely, both physically and mentally. Before her lies a long life. Her strength and power to work will necessarily be impaired by the large hole which was made in her breast-bone in order to extract the bullet. Under these circumstances, we are unable to say that the verdict for $3,000 is excessive.

It is next insisted that the court erred in permitting Dr. B. S. Rice to be asked and to answer certain questions. It does not appear, however, that appellant relied upon this alleged error as ground for a new trial; that being the case, it will not now be considered by the court.

The instructions given by the trial court are not seriously complained of. We have carefully examined them, and are of the opinion that they fairly presented the law of the case.

Perceiving no prejudicial error in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

L. & N. R. R. CO. v. GORMLEY.

(Filed April 24, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Railroads—Shipment of Stock—Pleadings, Proof, Instructions—In this action by appellee against appellant for injury to a horse in shipment, the only issue made by the pleadings, outside of the extent of the injury, was as to whether it was received by the horse in being removed from the car, or in being caused to jump from the platform to the ground, and the trial judge refused to instruct upon this point, and made the case turn upon an issue which was not raised by either pleadings or proof. This was error.

2. Same—Appellee was entitled to recover, if at all, for an injury which was the direct cause of the accident, and in order to ascertain the extent of the injury, it would be competent to show the condition of the horse immediately after the accident and following it down to the date of the trial.

Benjamin D. Warfield, J. A. Sullivan and John T. Shelby for appellant.

Smith & Smith for appellee.

Appeal from Madison Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lassing, reversing.

In September, 1906, the appellee W. C. Gormley shipped a horse from Richmond, Kentucky, to Harriman, Tennessee. The point of destination was beyond the lines of the appellant company and upon the Southern Railway. The car containing the horse was carried by the appellant company to a point called "Coal Creek," on its line, where the appellant company connects with the Southern Railway Company, but, for some reason unexplained in the record, the Southern Railway refused to receive the car containing the horse and appellee had either to unload the horse and re-ship it in a car of the Southern Railway Company, or, else have the car shipped back to Jellico on the appellant company's line, a distance of some thirty or forty miles, where the car itself could be transferred to and would be received by the Southern Railway Company for transportation on to its destination, Harriman, Tennessee. There were no cattle pens at Coal Creek, and no chute or other facility for the loading or unloading of stock from cars. The platform at the depot was about the same height as the floor of the car, but was some four or five feet from the edge of the car, so that, if the horse was to be unloaded from the car at that point, it could only be done by bridging this distance, and then by improvising some means to get the horse from the platform to the ground.

There is no difference or dispute between appellant and appellee as to the facts connected with this case about the shipment until the Southern Railway refused to receive the car containing the horse from the L. & N. R. R. Co. Appellant insists that it thereupon notified the man in charge of the horse that the Southern Railway Company would not receive the car and that they would have to carry it back to Jellico, at which point the Southern Railway would receive it, as they had no facility for unloading the horse there. Whereas, appellee contends that when the car reached Coal Creek his agent and servant in charge of the horse was directed to unload or remove said horse from the car as the Southern Railway would not receive the shipment, and that in compliance with the orders of and under the direction and supervision of its station agent, the horse was unloaded from the car, and, while being so unloaded was injured.

Appellant alleges that when it offered to take the horse back to Jellico, the man in charge thereof objected on the ground that this would occasion a considerable delay and proceeded to make arrangements to unload the horse so that it could be re-shipped over the Southern Railway. That he improvised a bridge from the car to the depot platform, and forced the horse out over same and then caused the horse to jump from the platform to the ground, a distance of four or five feet, thereby causing the injury, if any, complained of.

It is not charged that the horse was injured in any wise during the trip from Richmond to Coal Creek, so that any injury which resulted to him must have occurred while he was being unloaded from the car to the platform or jumped from the platform to the ground. The answer charges that it was the duty of the appellee to load and unload the horse. That the only duty that appellant had to perform in connection therewith was to furnish the necessary hands or assistants. The reply admits that it was the duty of appellee to unload the horse and it is not denied that appellant furnished all the help that was needed to properly do so.

The whole case, so far as the question of appellant's negligence is concerned turns upon the point as to whether or not appellee voluntarily undertook to take the horse from the car at Coal Creek, or whether he did so under the order and direction of appellant. It is admitted that appellant company had no suitable means at Coal Creek for loading or unloading stock, in fact it had no means at all for doing so. The only way that it could be done was the way in which it was attempted to be done, to-wit: by taking some scantling and improvising a bridge from the car-door to the platform and from the platform to the ground. It seems that with the aid and assistance of two or three helpers the distance between the car and the platform was bridged, but that no effort was made to provide a means for taking the horse from the platform to the ground, and that the man in charge thereof caused him to jump to the ground. Whether the injury, if any, was received by the horse in being removed from the car to the platform or in being caused to jump to the ground is not clear.

The only issue made by the pleadings, outside of the extent of the injury, was that above indicated. All of the proof taken was directed along this line, but the trial judge refused to instruct the jury upon this point, although requested to do so, and made the case turn upon a question which was not put in issue by either the pleadings or the proof, and of this ruling the appellant complains.

Under its contract and agreement to transport this horse from Richmond, over its line and the line of its connecting carrier, to Harriman, Tennessee, it was the duty of appellant, to provide a suitable car in which to ship the horse, and, after having received it, to transport it to its destination safely and without unreasonable delay. For any failure on its part to do so it would be liable to appellee for such damages as he sustained thereby. If, in the course of such shipment, it carried the horse out of the way so as to cause an unusual and unnecessary delay in the shipment, and, by reason thereof appellee's horse was injured, or appellee was prevented from keeping his horse's engagements in the trots or races in which he was entered, if the purposes for which he was being shipped were known to appellant, then appellant would be liable to appellee for such damage as he sustained thereby. But, the fact that the horse was carried out of the usual way or course of shipment and his delivery at the point or destination was materially and unnecessarily delayed would not warrant or authorize appellee in removing him from the car at a place where no suitable means was provided for such removal and run the risk of injuring him. And if appellee or those in charge of the horse, representing him, did so without the consent of appellant then appellant should not be held liable for any injury which the horse may have received while being thus removed from the car. The company pleaded that it stood ready, willing and able to perform its contract, and that had it been permitted to do so it would have safely delivered the horse at its destination. That while the horse was in its care and custody and it was permitted to exercise control over it, it was uninjured, but that the man in charge thereof and without its consent and over its objection, insisted on taking the horse from the car at Coal Creek, although he knew and understood that the company was provided with no suitable means for unloading it at that point, and that while appellee's agent was so unloading the horse, it was injured.

Appellant insists that for this injury it is in no wise liable, but that it was due solely to the act of appellee's agent, the man in charge of the horse. We are of opinion that appellant is correct in its contention that this issue should have been presented to the jury by appropriate instruction. We are further of opinion that the pleadings in this case warranted the presentation of no other issue than this, outside of the question of the extent of the injury, if any, which the horse received. The question of the suitability or unsuitability of the means provided for unloading live stock at Coal Creek was not in issue, and should not have been presented to the jury at all, for it was expressly admitted that the company had, at that point, no facilities whatever for the loading or unloading of live stock, and the company expressly denied that it attempted to or authorized the said horse to be unloaded at that point.

Appellant also complains of instruction number one, as given by the court because it did not clearly instruct the jury on the measure of appellee's damage, if any. The objection being to the use of the word "immediately" before he was injured and "immediately" after he was injured. Technically construed this instruction is, perhaps, objectionable, but it was more favorable to appellant than otherwise, for strictly construed it limited the damages to such injury as was ascertainable immediately after the accident, whereas appellee was entitled to recover, if at all, for all injury which was the immediate or direct result of the accident, and, in order to properly ascertain the extent of this injury it would be competent to show the horse's condition, not only immediately after the accident, but following same down to the date of the trial.

For the reasons given the judgment of the lower court is reversed and cause remanded, for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

TAYLOR & CRATE v. BURT & BRABB LUMBER CO.

(Filed April 24, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Lands—Boundary of—Rule—In this State a claimant entering upon land under a deed describing a boundary intending to take possession of the entire tract, no part of which is at the time of his entry actually possessed by any other claimant holding adversely to him, is by construction and intendment of law in the actual possession of all the land included within the boundary of his deed.

2. Title—Property—Having alleged and proved title by prescription, the trees were plaintiff's property, and it was entitled to maintain either detinue or trespass, and owning the land, it was immaterial whether it was actually in possession of it or not at the time the timber was cut.

O. H. Pollard, W. B. Dixon and E. R. Bosley for appellants.

J. J. C. Bach for appellee.

Appeal from Breathitt Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker, reversing.

The plaintiff (appellant) alleges in its petition that it is a corporation, and that it owns and is in possession of a large tract of land in Breathitt county, Kentucky, which is described by metes and bounds and is alleged to contain three thousand six hundred acres; that the defendant trespassed upon its land, and wrongfully and unlawfully and with force and arms and against its will and consent cut down thirty-five valuable poplar trees, which were then standing on it.

and cut these trees into saw-logs, numbering one hundred and five in all, which it hauled off and wrongfully detained from the plaintiff. The logs are alleged to have been reasonably worth the sum of three hundred and fifteen dollars, and the plaintiff has sustained damages in the sum of two hundred dollars for their detention. The petition contains a prayer to be placed in possession of the logs, and defendant trespassed upon its land, and wrongfully and unlawfully detained of the property.

The answer places in issue all of the material allegations of the petition, and, in the second paragraph, sets out a tract of one hundred acres of land within the boundary contained in plaintiff's petition; and this one hundred acres, it alleges, belongs to and is owned by one Samuel Richie, from whom it purchased all of the growing timber thereon. The answer further alleges that the logs in question were cut from the Richie tract.

Plaintiff admits that it does not own the one hundred acres described in the answer, and alleges that the logs were not cut therefrom, but from the plaintiff's land outside of the boundary of the Richie tract, called the James Bradley patent.

The issue was a very simple one, and turned upon the sole question as to whether the logs were cut from the Richie tract of one hundred acres (Bradley patent) lying within plaintiff's boundary of three thousand six hundred acres, or whether they were cut from plaintiff's land outside of the Richie boundary.

Upon the trial of the case before a jury, after the evidence was all in, the court gave the following instructions:

"1st. If the jury believe from the evidence that the logs in controversy were cut by defendant, from the boundary of land described in the petition, and outside the boundary lines of the James Bradley patent, and that the plaintiff was in the possession of said land, at the time they were cut, they will find for the plaintiff said logs, if to be had, and if not to be had, the value of said logs, not to exceed $315.00. Unless they so believe they will find for defendant.

"2nd. The possession of the son of Sam Richie of the 100 acres conveyed to him by James Bradley does not give possession to said Sam Richie, or his son, of any land lying outside of said 100-acre boundary."

Whereupon the jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendant, and the court entered a judgment dismissing the petition. Its motion and grounds for a new trial having been overruled, the plaintiff questions the correctness of the judgment against it by this appeal.

We do not consider it necessary to set out the evidence in this case with minute particularity. We deem it sufficient to say that, after a careful consideration of it, we think the verdict of the jury was flagrantly against its weight, and the court should have sustained plaintiff's motion for a new trial. The plaintiff showed, practically without contradiction, that its vendors entered into possession of the tract set up in the petition under a deed, and that these vendors and the plaintiff had been in the continuous, adverse possession of the tract for twenty-five to thirty years, claiming to own it to a well-defined boundary. It made no claim to the one hundred acres embraced in the Bradley patent, only claiming all of the tract outside of this patent; and it further showed, beyond a question, that the logs were cut from the land outside of the Bradley patent. It was clearly entitled, upon the evidence, to a verdict at the hands of the jury.

The rule of law in this State is well settled, that a claimant entering upon land under a deed describing a boundary intending to take possession of the entire tract, no part of which is at the time of his entry actually possessed by any other claimant holding adversely to him, is by construction and intendment of law in the actual possession of all the land included within the boundary of his deed. (Harrison v. McDaniel, 2 Dana, 349; Moss, &c. v. Currie, &c., 1 Dana, 267; Thomas v. Harrow, 4 Bibb, 563; Brauth v. Hahn, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1261; Ellicott v. Pearl, 10 Peters (U. S.) 412, 442, 445; Scott v. Mineral Development Co., 130 Fed. Rep., 497.)

The plaintiff established an actual possession of the land described in its petition outside of the Bradley patent, which had fully ripened by lapse of time into a valid title prior to the trespass complained of; and this being true, it was the owner of the logs cut by the defendant. And, therefore, the technical question raised by the defendant, that the action was in detinue and not trespass, is entirely immaterial here. Having alleged and proved a title by prescription, the trees were plaintiff's property, and it was entitled to maintain either detinue or trespass, as it saw proper.

The conclusion we have reached will necessitate a reversal of the case, and upon another trial the court will give substantially the same instructions as were given before, except the sentence "and that the plaintiff was in the possession of said land at the time they were cut" should be omitted. If the plaintiff owned the land, as we think it did, it was immaterial whether it was actually in possession of it at the time the logs were cut.

Judgment reversed for proceedings consistent herewith.

MAY v. MAY, &c.

(Filed April 24, 1908.)

Conveyances—Fraud—Purpose to Cheat Wife—The evidence in this action examined and held that the facts authorize the belief that the sale of the land in controversy was a fraudulent device entered into to cheat the wife of her marital right to a support out of the property of her husband, therefore it was error for the lower court to adjudge the conveyance valid.

D. D. Sublett for appellant.

R. H. Cooper for appellees.

Appeal from Magoffin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker, reversing.

The appellant, Julia May, instituted this action against her husband, Smith May, for a divorce on the ground of abandonment. In her petition, she set out by metes and bounds two tracts of land which had belonged to her husband just prior to the abandonment complained of, and which she alleged he had fraudulently conveyed to his brother, the defendant, W. X. May, for the purpose of cheating and defrauding her, his wife. She obtained an attachment under section 2124 of the Kentucky Statutes, which she caused to be levied upon the land in question, and prayed that the deed from her husband to his brother, W. X. May, be vacated and set aside as fraudulent and void. All of the allegations of the petition with regard to the land were placed in issue by the defendant, W. X. May, and, after the evidence was taken, the case was submitted to the chancellor, who dismissed the petition as to W. X. May, holding that the deed from Smith May to his brother was valid, and awarded the brother a judgment for his costs against the abandoned wife.

Ordinarilly, this court is exceedingly loath to differ with the chancellor as to his conclusion on the facts of a case submitted to him;

but we think that the judgment in the case at bar, holding the deed from Smith May to his brother to be legal and valid, was clearly erroneous. The facts in the case are few and practically without contrariety. Some six months before he abandoned his wife, Smith May executed and delivered to his brother a mortgage on the property in question to secure the payment of a note of four hundred dollars. W. X. May is exceedingly vague in his testimony as to when and where he loaned his brother the various sums which went to make up the aggregate of four hundred dollars which he claims the mortgage was executed to secure. But, inasmuch as Mrs. May joined in, and acknowledged this mortgage, we have concluded, though with some doubt, that she ought not now to be permitted to question it. Afterwards, and on the very day the husband abandoned his wife, W. X. May claims to have paid him two hundred dollars in addition, and then took a deed of absolute conveyance of the whole property upon the recited consideration of six hundred dollars. Mrs. May did not join in this deed, and knew nothing of its execution. On the night of this day, W. X. May assisted his brother to move out the furniture from the home, and abetted him in abandoning his wife and little babe, leaving her without a penny in the world, so far as this record discloses. W. X. May also admits that his brother, who went to Ohio, has since sent him money with which to defend this action.

Taking these admitted facts as a whole, we have no doubt that the sale of the property by the husband to his brother was a fraudulent device entered into to cheat the wife of her marital right to a support out of the property of her husband. If this conclusion be deemed harsh, the answer is that the man who admits aiding and abetting a husband in abandoning an invalid wife with a helpless babe, leaving them dependent upon the world's cold charity, has no just ground to complain that the court views all of his actions with suspicion, and awards to his testimony but little weight in the establishment of any disputed question of fact.

For these reasons the judgment is reversed, with directions to enter a judgment setting aside the deed from Smith May to W. X. May, and holding the latter responsible to appellant for any rents or profits he has received from the land since the conveyance to him was made.

BORDERS, &c. v. ALLEN.

(Filed April 28, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Deeds—Mortgages—Action to Adjudge Mortgage—Evidence—In this action to adjudge a mortgage what appears to be an absolute deed, the testimony and circumstances detailed examined, and held that the weight of it shows that the trial court should have held the writing to be a mortgage and not a deed.

O'Neal & Carter and G. W. Castle for appellants.

M. S. Burns and R. T. Burns for appellee.

Appeal from Lawrence Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lassing, reversing.

Appellants filed suit in the Lawrence Circuit Court to have a deed, absolute on its face, adjudged a mortgage. Issue was joined on this question and proof taken; upon final hearing the trial judge dismissed the petition, hence this appeal.

The land involved in this controversy originally belonged to J. F. D. Borders. It was sold at decretal sale and appellee became the purchaser. Borders alleges that the purchase was made for his benefit, this appellee denies, but be that as it may, thereafter appellee and Borders entered into the following agreement:

"Article of Agreement by and between J. F. D. Borders, and Frank Allen, in which said Allen agrees if on or before January 1, 1904, said Borders pays said Allen $100. I Frank Allen agrees to make a deed to said Border of a tract of land formerly owned by him being now in possession, but if said $100 is not paid on January 1, 1904, then I J. F. D. Borders will give said Allen possession of house and lands and all appertenance thereunto.

"FRANK ALLEN,
"J. F. D. BORDERS."

At the date when the $100, provided for in this agreement, should have been paid, they entered into a new agreement, which is as follows:

"Article of Agreement made and entered into this January 4, 1904, between Frank Allen and J. F. D. Borders, the said Borders agrees to pay the said Allen one hundred and five dollars on or before the 10th day of February, 1904, for which the said Allen is to make a deed to the lot just below the said Allen store which was previously owned by the said Borders. If the said Borders fails to pay the above named sum of money, the said Borders is to give up possession at once with all the appertenances thereunto belonging.

"FRANK ALLEN,
"J. F. D. BORDERS."

"It is further understood that said Borders is not to sell said lot to any one until the said Allen gets the above sum of money.

"Attest: I. H. BORDERS."

The new agreement called for the payment of $105 for the land on or before the 10th day of February, 1904. Appellee alleges that when the $100 was paid him in January he was requested to convey the land to William Borders, another brother of appellants, but that inasmuch as the contract with J. F. D. Borders stated that the deed should be made to him, he declined to make the deed to William Borders, although he was assured by Ira Borders, another brother, that it would be all right, but that, as the second contract did not say to whom the deed should be made, when the $105 was paid to him he made the deed to M. F. Borders, appellant, although at the same time he signed a receipt stating that he had received of Anderson, Borders, for J. F. D. Borders, $105 for the lot.

On August 9 following the deed in question was executed by M. F. Borders and wife to appellee, Frank Allen, for the alleged consideration of $52.50. This deed was lost, and on December 15, 1904, M. F. Borders and his wife executed to appellee another deed in lieu thereof, and it is alleged and not denied that before they would do so they required appellee to pay the further sum of $10. While these transactions above enumerated were going on appellant J. F. D. Borders was occupying and in posesion of at least a portion of the property involved in this litigation, except such time as he was temporarily in another county, engaged in the lumber or logging business. It has been frequently held, and is now the well settled rule, not only in this court, but in courts generally, that a deed, absolute on its face, will be construed to be a mortgage, if, at the time it was executed, the parties intended it to operate as such, the aim of the court, in each instance, is to arrive at the intention of the parties.

Directing our attention to that end in this case, we find that appellant M. F. Borders testified emphatically that he never received but $50 at the time of the execution of the original deed. That the recitation in the deed of the payment of $52.50 is not correct. That this represents the amount of money, in fact, which he had to repay to appellee at the end of sixty days, the $2.50 being the amount of the agreed interest which he should pay for the accommodation of the loan. Appellee admits that he was approached by M. F. Borders on as many as two different occasions between the time that the deed was executed to M. F. Borders in February and the time the trade was consummated and the transaction closed in August, and was requested to make a loan; he says that he declined to do so, but offered to purchase. He had sold this property the 10th of February for $105, and says that in August, or six months thereafter, he bought it outright for less than one-half of what he considered its value in February. If he had paid to M. F. Borders something like the real value of the property, his claim would present more of merit; but when we consider the fact that he knew this property had been paid for by J. F. D. Borders, and that he and his brother were financially involved, and were liable to have subjected to the satisfaction of their existing debts any property the title to which might be in their name, the testimony, not only of M. F. Borders, but of J. F. D. Borders as well, is most plausible as to these transactions. Appellee admits that he only paid $50, $25 in cash and $25 in trade at his store, and his explanation of the entry of the $2.50 additional is not satisfactory. Weighing his testimony against that of M. F. Borders, and considering the facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction, as detailed by appellee himself, we are of opinion that the weight of the testimony is with appellants, and the trial court should have held the writing in question to be a mortgage and not a deed. It is not contended that the deed made later, in December, constituted a purchase of the property, for appellee himself testifies that this conveyance was made to supply the deed which was lost, hence, the deed made in August being but a mortgage, the deed made in December was likewise a mortgage, although appellee paid to appellants $10 to secure the execution thereof.

For the reasons indicated the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with instructions to the trial court to enter a judgment in conformity with this opinion, giving to the appellee a judgment for his debt of $50, with 6 per cent. interest thereon from August 10, 1904, until paid, and the further sum of $10, with 6 per cent. interest thereon from December 10, 1904, until paid; and ordering and directing the property described in the pleadings, or enough thereof for that purpose, to be sold to satisfy the debt, interest and cost. He will give to appellants a reasonable time, not exceeding thirty days from the date of the entry of the judgment herein, to satisfy said judgment debt before advertising the property for sale.

BANKERS FRATERNAL UNION, &c. v. DONAHUE.

(Filed April 28, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Burden of Proof—Bill of Exceptions—Motion for new trial—The alleged error in allowing appellee the burden of proof was not made a ground for a new trial, and because this court will not now consider this question, it is unnecessary to determine who had the burden of proof.

2. Evidence—Submission of Case to Jury—The evidence with reference to the sanity of the deceased was conflicting, and was properly submitted to the jury.

3. Insurance—Fraternal Order—By-laws—Attached to Certificate—Suicide—Section 679, Kentucky Statutes, is held by the uniform decisions of this court to apply to such fraternal orders as appellant.

4: Instructions—The giving of instruction 2, which authorized a greater sum to be recovered than provided for in the contract if the jury believed that deceased was sane when he suicided, was not prejudicial in view of the fact that the verdict was based upon the fact that he was insane at the time he took his life.

Lieber & Lincoln for appellants.

Edward F. W. Kaiser for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas Branch, First Division.

Opinion of the court by Wm. Rogers Clay, Commissioner, affirming.

In October, 1903, John J. Donahue made application to the Bankers Fraternal Union, a fraternal society, for membership, and thereafter, during the same month, his application was accepted. On the 31st day of October, 1903, Donahue was elected a member of Falls City Lodge, No. 91, a subordinate lodge of the Bankers Fraternal Union, and was then obligated as a member, and obtained a certificate from the society, by the terms of which it agreed and promised to pay out of its mortuary funds to appellee (his wife) the sum of $1,000 upon satisfactory proof of the death of said John J. Donahue. Donahue continued a member of the order in good standing to the day of his death, which occurred on February 23, 1905, on which day he committed suicide by hanging himself in his stable. Thereafter appellee instituted this action on the certificate of membership, to recover of appellants the sum of $1,000. The laws of the order provided that, in case of the death of a member by suicide while sane or insane during the first ten years of membership, his beneficiary should only be entitled to receive one-tenth of the face of the policy for each full year of membership, but with no deduction should death occur by suicide after more than ten years admission to the order. This provision was a part of the laws of the order at the time of Donahue's admission thereto, and continued to be a part of the laws at the time of Donahue's death, except that in 1905 the period of ten years was reduced to five years; and as Donahue was not a member of the order as much as five years at the time of his death, the change did not affect his contract in any manner whatsoever. When the proofs of the death of Donahue were submitted, showing that the member died as the result of his own suicidal act, appellants tendered and offered to pay the sum which they claimed Donahue's beneficiary was entitled to receive under the laws of the order. Appellants pleaded, by way of answer to the petition of appellee, that John J. Donahue committed suicide in the city of Louisville within less than two years after he first became a member of the order, and that by reason of the laws governing the order the beneficiary in said certificate was entitled to receive upon the same only one-tenth of the amount named therein, to-wit: $100, which appellants tendered and offered to pay, together with the costs of the action, in full of its liability under said certificate. The original reply was a traverse, and joined issue on the matters of avoidance set up in the answer. An amended reply was subsequently filed, pleading that Donahue committed suicide while insane, and also that the laws of the order were not attached to the certificate in accordance with the provisions of section 679, of the Kentucky Statutes. The affirmative matters in the amended reply were controverted of record. The jury awarded appellee the sum of $1,000, the full amount mentioned in the certificate. From that judgment the defendants below prosecute this appeal.

Counsel for appellants first insist that the trial court erred in holding that the burden of proof was upon appellee. Although appellants first filed motion and grounds for a new trial, and thereafter filed additional grounds therefor, the error complained of was not made a ground for a new trial in their original or supplemental grounds. Not having relied upon the error in question as a ground for a new trial, this court will not now consider the alleged error, and it will, therefore, be unnecessary to determine the question of who had the burden of proof. (Slater and Wife v. Sherman, 5 Bush, 211; Louisville, Cincinnati & Lexington Railroad Co. v. Mahoney's Adm'x, 7 Bush, 235; Harper v. Harper, 10 Bush, 447.)

The record shows that Donahue's death was produced by strangulation, caused by his hanging himself in his stable with a wire. Upon the question of insanity, the evidence for appellee was to the effect that Donahue was struck on the head with a milk pitcher several years prior to his death, and that the injury was a severe one. For a few days before he died, he was low-spirited and complained of his head. He corrected his children for nothing, and, when his attention was called to the fact, denied doing so. His actions were otherwise peculiar. At one time, when an insurance agent was present, he introduced the agent to his wife three times within a short period of time. Three of his cousins had been confined in the asylum. On the other hand, several witnesses testified that they knew Donahue, and saw him one or more times just prior to his death, and that there was nothing in his conversation or conduct to indicate that he was mentally unbalanced. Upon this evidence the court did not err in submitting the question of insanity to the jury, nor can we say that the verdict was flagrantly against the weight of the evidence.

But appellants complain of error on the part of the trial court in admitting certain evidence given by appellee, who was the wife of the deceased. From the rulings of the court, however, it appears that the court admitted such answers only as bore upon matters of fact that came to the knowledge of the wife outside of and in spite of the marital relations. The facts testified to were in no sense communications from or through her husband, but only matters that she observed as a rational being, just as any other person would have observed them who did not sustain such a relationship. Under the rule laid down in Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. v. Thomas, 32 Ky. Law Rep., 770, this evidence was properly admitted.

Appellants further complain of errors in the instructions, which are as follows:

"A. The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that deceased was insane at the time he committed suicide, that is, if he at said time did not have sufficient reason to know right from wrong, or did not have sufficient will power to govern his actions by reason of some insane impulse, the result of mental unsoundness, which he could not resist or control, then the law is for the plaintiff, and so the jury should find for her in the sum of $1,000 named in policy sued on and in their discretion they may also give interest thereon from the 14th day of October, 1905, till paid.

"B. But if the jury shall believe from the evidence that when John J. Donahue killed himself he had sufficient mind to know that his act would probably result in his death, and that he performed it with that intention then the jury should find for the plaintiff in the sum of $200 only, with or without interest, in their discretion."

It is the contention of appellants that, by the laws of the order, appellee was entitled to recover only one-tenth of the amount named in the certificate, as the death of her husband was due to suicide. It appears, however, that the laws of the order were not attached to the certificate, or made a part thereof, as provided by section 679, of the Kentucky Statutes. Counsel for appellant insist, however, that, as the laws of the order were actually delivered to Donahue at the time of the delivery of the certificate, this was sufficient under the opinion of this court in the case of Supreme Lodge v. Hunziker, 27 Ky. Law Rep., 1201. In that case, however, the court simply held that, where there was a change in the by-laws, a service of a copy thereof by offering to deliver and attach it to the policy was sufficient. The court did not hold that the statute in question had no application to a case like this, where the by-laws were delivered at the time the certificate was delivered, although not attached thereto; and the case is not defended upon the ground of any change in the by-laws since that time. The statute in question has been held, by the uniform decisions of this court, to apply to such fraternal orders as appellant's in this case on contracts issued prior to the amendment thereof by the acts of 1906. (Mooney v. Ancient Order of United Workmen, &c., 24 Ky. Law Rep., 1787; Supreme Lodge v. Hunziker, 27 Ky. Law Rep., 1201; American Guild v. Wyatt, 30 Ky. Law Rep., 623.) But it is further contended that the certificate in question was either controlled by the laws of the order, or it was not so controlled; that if controlled by the laws of the order, the first instruction was erroneous because it permitted a recovery of $1,000; that if not controlled by the laws of the order, the second instruction was erroneous because it permitted a recovery of $200, whereas appellee could not, under the laws of this State, recover anything if her husband committed suicide while sane. The jury found for appellee in the full amount of the certificate. The only theory upon which they could do this was that he was insane at the time he committed suicide. They found, then, that appellee's husband was insane. Had they found that Donahue was sane when he committed suicide and awarded appellee judgment under instruction No. 2, there would be merit in appellant's contention; but, as the jury found, as a matter of fact, that appellee's husband was insane at the time he committed suicide and based their verdict for $1,000 upon this fact, we do not think the giving of instruction No. 2 was error for which the case should be reversed for the substantial rights of appellants were not prejudiced thereby.

Judgment affirmed.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO. v. LAMBERT.

(Filed April 28, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Railroads—Constructing Elevated Wall in Street—Damages to Abutting Property—Subsequent Sale of Property—Effect on Recovery—The owner of a lot fronting on a street through which a railroad company constructed an elevated stone wall on which its cars were run, was entitled to maintain an action for damages for its depreciation in value caused thereby, and such right is not affected by reason of his subsequent sale of the lot before suit.

2. Same—Measure of Damages Recoverable—In an action for damages to property fronting on a street of a city by reason of the construction by a railroad company of an elevated stone wall in the street on which its cars were run, the measure of damages as to the lots sold after the completion of the wall, was the difference in the market value thereof just before it became generally known that the work would be done, and its market value just after the work was done, and as to the lot sold during the construction of the wall the measure of damages was the difference in the market value before it became generally known that the work would be done and the market value at the date of the sale of the property.

3. Same—Accrual of Cause of Action—Where an injury to real estate results from the construction of a permanent structure the cause of action accrues upon the completion of the structure.

Yeaman & Yeaman and Benjamin D. Warfield for appellant.

Clay & Clay for appellee.

Appeal from Henderson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Wm. Rogers Clay, Commissioner, affirming.

Prior to March, 1901, appellant Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. had constructed and was maintaining its tracks on Fourth street, in Henderson, Kentucky, on a level with the surface of the ground. In March, 1901, appellant was granted by the general council of the city of Henderson the right to elevate its tracks. Acting under this authority it constructed a solid stone wall through the center of the street, which, at the place where appellee's property was situated, was about 15 feet wide and over 15 feet high. At the time the authority was granted and the work commenced, appellee was the owner of two lots of ground abutting on the south line of Fourth street. One lot ran with Fourth street 200 feet, and back with Green street 238 feet. This lot was vacant property and could be said to front either on Fourth or Green streets according to the use that might be made of it. The other lot, one block distant, lay on the corner of Elm and Fourth streets, and fronted 92 feet on Elm street and 190 feet on Fourth street. After the right to build the wall and operate trains thereon had been given to appellant, and after it had commenced work on the improvement, the appellee, on June 17, 1901, sold off the first-mentioned lot, 50 feet fronting on Green street. On November 8, 1901, at which time the work had progressed to such an extent that the wall was from one-half to two-thirds built, appellee sold the remainder of the lot on the corner of Fourth and Green streets. On the 19th of September, 1902, appellee sold the lot on the corner of Fourth and Elm streets. At this date the wall had been completed and trains were being operated thereon. On the 25th day of April, 1906, appellee instituted this action to recover of appellant such damages as his property sustained by reason of the construction of said wall. A demurrer to the petition was overruled, and appellant thereupon filed an answer in which it denied any damages to appellee's property, and also pleaded the five years' statute of limitations. Upon a trial, appellee obtained a judgment for $760. A new trial was refused, and the railroad company is here on appeal.

Appellant first contends that the court erred in overruling its demurrer to the petition. While a motion to make more specific might have been properly sustained, the petition, in effect, alleges that appellee was the owner of the lots in question; that appellant constructed the wall; that this wall interfered with the ingress and egress to and from said lots, and with the circulation of the air thereat; that the wall was so constructed as to render the grade much steeper than the grade of the tracks as they originally existed, which resulted in increased noise in the operation of the train, and caused cinders to be thrown upon appellee's property in much larger quantities; that by reason thereof appellee's property was materially damaged, in the sum of $1,500. We are of the opinion that these averments sufficiently state a cause of action, and that the demurrer to the petition was properly overruled.

Appellant further contends that the evidence offered by appellee was inadmissible for the reason that the witnesses were permitted to testify as to the depreciation in the market value of the lot without showing that such depreciation was caused by the construction of the wall. This contention, however, is not borne out by the evidence, for the record discloses the fact that each of the witnesses was asked what caused the depreciation, and each answered that it was the construction of the wall in question.

But appellant vigorously contends that, as appellee sold two of the lots before the wall was completed, he had no cause of action as to them against appellant; and that the purchaser alone, who owned the lots at the time of the completion of the wall, had the right to sue. It is well settled in this State, that the party owning the lots at the time the damage was done, has the right to sue. This right is not affected by his subsequent parting with the title. (Stickley v. Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co., &c., 93 Ky., 323.) In this case, if the property in question was damaged by the construction of the wall, some one had a right of action. If the purchaser of the property had brought suit to recover, the conclusive answer would have been that the property had been permanently damaged in its market value—if damaged at all—at the time of the purchase. He bought the property at a reduced price. He was not damaged, because he got the advantage of the reduction in the price. Who, then, suffered the damage? Manifestly the appellee, who sold the property, for, on account of the construction of the wall, he sold it for less than he could have got for it before it was generally known that the wall would be constructed.

Nor is this a case of recovery of damages for mere threatened injury. The right of action in this character of cases arises under section 242, of the Constitution, which provides for compensation for property taken, injured or destroyed by municipal and other corporations and individuals invested with the privilege of taking private property. The effect is the same as if the owner of the property consented to the taking or injury, and risked the recovery in damages for compensation. As the injury results from the construction of a permanent structure, separate suits can not be maintained for damages. The compensation to which the party whose property rights are invaded is not a sum which will compensate merely for the damage inflicted in the past, leaving the parties who may own the property in the future to recover for future damage, but is a sum which will compensate the owner for the damage which his property has sustained in the past, and which it is reasonably certain it will sustain in the future as the result of the permanent injury. (Stickley v. Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co., &c., 93 Ky., 323; Hay v. City of Lexington, 114 Ky., 665.)

In this case appellant not only had the right to construct the wall, but was actually engaged in its construction at the time a portion of the property was sold. The work had progressed to such an extent as to make the construction of the wall reasonably certain. While the injury to the two lots first sold was not complete, the effect was practically the same, for every person desiring to purchase the lot in question had the right to assume, and would assume, that the wall would be completed, and as a matter of fact it was completed. The appellee being the owner of the lots when thus injured, we think he was entitled to recover such damages as his property sustained.

Appellant next complains of the instructions given by the court. In order to find for appellee, the jury were told in effect that they must believe that the lots were damaged or impaired in their market value by the construction of said wall or the operation of trains thereon, by reason of obstructions to the view or to the ingress and egress to and from the same; that as to the lot that was sold after the completion of the wall the measure of damage was the difference in the market value of the property just before it became generally known that the work would be done and its market value just after the work was done; while in the case of the lots that were sold during the construction of the wall the measure of damage was the difference in the market value before it became generally known that the work would be done and the market value at the date of the sale of the property. This instruction, we think, is in accord with the rule laid down in Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. Cum-nock, &c., 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1330, and City of Henderson v. Crowder, 28 Ky. Law Rep., 1255; the only difference being that the instruction was changed so as to conform to the facts of this case.

The next question is: When did the statute of limitations begin to run? The work was begun in April, 1901. A portion of it had been finished at the time of the sale of the first two lots. The wall was completed at the time of the sale of the third lot. The law is well settled, that, where an injury to real estate results from the construction of a permanent structure, the cause of action, accrues upon the completion of the structure. (Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. Orr., 91 Ky., 109; Hay v. City of Lexington, 114 Ky., 665; Johnson v. Owensboro & Nashville Railroad Co., 18 Ky. Law Rep., 276; Oliver v. Illinois Central Railroad Co., 25 Ky. Law Rep., 235.) It may be contended, however, that, as the cause of action does not accrue until after the completion of the permanent structure, and that as appellee sold two lots before the structure was complete, he thereby parted with his right of action. But this is not the case, for the purchaser did not purchase the right of action unless he paid what the land was worth before it became generally known that the structure would be erected. By buying the property at a reduced price because of the permanent injury, he left the right of action in him who owned the property when the injury to all intents and purposes was done. To hold otherwise would be to deprive the seller of a right of action for damages which he alone sustained, and to transfer the right of action to another who in fact suffered no damage. Of this rule the party causing the damage can not complain, for he responds but once for all the damages resulting from the construction of the elevated tracks and the lawful operation of the trains thereon.

In this case less than five years had elapsed after the completion of the structure before the filing of this action, and the court properly refused to submit the question of limitation as set forth in the instructions offered by appellant.

For the reasons given, the judgment is affirmed.

FIDELITY TRUST CO., &c. v. SHELBYVILLE WATER AND LIGHT COMPANY.

(Filed April 28, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Nuisance—Dam Across a Stream—Overflowing Land—Measure of Damages Recoverable—Character of Structure—Where, by the building of a dam across a stream the water is diverted on the land of another, the measure of damages recoverable depends on whether the structure is permanent or temporary. If it is permanent the party injured is entitled to the diminution of the value of the property injured, but if it is temporary, such as that it may be easily removed or abated, the damage is the depreciation of the rental value of the property injured.

2. Same—Limitation of Action—Extent of Recovery—In an action for damages to one's land, caused by the building of a dam across a stream and backing water thereon, where the injury is permanent, limitation begins to run from the completion of the structure, whatever it may be, that causes the injury, and the action is barred in five years, and all damages for past, present or future injury must be recovered in one action. But if the structure is temporary, successive actions may be brought for damages caused by a continuance of the injury.

William Carroll for appellants.

Willis & Todd for appellee.

Appeal from Shelby Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, reversing.

The appellant, as trustee for Mrs. Ross, brought this action in 1906 against the appellee company to recover damages to her land alleged to have been produced by a dam erected by it across Clear Creek, that impeded the flow of the water, and caused it to overflow the land, and for injury to a private road on the land, alleged to have been caused by water that was negligently permitted to escape from a standpipe erected by the company. The petition sought a recovery for injury to the land, not its rental value. Previous to the institution of this action, there had been disagreements and controversies between the parties hereto growing out of the overflow of her lands, and in 1902 she brought a suit against appellee company, in substance the same as this, asking for damages. This action was settled under an agreement, by which Mrs. Ross conveyed to appellee company a small tract of land adjacent to the land it had previously bought of her for the purpose of building its reservoir. In 1905, the water company increased the height and length of its dam, and it is to recover damages for the overflow caused by these additions that this action was really brought.

We do not deem it necessary to state in detail the evidence. It is sufficient to say that there was evidence introduced by appellant conducing to show that the value of a few acres of her land was seriously injured by the overflows, and that they were caused by the additions to the dam, and there was evidence on behalf of appellee tending to establish that the overflows were due, not to the dam, but to extraordinary rains; and that the damage sustained by appellant was trifling.

Upon a trial of the case before a jury, appellant was awarded one cent in damages. The only question upon which a reversal is asked is for error in instructing the jury upon the measure of damages to the land caused by the overflow from the dam.

Appellant's contention is that the criterion of damage was the depreciation in the market value of the land; while appellee insists that it is the diminution in its rental value. The trial court accepted appellee's view of the law of the case, and instructed the jury that if they believed, from the evidence, "that the defendant so constructed and maintained its dam across Clear Creek by adding to the height, length or breadth thereof, so as to thereby obstruct, impede or divert the water in said creek from its natural flow or channel, so as to overflow and flood plaintiff's lands near to and adjacent to defendant's property, you should find for plaintiff therefor, in such sum as you may believe, from the evidence, will fairly compensate the plaintiff for the d'minution in the rental value of the land so flooded, from September, 1903, to the present time, not exceeding $5,000, the amount claimed in the petition. Unless you so believe, you should find for the defendant."

It is not denied or questioned that the dam, as well as the additions made to it in 1905, are permanent. They were, and are, intended to be permanent.

The rule established by this court is that, where the improvement that produces the injury or nuisance complained of is permanent, the measure of damage is the depreciation in the market value of the property. In this class of cases, limitation begins to run from the completion of the improvement or structure, whatever it may be, that causes the injury, and the action is barred in five years from that time, and all damages for past, present or future injury must be recovered in one action. If, however, the improvement is temporary in its character and such a one as that it may be readily remedied, removed or abated, the measure of damage is the depreciation in the rental value of the property, if it be rented out, or, if it is occupied by the owner, the damage to its use and occupation. And, in this class of cases, successive actions may be brought for damages caused by a continuance of the injury or nuisance. (City of Madisonville v. Hardman, 29 Ky. Law Rep., 253; Hay v. City of Lexington, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 1495; City of Paducah v. Allen, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 701; Pickerill v. City of Louisville, 30 Ky. Law Rep., 1239; Central Consumers Co. v. Pinkert, 29 Ky. Law Rep., 274; L. & N. R. Co. v. Whitsell, 31 Ky. Law Rep., 76; Hutchison v. City of Maysville, 30 Ky. Law Rep., 1173.)

Applying to the facts of this case the well settled principles of law applicable to it, our conclusion is that the court erred in defining the measure of damages. The question is not whether the injury is a continuing one, but whether the improvement or structure that causes the injury is permanent. If the improvement is permanent, the party seeking to recover damages is entitled to the diminution in the market value of the property injured, although the overflow or flooding as in the case before us, is not continuous, but only happens occasionally. On the other hand, if the improvement or structure that causes the injury is a temporary one, or of such a character that it might be easily removed, or abated, although the injury flowing from it may be practically continuous, the measure of damage to which the party complaining is entitled is the diminution in the rental value of the property, or in its use and occupation, as the case may be. To illustrate, if a railroad company should construct an embankment across a drain, and put into it, at the proper place, a culvert sufficiently large to carry off the water, but allow the culvert to become obstructed by debris, causing water that, except for the obstruction, would flow through, to back upon the lands, this nuisance would be treated as only temporary, although the water might remain on the flooded land for a year or more, because the thing that caused the nuisance might be readily removed or corrected. But, if there was no opening or culvert in the embankment to permit the water to go through, and consequently, in rainfalls, the adjacent lands would overflow, the injury would be deemed permanent and not temporary, although the land was only occasionally flooded—because the thing that produced the injury was permanent and so intended to be, and the structure of such a character that it could not be easily altered or the defect causing the nuisance readily remedied or removed.

It often happens that it is difficult for the trial court to determine from the facts of a particular case, whether the improvement or structure is permanent or merely temporary; and, when a state of case like this arises, it is proper to submit to the jury the question whether the improvement or structure is permanent or temporary; and, when this is done, the jury should be required to say, in their verdict, whether the damage allowed was for a permanent or temporary injury. (L. & N. R. Co. v. Whitsell, supra.)

Wherefore, the judgment is reversed, with directions for a new trial, in conformity with this opinion.

ADKISSON'S ADM'R v. LOUISVILLE, HENDERSON & ST. LOUIS
R'Y COMPANY.

(Filed April 28, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Railroads — Dangerous Crossings — Care Required — Question for Jury—In an action against a railroad company for killing one traveling on a public highway at a dangerous crossing the central idea in every case is that the company must use such care and take such precautions for the safety of travelers as the character of the crossing makes reasonably necessary for their safety and protection, and the degree of care in each particular case is governed by the facts, and is a question for the jury.

C. M. Finn and Sweeney, Ellis & Sweeney for appellant.

Helm & Helm and R. A. Miller for appellee.

Appeal from Daviess Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lassing, reversing.

Estill Adkisson, a boy about eleven years old, while riding with his grandfather on a jolt wagon, was run over and killed by one of appellee's trains at a crossing on the public highway known as the "Cox Road," just west of the city of Owensboro. His administrator sued to recover for his killing, alleging that the crossing where he was killed was located on a much traveled thoroughfare just outside of the city limits of the city of Owensboro. That the county road, as it approached the railroad crossing, was elevated, narrow and flanked on either side by a deep ditch, and that the crossing itself was permitted, by the company, to become and remain out of repair, so that, all things considered, it was a dangerous crossing. That the train which killed deceased was running at a high rate of speed and failed to give the proper and necessary signals to warn the traveling public, and especially the deceased, of its approach, and that it was not equipped with the proper and necessary brakes and appliances to enable those in charge of it to avoid accidents and injury while being operated at a high rate of speed. That by reason of these negligent acts on the part of the company and its servants his intestate was run over and killed. The company denied liability and pleaded contributory negligence. Upon a trial before a jury a judgment was had in favor of the defendant company, and the administrator appeals.

Many reasons are assigned why the judgment should be reversed, but the only errors complained of which we deem prejudicial are those in regard to the instructions. Much proof was introduced tending to show that the road known as the "Cox Road" is a much-traveled thoroughfare, just outside of the city limits of the city of Owensboro, and the crossing where the accident occurred is an unusually dangerous one, and appellant insists that the court should have submitted to the jury the question as to whether or not the company should have provided some means other than the statutory signals to avoid injury to persons using the highway at that point.

It is further insisted by appellant that the court erred in defining the degree of care which the deceased was required to exercise for his own safety. In the recent case of the C., N. O. & T. P. Railway Co. v. Champ this court considered at length the duties which a railroad owes to the traveling public in passing through populous communities, and over roads or crossings near cities or large towns, where large numbers of people are known to pass daily, and where the company might reasonably expect persons to be frequently upon or near the crossing. It was there held that while the ringing of the bell and the sounding of the whistle, as required by the statute, might, and would relieve the company from liability in sparsely settled communities, where it was not shown that those in charge of the train saw, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have seen, the danger of the injured one in time to have avoided the accident, but in populous communities and on dangerous crossings near such, a different rule obtains and a higher degree of care is required to be exercised by the company before it can escape liability. As said in the Champ case, supra, the central idea in every case is that the company must use such care and take such precautions for the safety of travelers as the character of the crossing makes reasonably necessary for their safety and protection, and that this degree of care in each particular case is governed by the facts, and is a question for the jury.

Under the evidence offered in this case appellant was entitled to an instruction embodying this idea; the refusal of the trial court to give it was a reversible error, as such an instruction was offered by appellant.

On the question of contributory negligence the court instructed the jury that it was the duty of plaintiff's intestate, in approaching the crossing mentioned in the pleadings and evidence in this case, to exercise ordinary care to avoid being injured by an approaching train, and if the jury believed from the evidence that the deceased either knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have known, of the train's approach, and, notwithstanding this, went upon the crossing and in consequence was killed, and but for such conduct on his part the accident would not have happened, he was guilty of contributory negligence, and the defendant was not liable, even though the jury believed from the evidence that the servants of the defendant in charge of the train failed to give sufficient warning of the train's approach. Appellant objected to this instruction, and offered instructions "E" and "G" as substitutes. Instruction "E" is substantially the same as the instruction given, and instruction "G" authorized the jury in passing upon the question of deceased's contributory negligence, if any, to take into consideration his age and experience and the condition under which he was placed at the time of the injury, and if from the evidence it appeared that he used such care and prudence for his own safety as a person of ordinary prudence and of his age and experience, under similar or like conditions would have used, then he was not guilty of contributory negligence.

In the case of the Paducah & Memphis Railroad Co. v. Hoehl, 75 Ky., 41, a similar question was before this court, and it was there held that a child is not expected or required to exercise that judgment in avoiding danger or held to the same responsibility for its conduct that would be measured out to an adult or one of more mature years. In that case the child injured was twelve years of age. And, again, in the case of the Kentucky Central Railway Co. v. Smith, 93 Ky., 449, this court, in passing upon the degree of care that was required of a child thirteen years of age, said: "This boy was only required to exercise that degree of care that an ordinarily prudent child of his age would have exercised, and if he exposed himself to danger in such a manner as that the injury could not be avoided by the defendant by the exercise of the proper care to prevent it, no recovery should be had; but if the child was on the street or crossing where it had the right to be, and was injured by reason of the gross negligence of the defendant, although guilty himself of ordinary neglect looking to one of his age and inexperience, a recovery must necessarily follow."

Under the authority of the two cases above cited appellant was entitled to have presented to the jury the idea embodied in instruction "G," and it was error for the court to refuse so to do.

Ordinarily those in charge of a railway train approaching a crossing of the character of that at which the deceased was killed would be required to keep a lookout that they might discover the presence of persons upon the track and, if possible, thereby avoid injuring them, but, inasmuch as it is shown in this case that on account of the presence of buildings on the west side of the Cox Road, and also along the railroad track at that point, the view of the railroad from the road was so obstructed that travelers could not be seen until they had come within forty feet of the road, the strictest exercise of this duty would have been of no avail, as the train would then have been too close to the crossing, when traveling at the usual rate of speed, to have stopped until the crossing would have been passed. Hence, under the particular facts in this case it was not necessary for the court to instruct the jury that it was the duty of those in charge of the train, when approaching this crossing, to keep a lookout for persons who might be upon it.

Upon a re-trial of the case if the evidence is substantially that which was offered on the last trial, the court will give to the jury the following instructions:

"1st. It was the duty of the employes of the defendant company in charge of the train that struck and killed Edward Adkisson to sound the whistle or ring the bell at a point not less than fifty rods west of the crossing at which he was struck and killed, and to sound the whistle or ring the bell continuously or alternately from that point to the crossing, and if the jury believe from the evidence that this crossing was in a populous community and on a much-traveled thoroughfare, and, because of its location and surroundings unusually dangerous to travelers, and that the sounding of the whistle and ringing of the bell, as directed, was not sufficient to give reasonable notice of the approach of trains at said crossing, and that this fact was known to the defendant, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have been known by it, then it was the further duty of the defendant and its servants in charge of the train to use such other means to prevent injury to travelers at said crossing as in the exercise of a reasonable judgment might be considered necessary by ordinarily prudent persons operating a train. And if you believe from the evidence that the defendant and its employes, in charge of the train that killed deceased, failed to so ring the bell or sound the whistle as herein set out, or to provide other means or methods to warn the traveling public of its approach to said crossing, if the facts in this case required the defendant and its employes to employ other means, and by reason of such negligence and carelessness, if any, on the part of the defendant and its employes, deceased lost his life, then you should find for the plaintiff, unless you shall believe that his death was due to his own neglect, as defined in instruction No. 3.

"2d. If you find for plaintiff you should assess the damage at such sum, not exceeding $20,000, as will reasonably compensate the estate of Edward Adkisson for the destruction of his power to earn money.

"3d. It was the duty of Edward Adkisson in crossing the tracks of the defendant at the place he was killed to take such care for his own safety as a reasonably prudent child of his age and experience would ordinarily have exercised under like or similar circumstances to those proven in this case, and if the said Edward Adkisson failed to exercise that degree of care for his own safety and but for such neglect and failure on his part so to do he would not have lost his life, then you should find for the defendant.

"4th. Ordinary care, as used in these instructions, means such care as an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under like or similar circumstances. Negligence is the failure to use or exercise ordinary care."

Because of the errors in the instructions above enumerated, this case is reversed and remanded, for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

ROBERTS v. ADAMS & SON CO.

(Filed April 29, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Partnership—Facts Showing—Finding of Chancellor Approved—This action is affirmed on the evidence, which, though conflicting, much of it biased and some of it false, we have little hesitation in reaching the same conclusion upon the disputed facts as was done by the chancellor below who had the advantage of an acquaintance with the witnesses so as to give their testimony its due weight and from which he adjudged certain parties to the controversy to be partners.

J. R. Fears,, H. K. Bourne and W. S. Pryor for appellant.

Moody .& Barbour for appellee.

Appeal from Henry Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice O'Rear, affirming.

This is an equitable action by appellee suing as a creditor of the alleged mercantile firm of J. S. Hundley and Fred Roberts, seeking to compel the payment of its debt by appellant, Sam Roberts, because the latter as an heir-at-law of Fred Roberts, now deceased, had inherited from his father, and was then possessed of certain lands, which were of greater value than the plaintiff's debt; also because appellant, Sam Roberts, had purchased the shares of his brothers and sisters in the same tract of land, and as part of the consideration had agreed to pay off all the indebtedness of their deceased ancestor, Fred Roberts. Appellant denied that Fred Roberts was a partner in the mercantile venture, and denied too, that he had agreed to pay off all the indebtedness of the decedent as part of the consideration for the conveyances to him. The principal question, indeed the controlling question, is whether Fred Roberts was a partner of J. S. Hundley in that matter. The circuit court decided that he was, and adjudged a sale of the land to pay appellee's debt. Appellant, by this appeal, asks that the chancellor's finding of the fact be reversed upon the evidence in the record.

The testimony of the witnesses is sharply conflicting, and utterly irreconcilable. Our effort has been to sift the truth from the mass of contradictory testimony, much of it plainly biased, and some of it false.

Fred Roberts, the decedent, was a farmer living in the country in Henry county. He had reared a family of seven children, all, or most, of whom were married. He had accumulataed an estate of some $4,000, consisting mainly of about 225 acres of land. One of his daughters had married J. S. Hundley. The latter had been engaged in a small way in conducting a country store of general merchandise. His stock had burned out. He then bought out another little stock of goods for $250 or $300. He had not enough means to pay for it. Fred Roberts furnished $150 of the money, paying it direct to the vendor. This much is conceded, and besides is well established by the proof. About that time Fred Roberts' wife died, and he went to live with the Hundleys, at least most of his time with them for several months during which the store was conducted, when he married again. The mercantile venture proved a failure, and about the time of Fred Roberts' last marriage J. S. Hundley (in whose name alone the store was carried on) went into voluntary bankruptcy. He scheduled all the merchandise accounts as his debts, and took all the remnant of his stock as exempt property, moving it from his store over to his dwelling, a short distance away, where Fred Roberts was then living with him. The merchandise was then divided between Fred Roberts and J. S. Hundley. Appellant and other children of Fred Roberts were present at the division. Shortly afterwards Fred Roberts died. There was a suit to settle his estate. A number of debts were proved up against the estate—something like $1,500 in amount. His personal estate seems to have been inconsiderable. Then it was that appellant agreed to buy out the other heirs, paying them each $150 for their shares, except he paid two of them $175 each, and agreed to pay their father's indebtedness. Appellant claims that the indebtedness assumed was that proven up in the settlement suit—none of which was on account of the Hundley mercantile venture—while appellee claims the agreement was to assume all indebtedness. Appellee and one of his brothers, Newt. Roberts, fell out on account of a tombstone, when Newt. informed the creditors of J. S. Hundley, merchant, that Fred Roberts had been a partner in that business, whereupon this suit, and others, were brought to compel Sam Roberts to pay these debts.

Appellee's evidence to establish the fact of partnership aside from the writing hereinafter discussed, consists in J. S. Hundley's testimony that he and Fred Roberts were partners, each putting in $150 of capital, with the agreement to share profits equally; and that upon the dissolution of the partnership they divided the stock equally between them. Newt. Roberts testified that he had heard his father say he was interested as a partner in the store, and saw him in there selling goods and exercising acts of proprietorship. He also testified to the division. Newt.'s wife testified to the same facts. After the case had progressed in preparation and the parties had become worked up more in feeling, J. S. Hundley again testified, this time for the other side, in which he said his former testimony was false. When he first testified he said the agreement between him and Fred Roberts was in writing, signed by Fred Roberts and by the witness; that the paper was in the possession of the appellant, who thereupon produced a paper, which J. S. Hundley identified and testified to as the original contract. It is as follows:

"March 15, 1902, Noe, Ky.

"This 15th day of March, 1902, I, Fred Roberts, do hereby agree to furnish J. S. Hundley one hundred fifty dollars ($150), to be invested in merchandise at Noe, Ky., for which Fred Roberts am to receive one-half of the profits from said business; the said J. S. Hundley is to attend to all of the business; J. S. Hundley is to be responsible for all debts he makes; said Fred Roberts' name is not to be used in the business; said Fred Roberts is not to be responsible for any debts that said J. S. Hundley makes.

"J. S. HUNDLEY,
"FRED ROBERTS."

On his last examination Hundley says that he himself wrote the whole of that paper, including the signature of Fred Roberts, after the latter's death, and indeed after this suit was brought.

Several other witnesses, apparently without interest or other bias, testify that Fred Roberts told them that he was interested in the store, and that they saw him there selling goods. On the other hand, J. S. Hundley's wife, the daughter of Fred Roberts, testified on behalf of her brother, the appellant, that the paper copied above was written by her husband in the presence of Sam Roberts and Louis Roberts (another brother) after the death of Fred Roberts; that it was written by J. S. Hundley, at the request of Sam Roberts (appellant), after this suit was brought in order to get a statement from J. S. Hundley concerning the real relation between him and Fred Roberts, ostensibly for use in the preparation of the defense in this suit. Sam Roberts corroborates Mrs. Hundley in this testimony, as does Louis Roberts, though the latter weakly.

As to the division of the goods, these three witnesses say Fred Roberts bought $25 or $30 worth of them from J. S. Hundley after the bankruptcy, but they do not agree as to the manner of payment, some saying they were paid for at the time in money and property, and others that they were credited upon the $150 loan, as it is called, made by Fred Roberts to Hundley when the latter began the business. A number of notes executed by Fred Roberts, and proved up in the settlement case, were introduced for purposes of comparison with the handwriting of Fred Roberts' signature to the contract relied on in this case. Two very intelligent, disinterested witnesses of considerable experience in examining handwritings, testified that in their opinion the signature of Fred Roberts to the contract was genuine, although they noted a variance between his signatures to two certain bank notes and the signature to the contract which seemed to mystify them somewhat; still it was at that time assumed that the signatures to the bank notes were genuine. There were other notes introduced, the genuineness of which is admitted. In comparing these and the contract the expert witnesses were without doubt as to the genuineness of the signature to the contract. One expert witness, shown to be equally qualified we think, and equally disinterested and intelligent, testified for appellant. He said the two bank notes and the contract were not signed by the same person. It was developed in the case that he was correct in his opinion. The bank notes were signed by Fred Roberts' daughter, Mrs. Hundley, at his instance (she says), he having a sore hand at the time. But appellant's expert witness also testified that there was a dissimilarity in the signatures to certain other notes (admittedly genuine) and the signature to the contract. He pointed out in particular—the crossing of the t in Roberts. We have before us the original documents mentioned above, except the bank notes. The t in the name to the contract seems to have been tampered with. The signature was with lead pencil, and seems to have been re-traced at this place. Whether that was so when this witness was testifying is not made to appear. But taking all the testimony of these expert witnesses, together with the documents themselves, we think the weight of the evidence is in favor of the genuineness of Fred Roberts' signature to the contract.

In addition to the foregoing there are other circumstances which we think shed light on the fact. The contract is claimed by appellant to have been written by J. S. Hundley (who it will be remembered at one time swore he did not write it, and another that he did). Hundley is very illiterate. So was Fred Roberts, though he could write and spell somewhat better than Hundley. Their handwritings show that they were by no means expert in the use of the pen. Hundley, while testifying the last time, was required to write the contract from dictation. His spelling and writing both remove all possibility of belief that he could have written the contract in evidence. He was, when under this examination, trying to help out his brother-in-law, Sam Roberts. He showed a willingness to do, or say anything that could help his case. Therefore, if it had been possible for him to have simulated the writing in the contract he would have done so. He did not do it because he could not. We are bound, upon the physical facts before us, and which leave no doubt in our minds, to reject the testimony that J. S. Hundley wrote either the body of that contract or the signature of Fred Roberts. We are equally satisfied that Fred Roberts did not write the body of it, but did write his own signature. In a rural neighborhood like that, where everybody knows, in a general way, everybody's business (as is pretty abundantly shown by the mass of hearsay and incompetent evidence in this record), the draughtsman of such a contract ought to have been discovered. It was written on a sheet of note paper, with lead pencil, evidencing that it was written where pen, ink and legal cap were not accessible. Its composition is crude, showing it was written by some one not familiar with legal forms. A natural inquiry would be, who wrote it? For that witness could throw much light on the truth, if he would. It is quite likely that it was written by Mrs. J. S. Hundley. She shows she had been in the habit of doing some writing for her father; he at the time lived with her. She was a better scholar than either he or her husband, and so far as this record shows, the best scholar of the family. She was asked to, and did write, a copy of the contract on her examination as a witness. Its spelling is strikingly similar to the original, the same words being misspelled alike in each document. Fred Roberts' purpose evidently was to become a secret or silent partner in the business, therefore he would naturally have had the document written, if not by himself, by some one in whom he had confidence. The record shows he had as much in Mrs. Hundley, if not more, than in any one else in the neighborhood. His statements to others that he was interested in the store would, at first glance, seem to be inconsistent with this purpose to conceal his interest from the public. But the persons to whom he made these statements were either his children, a daughter-in-law, or others bearing the name of Roberts, who testified that they were regarded as "being in the family"—just what their relationship was, not being shown. The motive of his secrecy was to avoid liability for the debts of the business if it failed. Publicity of his connection was, therefore, to be avoided; yet he might, with a feeling of safety, confide to favorite and select relatives the mild boast of his interest in the only store in the village.

In none of the deeds to appellant, except that of Newt. Roberts, was the whole consideration stated; in his deed, doubtless because he then knew enough as to the partnership and the failure of Hundley to cause him uneasiness on account of the firm's unpaid debts, he insisted on an express statement as to the assumption of all the liabilities of Fred Roberts by appellant. And appellant evidently knew enough of that situation to enable him to base a safe calculation upon in buying out these shares. The clause reads: "In consideration of $175 cash in hand paid, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, and the further consideration that the second party assumes the payment of attorney fees and other costs in the settlement of the estate of Fred Roberts, deceased, of which first parties are liable, or may become liable in the settlement of said estate; and second party is to assume the payment of all debts and liabilities of the deceased Fred Roberts, of which his estate is charged, of which said first parties interest in said estate is liable, or may become liable."

The lands conveyed to appellant are shown to have been worth about $4,000. He paid in cash, according to the recitals in the deed, not exceeding $1,100 (estimating his own share at $150). There were debts asserted in the settlement case of about $1,500, leaving a margin of about $1,400. This excess in value was not given to appellant, certainly, but something else was estimated as likely to consume it.

As to the motives: Appellant contends that Newt. Roberts was actuated by spite, and intimates he was to be paid something for his services by the wholesale merchants for establishing these claims. It is true, wicked people do invent stories, and swear to them, too, to punish those against whom they have a spite. But it is also true, that if their motive is punishment, they can use the truth as well where it will serve, and it would be more natural for them to do so. The whole question of bias is one of qualification. It may go so far as to cause the rejection of the testimony altogether. But the genius of the institution of a trial in court is its capacity and privilege of weighing positive statements in the balance of probabilities, arriving at the truth most frequently in spite of express testimony where the act at the time was recorded without thought of falsification, and with reference alone to a natural consequence; where the mendacious tongue, however anxious to serve its purpose, can not speak "Shibboleth" so as to deceive the judicial ear. There is bias upon each side of this case. The court might well doubt any conclusion at which it might arrive, if words alone were considered. But, upon all the facts and circumstances, including that which is believable in the testimony, we have little hesitation in reaching the same conclusion upon the disputed fact as was done by the chancellor below. Then this conclusion is fortified by the fact that it is that of the judge below, who had the advantage of an acquaintance, possibly, with the witnesses so as to give their testimony its due weight as might be justified by their local standing and reputation.

The contract, together with Fred Roberts' conduct, show that his relation to his son-in-law in this enterprise was not that of a lender of money, taking a share of profits in lieu of interest, but as joint owner. Although he endeavored to shield himself from liability for the debts of the firm by an agreement with his partner that the latter alone should be responsible for them, the law makes him liable for them. One may loan money to another to be embarked in the latter's business, taking a share of profits in lieu of interest, without becoming a partner. It is often difficult to determine whether such an arrangement constitutes a partnership or a loan. It must be determined upon a careful study of the agreement and of the circumstances showing whether the silent or secret member was intended to be given an interest in the business itself. Such an advance with an agreement to share in the profits, alone raises a presumption of partnership, and if the money is to be risked in the business it is a strong circumstance tending to show that a partnership was formed. If, upon a dissolution, what is left—there being no profits (which is this case)—was divided between the two in proportion to the money advanced by each there can be no doubt left that a partnership was effected, although neither at the time intended to form a partnership, and each believed the silent one was not liable for the debts of the venture. In addition to the contract, which we find they entered into, the following facts appear: They each participated in the conduct of the business; each claimed an interest in it; there was not a note or other evidence of indebtedness from Hundley to Roberts for the $150 put in by the latter; and upon a dissolution they divided equally what was left, although it represented a loss.

We conclude that there was a partnership, as well as that appellant agreed to pay as part consideration for the land sought to be subjected, all the liabilities of Fred Roberts, which includes the debt sued on.

The judgment is affirmed.

HOWES v. WELLS.

(Filed April 29, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Patents—Proper Location of Land—Question of Fact—The only question in this case is the proper location of a fifty-acre patent. There was no such occupancy of the land as to make the champerty statute apply and the older and better title was with the appellee.

Vaughn, Howes & Howes and Ben G. Wellman for appellant.

C. B. Wheeler for appellee.

Appeal from Johnson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, affirming.

The only question to be determined in this case is the proper location of a patent for 50 acres of land issued to Bracken R. Van-Hoose upon a survey made November 28, 1848. The calls of the survey are in these words:

"Beginning at three red oaks and a hickory on top of the ridge, supposed to be on the Fleming line; thence west 160 poles to two beeches and gum, standing near the road on the Muddy Branch; thence up the same N. 21 W. 36 poles to a maple and a sourwood, N. 32 W. 28 poles beech and elm; N. 22 W. 96 poles, hickory corner to Israel Castle and Eliphes Preston; thence with their lines S. 49 E. 16 poles, beech and a sourwood; S. 4 $\frac{3}{4}$ E. 73 poles S. 50 W. 30 poles to the beginning."

Accompanying the survey is the following plat:

The survey begins at the point 1 in the plot and the calls run with the lines of the plot to the points 2, 3, 4, and 5. At 5 we strike the hickory corner of Israel Castle and Eliphes Preston, a survey made on the same day and by the same surveyor. If we run on from 5, following the calls of the patent, the lines run out the following figure:

214 HIGHLAND LAND AND B'L'G CO. OF DAYTON V. AUDAS.

As thus run out the patent would not close and the lines would include only about five acres of land. If now we go back to the beginning and reverse the calls of the patent, we run out the lines 1, 10, 9, and at 9 we strike against the corner of the Isreal Castle and Eliphes Preston patent; and if we follow the lines of this patent from 9 back to 7, we have a body of land precisely the shape of the plot accompanying the original survey. The lines from 5 to 6 and from 6 to 7 follow the survey of Isreal Castle and Eliphes Preston. When the two patents are read together it is evident that the VanHoose patent adjoins on the south the patent of Israel Castle and Eliphes Preston, and that it corners upon it at the point 5 and in a patent at the point 9. a patent is entitled to as much dignity as another. If it begin at 1 and run out the VanHoose patent, reversing the calls, we reach the point, 9, the corner in the Castle and Preston survey, and as we have to run with the survey until we reach the point 5, all we have to do to properly lay out the VanHoose survey as to disregard the calls in that patent and run with the calls of the Castle and Preston patent around to 5. What manifestly happened was, that the surveyor, when he came to write out his report of survey of the VanHoose entry, after he had made the Castle and Preston entry, by mistake omitted the lines between 7 and 9; but these lines are distinctly shown on the plot and these marked lines must be followed and the survey must be closed. Isreal Castle and Eliphes Preston conveyed their survey to Thomas Davis on Jan. 13, 1851. Bracken VanHoose conveyed his survey to Thomas Davis on March 25 1854. Davis held both surveys until March 25, 1858, when he conveyed them as one boundary to Nathan and Moses Preston, who held the tract until Moses Preston died. After his death, Feb. 27th, 1877, it was divided between his five children. In this division the land was run out as we have indicated.

The circuit court also so located the patents. In this there was no error as upon all the facts it is very clear that there was simply an omission in the VanHoose patent of some of the lines of the Castle and Preston patent, where the VanHoose survey followed the lines of the Castle and Preston survey.

The plot is a part of the report of survey and may be looked to correct an error in the calls. The court may also consider the subsequent actions of the parties and the actual location of the lines by them after so many years is evidence of the true location. (Hogg v. Lusk, 86 S. W. 1128; McCoy v. Cassaday, 86 S. W. 1130; Kerr v. Delany, 91 S. W. 286.)

There was no such occupancy of the land as to make the champerty statute apply to any of the conveyances. The older and better title was with the appellee and the circuit court properly so held.

Judgment affirmed.

HIGHLAND LAND AND BUILDING COMPANY OF DAYTON, KY. v. AUDAS.

(Filed April 28, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Non-residents—Judgments Against—Action to Vacate—Limitation—The law is well settled in this State that a non-resident can not show cause against a judgment for errors therein, after the lapse of five years from the rendition of the judgment.

2. Same—Warning Orders—Courts of Continuous Sessions—Time Required—By section 1004, Kentucky Statutes, relating to courts of continuous sessions, providing that "every warning order shall warn the defendants to appear and defend the action within sixty days after the making of such warning order, and the defendant shall be considered as constructively summoned in thirty days after the making of such warning order," a warning order made in compliance with said statute is sufficient to authorize such court in this State to render a judgment against the non-resident defendant for the sale of real estate.

3. Same—Erroneous Personal Judgment—Effect on Sale of Land—In an action to sell real estate in this State in which a non-resident defendant was proceeded against by a warning order, the fact that a personal judgment rendered therein against such non-resident, was void, does not render so much of the judgment void, as orders a sale of the land in which such non-resident had an interest.

4. Same—Sale of Whole Tract—No Necessity to Pay Debt—Effect—Where a judgment directs the sale, as a whole, of property susceptible of division, instead of so much thereof as is necessary to pay the lien debt, sued on, and costs, while it may be such error as will authorize a reversal, it does not render the judgment void.

H. M. Healy, Jr., and E. W. Hawkins, Jr., for appellant.

Hazelrigg, Chenault & Hazelrigg and Arthur C. Hall for appellee.

Appeal from Campbell Circuit Court.

Wm. Rogers Clay, Commissioner, delivered the opinion of the court, granting a re-hearing; former opinion withdrawn and judgment reversed.

On the 29th day of August, 1893, Thomas Audas and wife, the appellee herein, borrowed $2,500 from one John W. Kearney, and as security therefor gave him a mortgage on a certain tract of land in Campbell county, Kentucky. On April 28th, 1900, John W. Kearney instituted proceedings against Thomas Audus and wife, who were then non-residents of this State, to enforce his mortgage lien, and on December 22, 1900, obtained a judgment and sale of the land to pay the same. Thereafter, on March 6, 1901, at a sale by the master commissioner, Kearney bought said tract of land for the sum of $2,200. This sale was reported to the court and confirmed on March 16, 1901. On December 10, 1903, Kearney sold the land in question to appellant, the Highland Land and Building Co., of Dayton, Kentucky. On the 16th day of August, 1904, Thomas Audas died, leaving a will making appellee, Cynthia Audas, his sole devisee. On the 12th day of May, 1906, Cynthia Audas brought this action in the Campbell Circuit Court for the purpose of setting aside the judgment and order of sale and all proceedings thereunder, in the action of John W. Kearney v. Thomas Audas, as well as the conveyance from John W. Kearney to appellant, and asked that this be done on the payment by her into court of a sum sufficient to pay the original note of $2,500, with interest and costs of the action in Kearney v. Audas.

To appellee's petition the defendant, John W. Kearney, filed answer asking that, if the court held that the judgment in the case of Kearney v. Audas was void, and that appellee, upon the payment by her into court of $2,500, with interest from August 29, 1896, and the costs in said case, was entitled to a re-conveyance of the property to her, that of this money so paid into court his co-defendant, the Highland Land and Building Co., of Dayton, Kentucky, be adjudged entitled to $2,200, with interest from March 6, 1901, and that he be entitled to remainder.

On February 23, 1907, the court entered an order directing appellee, on or before March 9, 1907, to pay into court the amount of money she offered to pay.

Appellant demurred to appellee's petition. The court overruled the demurrer, and, the appellant declining to plead further, entered a judgment directing that the judgment and order of sale, the sale and the confirmation thereof, in the case of Kearney v. Audas, and all conveyances of said real estate to appellant, or from appellant to the other defendants, be set aside and declared null and void. The order further directed that an account be taken of the sums of money paid upon said void sale, with interest thereon, and of the costs in the original action, and that this cause be referred to the master commissioner for the purpose of taking said account; that until the coming in of the report of the master commissioner, the apportionment of the sums of money so found, to have been paid upon said invalid sale be deferred for the further action and order of the court. From this order, the Highland Land and Building Co. prosecutes this appeal.

Section 414, of the Civil Code of Practice, provides; "A defendant against whom a judgment may have been rendered upon constructive service of a summons, and who did not appear, may, at any time within five years after the rendition of the judgment, move to have the action retried." * * * From the above statement of facts contained in appellee's petition, it will be seen that the judgment complained of was rendered on December 22, 1900, and the sale under that judgment confirmed on March 16, 1901. This action was instituted in May, 1906, more than five years after the confirmation of the sale made thereunder. The law is well-settled in this State, that a non-resident can not show cause against the judgment for errors therein after five years have elapsed. (Barbee v. Fox, &c., 79 Ky., 588; Burchett, &c. v. Burchett, 5 Ky. Law Rep., 314.) As this action was not brought within five years, as provided by section 414, of the Code, and, as it was not brought in pursuance to section 518, of the Code, the only ground upon which it can be maintained is, that the judgment in the case of Kearney v. Audas was void. Appellee's petition alleges that the judgment and all proceedings thereunder were void upon the following grounds:

(1.) Appellee, Cynthia Audas and her husband, at the time of the institution of the action of Kearney v. Audas, were non-residents of Kentucky, and were absent therefrom, and the plaintiff in that action, Kearney, caused a warning order to be issued, warning appellee and her husband to appear in the Campbell Circuit Court within 60 days after the 28th day of April, 1900, and answer plaintiff's petition. Neither the appellee nor her husband ever entered their appearance to the action, and after the filing of the reply of the corresponding attorney the prayer of the petition, which had formerly asked judgment only for the interest on plaintiff's debt, and that the land be sold to satisfy said judgment and for all proper and equitable relief, was changed so as to include both the interest and the debt.

(2.) A personal judgment was rendered against appellee and her husband when no summons had been served on either of them, and neither had entered their appearance.

(3.) No bond was executed before judgment, as required by section 410, of the Code; nor did the court, in pursuance of section 411, retain control over, nor preserve the property or proceeds thereof.

(4.) The property was composed of a number of building lots; no proof was taken showing that it was indivisible, and it was sold as a whole instead of being sold in lots.

1st. While the petition alleges that appellee and her husband were not before the court, this allegation is simply a conclusion of law: and whether or not they were properly before the court must be determined from the further allegation that the warning order cited them to appear in court within 60 days after the 28th day of April, 1900. It has been held, as maintained by appellee, that, under section 59, of the Code, a judgment rendered against a non-resident, proceeded against by warning order citing the defendant to appear in court on the first day of a term commencing within 60 days of the making of the order, is absolutely void (Payne's Adm'r v. Hardesty, &c., 12 Ky. Law Rep., 336); but section 59 has no application to this case. The Campbell Circuit Court is one of continuous session and is, therefore, controlled by the acts of December 20-30, 1892, relating to courts having continuous sessions. By section 1004, of the Kentucky Statutes, which is a part of those acts, it is provided that "every warning order shall warn the defendant to appear and defend the action within 60 days after the making of the warning order, and the defendant shall be considered as constructively summoned in thirty days after the making of such warning order." The warning order complained of complied with this provision of the statutes, and appellee and her husband were, therefore, properly before the court.

Nor do we think there is any merit in appellant's contention that the filing of an amended petition in the case of Kearney v. Audas necessitated the issuance of a new warning order. In the original petition the amount of plaintiff's debt was set out, but the prayer asked judgment only for the interest thereon and costs, and that the land be sold to satisfy said judgment, and for all proper and equitable relief. By an amended petition plaintiff asked the enforcement of his lien to secure both his debt and interest. In his original petition he had set forth a complete cause of action for the recovery of his debt and interest, but by an oversight the word "interest" was used instead of "debt and interest." The prayer, however, did ask for all proper and equitable relief. The amended petition did not then state a new cause of action, but simply corrected the prayer to conform to the relief to which the original petition showed plaintiff was entitled. In the case of Durrett v. Stewart, &c., 88 Ky., 665, this court held that an amendment of the prayer of the petition so as to make it conform to the cause of action set forth in the petition, was not a new and distinct cause of action. That being the case, a new warning order was not necessary, and the judgment was not void for the reasons claimed.

Second. It is true that a personal judgment rendered against a defendant constructively summoned, or summoned out of this State as provided in section 56 of the Code, and who has not appeared in the action, is void. (Civil Code of Practice, section 419; Harris v. Adams, 2 Duvall, 141; Berry v. Berry's Ex'or, 6 Bush, 594.) For appellant it is contended that, by the judgment and order of sale of the land in question, it was sold to satisfy the personal judgment; that, as the latter judgment was void, the sale of the land to satisfy this void judgment was also void. With this conclusion we can not agree. It is true the amount due on the debt was fixed, and a sale ordered to pay this amount. Where the defendants are properly before the court, such a sale can be made. The effect of the judgment is to order a sale of the land to secure the plaintiff in the payment of his debt, interest and costs. The fact that a personal judgment for plaintiff's debt, interest and costs had been improperly rendered could in nowise affect the power of the court to order a sale of the land in question. That part of the order awarding a personal judgment is not so inseparably connected with that part directing a sale of the land as to require that both shall stand or fall together. Plaintiff was seeking to enforce a mortgage lien, and have the land sold for the purpose of paying his debt secured by lien. The result of the judgment was practically the same as if it had been sold for this purpose.

Third. The next question is: Did the failure of the plaintiff in the action in question to give the bond required by section 410, of the Civil Code, and the failure of the trial court to retain control over, and preserve the property or the proceeds thereof, render the judgment void? In discussing this question this court, in the case of Allen v. Brown, 2 Met., 342, said: "In an action against a non-resident defendant, not summoned, and who does not appear, if the bond, required by section 440 (now 410), of the Civil Code, is not executed, the judgment against him is erroneous." Again, in the case of Atcheson v. Smith, 3 B. Mon., 502, this court said: "Upon the writ of error, as thus amended, several of the errors assigned, though they would be ground of reversal as to Graham's heirs, are not thus available to Atcheson; because they neither show that the decree was void as against said heirs, nor that it was improper to render it, so far as Atcheson is concerned, and can not, therefore, be deemed prejudicial to him. Among the errors of this character may be ranked the omission to appoint an attorney for the unknown heirs, and the failure to require bond to be executed for restoring the attached effects to them in case it should be so decreed hereafter, &c." Thus it will be seen that, while the court held, in the case last cited, that the failure to give bond to the Graham heirs might be reversible error as to them, the judgment against them by reason of said failure, was not void. And in the case of Thomas v. Mahone, 9 Bush, 111, this court also said: "The jurisdiction is acquired thirty days after the order of warning is made. It is at that time that the defendant is deemed to be constructively summoned. The local jurisdiction of the court over the thing sought to be sold, and the jurisdiction acquired over the person of the defendant by the constructive service of process provided by law, authorizes the court to proceed, and although the failure to appoint the attorney or to take the bond required by section 440 (now 410) are reversible errors, the jurisdiction being complete, the judgment will not be void." While this court has held in a number of cases, that the failure to give the bond required by section 410, of the Civil Code, is reversible error, we have been unable to find any case holding that the judgment is void where the sole question involved is the failure to give such bond.

Fourth. The last question to be considered is, whether or not the judgment was void because the land was sold as an entirety, and not so much thereof as was necessary to pay plaintiff's debt, interest and costs. In the case of Kearney v. Audas, it appears from the record that the property did not sell for enough to pay plaintiff's debt, interest and costs. In such a state of case this court has even gone to the extent of holding that the owner may be presumed to have lost nothing by the error in not directing the commissioner to sell only so much as would satisfy the judgment, and for that reason has refused to reverse the case. (Doughty v. Moss, &c., 1 Bush, 101; Fowler v. Kallam's Ex'or, 4 Ky. Law Rep., 988.) In other cases this court has held that the sale of two or more city lots together to secure a lien indebtedness is reversible. (Ficener v. Bott, &c., 16 Ky. Law Rep., 519.) It has also been held that the decree of sale, wherein it adjudges that a tract of land of 200 acres is indivisible, is erroneous. The court must know that the said land is not indivisible. (Holland, &c. v. Holman, 21 Ky. Law Rep., 105.)

We, therefore, conclude that, where the judgment directs the sale as a whole of property susceptible of sub-division, instead of so much thereof as is necessary to pay the lien debt and costs, it may be such error as will authorize the court to reverse the judgment and set aside the order of sale, but does not render the judgment void.

As appellee did not institute this action within five years after the judgment and order of sale in the action of Kearney v. Audas, and, as the defects in the proceedings in that action were only such as rendered the judgment erroneous and not void, we are of opinion that the trial court erred in overruling the demurrer to the petition.

When our former opinion was written, our attention had not been called to the fact, and we failed to notice, that more than five years had elapsed after the judgment in the case of Kearney v. Audas had been rendered before appellee instituted this action. That opinion was based upon the assumption that this action was instituted within the required period of five years.

For the reasons given, the re-hearing is granted, the former opinion withdrawn, the judgment reversed and cause remanded, for proceedings consistent herewith.

COMBS, MAYOR, &c. v. BONNELL.

(Filed April 29, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Mayors—Members of Police and Fire Departments—Removal of—
Prior to the act complained of for which the Board of Police and Fire Commissioners of the city of Lexington, removed appellee, they adopted a rule, yet in force, providing in substance that when a member of the police or fire department is suspended by the Mayor, he shall report the fact to the police and fire commissioners, prepare written charges to be served on the officer and notify him of the time and place when the charges will be investigated. * * * Appellee was not cited to appear for trial, nor was he accused of dereliction, nor removed for cause, and the rule referred to above was a complete protection to him against such arbitrary discharge.

Wm. Rogers Clay and J. D. & G. R. Hunt for appellants.

Morton, Webb & Wilson for appellee.

Appeal from Fayette Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice O'Rear, affirming.

Appellants Combs, Bronson and Bateman, as the Board of Police and Fire Commissioners for the city of Lexington, a city of the second class, attempted on February 23, 1904, to remove appellee, who was a member of the Lexington Fire Department, and appointed appellant Richmond in his place. This suit was brought for an injunction against Richmond's taking the place, as well as to have appellee restored. The circuit court held that the attempted removal was invalid, and ordered appellee restored to his position. Appellee attacked the action of the Police and Fire Commissioners upon several grounds, all of which are elaborately presented in argument. But we find it unnecessary to notice but one of them.

Among the enumerated powers of cities of the second class is that set out in section 3138, Kentucky Statutes, as follows: "The said commissioners (meaning the Board of Police and Fire Commissioners) shall have full control over the police and fire departments of the city, together with all the property and paraphernalia thereof or belonging thereto, and may make or ordain and put into execution such by-laws, rules and regulations for the government of said departments as may be deemed expedient, and may prescribe the qualifications of the firemen and officers and members of the police and fire departments respectively."

It will be conceded, we think, that although it were true that the matter of regulating such internal local affairs as partook of the nature of the employment of firemen and other mere city employes, inhered in a municipal corporation as an incident of its character as a private corporation, and was beyond the power of the Legislature to control without reference to the wishes or participation of the local government, still it was competent for the State in creating such corporation to provide by what body of the local magistracy that function was to be exercised. The State always says, or may say, by what officers of a strictly private corporation certain of its corporate functions must be discharged, although it would be clearly incompetent for the Legislature to directly regulate and control such affairs of the corporation. If then it be conceded that a municipal corporation possesses a private character, as to matters pertaining thereto it may regulate and control them within the scope of the powers granted to it, as any other private corporation might do.

Certain public officers, such as police and members of council, and all who by the nature of their positions serve the whole State in so far as their jurisdiction extends, in dealing with matters with which the State as a whole is concerned, and which might have been required of any other body of magistrates with as much legal propriety, are confessedly subject to direct control by the State through its Legislature. But mere employes, firemen, street-cleaners, hostlers, janitors and the like, it has been held by the court in Thompson v. City of Lexington, 113 Ky., 540, are not the subject of legislative control.

The power has been expressly given to second class cities to maintain for themselves fire departments. Section 3138, Kentucky Statutes, supra, provides what officials of the city shall have control of that department of the city's affairs. They are given the power of regulating such employes as they may select, a power which probably would have been inferred even though not expressed. The Board of Police and Fire Commissioners must act as a body, and speak by their records. They adopted, prior to the act complained of in this suit, the following rule which is yet in force, so far as the record discloses: "Whenever a member of the police and fire department is suspended by the Mayor, he shall report the case to the Police and Fire Commissioners at their first meeting, regular or called, thereafter, and it shall be his duty to prepare written charges against the party suspended, and cause a copy of said charges to be served on the offending officer, and notify him to be present at said meeting of the commissioners when said charges will be investigated. Said suspended officer shall have the right to be represented by counsel and shall have witnesses in his behalf. The proceeding of the commissioners in investigating all charges against members of the departments, and in all cases of suspension or removal shall be governed by the customary rules of evidence and the Kentucky Statutes regulating the control and management of the police and fire department."

This regulation was a clear and proper exercise of the powers conferred upon the Police and Fire Commissioners, and until repealed or changed by them in an official meeting, and by proceedings of record duly adopted, it was alike binding upon the commissioners and a protection to the members of the two departments. It inaugurated a kind of civil service in these departments, and is a wise regulation that should be sustained and encouraged, rather than ignored or violated. Its observance will stimulate the police and firemen to a better discharge of their duties by removing from over their heads the constant danger of capricious discharge by their superiors. Policemen and firemen are servants of the city, not of the commissioners. The latter should not have it in their power to punish the police and firemen if they refused to serve the personal ends of the commissioners, or to reward them if they did. They ought to be discouraged from political activity, rather than rewarded for zealous partisanship. All these desirable ends, insuring the greatest conscientious service to the public, while detracting from the power of the political boss, are brought about by an observance of a civil service regulation. Appellee was not cited to appear for trial by the board, nor was he accused of dereliction, or removed for cause. The above regulation alone was a complete protection to him against such arbitrary discharge.

The whole force of the fire department was discharged in the same order. Immediately all were re-appointed save appellee and such others as were intended to be dropped, whose places were filled by substitutes. We think this was but an indirect way of doing that which the commissioners could not do directly, which will not be allowed to prevail.

Other points raised and discussed are not decided. The action of the circuit court in granting the injunction and requiring that ap-pellee be restored to his place, was right, and the judgment is, therefore, affirmed.

The whole court sitting.

Judges Barker, Settle and Hobson concur in the result, but not in the ground upon which it is rested.

RAILEY v. ROBERTS.

(Filed April 29, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Lands—Mistake as to Quantity Sold—Action to Recover for Deficiency—Pleading—In an action to recover for shortage in a survey of land, it was error in the lower court to strike from defendant's answer a denial of any fraudulent purpose to cheat or defraud the buyer.

2. Same—Rescission—Where the purchaser desires a rescission on the ground that enough land was not conveyed, and the seller so desires rather than receive a less price than that agreed upon, there appearing to be no fraud in the transaction, the purchaser should be permitted to re-convey the land upon the payment of the purchase price.

Ira Julian for appellant.

B. G. Williams and John B. Lindsey for appellee.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn, reversing.

Appellant purchased of appellee, in the month of September, 1906, a farm on the Owenton turnpike, near Frankfort, Kentucky, at the agreed price of $9,000, payable one-third in cash and the balance in two equal payments of one and two years. She accepted a deed for the land, made the cash payment and executed negotiable notes for the deferred payments. She afterwards ascertained that there were only seventy acres in the survey, and that it was sold to her as containing eighty-five acres. The notes were negotiated by appellee before they matured. Appellant instituted this action to recover about $1,500 in damages for the shortage in the survey, and the lower court dismissed it.

It appears from the record that appellee placed this land with the real estate firm of Morris & Shelton for sale, and they alone negotiated the trade with appellant. It is conceded that this firm represented to appellant that the survey contained eighty-five acres. They executed a writing witnessing the trade and signed the name of appellee to it in which it was stated that the survey contained eighty-five acres. The agents, Morris & Shelton, stated in their testimony that their recollection was that appellee stated to them that there were eighty-five acres in the survey. It appears from the record that these agents intended no wrong; they believed that the survey contained eighty-five acres, and that appellee had so represented it. Appellee testified that he did not make any statement to them as to the number of acres in the survey; that he knew at the time that it contained only sixty-eight or seventy acres; that he directed them to sell the survey for $9,000, that the land was worth that much and more, and that he had no intention of parting with it for a less sum.

The proof for appellee showed that the land was worth that amount. He denied any fraudulent purpose to cheat or defraud appellant; and alleged his willingness to rescind the trade if she did not desire to keep the land at the price fixed by him. The court, on motion, struck this allegation from his pleadings. We are of opinion that the court erred in this. We are convinced by the evidence that there was no fraudulent intent or purpose on the part of appellee or his agents to obtain any advantage in the trade; that there was a misunderstanding between the parties, their minds having never met. Appellant thought she was buying eighty-five acres of land for $9,000. Appellee believed that he was selling a survey consisting of sixty-eight or seventy acres for that sum, and did not know, at the time of the sale, that appellant was laboring under a false impression as to the number of acres in the survey. Under these circumstances, it would not be equitable to hold appellant to the trade and make her pay the whole of the $9,000 for the survey of land, for it contained fifteen acres less than she was lead to believe it contained at the time she purchased it. It would also be inequitable to force appellee to lose the price of fifteen acres, for he did not intend to part with his land for less than $9,000, nor did he knowingly or intentionally commit any fraud in obtaining the contract of sale.

Under these facts the court erred in dismissing her petition. It is true she prayed in her petition for $1,500 in damages for the deficiency, but she also prayed for all proper and general relief. The court correctly dismissed her claim for damages, but it should have allowed her to rescind, if she desired to do so on equitable principles, and on the return of the case to the lower court it should grant her this relief, allowing her to re-convey the land to appellee upon the payment to her of the purchase price, that is the cash she has paid with its interest, and the return to her of the two notes she executed and the value of any permanent improvements made upon the land, if any, to be credited by the reasonable rental value of the land during the time she has held it, giving her the option to rescind upon the principle stated or to keep the land and confirm the trade as made and pay the notes which she executed.

For these reasons the judgment of the lower court is reversed and remanded, for further proceedings consistent herewith.

ASHER v. FORD LUMBER AND MANUFACTURING CO.

(Filed April 29, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Timber—Trees—Sale of—Evidence—In this controversy, involving the sale of 200 timber trees, the evidence conduces to show that appellant was represented by several persons at the time of the conveyance to H, prior to his purchase of them, and that they knew the trees were marked as sold.

Hazelrigg, Chenault & Hazelrigg for appellant.

T. E. Moore, Jr., and D. B. Logan for appellee.

Appeal from Leslie Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn, affirming.

This litigation is with reference to about two hundred poplar trees which grew upon the land of Ephraim Brock, in Leslie county, Kentucky. Appellee claims that it purchased these trees from Brock in the early part of 1902, and paid him the purchase price, and then marked the trees with its cross mark; that Brock, at the time, executed to it a conveyance of the trees, which was recorded in the county court clerk's office of that county. Appellant does not deny the fact of the purchase of the trees by appellee, but says he had no knowledge of the fact at the time he purchased the same in 1903; that the description of these trees and the land upon which they were situated was so vague and indefinite in the deed referred to that it could not be ascertained that the trees were upon the land which he purchased.

In our opinion, it is unnecessary to consider the question of description of the trees and land given in the deed from Brock and others to appellee. For the reason, after considering all the evidence in the case, we are convinced that appellant, through its agents, had notice of the sale of these trees by Brock before he purchased the land from Brock in 1903. Brock testified to this fact, and Jonas Helton, who made the purchase, in effect, admits it, or at least explains the matter in such a way as leads us to believe that the lower court did not err in its judgment. Helton stated that he first took a bond for the title from Brock to only a part of this land, and in this bond the timber was reserved, as having been previously sold by Brock; that afterwards he took another bond for the title, covering the whole of Brock's land, and in which no reservation of timber was made. He does not explain why there was no reservation of timber in the last bond he claims to have taken, nor does he produce the first one, which he says he took, although he was asked to do so, nor does he explain why he took a bond for a part of the land at one time and the balance at another.

It is shown by the proof that appellant was represented by three or four persons, at the time the conveyance was made to Helton by Brock; that they all knew that Brock had sold this timber previous to that time, and knew that the trees were marked as sold.

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

LANDY v. MORITZ.

(Filed April 29, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Attachments—Funds in Hands of Trustee of Jury Fund—The prosecutions being terminated, a fund in the hands of the trustee of the jury fund placed as bail, is subject to garnishment, under section 439, of the Code.

2. Evidence—Competency of Witnesses—It was error upon the trial of this case to permit witnesses to testify to statements that were not made in appellant's presence as to the amount of money that she had put up as bail and the amount that her husband had put up.

3. Witnesses—Evidence of Guilt of Misdemeanor—It is not proper to discredit a witness by proof that he has been guilty of a misdemeanor.

J. W. Rawlings, Rawlings & Voris, Robert Harding and Greene & VanWinkle for appellant.

S. A. Russell and W. J. Price for appellee.

Appeal from Marion Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, reversing.

On February 14, 1905, Herman Moritz recovered a judgment against Samuel Landy in the Marion Circuit Court for the sum of $2,500. Execution was issued upon the judgment, and returned no property found, and on February 23, 1905, Moritz instituted this action in equity to enforce satisfaction of his judgment. He took out an attachment, which was served upon John C. Voris, as trustee of the jury fund of the Boyle Circuit Court, attaching in his hands a fund for $1,350 deposited in lieu of bail, by Annie Landy, the wife of Samuel Landy. She filed an answer to the petition, in which she set up that the money referred to was hers. The circuit court ordered the case to be heard before a jury on the question of the ownership of the fund. The jury found in favor of the plaintiff, Moritz, and Annie Landy appeals.

It was shown, on the trial, that, on October 22, 1904, Annie Landy was arrested by the sheriff of Boyle county under bench warrants issued upon indictments found against her by the grand jury in the Boyle Circuit Court, and was placed in jail. Her bail in the cases was fixed at $700. That afternoon, on obtaining counsel, she wrote a check to the trustee of the jury fund for $700, in lieu of bail, and was discharged from custody. The check was drawn by her on the Citizens National Bank of Danville, in her own name, and was paid by the bank. About the time that she was released from custody, her husband was arrested by the sheriff and brought into the clerk's office. At the suggestion of her attorney, she then drew another similar check for $650, the amount of bail required of her husband under the indictments against him. He was then released from custody, the trustee of the jury fund executing to her a receipt for the sum of $1,350, in lieu of bail on 11 indictments against her and 10 indictments against her husband. This was before Moritz had brought any suit against her husband, as we understand the record; but was after his cause of action had accrued, and he had threatened to bring suit. The proof for Annie Landy also showed that she had opened her account in the Citizens National Bank on September 28, 1901, and had continued the account with the bank from that time on, depositing in the bank from time to time, money, and checking on it, the balance in her favor varying from $1,000 to $3,000. She showed that she had received from her father money on which she had traded and which she had kept separate from her husband. On the other hand, the proof for the plaintiff was to the effect that Samuel Landy had said that the plaintiff should never collect his judgment; that, previous to the recovery of his judgment, Samuel Landy had been engaged in business for a number of years, buying and selling poultry, groceries and old iron, doing a considerable business and handling a good deal of money; that he had died not long after the judgment, and that, at his death, no estate of his could be found. On the trial of the case, Moritz was allowed to testify to declarations made to him by Samuel Landy, not in the presence of Annie Landy, as to what he had and what he was going to do with it. S. O. Jeffreys was allowed to state that Samuel Landy had told him that he and his wife had put up the $1,350, that he had put up $1,000 and his wife $350; and also to testify to other statements of Samuel Landy not made in the presence of Annie Landy, as to what he had. Sam Jeffreys was allowed to give similar testimony. This evidence was very prejudicial to Annie Landy and it was incompetent against her. Anything that Samuel Landy said, not in her presence, as to what he had or had done, was incompetent against her. It is insisted that she was not prejudiced, because Jeffreys stated that he also talked with them both when they were both present. Anything that was said when they were both present may be shown, but what Samuel Landy said when she was not present can not be given in evidence to strengthen or piece out what was said in her presence. An examination of the record shows that the statements as to what was said in her presence are very different from those as to what was said when she was not present. What was said when she was not present by Samuel Landy should not have been admitted at all. The testimony of the witnesses should have been confined to what was said in her presence. A witness may not be discredited by proof of the fact that he has been indicted for a misdemeanor. The court, on another trial, will not allow any evidence to be given as to what the indictments against Annie Landy were for.

The prosecutions in the Boyle Circuit Court being terminated, the fund remaining in the hands of the trustee of the jury fund, is subject to an attachment proceeding under section 439, of the Code, upon a return of no property found; as, by the terms of the statute, any money, chose in action, equitable or legal interest, or other property to which the defendant is entitled, may be subjected under that section. (Bright v. Commonwealth, 79 Ky., 537; Farmers Bank v. Morris, 19 Ky., 157; Merriweather v. Bell, 22 Ky. Law Rep., 814.) It is said that the property was in the custody of the law, and, therefore, not subject to attachment, but anything which the defendant owns may be attached in a proceeding on a return of no property found, under section 439. Section 207, of the Civil Code, provides how an attachment may be levied on a fund in court. Under this section, the court has recognized that attachments before judgment may be levied on a fund in court. (Battorn v. McFerran, 19 Ky. Law Rep., 1266; Price v. Taylor, 110 Ky., 589; Sanders v. Henderson, 93 S. W., 14.) Money deposited in lieu of bail is a fund in court within the meaning of the section. If the money deposited with the trustee of the jury fund was the property of Samuel Landy, it may be subjected, but if it was the property of Annie Landy, it can not be subjected.

Upon the whole record, we think that a new trial should be granted for the reasons indicated.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded, for a new trial.

COMMONWEALTH v. LOUISVILLE PROPERTY CO., &c.

(Filed April 29, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Escheated Property—Action to Recover—Suit by Attorney Appointed by Auditor—Written Contract Approved by Governor—Under section 1622, of chapter 44, Kentucky Statutes, providing that "an attorney may be employed by the Auditor with the approval of the Attorney General, to attend to claims of the Commonwealth for recovery of escheated property. The compensation of such attorney shall always be fixed by written contract endorsed "Approved by the Governor," the Auditor is authorized to employ an attorney for the purpose of recovering any escheated property the State may be entitled to, whether under chapter 44 or other provisions of the Kentucky Statutes.

2. Same—Property Held by Corporation—Not Necessary for its Use—Dismissal of Action of Lower Court—Where an action was brought by an attorney employed by the Auditor upon an agreed compensation, approved by the Governor, to institute an action against two corporations, alleging that it was held by one for the benefit of the other, and had been so held for more than five years, and that during said time it was not used by either company in its legitimate business or that it was necessary for use in its business, for which reason it had escheated to the Commonwealth under Constitution, section 192, and Kentucky Statutes, section 567, it was error in the circuit court to dismiss the action on the ground that the action could not be maintained by the attorney and his associates under employment by the Auditor.

C. G. Barrickman, Beard & Marshall, A. G. Patterson and Pickett & Barrickman for appellant.

Benjamin D. Warfield and C. W. Metcalf for appellees.

Appeal from Bell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle, reversing.

By this action in equity instituted in the court below, the appellant, Commonwealth of Kentucky, sought to recover of the appellees, Louisville Property Company and the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company, certain lands situated in Bell county and particularly described in the petition, the title to which it is alleged, is held by the Louisville Property Company for the use and benefit of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company, under some sort of arrangement between them, the nature and object of which is to enable the railroad company to engage in mining coal upon and from such lands, of which it is alleged to contain large quantities.

The petition contains the averments, in substance, that the lands in question were held by the Louisville Property Company for more than five years before the institution of the action, and that none of it during that time was used by that company in its legitimate business, or was necessary for use in its business, for which reason it had escheated to the Commonwealth of Kentucky; and that the Commonwealth was and is, therefore, entitled to recover the property. It appears from the petition, and the articles of incorporation of the Louisville Property Company, filed herewith as an exhibit, that "its business shall be that of purchasing, holding, leasing, selling, conveying and otherwise using, managing and disposing of all kinds of property, whether real, personal or mixed, wherever situated in the United States of America."

It further appears from the averments of the petition that the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company is a corporation, chartered under the laws of this State, and that it owns and operates a system of railroads in this and other States.

At the appearance term, the circuit court, upon appellees' motion, issued against the attorneys whose names are signed to the petition, a rule requiring them to appear on a named date and show by what authority they had instituted and were maintaining the action. To this rule the attorneys in question filed a response containing the statement that one of them, G. S. Pickett, had been employed by the State Auditor, with the approval of the Attorney General and Governor, to bring and prosecute the action, and that he (Pickett) had at his own expense employed and associated with him in the case, the other attorneys whose names also appear to the petition. Accompanying the response and filed as a part thereof, was the writing the former claimed to have been employed and authorized to bring and maintain the action. The writing reads as follows:

"This agreement, made this 27th day of April, 1907, by and between S. W. Hager, Auditor of the State of Kentucky, party of the first part, and George L. Pickett, attorney at law of Shelbyville, Shelby county, Kentucky, party of the second part.

"Witnesseth: That the said party of the first part has this day employed said party of the second part, pursuant to section 1622 of the Kentucky Statutes, to institute such suit or proceedings as may be necessary to recover for the Commonwealth of Kentucky, any property which is escheated to the Commonwealth of Kentucky.

"Said second party agrees to prosecute and attend to all of such claims in a careful, diligent and skillful manner, and in consideration for full compensation for all services rendered by him to the Commonwealth in this employment, he shall receive a sum equal to thirty per cent. of whatever may be recovered by him and paid into the treasury of the State, and he shall receive nothing for any service he may render to the Commonwealth in the prosecution of any such claim unless the recovery is had.

"In testimony whereof witness the hand of S. W. Hager, this the 27th day of April, 1907.

(Signed)

"S. W. HAGER, Auditor.

"I, N. B. Hays, Attorney General of the State of Kentucky, approve the employment of George L. Pickett, as set out in the above contract upon the terms and conditions thereof.

(Signed)

"N. B. HAYS, Attorney General."

"Approved,

(Signed)

"J. C. W. BECKHAM, Governor."

Upon the hearing the circuit court held the response insufficient; adjudged that the contract between the Auditor and Pickett did not confer upon the latter or his associate counsel, authority to bring or maintain the action; made the rule absolute and dismissed the action at the cost of the attorneys. From that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

The lands sought to be recovered for the State are claimed as escheated property under section 192, Constitution, and section 567, Kentucky Statutes. Section 192 Constitution provides:

"No corporation shall engage in business other than that expressly authorized by its charter, or the law under which it may have been or hereafter may be organized, nor shall it hold any real estate, except such as may be proper and necessary for carrying on its legitimate business for a longer period than five years, under penalty of escheat."

Section 567, Kentucky Statutes, is as follows:

"No corporation shall engage in business other than that expressly authorized by its articles of incorporation or amendments thereto, nor shall any corporation, directly or indirectly, engage in or carry on in any way the business of banking or insurance of any kind, unless it has become organized under the laws relating to banking and insurance; nor shall any corporation hold or own any real estate except such as may be necessary and proper for carrying on its legitimate business, for a longer period than five years under penalty of escheat."

Chapter 44 (section 1606 to 1623, inclusive), Kentucky Statutes, relating to "Escheats and Escheators," provides for the recovery by the Commonwealth of such lands and other property as it is therein declared shall escheat to it; actions for which must as provided by section 1611, be brought by an escheator, to be appointed by the Auditor as provided in section 1610. Such actions or proceedings, as may be brought by the escheator, section 1611, declares, shall be instituted and the recovery had in the name of the Commonwealth.

In Commonwealth v. Wisconsin Chair Company, 27 Ky. Law Rep., 170, and Farmers Bank v. Commonwealth, 27 Ky. Law Rep., 153, this court held that the provisions of chapter 44, Kentucky Statutes, did not apply to lands made the subject of escheat by section 192, Constitution, and that an escheator, appointed under that statute (chapter 44), could only sue to recover lands or other property escheated thereunder. In other words lands which, under section 192, of the Constitution, and section 567 Kentucky Statutes, may be recovered by the Commonwealth under penalty of escheat, can not be sued for and recovered by an escheator appointed under section 1610, of chapter 44.

Who, therefore, is authorized to recover the lands subject to escheat under section 192, Constitution, and section 567, Kentucky Statutes

It is not to be presumed that the framers of the Constitution in adopting section 192 of that instrument, or that the Legislature in enacting section 567, Kentucky Statutes, intended that the State should be left without the means of enforcing the penalty of escheat as to lands held by a corporation contrary to their provisions. The escheat being provided for and the right to enforce it being in the sovereign, the State, the failure of the statute to indicate the character of proceedings by which the property is to be recovered by it, does not destroy the right or leave the State without a remedy. As the common law form of proceeding in such a state of case has been abolished, and the statute does not designate an agent of the State to enforce the right it confers, the State may itself enforce it by a suit in equity. This being true the question of whether the attorney representing the State has been legally employed to act, while not unimportant, becomes a secondary matter.

On this point, however, the writing filed with the response, clearly shows the employment of Pickett, and the response shows he in turn employed the other counsel associated with him in the case.

In providing for the appointment of an escheator and defining his powers and duties, the several sections of chapter 44, Kentucky Statutes, in express terms, confine their exercise and performance to the recovery of property escheated under the provisions of that chapter. For instance, section 1611 provides:

"The escheator shall institute proceedings in the name of the Commonwealth in the circuit court of the county in which land lies that has vested in the Commonwealth, under the provisions of this chapter, for the recovery of the same." * * * Again it is declared by section 1616: "Any escheator failing to comply with any of the requisitions of this chapter shall be fined $100, upon indictment in the Franklin Circuit Court." But section 1622 of chapter 44, which allows the employment of an attorney at law by the Auditor to attend to claims of the Commonwealth for the recovery of escheated property, contains no such limitation. That section reads as follows:

"An attorney at law may be employed by the Auditor, with the approval of the Attorney General, to attend to claims of the Commonwealth for the recovery of escheated property. The compensation of such attorney shall always be fixed by written contract, endorsed 'approved' by the Governor."

The language of this section is broad and comprehensive. It permits the Auditor to employ an attorney for the purpose of recovering any escheated property the State may be entitled to, whether under chapter 44 or other provisions of the Kentucky Statutes. If it had been the intention of the Legislature to confine the duties of such attorney to the recovery of such property as may escheat to the State under chapter 44, we take it that the section would have said so as in the matter of restricting the duties of the escheator to chapter 44. We are of opinion, therefore, that the employment of Pickett by the Auditor, to institute this action against the appellees, was authorized by section 1622, and the contract evidencing his employment conforms to the requirements of that section as it shows that the employment was made with the approval of the Attorney General; the object of the employment, and that the compensation of the attorney was fixed thereby with the approval of the Governor.

It would, perhaps, be in accord with the law, as well as the policy of the State to say, that the employment of Pickett was also authorized by sections 114 and 115, Kentucky Statutes. The first giving to the Auditor authority to employ attorneys in the various counties if necessary, to aid the Attorney General in investigating and recovering for the State such unsatisfied claims or other demands as may be due it; the second, empowering the Governor to employ counsel to represent the Commonwealth in actions or proceedings for the collection or enforcement of claims or demands of the Commonwealth in such actions or proceedings as it may have an interest in or be a party to.

If right in the above conclusion it follows that the circuit court erred in sustaining the rule against appellant's attorneys, and in dismissing the action; and this being true, it is unnecessary to decide whether the attorneys were liable for costs, had the dismissal of the action been proper.

It is insisted by counsel for appellees that the petition is fatally defective and, therefore, fails to state a cause of action against either of the appellees. That question is not before us for review, and we, therefore, decline to pass upon it. It will, however, arise upon the return of the case to the lower court, and that court will first decide whether the petition states a cause of action, and if so, whether the grounds exist for the escheat of the lands sought to be recovered, as specified in section 192, of the Constitution, and section 567, Kentucky Statutes; the burden being upon the Commonwealth to prove the conditions authorizing such escheat.

For the reasons indicated the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, for further proceedings consistent with the opinion.

PAYNE v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed April 29, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Rape—Assault to Commit—An attempt at rape includes every ingredient of rape except its accomplishment; that is, if the assault is made under such circumstances as that the act of sexual intercourse, if it had been actually accompanied, would have been rape, it would constitute the crime of an attempt to commit rape.

2. Same—Acts of Accused—Purpose Shown—Preparation, Ability and Intention—Where the acts of the accused were such as to show a purpose on his part to have carnal knowledge of a female by force, or by her consent where she was under twelve years of age, and that he was prepared and able to carry such intention into effect and would have done so, but for the flight of his victim, he is guilty of attempted rape.

3. Same—Overt Act—While it is true that in order to make out a case of attempt to commit rape, there must, in addition to the intent, be some overt act in pursuance of such intent, but the overt act need not be such as amounts to a technical assault.

Geo. S. & John A. Fulton for appellant.

James Breathitt, Tom B. McGregor and N. W. Halstead for appellee.

Appeal from Nelson Circuit Court. ,

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle, affirming.

Appellant, a negro youth of fifteen years, complains that he was illegally convicted in the court below under an indictment charging him with the crime of attempting to commit a rape upon Epsy Hall, a white girl under twelve years of age. His punishment was fixed by the jury at confinement in the penitentiary five years.

It appears from the evidence that the parents of Epsy Hall live about a mile from the city of Bardstown, and near the Bardstown and Shepherdsville turnpike, and that Epsy, who is eleven years of age, and her sister, Virginia Lee Hall, whose age is nine years, attend school in Bardstown, to which they walked from their home, traveling the turnpike the greater part of the distance. At a distance of less than half a mile from Bardstown there are two hills in the turnpike and a considerable hollow between them; at this point there is an old, unused graveyard, quite a grove of locust trees on one side of the pike and also a gate opening into a grass field. The topography of the country makes this rather a secluded place by shielding it from the vision of persons approaching the hollow in the pike from either direction until the top of the hill, on one side or the other of the hollow is reached.

The appellant, Logan Payne, seems to have been employed by several of the residents of Bardstown to daily drive their cows to the pasture adjoining the turnpike entered by the gate in or at the end of the hollow. It further appears from the evidence that, on the morning the attempt at rape was claimed to have been committed, appellant had turned the cows, of which he had charge, through the gate into the pasture when Epsy and Virginia Lee Hall approached and were about to pass him on their way to school; he then faced them, with his pants unbuttoned, and exposed to their view his penis, all the while retaining it in his hand and shaking it at her, "asked her if she knew what that was." The little girl told him that she did not, and she and her sister then hurried on their way to school.

When appellant first accosted Epsy Hall he was not more than ten or fifteen feet from her and was going toward her. When the girls continued on to school he said to Epsy "hold on," and asked her, moving toward her as he did so, if she had ever seen anything like his penis, all the while retaining it in his hand and shaking it at her. Seeing appellant advancing upon them the little girls quickened their pace and finally broke into a run to avoid him. Appellant pursued them for a distance, telling them again to hold on, quickening his gait to overtake them, but soon after they began to run he slackened his speed and finally stopped the pursuit.

Upon reaching home in the afternoon the little girls complained to their father of what appellant had done and the latter procured his arrest, following which he was identified by the girls as the guilty party.

Appellant did not himself testify on the trial, or attempt, by other witnesses, to contradict the little girls. It was, however, contended by appellant's counsel, in asking a new trial in the circuit court, and is now urged, that the foregoing undisputed facts do not sustain the charge of attempted rape made in the indictment, therefore the trial court should have given the peremptory instruction asked by appellant at the conclusion of the evidence. This contention sharply presents the only serious question in the case.

The indictment was found under section 1154, Kentucky Statutes, which provides: "Whoever shall attempt to commit a rape upon the body of an infant under twelve years of age shall be confined in the penitentiary not less than five nor more than twenty years."

There is no statute in this State defining rape, or attempt to commit rape. It is, therefore, necessary to look to the common law to ascertain the elements and meaning of each of these crimes. Rape, at common law, may be defined as the carnal knowledge of a female forcibly and against her consent. Force, actual or constructive, is an essential element of the crime of rape, but any, even the least, force is sufficient. All male persons over the age of fourteen years are presumed to be physically capable of committing the crime of rape unless the contrary appears.

An attempt to commit rape includes every ingredient of rape except its accomplishment; that is to say, if the assault is made under such circumstances as that the act of sexual intercourse, if it had been actually accomplished, would have been rape, it would constitute the crime of an attempt to commit rape.

What we have said as to the necessity of proof of force, actual or constructive, to constitute the crime of rape, or attempted rape, does not apply when the female is under twelve years of age; as a female under that age is, in law, incapable of consenting to an act of sexual intercourse, such intercourse, with her consent, makes the male guilty of rape, without proof of any force.

As said by this court, in Fensten v. Commonwealth, 82 Ky., 549: "A female under that age (twelve years) is presumed to be as an idiot, in fact is, without capacity and discretion to comprehend fully the consequences of yielding to the ravisher, or strength of will to resist his influence and importunities. Hence, carnal knowledge of her, even with her nominal consent, is in legal contemplation, forcible and against her will; and though not deemed of as heinous nature, nor punished with the same severity, as when, in fact, forcibly and against her consent, is, nevertheless, within the meaning of the statute, rape, and punished as such." (White v. Commonwealth, 96 Ky., 180; 23 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 554-557.)

Were the acts of appellant such as to constitute attempted rape upon an infant under twelve years of age? We find in Roberson's Criminal Law, volume 1, page 352, this statement as to the attempt to commit rape: "But actual violence, or touching the person of the one upon whom the attempt is intended, is not essential. If the intent, with the present means of carrying it into effect, exists and preparation therefor has been made, the crime is complete."

We are further told by the same author (1 Roberson Criminal Law, section 269): "An ineffectual attempt to carnally know a female under age of consent (twelve years), with or without her consent, is an attempt to commit rape." (State v. Newton, 44 Iowa, 45; 1 Wharton Crim. Law, 88.)

With what intent did appellant act on the occasion of his meeting with the Hall girls? Why did he, when within ten feet of them, unbutton his pants, expose his private parts and ask the larger and elder of the girls "if she knew what that was" and "if she had ever seen anything like it?" unless his motive was the gratification of his lustful nature? It must be kept in mind that during this brutal and disgusting performance, appellant was advancing toward Espy Hall with his private in his hand and when, after being thus interrupted, she and her sister, in their fright, again started toward the schoolhouse, he began to call to them to hold on, for a time accelerating his pace with the view of overtaking them, but when they broke into a run, which enabled them to get out of the hollow, and on the elevation beyond, where they could be seen from residences along the pike, and perhaps from the schoolhouse, he seeing they had reached a point of safety, gave up the chase.

Appellant daily took the cows to the pasture and must have previously met the girls as they went to school, and if his motive was to have carnal knowledge of the elder girl, he would have selected the hollow of all other places on her way to school for that purpose, as the old graveyard and adjacent trees and shrubbery would have afforded a place of concealment for the deed, had he secured possession of her person, as he evidently tried to do.

He could not have adopted a more certain and conspicuous means of acquainting Espy Hall with his lustful desire and purpose than by indecently exposing his privates as was done, and the brazenness of his conduct seemed to indicate that he would have been sufficiently brutal to have forcibly had sexual intercourse with her in the presence of her little sister, could he have secured possession of her person. So if appellant's acts were such as to show a purpose on his part to have carnal knowledge of Espy Hall by force, or with her consent, and that he was prepared and able to carry such intention into effect, and would have accomplished it, but for the flight of his intended victim, he was guilty of attempted rape as charged in the indictment.

In the case of Lewis v. State, 35 Alabama, 380, the defendant was indicted for an attempt to commit rape, the proof being that he tried, by suddenly approaching and accosting her in a secluded place, to stop the prosecutrix as she was riding horseback along the public highway, with the intent to forcibly have carnal knowledge of her.

Instead of obeying the defendant's command to stop, the prosecutrix without waiting for him to get near enough to seize her person or horse, put the animal to his best speed and thereby escaped though closely pursued by the defendant for some distance. In discussing the question of whether these facts were sufficient to authorize the defendant's conviction of the crime of attempted rape, the Supreme Court of Alabama, in its opinion, said: "If the attempt was in fact made and had progressed far enough to put Miss Osler (prosecutrix) in terror and render it necessary for her to save herself from the consummation of the attempted outrage by flight, then the attempt was complete; and an after abandonment by the defendant of his wicked purpose if he had proceeded this far, could not purge the crime."

In Hays v. The People, 1 Hill's (N. Y.) Rep., 351, the facts were that the defendant enticed a female ten years of age into the loft of a building for the apparent purpose of ravishing her, and was detected while standing within five feet of her in an indecent state of exposure. There was no evidence that he touched her at any time. Upon these facts the jury were instructed that if they believed from the evidence defendant enticed the girl to the loft for the purpose of ravishing her, she being under ten years of age, they should find him guilty of an assault with intent to commit a rape. The defendant was convicted and upon appeal the judgment was affirmed by the Supreme Court. In the opinion, the court said: "There is no doubt of the prisoner's intent. * * * The assent of such an infant being void as to the principal crime, it is equally so in respect to the incipient advances of the offender. That the infant consented to, or even aided in the prisoner's attempt, can not, therefore, as in the case of an adult, be alleged in his favor, any more than if he had consummated his purpose. The case submitted to the jury, was that of a man having another in his power, and within reach, threatening and exerting the means to accomplish meditated violence upon her person. This is clearly an assault within all the authorities. * * * There need not be even a direct attempt at violence; but any indirect preparation towards it, under the circumstances mentioned * * * would be sufficient."

One of the distinctions between the common law offense of "assault with intent to rape" and that entitled by section 1154, Kentucky Statutes, "Attempt to commit rape," is that the first is merely a misdemeanor and the latter a felony. The law books seem also to make the distinction, that the element of assault which is essential to the first offense need not always exist in the latter, which is certainly true in a case like the one before us, where the intended victim was an infant under twelve years of age, whose consent, if given, would not excuse the crime. While it is true that in order to make out a case of attempt to commit rape, there must, in addition to the intent to commit rape, be some overt act in pursuance of such intent, but the overt act need not be such as amounts to a technical assault. (23 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 867-8.)

There was some evidence in this case of the intent, accompanied by overt acts mentioned on the part of appellant, which the jury evidently regarded sufficient to authorize the verdict declaring appellant guilty of an attempt to commit rape, as charged in the indictment. This court has held repeatedly, that it has no power to reverse a judgment of conviction in a criminal prosecution upon the ground that the evidence is not sufficient to support the verdict, being restricted to the single inquiry, whether there was any evidence before the jury conducing to show the guilt of the accused, and in this case we think there was. Therefore, the trial court did not err in refusing the peremptory instruction asked by appellant.

Although juries, because of their sensitive regard for female virtue, usually impose upon persons guilty of such brutal attacks as that laid at appellant's door the most rigorous punishment known to the law, the record in this case fails to show that they were actuated by either passion or prejudice in arriving at their verdict, for they only inflicted upon him the minimum penalty named in the statute for the crime charged.

The record discloses no error in the admission or rejection of evidence, or in refusing instructions asked by appellant; and the instructions given seem to have fully conformed to the law.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

BRASHEARS, &c. v. BRASHEARS.

(Filed April 22, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Pleadings—Relief Sought—Sufficiency of Allegations—Judgment by Default—Prayer of Petition—Under section 90, of the Civil Code, providing, that "if no defense be made, the plaintiff can not have judgment for any relief not specifically demanded," where it is stated in the body of the petition with sufficient accuracy to enable the court, from an inspection of the pleadings, to determine the amount for which the plaintiff is entitled to judgment, it is not indispensable, to support a judgment by default, that the amount claimed should be repeated in the prayer of the petition.

2. Same—But if the petition is defective and fails to set out with reasonable certainty the amount to which the plaintiff is entitled, or if the court, by an inspection of the pleadings, can not readily adjudge the sum for which judgment should be entered, then the prayer must specifically state the relief demanded or a judgment by default can not be rendered.

3. Action—Damages for Cutting Timber—Averment as to Value—Sufficiency—In a petition by a plaintiff for damages for the cutting and conversion of the timber from a large tract of land an averment that the value of the trees cut and removed did not exceed $4,944.57 is not sufficient to authorize a judgment by default for that sum.

4. Default Judgment—Relief not Sought—A judgment by default for relief not sought in the petition is a clerical error which may be corrected after the term.

5. Clerical Misprision — How Shown — How Corrected — A clerical misprision must be shown by the record and can only be corrected by the record. But if a plaintiff is given a judgment for more than his pleading shows he is entitled to or for any sum when the petition does not authorize a judgment in any amount, it is a manifest error which the defendant may have corrected on motion after notice.

6. Limitation—In this case the motion was made as soon as the defendant learned of the judgment, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have learned of it, and within ten years of its entry, and hence the right to correct the error was not barred by limitation.

Hazelrigg, Chenault & Hazelrigg, R. O. Brashears and Howard, Howard & Horn for appellant.

J. J. C. Bach and W. H. Miller for appellee.

Appeal from Perry Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, affirming.

In February, 1898, the appellant R. O. Brashears as administrator of R. S. Brashears' estate, brought a suit in ordinary against the Day

Brothers Lumber Company, the Southern Lumber Company, the Asher Lumber Company and appellee, R. H. Brashears. The petition reads as follows:

"The plaintiff states that the defendants, by agents and employes, within the last five years unlawfully, forcibly and against the will and consent of plaintiff, entered upon the following land, belonging to the heirs of R. S. Brashears, situated on the Bear Branch, in Perry county, Kentucky, and described as follows, viz: Beginning on or near the head of Bear Branch on a dogwood, white oak and poplar, S 10 E. 45 poles, continuing with courses and distances to the beginning, containing 450 acres more or less, conveyed by deeds properly signed and acknowledged and transfers properly recorded in Deed Book ——— Perry county court from Dykes Jessie to R. S. Brashears, showing a defined and well-marked boundary by actual survey; and 200 acres surveyed in 1849 and patented in 1850 to R. S. Brashears showing a defined and well-marked boundary by actual survey; and patent of 400 acres of land made in the name of Jessie Dykes, July 1st, 1845, recorded in book 13, page 50, land office, at Frankfort, Ky., and said defendants did thereon unlawfully enter upon plaintiff's rights and titles, and cut down more than 300 poplar and other trees, and sawed into logs valuable timber then growing upon said land, and removed said logs, and have converted them to their own use, said trees so cut down and removed by the said Day Co. were of the value of $—— and said logs so cut and removed by other parties are worth the sum of $——. Plaintiff further states that he was duly qualified and appointed administrator of R. S. Brashears' estate by orders entered of record at the August special term, 1892, of the Perry Circuit Court, and gave bond as the law requires, which was accepted and approved by the court, certified copies of same will be filed in due time herein if required by the court. He now waives the tortious acts of the defendant herein before set out, and sues the defendants jointly on the implied contract or promise to pay the plaintiff the value of said trees and logs so cut, removed and converted to their, defendants', own use, not, however, to exceed the sum of $4,944.57. and plaintiff now alleges that the defendants, jointly and severally, on an implied promise or contract, are indebted and liable to the estate for the value of the aforesaid trees or logs so taken, not exceeding the sum of $4,944.57, and no part thereof has ever been paid. Plaintiff further alleges that each of said companies are doing business in this State as corporations duly authorized under the existing laws, with power usual to incorporated companies, and that said saw logs and other timber was cut and taken from off of the possession of the plaintiff in Perry county, Kentucky, during the years 1892-3-4 and 5, by defendants' agent, employes wrongfully, and contrary to law. Wherefore, the plaintiff prays judgment for the value of all trees or logs so cut and removed and for 10 per cent. damages thereon for the wrongful seizure and detention thereof, for costs and all proper relief."

At the following March term of the court this judgment was entered:

"This cause having been, on a former day of this term, substituted on a motion of plaintiff to take the petition as true against the defendant, R. H. Brashears, and it now appearing to the satisfaction of the court that said defendant, R. H. Brashears, was on the 21st day of February, 1898, duly served with process and duly summoned to answer herein for a period of more than ten days previous to the first day of this term and failing to answer, the petition as to him taken as true, and confessed for the amount claimed. It is therefore adjudged by the court, that Robt. O. Brashears, personal representative, recover of the defendant the full and just sum of $4,944.57 with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent. per annum from the 14th day of February, 1898, until paid, and the cost created by reason of this action."

The record does not show that the appellee, R. H. Brashears, or either of the other defendants entered their appearance to the action or made any motion therein; nor was any other order or step taken in the case, until 1907, when appellee, R. H. Brashears, the judgment defendant, appeared and moved the court to set aside the judgment, "first, because the judgment purports to be in favor of R. O. Brashears, as administrator, when he was not at any time the administrator of R. S. Brashears; second, because the co-tenants, Day Brothers Lumber Co., Southern Lumber Co., Asher Lumber Co., were not before the court when the judgment against R. H. Brashears was rendered, nor was the action dismissed as to them; nor had R. H. Brashears been served with process; third, because there is no description of the land in the petition; fourth, because the action was for the recovery of damages, and the assessment should have been made by a jury; fifth, because the petition contains no prayer for any sum of money, and the court had no authority or power to render any judgment for any specified amount; sixth, because if there was any cause of action for cutting and removing timber to the estate of R. S. Brashears, said action was in his children and heirs at law, and not in his personal representative, and the personal representative could not waive the action in tort and sue in assumpsit.

The lower court, in considering this motion, to which the plaintiff entered his appearance, set aside the judgment, and the plaintiff below appeals.

It is conceded by counsel for appellant that the proceedings leading up to and including the judgment are erroneous, but it is insisted that the judgment was not void and for that reason the court had no power, upon motion nine years after its rendition, to set it aside.

Section 90 of the Civil Code provides in part that: "If no defense be made, the plaintiff can not have judgment for any relief not specifically demanded." When it is stated in the body of the petition with sufficient accuracy to enable the court from an inspection of the pleadings to determine the amount for which the plaintiff is entitled to judgment, it is not indispensable to support a judgment by default that the amount claimed or to which the plaintiff is entitled should be repeated in the prayer of the petition, it will be sufficient if he prays for judgment for the amount of his claim or demand. (Harris v. Perry, 2 Bush, 101.) But if the petition is defective and fails to set out with reasonable certainty, the amount to which the plaintiff is entitled, or if the court, by an inspection of the pleadings, can not readily adjudge the sum for which judgment should be entered, then the prayer of the petition must state specifically the relief demanded, or a judgment by default can not be rendered. Tested by these rules, our conclusion is that the amount to which the plaintiff was entitled is not stated with sufficient certainty in the petition to authorize the court to render judgment by default in the absence of a prayer stating accurately the relief desired.

It will be noticed that there is no specific averment of the value of the trees cut, removed and converted by the defendants, the amount being left blank. It is alleged that the defendants, jointly and severally, on the implied promise or contract, are indebted as applicable to the estate for the value of the aforesaid trees, not exceeding the sum of $4,944.57, but the value of the trees cut, removed or converted is not stated.

It will further be observed that the charge is that the trees cut, removed and converted by the Day Company, were of the value of — dollars. What was the value of the trees, if any, that were cut, removed and converted by the defendants jointly, is not stated. If it should be conceded that the defendants were jointly and severally liable for the full value of all the trees cut, removed and converted, we can not, by an inspection of the petition say what their value was. The averment that their value did not exceed $1,944.57 is not sufficient to authorize a judgment by default for that sum. The plaintiff, if entitled to anything, was only entitled to the value of the trees cut, removed and converted, with interest thereon, and the petition should have stated definitely, and specifically the value for which a recovery was sought (Bowman v. Ray, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 2131; Miller v. Allen, 20 Ky. Law Rep., 463; Hansford v. Holddam, 14 Bush, 210) or, failing in this the prayer should have specifically pointed out the relief sought. This it did not do.

It has been often held by this court that a judgment by default, for relief not sought in the petition, is a clerical error which may be corrected on motion after the term. Thus, to render judgment for interest from an earlier date than that from which interest was claimed in the petition (Manley v. Trustees of LaGrange, 7 Ky. Law Rep., 825); or to give judgment for a greater sum than under the pleadings should have been adjudged. (Wilmes v. Thoblin, 11 Ky. Law Rep., 678; Reynolds v. Powers, 17 Ky. Law Rep., 1059; Dayton v. Gardner, 19 Ky. Law Rep., 302; Dills v. Hatcher, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 891.) In Binion v. Woolery, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1802, the plaintiff asserted a lien on thirteen-fifteenths of the land in his petition. The court entered a judgment, adjudging a lien on the whole tract, and ordering its sale. This was held a clerical misprision, in so far as the judgment granted relief not sought in the pleadings, and for which no foundation was there laid. Upon the same principle, it is the rule in this court that where a judgment for damages is entered; where there is no supersedeas, or where the judgment superseded is not a judgment for the payment of money, the error is a clerical misprision which may be corrected in this court by motion at any time. The same rule is applied where the judgment is a judgment for money, and has been superseded, and no judgment for damages is entered. (Nelson County v. Bardstown, 30 Ky. Law Rep., 408; Bank of Kentucky v. Commonwealth, 31 Ky. Law Rep., 1087.) A clerical misprision must be shown by the record, and can only be corrected by the record. But, where it appears from the record itself that a clerical error has been made, it may be corrected by the record. (Smith v. Mullens, 3 Met., 182; Seller v. Northern Bank, 86 Ky., 128; Bonar v. Gosney, 17 Ky. Law Rep., 92; Commonwealth v. Caudill, 28 Ky. Law Rep., 520.) In this case the motion was made as soon as the defendant learned of the judgment, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have learned of it, and within ten years from its entry and hence the right to correct the error was not barred by limitation.

If it is a clerical misprision to enter a judgment for relief not sought in the pleadings, under the provision of the Code as extended and construed by this court, it must be a clerical misprision to enter judgment by default against the defendant where the prayer of the petition does not warrant the judgment. In such a case, the whole matter contained in the judgment is beyond the prayer of the petition. If a judgment may be corrected where it in part gives relief not authorized by the petition or the prayer, clearly one should be corrected in which all the relief granted is beyond the prayer of the petition. The purpose of the Code is that the defendant shall be apprised, by the petition and prayer, of the nature and extent of the relief the plaintiff seeks against him, so that he may know what steps he should take for his protection. He may not wish to make defense to the petition as it stands and may be willing to let judgment go by default for the recovery if any sought; but, if the plaintiff is given judgment for more than his pleading shows him to be entitled, or for any sum when the petition does not authorize a judgment in any amount, it is manifest that error has been committed to the prejudice of the defendant, and this error he may have corrected on motion after notice.

We, therefore conclude that the court properly set aside the judgment as a clerical misprision. The parties are now before the court. The plaintiff may amend his petition, and the case may be tried on the merits.

Judgment affirmed.

GUHY, &c. v. NICHOLS & SHEPHERD CO.

(Filed April 29, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Vendor and Purchaser—Sale of Separator—Express Warranty—Action for Price—Plea of Breach of Warranty—Use Without Complaint—Appellant purchased of appellee an engine and separator upon an express warranty "that it was well made, of good material, and, with proper management, capable of doing well the work for which it was intended." In an action on the last note for the purchase price, the defendant, after having used it for four years, pleaded that it was defective. Held—That where there is an express warranty there is no implied warranty, and the purchaser, after using the machine for four years, without offering to return it, or notice to the seller that it was defective, was without defense to the payment of the note.

Shelbourne & Smith and J. P. Wilson for appellants.

Bennett, Robbins & Thomas for appellee.

Appeal from Hickman Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, affirming.

On June 13, 1901, the Nichols & Shepherd Co. sold J. H. Guhy an engine and separator, for which he executed to it his five promissory notes, as follows: The first, for $96, due October 1, 1901; the second, for $221, due March 1, 1902; the third, for $316, due October 1, 1902, the fourth, for $441, due October 1, 1903, and the fifth, for $441, due October 1, 1904. Guhy paid off the first three notes. On February 9, 1905, when the other two notes were due, and in part unpaid, he executed to it two notes, each for $341, due August 1, 1905, and August 1, 1906, for the balance due upon the two original notes. James Harp and W. M. Burgess signed these renewal notes as his surety, and, to further secure the notes, he executed a mortgage on the engine and separator. He paid off the first of these notes, but failed to pay the other, and, on December 25, 1906, the Nichols & Shepherd Co. brought this suit to obtain judgment on the note, and to enforce its mortgage. Guhy defended the action upon the ground that the engine was guaranteed to him, at the time it was sold, to be a first class engine, and to do first class work, and that, if it did not do first class work, the company would make it fill the warranty; that the engine was defective, and that, though notified, the company failed to make it do the work, and that the notes in suit were executed upon a promise then made by the company that it would repair the engine and make it fill the warranty, but that this it had failed to do. The company pleaded, in response to this, that the engine was sold under a written contract, which contained the following warranty:

"This machinery is purchased and sold subject to the following express warranty and agreement, and none other, viz: That said machinery is well made, of good materials, and, with proper management, capable of doing well the work for which the machines respectively are made and sold; conditioned that if, within five days from its first use, it shall fail to fill this warranty, written notice shall immediately be given by the purchaser to Nichols and Shepherd Co., at Battle Creek, Michigan, by registered letter (and written notice also to the local dealer, through whom the same was received) stating particularly what parts and wherein it fails to fill the warranty. Reasonable time shall be allowed the company to get to the machine with its workmen and remedy the defect, if any there be, (unless it be of such nature that a remedy may be suggested by letter), the purchaser to render friendly assistance and co-operation in making a practical success. If a workman visits the machine for the company and does not leave it working satisfactorily, the purchaser shall give immediate notice to the company, at Battle Creek, Michigan, by registered letter, as before (and also the local dealer), and state, in writing, specifically, any failure or neglect complained of, and allow time for another workman to be sent to examine the machine and its workings. If, after giving the notices as above stated, any part of the machinery can not be made to fill the warranty, that part which fails shall be returned immediately by the undersigned to the place where it was received, with the option of the company either to furnish another machine, or part, in place of the machine or part so returned, which shall perform the work, or return the money and notes which have been received by the company for the same, and thereby rescind the contract to that extent, or the whole, as the case may be, and be released from any further liability herein. The failure of any separate machine, or any part thereof, shall not affect the contract or liability of the purchaser for any other separate machine, or for any parts of such machines as are not defective.

"It is expressly agreed that said company shall be liable only for the return of cash, and notes payable to its order, actually received by it, and not for any machinery or other property taken hereon as part payment.

"The notices herein mentioned are conditions precedent to the warranty and no evidence of the waiver of any condition, or thing to be done by the warrantee, herein expressed, shall be competent in any action arising under this contract unless in writing, signed by the proper officer of the company. If any part of said machinery (except belting) fails during the first season in consequence of any defect in material of said part, the company have the option to repair the same or furnish a duplicate of said part free of charge, except freight, after presentation of the defective piece, clearly showing a flaw in the material, at the factory, or to the dealer through whom said machinery was bought."

The company alleged that the written contract was the only agreement made by it in regard to the sale of the engine; that Guhy had kept the engine and had used it from the time it was bought to the time the answer was filed, without giving any written or other notice that it was defective, and that he had asked and obtained extensions of time for the payment of the price without complaint as to defects in the engine, promising to pay the debt if the time was extended. The allegations of the reply were denied by a rejoinder and the court ordered the case heard before a jury. At the conclusion of the evidence on both sides, the court instructed the jury peremptorily to find for the plaintiff. The defendants appeal.

It was contended, on the trial, that Guhy bought the engine as stated under the written contract. He testified that the engine from the start failed to do the work; that Long, the local agent, when he bought it, said that if it was bought direct from him, he would be there to attend to it and make it do the work; that he, on the day he started it, notified the man who set it up that the engine was not doing the work; that the next morning the man came back, but when he got there Guhy had got the pump to work and the man left; but before he had gotten home, the pump got out of fix again; that the engine foamed and he could keep no water in it, and the pump would not work; that he had continually to stop and cool it off and could make no time; that, after about ten days, he notified Long; that Long would come out and tell him it was all right and he would send for him again; and thus things went on until the note in suit was executed; that then a man named Case came to see him to get the money; that he told Case that he could just take the engine, he was not going to pay any more on it unless it was fixed; that finally Case agreed that if he would secure the debt by giving personal security and a mortgage they would fix the engine and give him two years to pay the debt, and in this way he could make the money out of it; that, upon this agreement, he did get Harp and Burgess to go on the notes and executed the mortgage on the engine and separator. But that, after he gave the notes, they failed to do anything to the engine and that he had been unable to make it a success by reason of this. He also introduced other proof tending to confirm his statement as to the trouble that he had had with the engine and as to the agreement had with Case at the time the notes were renewed. He admitted that he had run the engine every year since he had gotten it, in threshing wheat, in summer, and that he had used it in winter in sawing and other work. He also admitted that he had paid off the first renewal note, but said he did so to have no law suit, thinking they would fix the engine.

The defendant introduced its agent, Long, who said that the only complaint that Guhy ever made to him was about the pump; that this occurred first in 1903; that the pump was then worn out and he got the necessary new parts for it. He also testified that this occurred again in 1905, and that this was all the complaint he ever heard of and that Guhy told him the engine did better work afterwards; that he did not see it any more. Case was introduced and testified that he was simply an agent to collect; that he went to see Guhy to collect the balance due on the notes then outstanding and that Guhy agreed to give the new notes with security if the time was extended; and that this was the only agreement he made with Guhy; that Guhy made no complaint to him at all about the engine, and he made no promise about fixing it. J. L. Moss testified that he was the local agent in 1905 and that no complaint was made to him about the engine.

The only warranty in the sale of the machinery was the express warranty; for where there is an express warranty, there is no implied warranty, and if the purchaser has lost his right to rely on the express warranty, he is without remedy; for the contract in such cases measures the liability of the parties. (Gaar Scott & Co. v. Hodges, 28 Ky. Law Rep., 889; Wisdom v. Nichols Shepherd Co., 97 S. W., 18, and cases cited.) Under the proof, it is manifest that Guhy, when he executed the renewal notes in February, 1905, had lost all right to rely upon the express warranty made in the sale of the engine. He had then held and used the engine for nearly four years without at any time offering to return it, and without any notice to the company that it was defective. After keeping and using the engine so long he was without defense to the payment of the price. When Case came, in February, 1905, he refused to pay the balance due on the notes, saying that the company might take the engine. If Case then agreed that the company would repair the engine and give him two years to pay the debt if he would give the new notes with security, and he accepted this proposition and executed the notes, relying on this agreement, it was incumbent on him to notify the company what repairs he wanted and to give it an opportunity to make the repairs. He could not go on and use the engine for two years longer without complaint or objection and without calling on the company to make any repairs, and then defend the action on the last note on the ground that the company had failed to repair the engine. In the meantime, he had paid off one of the notes which he had executed to Case. He had done this without any complaint to the company that it had not repaired the engine as Case had agreed. To allow him, when sued upon the other note, to make the defense that the company had not complied with its agreement would be to allow him to mislead the company. In matters of this sort a party must use reasonable diligence and good faith. A man can not waive a matter and afterwards rely upon it. The use of the engine for two years was a waiver of any right to demand repairs upon it, and, under the testimony, the defense now made must be regarded as an afterthought. (McCormack Harvesting Co. v. Arnold, 116 Ky., 508.)

On the whole record, we, therefore, conclude that the judgment of the circuit court is in accord with the merits of the case, and it is, therefore, affirmed.

BURCHETT v. CLARKE.

(Filed April 28, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Order—Consent Order—A consent order can only be made by persons who are legally authorized to consent. The infants in this action could not consent, and it does not appear that any one consented for them; the order of revivor, was, therefore, void. The action was not revived within the time allowed by the Code, or at all, and the lower court properly dismissed it.

J. M. Roberson and E. D. Stephenson for appellant.

James Goble for appellees.

A. C. VanWinkle for guardian ad litem.

Appeal from Pike Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, affirming.

In 1886 the appellant, Burchett, brought an action in the Pike Circuit Court against Calvin Clarke and Gorden Clarke to recover the possession of a tract of land, containing about 200 acres. In the same year the defendants answered. In 1889 an amended petition was filed, which was answered in August of that year. In December of that year a reply was filed. In 1891 there was a rejoinder, and in 1895 an amended answer. No other action was taken in the case until October, 1902, when this order was entered: "By consent, this cause is now ordered to stand revived in the name of Dixie E. Clarke, Stonewall Jackson Clarke, and Hiram Clarke, only children of Calvin Clarke, deceased, and M. A. Clarke, widow of said Calvin Clarke, and W. G. Reed, administrator of Calvin Clarke. And the cause is now ordered to proceed in their names as the real and personal representatives of Calvin Clarke, deceased, and this cause is continued."

The next order was entered in August, 1905, when P. B. Stratton was appointed guardian ad litem for the infants, the appointment being made after an affidavit had been filed stating that the infants had no guardian ad litem. Nothing else was done until 1906, when Mrs. Clarke filed an affidavit, which is not in the record, and entered a motion to dismiss the action for want of revivor. This motion was sustained and the action dismissed. No appeal is prosecuted from the order of dismissal so far as Gorden Clarke is concerned. The statement filed by appellant shows that the only appellees are the widow and children of Calvin Clarke.

Although the suit was brought in 1886, nothing was done in it except to make up the pleadings, which appear to have been completed in 1895. The record does not show when Calvin Clarke died, but counsel for appellant states in his brief that he died "some time in the year 1901, and the first court in which steps could have been taken to revive the case was the September term, 1901." The consent order of revivor was not entered until the September term, 1902. It is also conceded that at the time this consent order was made, the children of Calvin Clarke were infants; nor does it appear who consented to the order. A guardian ad litem was appointed three years afterwards, but he did not file any answer or take any steps in the case.

It will thus be seen that more than a year after the action could have been revived this consent order of revivor was entered. We are asked to sustain the judgment of the lower court dismissing the action, upon the ground, first, that the order of revivor was made too late; and, second, that in the absence of any showing that the action was revived by the consent of any person authorized, the order was void.

As the action against Calvin Clarke was for the recovery of land, it was necessary that it should be revived against his real representatives, who were in this case his children. The provisions of the Civil Code that control the disposition of this case are:

"Section 502. If the order be made by consent of the parties, the action shall forthwith stand revived; and, if not made by consent, the order shall be served, in the same manner as a summons, upon the party adverse to the one making a motion. And, at the first term, commencing not less than ten days after such service, the party upon whom it is made, may show cause against the revivor; and, if sufficient cause be not then shown, the action shall stand revived.

"Section 506. Upon the death of a defendant in an action for the recovery of real property only, or which concerns only his rights or claims to such property, the action may be revived against his real representatives or any of them, and an order therefor may be forthwith made in the manner directed in the proceeding sections of this title.

"Section 507. An order to revive an action against the personal representative of a defendant, or against him and the real representatives of the defendant, can not be made, unless by consent, within six months after the qualification of the personal representative.

"Section 508. An order to revive an action against the representative or successor of a defendant shall not be made, without his consent, unless within one year after the time when it could have been first made.

"Section 510. If it appear to the court, by affidavit, that either party to an action has been dead, or, if he sue or be sued as a personal representative, that his powers, have ceased for a period so long that the action can not be revived in the name of his representative or successor without the consent of both parties, it shall order the action to be stricken from the docket."

At the time the consent order was made, the infants upon whose motion the action was dismissed, were not parties to the suit. So far as the record discloses, they were not represented by either guardian, committee, attorney, next friend, or any one else. The revivor was against their interests. In the absence of a revivor, the action to recover the land would have abated, and left them in the undisturbed possession. The legal effect of the death of Calvin Clarke was to abate the action as to him, but his death did not immediately authorize its dismissal. It was proper to permit the action to remain on the docket to enable the plaintiff to revive it in the manner provided in the Code. The children whose rights were prejudiced and affected by the order of revivor could not, as they were infants, consent to it. The proper way to revive the action as to them was to have filed, as provided in section 501, a petition against them stating facts necessary to authorize a revivor, with a prayer therefor, and to issue summons and have it duly executed as any other summons in an action against infants, or to have the order served as provided in section 502. Upon the return of the summons or order duly executed, if the infants had no statutory guardian to represent them, a guardian ad litem should have been appointed to make defense, if any could be made, to the order of revivor. It is very clear that a consent order can only be made by persons who are legally authorized to consent. The infants could not consent for themselves, and, as it does not appear that any person consented for them, the order of revivor was void. Aside from this, an order to revive an action must be entered within twelve months from the time the order might have been first made, although it is not essential that the action be revived within that time. When a motion, or order, is made to revive within that time, the action may be revived afterwards. (Thompson v. Williams, 86 Ky., 15.) The proper practice in cases of this character is that when the death of a party to an action occurs, and it is necessary to revive it in favor of or against his heirs or personal representative, the party desiring to revive the action against the real or personal representatives, or both of the deceased should suggest the death and ask that the action be revived against the persons whom it is desired to revive against; and these persons, unless they are qualified to and do consent, should be brought before the court in the manner hereinbefore pointed out, and their rights protected by some one authorized to represent them. (Hull v. Deatley, 7 Bush, 687; Cox v. Story, 80 Ky., 64.)

As the action was not revived within the time allowed, or at all, the lower court did right in dismissing it, and the judgment is affirmed.

WALSH v. PARR'S EXECUTOR AND TRUSTEE.

(Filed April 29, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Judicial Sales—Contingent Interests of Remainderman—Re-investment of Proceeds on Same Terms—Validity of Title—In a judicial sale of real estate for re-investment where it appears that the interest of the contingent remainderman were secured by a re-investment of the proceeds of the sale, in other property upon the same terms and conditions as specified in the deed under which it was held, the sale passes a valid title to the purchaser at said sale.

A. Scott Bullitt, Thomas W. Bullitt and James Hemphill for appellant.

O'Neal & O'Neal for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, First Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn, affirming.

This appeal is from a judgment rendered against appellant requiring him to specifically perform a contract to purchase some real estate from appellee. The only question in dispute is the validity of the title to the property involved. Appellant desires to perform his contract to purchase if the deed tendered by appellee conveys to him a good title.

The circuit court sustained a demurrer to appellant's answer setting out the alleged defects in the title, and, upon his declining to plead further, rendered the judgment appealed from. The answer, in substance, disclosed the following facts: That prior to the year 1879, the house and lot, the title to which is in dispute, was owned by Myrah Gray, Myrah G. Bondurant, Sarah M. Heinshon and David Frantz, Sr., each owning an undivided one-fourth in fee. Myrah Gray died in 1877, leaving a will, which was duly probated, in which she devised to Joshua F. Speed, in trust, this property upon the following conditions: Speed was to rent the property, collect the rent, pay all taxes and for all repairs, and the balance he was to pay over to her son, Horace M. Gray, monthly, for the support of himself and family, and at the death of her son, Horace M. Gray, the trustee was to pay his wife, Mary Gray, the sum of $25 a month during her life or widowhood (Mary Gray died and will not be referred to again), and on the arrival at age of twenty-one years of the youngest child of Horace Gray, the trustee, was to convey the whole of the property to them equally, and if any of his children should die leaving issue, then the issue was to take the share that would have gone to their parent, and if her son, Horace M. Gray, died without leaving lawful issue, then the trustee should convey the property to her son, W. B. Gray, and her daughters, Sarah M. Heinshon and Myrah Bondurant, equally, and if at the time, either one of them be dead, their lawful children should take the share their parents would have taken. The last item of the will is as follows: "If the said Joshua F. Speed, from any cause, fails or refuses to accept said trust, then I desire the chancellor of the Louisville Chancery Court to appoint some discreet person, with like power to act as such, paying him a reasonable and fair compensation for his services, and requiring him to settle his accounts with said court in each year."

Joshua F. Speed, named in the will as trustee, resigned his trust in an action brought in the Louisville Chancery Court, wherein E. T. Halsey was appointed by the court as his successor.

Thereafter, July 3, 1879, Myrah G. Bondurant and her husband and Sarah M. Heinshon brought an action in the Louisville Chancery Court against David Frantz, Sr., E. T. Halsey, as trustee under the will of Myrah Gray, Horace M. Gray, Horace James Gray, John McConnel Gray, who were the only children then living of Horace M. Gray and W. B. Gray, a brother of Horace M. Gray, and the same person mentioned in the will of Myrah Gray, alleging that the house and lot described in the petition in that action could not be divided among the owners without materially impairing its value and the value of the interests of each of the owners. All the defendants in that action were duly summoned, and Halsey, trustee, filed an answer denying that the property mentioned in the petition could not be divided without materially impairing its value, or the value of the interest of the several owners thereof, and alleged that the interest held by him in trust could not be sold, except for purpose of re-investing the proceeds thereof. On March 18, 1880, a judgment was entered in that action to the effect that the property described in the petition was not susceptible of division into four parts without materially impairing the value of each part.

It was further adjudged that the appellants, Myrah G. Bondurant and Sarah M. Heinshon, and the defendant, David Frantz, Sr., each owner and undivided one-fourth interest therein, and the remaining one-fourth interest was owned by E. T. Halsey, as trustee, under the will of Myrah Gray, and that the proceeds of this one-fourth interest should be retained under the contract of the court for the purpose of re-investment, upon the trust and under the conditions, limitations and terms prescribed in the last will of Myrah Gray. The property was sold under this judgment and D. G. Parr became the purchaser. A report of sale was made and confirmed. Parr paid the purchase money, and a deed was made to him under the approval of the court. The infant defendants in that action had no guardian and no bond was executed for them. It further appears from the answer that at the time the action was instituted, and the sale made thereunder, the plaintiffs, Heinshon and Bondurant, and defendants, W. B. Gray and Horace M. Gray, each had then living children and that the children of plaintiffs and W. B. Gray were not made parties, but the children of Horace Gray were. It further appears that Horace M. Gray had three children born to him after the sale of the property mentioned in the action referred to, but it does not appear in the answer whether or not the defendant, W. B. Gray, and the plaintiffs had any children born thereafter. Appellant claims that the proceedings in the action referred to did not have the effect to divest the devisees under the will of Myrah Gray of their title to this property, for the reason the will of Myrah Gray created a contingent interest or estate in this property, which the court had no jurisdiction to sell in the case referred to, as that action was expressly brought and prosecuted under section 490, of the Civil Code, under which only vested estate, can be sold. From a synopsis of the will, it will be observed that Myrah Gray made the following provisions with regard to one-fourth of the property now in litigation, to-wit:

First, that her son, Horace Gray, should have the rents and profits thereof for life; second, at his death, and when his youngest child became of age, the fee should go to his children; third, if any child should die leaving issue, the share of such child should go to such issue; fourth, if said son, Horace Gray, should die without issue, then the fee should pass to W. B. Gray, Myrah Bondurant and Sarah Heinshon (her other children) or, if any be then dead, to the issue of such decedent.

Section 490, of the Civil Code, provides:

"A vested estate in real property jointly owned by two or more persons may be sold by order of a court of equity, in an action brought by either of them, though the plaintiff or defendant be of unsound mind or an infant—

"1. If the shares of each owner be worth less than one hundred dollars.

"2. If the estate be in possession and the property can not be divided without materially impairing its value, or the value of the plaintiff's interest therein."

The owners of this house and lot were in possession of it and had a vested interest therein. In the case of Kean v. Tilford, &c., 81 Ky., 600, this court said: "Kean, Henning and Speed, holding as tenants in common this property that was indivisible, or that could not be divided without materially impairing its value, might have instituted an action, the one against the other, and required a sale of the entire property under the statute; and this being the case, the one tenant, by making a disposition of his interest by deed or will to his children, or to a stranger, containing a clause prohibiting a sale, can not take from his co-tenants or joint owners the right to have the property sold if indivisible. Kean can not, by making a grant or devise of his estate, compel Henning and Speed to sacrifice their interest in order that the provisions of his will or grant may be carried out."

Again it is said, in the same opinion: "The death of two of the original owners of this common estate, and the disposition made by them of their property by last will has created such a multiplicity of interests in the hotel as renders it essential to the interest of all that a sale should be made of the entire property."

To the same effect is the case of Atherton v. Warren, &c., 27 Ky. Law Rep., 632, which overruled the case of Dineen v. Hall, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1615, which expressed a contrary doctrine. In the Atherton-Warren case, this court said: "The Legislature evidently intended by the enactment of section 490 to give joint owners, having a vested estate in real property in their possession, when it could not be divided without materially impairing its value or the value of the plaintiff's interest therein, the right to have it sold. Under this provision of the Code, if the value of the plaintiff's interest alone is materially impaired by continuing to hold the property, he is entitled to have it sold. The tenant, by the curtesy, has a vested interest in the property the same as have the Warren heirs. This being true, the record presents a case where persons with a joint interest and in possession seek the sale of the property under section 490. They have the right to the sale of the property under that section. To take any other view would be to hold that the Legislature intended that, although persons with a vested interest, and in the possession of the property, could be prevented from selling it on account of the small interest of the remaindermen. In our opinion the intention of the Legislature is effectuated when we hold that property may be sold under section 490, where there are vested estates jointly held, although one so holding is a life tenant."

The case of Harting's Ex'tx v. Milward's Surviving Executor, &c., 28 Ky. Law Rep., 776, was very similar to the one at bar. Some of the interests therein were contingent and the sale was made under section 490, of the Civil Code. In that case the court said: "We are of the opinion that the proceeding conforms, in every essential, to the requirements of section 490, and concurrent sections of the Code, concerning the sale of the infant's interest, as well as of those whose interests are contingent, and the judgment of the chancellor safeguards the rights of all concerned. (Kean v. Tilford, 81 Ky., 600; Atherton v. Warren, 27 Ky. Law Rep., 632.)"

It is conceded that if the sale was legally made under section 490 the bond required by section 493 was not necessary to be executed, for the infants, before the sale was ordered. The court, in the case at bar, protected the rights and interests of the remaindermen by requiring that the proceeds of their one-fourth of the property be re-invested in other property upon the terms and conditions of the will of Myrah Gray. It does not appear in the record whether this was done or not, but it is to be presumed, when there is nothing appearing to the contrary, that the court performed its duty in having its orders carried into effect.

The next and only other question presented by appellant, is that the children of Myrah Bondurant, Sarah Heinshon and W. B. Gray were not parties to the action to sell this property; hence those children, who are still living, are not bound by the judgment, and they were not divested of their interests. We are inclined to the opinion that, as Bondurant, Heinshon, W. B. Gray and Horace M. Gray were before the court in that action, and, as they owned the first estate created under the will of Myrah Gray, it was sufficient to pass the title and bar the claims of their children, the contingent remaindermen. (Hermann v. Parsons, &c., 117 Ky., 239; Whallen v. Kellner, 31 Ky. Law Rep., 1285, and Roberta Jaillette, &c. v. James E. Bell, &c., the opinion in which was delivered April 22, 1908.) But we do not decide this question as the case of Fritsch v. Klausning, 11 Ky. Law Rep., 788, controls. In that case James R. Anderson executed to his daughter, Mrs. Evans, a deed to thirty-seven acres of land, vesting in her an estate for life, remainder to her children and at her death to his (Anderson's) heirs at law, in the event Mrs. Evans left no children at her death or the descendants of children. In the case at bar the interests of the children of Bondurant, Heinshon and

W. B. Gray were more remote and contingent than the heirs of Anderson. In the deed referred to Anderson's heirs took the estate if Mrs. Evans left no children or descendants of children at her death. The children referred to in the case at bar only took an interest if Horace M. Gray left no children or descendants of children, and further W. B. Gray, Mrs. Heinshon and Mrs. Bondurant must also have been dead before the children took the estate. In that case Mrs. Evans instituted an action to sell this real estate, and made her own children parties to it, but did not make the heirs of Anderson parties. In the case at bar the children of Horace M. Gray then in being were made parties. In the Fritsch-Klausing case, supra, the sale was made and Klausing became the purchaser and complied with the terms of sale. The court said: "It was not necessary to make those who might be the heirs of Anderson parties to the action. Their interest, if any, was of so remote a character as not to be estimated or defined. The contingency upon which the heirs at law of Anderson are to take depending on the death of the life tenant without children, and as their rights are fully secured, if they should ever have any in the re-investment, there was no reason for making them parties."

In that case the interests of the contingent remaindermen were secured by a re-investment of the proceeds of the sale in other property upon the same terms and conditions as specified in the deed. In the case at bar the contingent remaindermen's interests are protected in the same manner, and they have no interest in the property in litigation.

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

ALDRIDGE v. ALDRIDGE, &c.

(Filed April 28, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Trusts—Trustees—Legal Presumption—The trustee here was not authorized by the will to use any part of the principal without the consent of the chancellor, and the record does not show that any of the principal was used, the legal presumption is, therefore, that Ruth Aldridge faithfully performed her duties as trustee of her sister, and at her death had possession of the fund or invested it in land, and not having the trust fund, the presumption is that she invested it in the land held by her.

Robert Harding, Emmet Puryear and Greene & VanWinkle for appellant.

R. H. Tomlinson for appellees.

Appeal from Garrard Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, affirming.

In 1873 Catherine Aldridge made her will, which was probated in 1875. She left surviving her two daughters, Ruth and Bettie, and for their benefit made the following provisions in her will:

"I give and bequeath to them jointly sixty-two acres of my land, described as follows: * * * They, Ruth and Bettie, to have the sixty-two acres of land for and during their lives, and the survivor of them to have the whole as long as she lives, and if they, or either of them, die without issue living, the whole shall, after the death of the survivor, be equally divided between my other children, or the heirs of such of them as may be dead. If Ruth and Bettie should die leaving issue living, such issue shall take one-half of said sixty-two acres, and if both of them should die leaving an issue, the sixty-two acres shall be divided between the issue of each of them equally, the issue of one taking one-half and the issue of the other taking the other half. I hereby give to Ruth, my daughter, the right to sell and convey the said land if she thinks it better, and shall hold one-half the proceeds in trust for the use and benefit of Bettie, or buy other land if she deems it best, and sha'll hold the land she might purchase in the same way as she would the sixty-two acres if she would keep it as provided above in this will."

Shortly after the death of Mrs. Aldridge, her children, who were the sole devisees under her will, desiring to sell the tract of land left by the testatrix, a part of which was the sixty-two acres devised to Ruth and Bettie, entered into an agreement among themselves and conveyed the land, which contained 210 acres, to one Hopper as trustee, the deed providing among other things, that the trustee, when he sold the land, should pay to Ruth, in her own right, and as trustee for Bettie, such proportion of the purchase price as the sixty-two acres of land bore to the whole price obtained; and it was further agreed that Ruth Aldridge "shall have such portion of the proceeds of said land as she may be entitled to according to this instrument and agreement absolutely, and to do as she pleased with, and shall manage and control the portion to which Bettie is entitled under the will aforesaid."

Soon after this, Hopper sold the land for $5,152, and paid to Ruth Aldridge in her own right, to do with as she pleased, according to the agreement, $668, the part of the proceeds to which she was entitled, and also $668, to which she was entitled as the trustee of Bettie.

In 1887 there was conveyed to Ruth Aldridge, in her own name and by a good and sufficient deed, in consideration of $1,900, a tract of land containing twenty-six acres. In 1902 Ruth Aldridge died, leaving a will, by which she devised the twenty-six acres of land, after the payment of her debts and some minor legacies, to Rose and James Aldridge. In this action by her administrator, with the will annexed, for a settlement of her estate, it was charged in the petition that Ruth Aldridge invested in the purchase price of the twenty-six acres of land the money received by her as trustee of Bettie Aldridge from the sale of Bettie's interest in the sixty-two acres; and that she held one-half the twenty-six acres in trust for the use and benefit of Bettie. That upon the death of Bettie, who died childless, Ruth became entitled, under the will of Catherine Aldridge, to the use of Bettie's part for her life, but upon the death of Ruth the one-half interest of Bettie in the twenty-six acres passed under the will of Catherine Aldridge to the heirs of Catherine Aldridge; the other one-half of the twenty-six acres Ruth owned in her own right and this interest the devisees in her will were entitled to.

To this petition the devisees of Ruth Aldridge, who are the appellants here, filed an answer, in which they set up that Ruth Aldridge did manage and control the proceeds of the sale of the sixty-two acres that belonged to Bettie in accordance with the will of Catherine Aldridge and expended the same for the support and maintenance of Bettie during her life, as it was contemplated by the will she should do, and that Bettie was cared for and supported by Ruth Aldridge for a period of twenty-one years and until her death. They denied that Ruth only owned one-half of the land, or that she held the other half in trust for the use and benefit of Bettie; or that Ruth Aldridge invested in the twenty-six acres any of the purchase money that she received as trustee for Bettie from the sale of the sixty-two acres. They asked that they be adjudged entitled to the whole of the land after the payment of debts.

To this answer a reply was filed, completing the pleadings. Depositions were taken by the administrator, to which exceptions were sustained, and the court, upon the pleadings and exhibits, adjudged that the devisees of Ruth Aldridge were only entitled to one-half the proceeds of the sale of the twenty-six acres which was sold under a decree of court, and that the heirs of Catherine Aldridge were entitled to the other half, the court proceeding upon the idea that the one-half the land owned by Ruth Aldridge at her death belonged to Bettie, and had been purchased with her part of the money derived from the sale of her interest in the sixty-two acres.

It is strongly insisted in behalf of appellants that this judgment is erroneous, because there is no evidence that any part of Bettie's money was invested in the twenty-six acres owned by Ruth at her death; and as the title to the twenty-six acres was in Ruth, the presumption is that she purchased it with her own money, and, consequently, had the right to dispose of it as she pleased. On the other hand, it is the contention of the appellees that, as Ruth Aldridge was appointed the trustee of Bettie under the will of Catherine Aldridge, charged with the duty of holding in trust for her use and benefit her estate and empowered with authority to sell and invest the proceeds in other land to be held in the same manner, that Ruth, in the discharge of this trust, purchased one-half the land with the proceeds of Bettie's interest in the trust fund, or at least invested the trust fund in this land, and the mere fact that she took the title in her own name, did not have the effect of divesting Bettie of her one-half interest in the land.

The real, and in fact only question in the case, is, was it incumbent upon appellee to prove that Bettie's money was invested in the land owned by Ruth at her death, or, in the absence of evidence upon this point will it be presumed that Ruth, in the discharge of her duties as trustee, invested Bettie's money in the land?

Ruth received, as trustee for Bettie, from the sale of the sixty-two acres, $668. Under the will of Catherine Aldridge she was obliged to hold this money for the use and benefit of Bettie, or, if she invested it in land, the title to the land to be held in the same manner as the title to the sixty-two acres. Under this provision of the will it is manifest that if Ruth did not invest this money in land, that her estate must account for the principal of the fund so received. She was not authorized by the will to use any part of the principal without asking and obtaining the consent of the chancellor. Nor does the record show, except in the averments of the answer, that she did use any of the principal, and it is not claimed that the advice of the chancellor was asked. We, therefore, conclude that the legal presumption is that Ruth performed faithfully her duties as trustee, and at her death had possession of the trust fund or invested it in this land. The denial in the answer that any part of the trust fund was invested in this land was not sufficient to place the burden of proving that it was, upon the heirs of Catherine Aldridge, who asserted claim to Bettie's interest. These heirs were entitled to recover upon an exhibition of the will of Catherine Aldridge, and the deed showing that the land had been sold and the proceeds paid to Ruth.

A question is made as to the right and propriety of the administrator with the will annexed of Ruth Aldridge to assert a claim in opposition to her will, or to raise a question as to the right or interest of the devisees mentioned in the will to receive their part of the estate, or to favor the interest of persons asserting rights hostile to the will. But we do not consider this important. Ruth did not have the trust fund at her death, and the legal presumption is that she invested it in this land. As the lower court so adjudged, it must be affirmed.

FUSON, &c. v. CHESTNUT, &c.

(Filed April 30, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Deeds—Construction of—While the law is well settled that a deed absolute upon its face may be shown to be a mortgage, it is manifest from the facts that the deed and contract herein constituted something more than a mortgage. They were executed for the purpose of settling conflicting claims between the parties, and the effect of the deed was to vest the grantee with all the title the grantors had.

2. Judgment—Erroneous—Production of Papers—Appellant having passed title to the land, she is entitled to the purchase money, but she can not make the production of title papers a condition precedent to the payment of the purchase money.

N. J. Weller for appellants.

James M. Hays, S. B. Dishman and J. Smith Hays for appellees.

Appeal from Bell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Wm. Rogers Clay, Commissioner, reversing.

In September, 1901, D. T. Chestnut and W. B. Sutton sued S. S. Fuson on an account of $968.55; they also held an additional account against Fuson of $500.00, which was not embraced in the suit. At the time of bringing the action, they procured an attachment, which was levied on three parcels of land in Bell county, belonging to appellants. In June, 1904, Chestnut and Sutton obtained judgment for their debt, and an order sustaining the attachment. In August of the same year, Chestnut bought the three parcels of land at the commissioner's sale, for the debt sued on, and costs, less $62.00, and, upon confirmation of the sale by the court, the commissioner made him a deed for the three parcels of land purchased by him.

Julia Fuson, wife of S. S. Fuson, not being a party to the suit against her husband, and claiming to own the three parcels of land in question, brought suit, in December, 1904, in the Bell Circuit Court, against D. T. Chestnut and W. B. Sutton, to set aside the deed to Chestnut and have her title to the land quieted. Her husband, S. S. Fuson, joined with her in the action as plaintiff. About this time, Chestnut and Sutton sued S. S. Fuson upon the second account of $500.00, which they held against him. Before judgment in either of these suits, and in order to settle them, Chestnut and S. S. Fuson and wife entered into the following agreement:

"This writing between S. S. and Julia Fuson, of the first part, and D. T. Chestnut, of the second part, witnesseth: That, whereas, the said parties of the first part have this day released and conveyed to the party of the second part six several tracts of land, it is agreed that, when the said second party may sell said land, that the said second party shall have of the purchase money for said land before the first parties get anything, the sum of one thousand eight hundred dollars; then said first party, Julia Fuson, shall have a sum of money equal to the said first sum before second party shall have any more of the said purchase money; then, after this second sum shall be paid to Julia Fuson, if there remains any of the purchase price for which said lands may be sold, the said D. T. Chestnut and the said Julia Fuson shall divide the same equally between them.

"Second. The said Chestnut shall sell said lands as soon as possible, and at the best possible price, and at no price within one year for less than eight ($8.00) dollars per acre, for any of said land. Third.

It is further agreed that, at any time, said Julia Fuson may furnish a purchaser, that will give the best possible price for said land.

"This writing signed, in duplicate, this November 4, 1905.

"S. S. FUSON,

her

"JULIA x FUSON,

mark

"Witness: JAMES M. HAYS.

"D. T. CHESTNUT."

At the same time, Fuson and wife, by deed, conveyed the six parcels of land mentioned in the agreement to Chestnut. Simultaneously, Chestnut conveyed back to Julia Fuson, out of the first three tracts, 65 acres, including the dwelling-house, yard, garden and orchard.

On November 22, 1905, Fuson and wife and R. C. Ford sued D. T. Chestnut, in the same court, charging that the deed previously made to Chestnut by them was, in fact, only a mortgage given to secure what was due him from Fuson, and praying that they be allowed to redeem the land; also that Julia Fuson had previously secured a purchaser for the land at $8.00 per acre, and that Chestnut refused to accept the redemption money therefor. On January 24, 1906, Chestnut, by separate answer, traversed the material matter of the petition, and alleged his ownership of the first three tracts by virtue of the commissioner's deed, and the other three tracts by deed from Fuson and wife. When Chestnut answered, J. S. Hays, George W. Tye and S. B. Dishman, on their joint petition, were made parties to the action, and their petition made an answer. In it the allegations were made that James M. Hays had purchased the lands from Chestnut for himself and George W. Tye, on April 25, 1905, and that James M. Hays and Tye subsequently sold their co-defendants, J. S. Hays and S. B. Dishman, an interest therein. They also charged inability on the part of the Fusons to make a good title to all the land, and averred that they were ready to pay the balance of the purchase money going to the Fusons when the latter perfected the title to the land. They further alleged their ownership of the unpaid balance of the Chestnut $968.55 judgment, amounting to $62.00. A reply to each answer was filed by appellants.

The lower court dismissed the petition of the Fusons, and further adjudged that the amount Julia Fuson was entitled to receive from the said Hays and Tye was a balance of said purchase money for the 425 acres at $8.00 per acre, or the sum of $1,546.00, with interest from March 4, 1905, until paid; but provided in the judgment that the said Hays and Tye should not be required to pay Julia Fuson any part of said sum until the said Julia Fuson should deliver to said James M. Hays all title and papers—recorded or unrecorded—in her possession, relating to said land. The judgment further provided that, as it appeared that the title to a portion of the land, consisting of about 80 acres, was defective; Hays and Tye could withhold the payment to said Julia Fuson of the sum of $640.00 out of the purchase money going to her until further order of the court, and gave the Fusons until the next term of court to exhibit the title under which they held said land. The judgment also directed that, before paying any of the money to the Fusons, they should tender a deed releasing all liens on said land.

Appellants contend that the transaction of March 4, 1905, resulting in the written agreement and deed, constituted one transaction and a mortgage; that there was no valid sale or deed from Chestnut to James M. Hays; that James M. Hays purchased the property with full knowledge of all the facts in the case, and that said agreement and deed were only a mortgage, and that the contract and deed between Chestnut and James M. Hays should be rescinded.

It appears that James M. Hays received from Chestnut the following title bond:

"This writing witnesseth: That I have this day sold to J. M. Hays all the land conveyed to me from Julia Fuson and S. S. Fuson, at the price of eight ($8.00) dollars per acre, to be paid when title is perfected, and deed executed.

"This April 25th, 1905.

(Signed) "D. T. CHESTNUT."

After this, Hays and Tye had the land surveyed, and Fuson helped them to locate and survey the fourth, fifth and sixth tracts of land. On October 2, 1905, Chestnut and wife conveyed all the land to James M. Hays, and reserved a lien in favor of Julia Fuson for the balance of $1,485.30. This deed was a special warranty deed.

The first question to be determined is: Did the agreement and deed between Fuson and wife and D. T. Chestnut constitute only a mortgage? The law is well settled that a deed absolute, upon its face, may be shown to be a mortgage; and especially is this the case where there is a contemporaneous written agreement showing that the purpose of the deed was merely to secure the vendee in the payment of a debt due him from the vendor. (Ogden v. Grant, 6 Dana, 473.) At the time of the making of the agreement and deed in question, Chestnut had obtained title to three of the tracts of land by commissioner's deed. Julia Fuson was attempting to have this conveyance set aside. Chestnut and Sutton were also trying to subject the remainder of the land to the payment of a debt for $500.00. It is evident, then, that the deed from the Fusons to Chestnut was made for the purpose of adjusting and settling their conflicting claims to the land in question. By the provisions of the deed, Chestnut was to have the first $1,800.00, with interest from March 4, 1905. Julia Fuson was then to have a like sum, with interest from the same date. Any additional purchase money, after the payment of these sums to Chestnut and Fuson, was to be equally divided between them. At the same time, Chestnut and wife conveyed to Julia Fuson a tract of 65 acres, containing the dwelling-house, garden, &c. It is manifest, then, that the deed and contract constituted something more than a mere mortgage. They were executed for the purpose of settling all the conflicting claims between the parties thereto. The deed gave to Chestnut not only an interest in the land sufficient to pay his debt, but also one-half of the purchase money after his debt had been paid, and a like sum had been paid to Julia Fuson. The effect of the deed was to vest in him all the title that the Fusons had, with full power and authority to sell the land according to the terms and provisions of the contract and deed.

It is sought to discredit the title bond from Chestnut to Hays on the ground that Hays was Chestnut's son-in-law, and that the said title bond, as a matter of fact, was never executed. Hays and Chestnut both swear it was executed, and executed at the time therein set forth. In the face of their positive evidence upon this question, we are unable to say that the title bond was not executed, upon the ground of suspicion alone. Under the deed, Chestnut had the right to sell the land within one year at a price of not less than $8.00 per acre. The evidence conclusively shows, we think, that the sale from Chestnut to James M. Hays was made within one year, as required by the contract and deed, and at the price of $8.00 per acre. Under the circumstances, then, we are of opinion that the sale from Chestnut to Hays was valid.

It appears, however, that, although, by the terms of the title bond, the purchase price was to be paid when the title was perfected, James M. Hays thereafter accepted a special warranty deed from Chestnut and wife to the land in question, and this deed contained no provision in regard to perfecting the title. The effect of the special warranty was simply to warrant the title against D. T. Chestnut and those claiming under him. We are, therefore, of opinion that the title bond was merged into the deed, and the latter now constitutes the sole agreement between Chestnut and Hays. That being the case, Hays, Tye and the others, will not be permitted to hold the land, and, at the same time, refuse to pay for it.

The judgment is, therefore, erroneous in providing that a part of the purchase money due Julia Fuson should not be paid until she delivered to James M. Hays all title papers—recorded or unrecorded—in her possession. If, as a matter of fact, she has such papers in her possession, their production can be enforced by rule, and not by making their production a condition precedent to the payment of the purchase money.

The judgment is also erroneous in directing that the sum of $640.00 of the purchase money due Julia Fuson, be not paid until the perfecting of the title to the 80 acres referred to in the judgment. The deed from Chestnut to Hays contains only a covenant of special warranty. This covenant could not and did not impose upon the Fusons the duty of perfecting the title to the land in question. They are entitled to their portion of the purchase money at all events.

For the reasons given, the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment in conformity with this opinion.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY IN KENTUCKY v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed April 30, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Wallace & Harris and Humphrey & Humphrey for appellant.

James Breathitt and Theo. B. Blakey for appellee.

Appeal from Woodford Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lassing, reversing.

The direct question involved in this appeal was decided by this court in the case of the Commonwealth v. Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company, April 15th, 1908, and on the authority of that opinion, and for the reasons therein stated, this case is reversed.

COMMONWEALTH v. BYERS.

(Filed April 30, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Druggists—License of, Evidence—The license of a druggist is prima facie evidence that he is a druggist.

2. Prescriptions—Authority of Druggist in Filling—The prescription itself is all that a druggist is required to look to, and, while section 2558, Kentucky Statutes, requires that the name of the person shall be given, while the prescription, in this case, was for the wife, but given to the husband, or in his name, the proof shows that the medicine was for his wife, and, in the absence of fraud shown, it will be presumed that he was not guilty of a violation of the local option laws. He had a license to sell spirituous, vinous and malt liquors, and the prescription was a mixture and was given by a regular practicing physician.

T. B. McGregor, C. H. Morris and W. H. Hester for appellant.

W. J. Webb for appellee.

Appeal from Graves Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lassing, affirming.

Appellant was indicted, tried and acquitted in the Graves Circuit Court, on the charge of selling spirituous, vinous and malt liquors, in violation of the local option law in force in Graves county. The Commonwealth appeals.

The proof shows that the sale complained of was made under the following circumstances: Appellee kept a drug store at Dukedom, in Graves county, Kentucky, and, as a druggist, had taken out a license authorizing him to sell spirituous, vinous and malt liquors on the prescription of a regular practicing physician. The license was in full force and effect at the date of the sale complained of. Dr. J. E. Simmons was a regular practicing physician living in that neighborhood. The wife of the prosecuting witness, W. S. Haynes, was sick and Dr. Simmons was called to prescribe for her; as such physician, he prescribed brandy, creosote and syrup of hypophosphites, to be mixed in certain quantities, designated in the prescription, and to be taken by the patient according to the directions stated in the prescription, which called for a tablespoonful three times a day, after meals, in a little water. The prescription stated that it was for William Haynes. It was delivered to him, and he was directed to and did take it to appellee's drug store, where it was filled and delivered to him. The records of the county court were introduced; showing that the license had been regularly granted and was then in force, and that Dr. Simmons was a regularly registered practicing physician in that county.

The Commonwealth complains that the trial court erred in permitting the appellee to testify that he was a druggist, and in not requiring him to show, by the record, that he had qualified himself and been licensed as a druggist. This claim, however, is without merit; had he not been a druggist, or shown himself qualified as such, the county court would not have been warranted in granting him a druggist's license, and it may be presumed that the county court did not act upon insufficient proof in this matter. It is admitted that he kept a drug store and there is no charge of bad faith in the record. It was the duty of the Commonwealth, in making out its case, when appellee justified the sale on the ground that it was made under the authority of his druggist's license, to show that he was not a druggist, the license being prima facie evidence, at least, of the fact that he was.

The Commonwealth also complains that the prescription affords appellee no protection, inasmuch as it stated it was for William Haynes, when, in fact, it was for his wife and William Haynes himself was not sick. So much of section 2558, of the Kentucky Statutes as applies to druggists and regulates the manner in which intoxicating liquors may be sold by them, is as follows:

"Licensed druggists may sell, for medical purposes, on a prescription written and signed by a regular practicing physician, legally authorized to practice medicine, which prescription shall state the date thereof, the quantity thereof, the quantity prescribed, and the name of the person to whom it is prescribed."

When a prescription is presented to a druggist who is authorized to sell on the prescription of a regular practicing physician, that possesses the statutory requisites, the druggist, so long as he acts in good faith, is entitled to the protection of the law, so far as the sale is concerned. The prescription itself is all that he may look to or is required to look to; he can not know whether the person for whom it is prescribed is sick or not, and if it should be developed, in any case, that the person holding the prescription, or for whom it is given, is not, in fact, sick, then it becomes a question between the Commonwealth and the doctor issuing the prescription, and not between the Commonwealth and the druggist who, in good faith, fills it. Besides, in a case like this, where the prescription is for the wife, and is issued in the name of her husband, in the absence of any charge of fraud or wrong-doing, we are of opinion that the law is not violated.

The purpose of the statute in requiring the prescription to state the name of the person to whom it is prescribed was to prevent druggists, doctors or others from evading the law and issuing, filling or using prescriptions issued in blank, but it was certainly not intended that the person for whom the prescription was filled should necessarily be the patient. This would, indeed, be a harsh rule, for if one were sick enough to require the services of a doctor, he or she might, and frequently would, be unable to go personally and have the prescription filled. In order to comply strictly with the requirements of the statute, this prescription should have stated that it was for appellee's wife, whereas it stated that it was for him. If there was any violation of the law, it was on the part of the doctor in failing to state accurately the person for whom the liquor was prescribed. However, we are of opinion that the record shows that he was aiming to comply with the requirements of the law, but for the purposes of this case we need not enter into a consideration of that question, as, in the absence of any charge of fraud or deception practiced by the druggist or collusion between him and the doctor, there is nothing in the record to justify the conclusion that appellee was guilty of a violation of the provisions of the local option law in force in Graves county.

For these reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

FREEMAN, &c. v. BOW.

(Filed April 30, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Lands—Sale of—Purchaser Divested of Title by Pending Suit—As appellant was divested of title to a part of the land in controversy, by a judgment in an action that was pending when the title bond was executed to him, he should be allowed a rebate to the extent of the value of the land of which he was deprived.

J. W. Kinnaird for appellant.

J. W. Compton for appellee.

Appeal from Metcalfe Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, reversing.

On January 8, 1900, the appellee executed to Eph Love the following title bond:

"This bargain and sale made and entered into this, the 8th day of January, 1900, by and between Bell Poynter (now Bow) of the one part, and Eph Love of the other part, Witnesseth:

"That for and in consideration of the sum of $400, I have this day sold and do by these presents bind myself to convey by deed to Eph Love, my entire interest in my mother's landed estate, it being one-fourth of 200 acres, that I inherited at my mother's death, and one-eighth that my brother, Clarence Freeman, inherited at the same time, and I have since purchased it from him. The $400 is to be paid as follows: $200 cash in hand paid, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, and $200 in twelve months from this date, provided I can make the said Eph Love a good title to the part that I purchased from my brother, Clarence Freeman."

Love, in 1903, assigned this title bond to the appellant, Emmet Freeman. Although somewhat awkwardly written, appellee sold to Love one-fourth of 200 acres. Appellee's mother had eight children, each of them being entitled to one-eighth of the estate, which was supposed to contain 200 acres. Appellee purchased the interest of her brother, Clarence, and thus became the owner of one-fourth of the estate. At the time this title bond was executed, there was a suit pending against the children, including appellee, seeking to subject a portion of the land to the payment of debts. A judgment was rendered in this action, subjecting 50 acres of land to the payment of these debts. It appeared, from a survey made after the bond was executed, that there was 205 acres of land in place of 200 acres, so that, after deducting from it the 50 acres, there was left, for division among the eight heirs, 155 acres, and, as a result, appellant only received $38\frac{3}{4}$ acres.

The controversy in this case grows out of the contention on the part of appellant that he should only be required to pay appellee for $38\frac{3}{4}$ acres of land—whereas appellee claims that he should pay her for 50 acres. The purchase price was \$8.00 an acre, and appellant has paid \$222.50, leaving a balance due of \$87.50, if his contention is sustained, and \$177.50 if appellee is correct. The lower court adjudged that appellee was entitled to recover \$177.50, and from that judgment this appeal is prosecuted. The evidence throws little light on the controversy and the case turns upon the question whether or not the title bond contemplated that Love should get one-fourth of 200 acres of land, or only the interest therein owned by appellee, whatever that might be.

Appellee insists that, by the wording of the title bond, the land was sold in gross and not by the acre. In other words, that Mrs. Bow sold her interest in her mother's estate without reference to what the amount of it might be. There is a marked distinction between sales in gross and sales by the acre, as affecting the rights of the parties to recover for any excess or deficit in the quantity of land sold that may afterwards be ascertained. When there is a sale in gross, and a surplus or deficit, no fixed rule can be laid down, in the absence of fraud, misrepresentation or mutual mistake, by which to determine the relief that the vendor or vendee may be entitled to. The equity of each case must depend upon its own peculiar circumstances. The relative extent of the surplus or deficit can not always furnish an infallible criterion. The conduct of the parties, the date of the contract, the value, quantity and locality of the land, the price and other circumstances must always be considered. (Harrison v. Talbot, 2 Dana, 258; Young v. Craig, 2 Bibb, 270; Hall v. Ely, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 954; Jesse v. Hanna, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 430.)

There was no fraud or misrepresentation in this case. When the bond was made by Mrs. Bow to Love, there was thought to be 200 acres, although, in fact, 205 acres in the tract, and Mrs. Bow was entitled to one-fourth thereof, and evidently believed that she could convey to Love the quantity of land specified in the bond, namely, "one-fourth of two hundred acres." But, after this bond was executed, and delivered, and before any conveyance was made pursuant to it, Mrs. Bow was divested by the judgment of the court of title to $11\frac{1}{4}$ acres. This being so, the relief to which the purchaser is entitled does not depend entirely upon the principles applicable to sales in gross. If Mrs. Bow, after the execution of the bond, had not been divested of title to a portion of the land, and a survey had disclosed the fact that the entire tract only contained 155 acres, in place of 200 acres, it is questionable if the purchaser, under the terms of the title bond would have been entitled to relief. But the judgment divesting her of title constitutes a marked difference between this proceeding and an ordinary suit to recover for deficit when there has been a sale in gross. The purchaser, Love, might have been willing to risk his judgment as to the number of acres in the tract and to take a chance that it contained 200 acres; but, it is manifest that, under the facts of this case, it was not contemplated by the parties that the quantity would be reduced by the judgment of the court in the pending suit. Nor does it appear that Love knew that such an action was pending. It is also evident, from the testimony of Mrs. Bow, that she did not know or believe that her interest in the land would be reduced by a judgment in the suit. The situation of the parties is virtually the same as it would have been if a deed had been executed with a covenant of warranty and afterwards the purchaser had been divested of title by a judgment against the vendor. Our conclusion is that as the purchaser was, in fact, divested of title to so much of the land as was recovered in the judgment, he should be allowed to rebate to the extent of the value of the land of which he was deprived.

The judgment of the lower court is reversed, with directions to enter a judgment in favor of appellee for $87.50, with interest thereon from January 8, 1901, until paid.

INDEX

	Page.
ASSAULT—See Rape, 1, 3.
ATTACHMENTS—
1. Wrongfully Sued Out—Where an attachment is wrongfully sued out, attorneys' fees may be recovered by the defendant on the bond. It is common in such cases to offer proof as to what is a reasonable fee, but the jury are not concluded by the evidence and may fix the fee at a different sum. U. S. F. & G. Co. v. Howes	131
2. Clerical Error—It is manifest from the record that the use of the word "mineral" was a clerical error, and the case was properly taken from the jury and continued so as to have the order of the United States Circuit Court corrected in which suit was brought upon the attachment bond. Idem	131
3. Funds in Hands of Trustee of Jury Fund—The prosecutions being terminated, a fund in the hands of the trustee of the jury fund placed as bail, is subject to garnishment, under section 439, of the Code. Landy v. Moritz	223
4. Evidence—Competency of Witnesses—It was error upon the trial of this case to permit witnesses to testify to statements that were not made in appellant's presence as to the amount of money that she had put up as bail and the amount that her husband had put up. Idem	223
5. Witnesses—Evidence of Guilt of Misdemeanor—It is not proper to discredit a witness by proof that he has been guilty of a misdemeanor. Idem	223
ATTORNEYS AT LAW—
1. Disbarment—Power of Courts—Section 97, Kentucky Statutes, provides that "no person convicted of treason or felony shall be permitted to practice in any court as counsel or attorney at law." Section 98, subsection 2, requires that a "person desiring to practice law in this State shall first procure a certificate from the county judge of the county of his residence that he is a person of honesty, probity and good moral character." In this State the courts have the power, independent of the statute, to disbar an attorney who has been guilty of forgery, upon the ground that the commission of the offense shows that he is lacking in those qualities which are necessary for him to possess in order to continue as an attorney at law. Nelson v. Commonwealth	143
2. Same—Conviction for Forgery—Pardon by Governor—Effect of Disbarment—While the effect of a pardon by the Governor, of an attorney who has been convicted of forgery, is to relieve him of the penal consequences of his act, it could not restore his character or re-invest him with those qualities which are absolutely essential for an attorney at law to possess. Idem	143
BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—See Burden of Proof, 1.
BURDEN OF PROOF—
1. Bill of Exceptions—Motion for New Trial—The alleged error in allowing appellee the burden of proof was not made a ground for a new trial, and because this court will not now consider this question, it is unnecessary to determine who had the burden of proof. Bankers Union v. Donahue	196

BURDEN OF PROOF—Continued—	Page.
2. Evidence—Submission of Case to Jury—The evidence with reference to the sanity of the deceased was conflicting, and was properly submitted to the jury. Idem	196
3. Insurance—Fraternal Order—By-laws—Attached to Certificate—Suicide—Section 679, Kentucky Statutes, is held, by the uniform decisions of this court, to apply to such fraternal orders as appellant. Idem	197
4. Instructions—The giving of instruction 2, which authorized a greater sum to be recovered than provided for in the contract if the jury believed that deceased was sane when he suicided, was not prejudicial in view of the fact that the verdict was based upon the fact that he was insane at the time he took his life. Idem	197
CONTRACTS—See Parent and Child; Lands, 5—
1. Pleadings and Proof—Profits—In this action by appellee for damages occasioned by the alleged breach of a contract to remove stumps and pillars from a coal mine, the pleadings and proof show it to be a case where profits are recoverable. Sagamore Coal Co. v. Clark	134
2. Instructions—Measure of Damages—The instructions advised the jury that if they found for appellees they should allow them such a sum in damages as they would have earned, under the contract, by way of profits over and above the expense incurred in the work, and this instruction is approved. Appellant can not complain of an instruction given which was asked by it. Idem	134
3. Pleading—The demurrer to the petition should have been overruled as the petition stated a good cause of action for the breach of the contract. Idem	134
4. Action on—Breach or Rescission—Facts Authorizing—Remedy Sought—It is not every case of breach of contract or a failure to perform stipulated contract duties with reference to an article, that will authorize a rescission of the contract. Generally the parties must look to an action in damages for a remedy. Rescission may be invoked when no other remedy will afford adequate relief and the parties can not obtain reasonable satisfaction in damages. Summers Fibre Co. v. Walker	157
5. Same—Sale of Hemp—Contract to Stack—Care Implied—Action for Breach—Proper Remedy—In an action by the purchaser for damages for a breach of contract for the sale of a lot of hemp at a stipulated price, which the seller agreed to haul and stack in good condition by a named date, alleging that it was negligently stacked and exposed to the weather and thereby injured in value. Held—That although the contract did not provide that the hemp should be taken care of, and stacked in a careful and prudent manner, the contract implied that the seller would care for it in the usual and customary manner, and the proper action of the purchaser was for a breach of the contract, and not for a rescission. Idem ...	157
6. Same—Acceptance by Purchaser—Condition not Discernable—Right of Inspection—In this action the purchaser having paid a large part of the purchase price of the hemp and not being able to ascertain the exact damage done to it until the stacks were opened and the hemp examined had the right to accept it and bring an action to recover the damages sustained by the failure of the seller to put the hemp in proper condition, according to the contract. Idem	157

CONTRACTS—Continued—

Page.

7. Same—Damages Recoverable—Negligence of Purchaser—Consideration of Sale—In such case, however, if after the seller put the hemp in stacks, the purchaser permitted it to remain in stacks for an unreasonable length of time and it was damaged by its failure to remove it, he could not recover for such damage, neither could the purchaser show on the trial or recover damages for the use for which the hemp was intended, as such use formed no part of the consideration of the sale. Idem..... 157

CITIES AND TOWNS—See Municipalities, 1, 3; Mayors.

CLERICAL MISPRISON—See Pleadings, 5.

CONVEYANCES—See Fraudulent Conveyances—

- Fraud—Purchase to Cheat Wife—The evidence in this action examined and held that the facts authorize the belief that the sale of the land in controversy was a fraudulent device entered into to cheat the wife of her marital right to a support out of the property of her husband, therefore it was error for the lower court to adjudge the conveyance valid. May v. May, &c...... 193

CORPORATIONS—See Escheated Property, 1, 2.

CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—

1. Total Failure of Proof—Peremptory Instruction—Duty of Court—The trial court has the same authority to give a peremptory instruction in a criminal prosecution as in a civil action, and where the evidence by the Commonwealth wholly fails to incriminate the defendant it is not only the right, but the duty of the trial judge to instruct the jury to return a verdict of not guilty.
Commonwealth v. Murphy. 141
2. Same—Slight Evidence—It is not, however, within the province of the trial court to take from the jury a criminal prosecution if there is any evidence, however slight, conducting to show the guilt of the defendant in any of its degrees mentioned in the Criminal Code. Idem..... 141

DEEDS—See Lands—

1. Purchase of Land by Husband—Conveyance to Wife and Children by Said Husband—Interest of Afterborn Children—A deed to land was made by the owner, to Caroline Bowe and her children by A. J. Bowe, which was paid for by said A. J. Bowe. At the date of the deed A. J. Bowe and his wife had but two children. In a controversy between the children as to the ownership of the land, Held —That the deed conveyed to the wife of A. J. Bowe a life estate in the land, with remainder to her children by A.
J. Bowe, including such as were born after the execution of the deed Bowe, &c. v. Richmond, &c...... 173
2. Mortgages—Action to Adjudge Mortgage—Evidence—In this action to adjudge a mortgage what appears to be an absolute deed, the testimony and circumstances detailed examined, and held that the weight of it shows that the trial court should have held the writing to be a mortgage and not a deed. Borders v. Allen..... 194
3. Construction of—While the law is well settled that a deed absolute upon its face may be shown to be a mortgage, it is manifest from the facts that the deed and contract herein constituted something more than a mortgage.
They were executed for the purpose of settling conflicting claims between the parties, and the effect of the deed was to vest the grantee with all the title the grantors had.
Fuson v. Chestnut. 249

DEEDS—Continued—	Page.
4. Judgment—Erroneous—Production of Papers—Appellant having passed title to the land, she is entitled to the purchase money, but she can not make the production of title papers a condition precedent to the payment of the purchase money. Idem	249
DRUGGISTS—
1. License of, Evidence—The license of a druggist is prima facie evidence that he is a druggist. Commonwealth v. Byers	252
2. Prescriptions—Authority of Druggist in Filling—The prescription, in this case, was for the wife, but given to the husband, and, while section 2558, Kentucky Statutes, requires that the name of the person shall be given, while the prescription itself is all that a druggist is required to look to the proof shows that the medicine was for the wife, and, in the absence of fraud shown, it will be presumed that he was not guilty of a violation of the local option laws. He had a license to sell spirituous, vinous and malt liquors, and the prescription was a mixture and was given by a regular practicing physician. Idem	252
ESCHEATED PROPERTY—
1. Action to Recover—Suit by Attorney Appointed by Auditor—Written Contract Approved by Governor—Under section 1622, of chapter 44, Kentucky Statutes, providing that "an attorney may be employed by the Auditor with the approval of the Attorney General, to attend to claims of the Commonwealth for recovery of escheated property. The compensation of such attorney shall always be fixed by written contract endorsed "Approved by the Governor," the Auditor is authorized to employ an attorney for the purpose of recovering any escheated property the State may be entitled to, whether under chapter 44 or other provisions of the Kentucky Statutes. Commonwealth v. L. P. Co	225
2. Same—Property Held by Corporation—Not Necessary for its Use—Dismissal of Action of Lower Court—Where an action was brought by an attorney employed by the Auditor upon an agreed compensation, approved by the Governor, to institute an action against two corporations, alleging that it was held by one for the benefit of the other, and had been so held for more than five years, and that during said time it was not used by either company in its legitimate business or that it was necessary for use in its business, for which reason it had escheated to the Commonwealth under Constitution, section 192, and Kentucky Statutes, section 537, it was error in the circuit court to dismiss the action on the ground that the action could not be maintained by the attorney and his associates under employment by the Auditor. Idem	225
EXECUTORS—
1. Administrators—Power to Sell Under Will—When an executor or administrator, with power under a will to sell and convey real estate, institutes an action asking the aid of a court with reference to any matter connected with the settlement of the estate, he does not by that act turn over to the court the exclusive charge of the estate and thereby lose all power and control over it. Harding's Adm'r v. Weisiger	170

EXECUTORS-- Continued--	Page.
2. Interlocutory Order—Estoppel—Pending the action to settle the estate, an order sustaining exceptions to the Commissioner's report was an interlocutory order, but H., who had been paid a sum under this settlement, which she received without objection, and failing to except to the final report of the Commissioner, is estopped from claiming any rights which she might have had under the order referred to. Idem	170
3. Administrator With the Will Annexed—Powers of—An administrator, with the will annexed, has all the powers of the executor named in the will, whether that executor qualifies or not. Idem	170
FORGERY—See Attorneys at Law, 2.
FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES—
1. Conveyance or Devise by Parent to Child—Void as to Existing Creditors—A father can not by his will give to his child property to the detriment of his creditors, and such gifts or conveyances, where they are in the shape of real estate, will be set aside at the suit of existing creditors as fraudulent. Crooke v. Hume's Ex'tx , and National Bank of Cynthia v. Hume's Ex'tx	162
2. Same—Rule as to Subsequent Creditors—Intent Must be Shown—While all voluntary conveyances are, under the statute, void as to existing liabilities, a different rule obtains as to subsequent creditors, and in order that such conveyance may be successfully assailed by a subsequent creditor it must be shown that it was made with a fraudulent intent. Idem	162
3. Creditor and Debtor—Return of "No Property"—Necessity Therefor—Under Kentucky Statutes, section 1907a, enacted in 1896, the old rule of practice was abrogated and an entirely new rule substituted therefor, so that now a creditor upon learning that his debtor is disposing of his property and conveying away his real estate without making provision for the payment of his debt, he may go into a court of equity and subject the property so conveyed without first having reduced his claim to a judgment and have return of "no property found," thereon. Idem	162
HUSBAND AND WIFE—See Conveyances.
INSTRUCTIONS—See Burden of Proof, 1.
JUDICIAL SALES—
Contingent Interests of Remainderman—Re-investment of Proceeds on Same Terms—Validity of Title—In a judicial sale of real estate for re-investment where it appears that the interests of the contingent remainderman were secured by a re-investment of the proceeds of the sale, in other property upon the same terms and conditions as specified in the deed under which it was held, the sale passes a valid title to the purchaser at said sale. Walsh v. Parr, &c.	242
JUDGMENTS—See Order; Non-Residents, 1, 4.
LANDLORD AND TENANT—See Lands.
1. Sale of Leased Premises—Right of Purchaser to Collect Rent—By a sale of a house the purchaser acquires all the rights of his vendor and is entitled to collect the rents of that part of the premises occupied by any tenant thereof so long as such tenant continues in occupation under his contract with the former owner. Ventura Hotel Co. v. Pabst Brewing Co.	149

LANDLORD AND TENANT—Continued—

Page.

2. Same—At the expiration of a tenant's lease, though there may be no contract for a renewal thereof, if he remains in possession for ninety days after the expiration of his term he thereby acquires the right to remain the whole year, and so on, year after year, until he is turned out or abandons the premises or makes a new contract. Idem 149

LANDS—See Landlord and Tenant.

1. Devise to Daughter—Contingent Remainder to Children—Sale of Property Interest of Children—Testator, by his will, devised a certain fund to his daughter, Lucy, "to be invested, upon her marriage, in a home for her, and upon her death to pass to her issue, if she should leave issue living, at her death." She subsequently married and had three children. A part of said fund was invested in a home by her trustee, which it became necessary to sell. Held—That no present interest passed to her children under the will, their interest being a contingent remainder therein, and the purchaser at the sale acquired a valid title to the property. Jaillette, &c. v. Bell, &c..... 159
2. Boundary of—Rule—In this State a claimant entering upon land under a deed describing a boundary intending to take possession of the entire tract, no part of which is at the time of his entry actually possessed by any other claimant holding adversely to him, is, by construction and intendment of law, in the actual possession of all the land included within the boundary of his deed. T. & C. v. B. & B. L. Co...... 191
3. Title—Property—Having alleged and proved title by prescription, the trees were plaintiff's property, and it was entitled to maintain either detinue or trespass, and owning the land, it was immaterial whether it was actually in possession of it or not at the time the timber was cut. Idem..... 191
4. Mistake as to Quantity Sold—Action to Recover for Deficiency—Pleading—In an action to recover for shortage in a survey of land, it was error in the lower court to strike from defendant's answer a denial of any fraudulent purpose to cheat or defraud the buyer. Railey v. Roberts...... 221
5. Same—Rescission—Where the purchaser desires a rescission on the ground that enough land was not conveyed, and the seller so desires rather than receive a less price than that agreed upon, there appearing to be no fraud in the transaction, the purchaser should be permitted to reconvey the land upon the payment of the purchase price. Idem...... 221
6. Sale of—Purchaser Divested of Title by Pending Suit—As appellant was divested of title to a part of the land in controversy, by a judgment in an action that was pending when the title bond was executed to him, he should be allowed a rebate to the extent of the value of the land of which he was deprived. Freeman v. Bowe...... 254

LIMITATION—See Pleading, 6; Nuisance, 2.

LOCAL OPTION—See Druggists, 1, 2.

MASTER AND SERVANT—

1. Duty of Master in Case of Infant Employee—When an infant of tender years is put to work at a hazardous business, the master must, at his peril, see that he is made to comprehend its dangers. Louisville Cooperage Co. v. Farmer. 180

MASTER AND SERVANT—Continued— Page.

2. Same—Instructions—Pleading—The petition setting up the tender age and lack of experience of appellee and that he did not know the dangerous character of the work, an instruction submitting the question as to whether plaintiff's age and intelligence were such as to induce a man of ordinary prudence to believe that he was qualified and fit for the labor at which he was put, was authorized. Idem. 160
3. Verdicts—Excessive Character of—Rule as to Interfering With—The rule is well settled that it is only where verdicts are palpably against the evidence, or obviously the result of passion or prejudice that courts are permitted to interfere on the ground that they are excessive. Idem 180

MAYORS—

- Members of Police and Fire Departments—Removal of—Prior to the act complained of for which the Board of Police and Fire Commissioners of the city of Lexington, removed appellee, they adopted a rule, yet in force, providing in substance that when a member of the police or fire department is suspended by the Mayor, he shall report the fact to the police and fire commissioners, prepare written charges to be served on the officer and notify him of the time and place when the charges will be investigated. * * * Appellee was not cited to appear for trial, nor was he accused of dereliction, nor removed for cause, and the rule referred to above was a complete protection to him against such arbitrary discharge. Combs, &c. v. Bonnell. 219

MEASURE OF DAMAGES—See R. R., 2; Nuisance, 1, 2.

MUNICIPALITIES—

1. Streets—Adverse Holding—Notice—Limitation—Statutory Provision—Construction—Section 2546, Kentucky Statutes, provides, "that limitation shall not begin to run in respect to action by any town or city for the recovery of any street or other public easement until the trustees or council have been notified by the party in possession to the effect that such possession is adverse to the right of such city or town, and until such notice is given all such possession shall be deemed amicable," Held—That to meet the requirements of the statute the easements must exist as public highways and must be in the city during the period of adverse holding in order to prevent the statute from running. City of Latonia v. Latonia Ag'r. Ass'n. 138
2. Same—Dedication of Streets—Acceptance—Presumption—Continued Possession—Record of Plat—The dedication of a street or alley to the use of the public to be effectual must be accepted by the corporation, and the presumption of acceptance is rebutted by the fact of the continued possession thereof by the original proprietor and his vendees although such dedication be evidenced by the recording of a plat of the town and the sale of lots. Idem.. 138
3. Enclosure of Street or Alley—Limitation—Possession—After the enclosure and use of an alley for 15 years it is too late for the trustees of a town to urge an acceptance of its dedication to the public or to assert a right to the land. Idem 138

NON-RESIDENTS—	Page.
1. Judgments Against—Action to Vacate—Limitation—The law is well settled in this State that a non-resident can not show cause against a judgment for errors therein, after the lapse of five years from the rendition of the judgment. H. L. & B. Co. v. Audas	214
2. Same—Warning Orders—Courts of Continuous Sessions—Time Required—By section 1004, Kentucky Statutes, relating to courts of continuous sessions, providing that "every warning order shall warn the defendants to appear and defend the action within sixty days after the making of such warning order, and the defendant shall be considered as constructively summoned in thirty days after the making of such warning order," a warning order made in compliance with said statute is sufficient to authorize such court in this State to render a judgment against the non-resident defendant for the sale of real estate. Idem	215
3 Same—Erroneous Personal Judgment—Effect on Sale of Land—In an action to sell real estate in this State in which a non-resident defendant was proceeded against by a warning order, the fact that a personal judgment rendered therein against such non-resident, was void, does not render so much of the judgment void, as orders a sale of the land in which such non-resident had an interest. Idem	215
4. Same—Sale of Whole Tract—No Necessity to Pay Debt—Effect—Where a judgment directs the sale, as a whole, of property susceptible of division, instead of so much thereof as is necessary to pay the lien debt, sued on, and costs, while it may be such error as will authorize a reversal, it does not render the judgment void. Idem	215
NUISANCE—
1. Dam Across a Stream—Overflowing Land—Measure of Damages Recoverable—Character of Structure—Where, by the building of a dam across a stream, the water is diverted on the land of another, the measure of damages recoverable depends on whether the structure is permanent or temporary. If it is permanent the party injured is entitled to the diminution of the value of the property injured, but if it is temporary, such as that it may be easily removed or abated, the damage is the depreciation of the rental value of the property injured. F. T. Co. v. Shelbyville W. & L. Co.	202
2. Same—Limitation of Action—Extent of Recovery—In an action for damages to one's land, caused by the building of a dam across a stream and backing water thereon, where the injury is permanent, limitation begins to run from the completion of the structure, whatever it may be, that causes the injury, and the action is barred in five years, and all damages for past, present or future injury must be recovered in one action. But if the structure is temporary, successive actions may be brought for damages caused by a continuance of the injury. Idem ...	202
OFFER TO COMPROMISE—See Street Railways, 2.
ORDER—See Executors and Administrators, 2—
Consent Order—A consent order can only be made by persons who are legally authorized to consent. The infants in this action could not consent, and it does not appear that any one consented for them; the order of revivor, was, therefore, void. The action was not revived within the time allowed by the Code, or at all, and the lower court properly dismissed it. Burchett v. Clarke	210

PARENT AND CHILD—

Page.

Action by Latter for Care of Parent—Contract—Pleading—In this action to recover for services rendered in caring for their father during his latter years, the petition was properly dismissed because it was not alleged that there was a promise on the part of the parent to pay for the services. While the services were necessary, under the repeated decisions of this court, in the absence of an express contract, there can be no recovery for them. Faugh v. Baugh. 148

PARTNERSHIP—

Facts Showing—Finding of Chancellor Approved—This action is affirmed on the evidence, which, though conflicting, much of it biased and some of it false, we have little hesitation in reaching the same conclusion upon the disputed facts as was done by the chancellor below who had the advantage of an acquaintance with the witnesses so as to give their testimony its due weight and from which he adjudged certain parties to the controversy to be partners. Roberts v. Adams, &c. 207

PATENTS—See Question of Fact; Howes v. Wells, 212.

PEDIGREE OF COLT—See R. R., 5.

PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE—See Ex'ors and Adm'rs.

PLEADING—

1. Relief Sought—Sufficiency of Allegations—Judgment by Default—Prayer of Petition—Under section 90, of the Civil Code, providing, that "if no defense be made, the plaintiff can not have judgment for any relief not specifically demanded," where it is stated in the body of the petition with sufficient accuracy to enable the court, from an inspection of the pleadings, to determine the amount for which the plaintiff is entitled to judgment, it is not indispensable, to support a judgment by default, that the amount claimed should be repeated in the prayer of the petition. Brashears v. Brashears. 233

2. Same—But if the petition is defective and fails to set out with reasonable certainty the amount to which the plaintiff is entitled, or if the court, by an inspection of the pleadings, can not readily adjudge the sum for which judgment should be entered, then the prayer must specifically state the relief demanded or a judgment by default can not be rendered. Idem. 232

3. Action—Damages for Cutting Timber—Averment as to Value—Sufficiency—In a petition by a plaintiff for damages for the cutting and conversion of the timber from a large tract of land an averment that the value of the trees cut and removed did not exceed $4,944.57 is not sufficient to authorize a judgment by default for that sum. Idem. 233

4. Default Judgment—Relief not Sought—A judgment by default for relief not sought in the petition is a clerical error which may be corrected after the term. Idem. 233

5. Clerical Misprision—How Shown—How Corrected—A clerical misprision must be shown by the record and can only be corrected by the record. But if a plaintiff is given a judgment for more than his pleading shows he is entitled to or for any sum when the petition does not authorize a judgment in any amount, it is a manifest error which the defendant may have corrected on motion after notice. Idem. 233

PLEADING—Continued—

Page.

6. Limitation—In this case the motion was made as soon as the defendant learned of the judgment, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have learned of it, and within ten years of its entry, and hence the right to correct the error was not barred by limitation. Idem 233

POLICE OFFICER—See Principal and Surety, 1, 2.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY—

1. Action Against Bonding Company for Injuries Inflicted by Police Officer—Bonds—Extent of Liability—In this action by appellee against appellant for injuries received by the reckless shot of a policeman whose bond was made by appellant, the rule announced in Growbarger, &c. v. U. S. F. & G. Co. is followed, in holding that section 3752, Kentucky Statutes, must be read into the policeman's bond in order to determine the extent to which the surety may be held liable. In view of this, the amount that may be recovered is not limited to the $1,000 named in the bond. U. S. F. & S. Co. v. Milstead 186
2. Punitive Damages—Recovery of as to Whom—In such a case punitive damages may be recovered of the officer, but only compensatory damages of the surety in the bond. Idem. 186
3. Excessive Damages—Extent of Injury—In view of the serious character of her injuries and their permanency, it can not be said that the verdict is excessive. Idem. 186

QUESTION OF FACT—

- Rule in Such Cases—In Cases of this character, it is the uniform practice of this court to follow the judgment of the chancellor. Clarke v. McDowell's Adm'r 177

RAILROADS—

1. Shipment of Stock—Measure of Damages—Instructions—In this suit by appellee to recover of appellant damages occasioned by the injury to his stock on account of appellant's negligence in transporting it, it was error in instructing the jury to fix the measure of damages as the difference between the value of the stock if they had been transported within a reasonable time and without unusual delay and the amount they sold for at public sale. Appellee was entitled to recover the difference, if any, between the fair market value of the stock in the condition they would have been in if they had been transported with ordinary care, and the condition they were in when delivered in Louisville. Southern Ry. Co. v. Graddy 183
2. Evidence—Opinion of Witnesses—Pedigrees of Colt—The pedigree of a thoroughbred colt is a material thing in fixing its value, and it was important to plaintiff that he should produce to the jury the evidence of persons acquainted with the value of pedigrees and who could inform the jury touching this feature of the question they were called upon to determine. Idem 183
3. Shipment of Stock—Pleadings—Proofs—Instructions—In this action by appellee against appellant for injury to a horse in shipment, the only issue made by the pleadings, outside of the extent of the injury, was as to whether it was received by the horse in being removed from the car, or in being caused to jump from the platform to the ground, and the trial judge refused to instruct upon this point, and made the case turn upon an issue which was not raised by either pleadings or proof. This was error. L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Gormley 188

RAILROADS—Continued—

Page.

4. Same—Appellee was entitled to recover, if at all, for an injury which was the direct cause of the accident, and in order to ascertain the extent of the injury, it would be competent to show the condition of the house immediately after the accident and following it down to the date of the trial. Idem 188
5. Constructing Elevated Wall in Street—Damages to Abutting Property—Subsequent Sale of Property—Effect on Recovery—The owner of a lot fronting on a street through which a railroad company constructed an elevated stone wall on which its cars were run, was entitled to maintain an action for damages for its depreciation in value caused thereby, and such right is not affected by reason of his subsequent sale of the lot before suit. L. & N. R. R. v. Lambert..... 199
6. Same—Measure of Damages Recoverable—In an action for damages to property fronting on a street of a city by reason of the construction by a railroad company of an elevated stone wall in the street on which its cars were run, the measure of damages as to the lots sold after the completion of the wall, was the difference in the market value thereof just before it became generally known that the work would be done, and its market value just after the work was done, and as to the lot sold during the construction of the wall the measure of damages was the difference in the market value before it became generally known that the work would be done and the market value at the date of the sale of the property. Idem 199
7. Same—Accrual of Cause of Action—Where an injury to real estate results from the construction of a permanent structure the cause of action accrues upon the completion of the structure. Idem..... 200
8. Dangerous Crossings—Care Required—Question for Jury In an action against a railroad company for killing one traveling on a public highway at a dangerous crossing, the central idea in every case is that the company must use such care and take such precautions for the safety of travelers as the character of the crossing makes reasonably necessary for their safety and protection, and the degree of care in each particular case is governed by the facts, and is a question for the jury. Adkisson's Adm'r v. L., H. & St. L. Ry. Co...... 204

RAPE—

1. Assault to Commit—An attempt at rape includes every ingredient of rape except its accomplishment; that is, if the assault is made under such circumstances as that the act of sexual intercourse, if it had been actually accompanied, would have been rape, it would constitute the crime of an attempt to commit rape. Payne v. Commonwealth. 229
2. Same—Acts of Accused—Purpose Shown—Preparation, Ability and Intention—Where the acts of the accused were such as to show a purpose on his part to have carnal knowledge of a female by force, or by her consent, where she was under twelve years of age, and that he was prepared and able to carry such intention into effect and would have done so, but for the flight of his victim, he is guilty of attempted rape. Idem 229

RAPE—Continued—

Page.

3. Same—Overt Act—While it is true that in order to make out a case of attempt to commit rape, there must, in addition to the intent, be some overt act in pursuance of such intent, but the overt act need not be such as amounts to a technical assault. Idem 229

ROADS AND PASSWAYS—See Telephones, 2.

- Use of—Permissive—Mistake in Erecting Poles on Road—The roadway in question is a private one, the use of the public in it is permissive, and appellant failing to show any right to have its poles erected upon it, its suit to enjoin appellees from cutting down and removing its poles was properly dismissed by the lower court. Lou. & I. R. R. Co. v. Bailey, &c. 179

SALES—See Judicial Sales.

SHIPMENT OF STOCK—See R. R., 4, 7.

STREET RAILWAY—

1. Action for Tort—Amended Plea for Settlement—Responsive Plea—Tender of Money—In an action against a railway company for a tort by a passenger being negligently thrown from its car, in alighting therefrom, in which an amended answer was filed, pleading a settlement, to avoid this plea the plaintiff might show that the settlement was obtained when she was unconscious, and that she had promptly tendered the money back, and when the tender was refused, paid it into court, and, upon proof of such tender and its payment into court, the plaintiff was properly allowed to proceed with her action. Louisville Ry. Co. v. Williams 168
2. Witness—Employee of Railway—Offer to Compromise—Evidence of—Competency—Bias of Witness—On the trial of an action against a railway company, Dr. R. gave testimony in its defense. On cross-examination, the plaintiff attempted to show that he was in the service of the company, and, in order to show his bias, he was asked if he had not, during the trial, proposed to compromise it at $400, which he denied. Held—That the proof of such offer was competent to show the bias of the witness. Idem. 168

STREETS AND ALLEYS—See Municipalities, 1, 3.

TELEPHONES—

1. Indictment for Cutting Down Shade Trees—Order Changing Name of Defendant—It was not error to permit the name of appellant to be changed from the one under which it was indicted to its true corporate name. (Section 125, Criminal Code.) Russellville Home Tel. Co. v. Commonwealth. 132
2. Shade Trees—Consent of Supervisor of Roads—Evidence—As the supervisor of roads did not know the boundary of the highway where the trees were cut, little importance is attached to his consent that they might be cut. Idem. 132

TRUSTS—

- Trustees—Legal Presumption—The trustee here was not authorized by the will to use any part of the principal without the consent of the chancellor, and the record does not show that any of the principal was used, the legal presumption is, therefore, that Ruth Aldridge faithfully performed her duties as trustee of her sister, and at her death had possession of the fund or invested it in land, and not having the trust fund, the presumption is that she invested it in the land held by her. Aldridge v. Aldridge. 246

TRUSTEES—

Page.

Judgment Against Cestui Que Trust—Duty of Trustee—

It is incumbent upon a trustee to keep an accurate account of his doings and no judgment will be entered by the chancellor against his cestui que trusts, upon the showing made by the trustee, when the mind is left in doubt as to how the account really stands. To keep an accurate account is a primary duty, and the chancellor will afford him no relief against his trust estate when there is doubt as to the standing of the account. Potter, &c. v. Potter, &c. 129

VENDOR AND PURCHASER—

Sale of Separator—Express Warranty—Action for Price—

Plea of Breach of Warranty—Use Without Complaint—Appellant purchased of appellee an engine and separator upon an express warranty "that it was well made, of good material, and, with proper management, capable of doing well the work for which it was intended." In an action on the last note for the purchase price, the defendant, after having used it for four years, pleaded that it was defective. Held—That where there is an express warranty there is no implied warranty, and the purchaser, after using the machine for four years, without offering to return it, or notice to the seller that it was defective, was without defense to the payment of the note. Guhy v. N. & S. Co. 237

WARRANTY—See Vendor and Purchaser.WITNESSES—See Attachments, 4.

HARVARD LAW LIBRARY

HARVARD LAW LIBRARY

The
Frankfort Printing Co.

Incorporated

Printers of Anything

Lawyers' Printing a Specialty

Briefs Issued on Short Notice

*We Do Any Kind of Special
Ruling or Binding*

Let Us Quote You Prices

The Frankfort Printing Company

Incorporated

227-229 Main Street

Frankfort, Ky.

HARVARD LAW LIBRARY

THE KENTUCKY LAW REPORTER

EDITORS:

R. G. HIGDON

-

-

-

T. R. McBEATH

A Semi-Monthly Magazine Publishing in Full All Decisions of the Kentucky Court of Appeals.

The Only Law Magazine
Published in Kentucky

Patronize Home Industry

The Frankfort Printing Co.
Incorporated

Publishers

227-229 Main Street

.

-

-

Frankfort, Ky.

LAW DEPARTMENT

University of Louisville

In continuous and successful operation since the
year 1847.

Refers to its graduates all over the Union.

PROFESSORS EMMET FIELD, C. B. SEYMOUR
AND W. O. HARRIS.

For Catalogues, apply to

W. O. HARRIS, DEAN

LOUISVILLE, KY.

HARVARD LAW LIBRARY

Jefferson School of Law

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

FACULTY.

HON. SHACKELFORD MILLER, DEAN.
(Judge Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch)
Professor of Equity, Constitutional Law and Corporations.

HON. THOS. R. GORDON,
(Judge Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas Branch.)
Professor of Torts, Evidence and Insurance.

BENJAMIN F. WASHER, LL. B.
Professor of Common Law, Code and Equity Pleading and Practice,
Elements of Law, Personal Relations, Wills and Administration.

NORTON L. GOLDSMITH, LL. B.
Professor of Criminal Law and Procedure, Bailments and Real Estate.

ELLIOTT K. PENNEBAKER, LL. B., SECRETARY,
Professor of Contracts, Sales and Partnership, Agency and Negotiable Instruments.

L. EDMUND HUBER, LIBRARIAN.

BOARD OF REGENTS.

Gov. J. C. W. Beckham.

Theodore Ahrens,
Young E. Allison,
Ex.-Gov. W. O. Bradley,
Charles J. Doherty,
Judge Alexander Dowling,
Reuben T. Durrett,
Rabbi H. G. Enelow,
Bruce Haldeman,
Thomas L. Jefferson,

Rev. Carter Helm Jones.
Charles B. Norton,
Judge Matt O'Doherty,
Rev. E. L. Powell,
Joshua D. Powers,
Judge J. E. Robbins.
Henry L. Stone,
Dr. T. Hunt Stucky,
Bennett H. Young.

Full course covering two years.

Classes conducted at night.

Record attendance last year.

Catalogues and detailed information to be had upon application.

JEFFERSON SCHOOL OF LAW,

Lecture Room,
First and Chestnut Streets.

Secretary's Office,
Kenyon Building.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Oct. 1-17.

AUG 1 1908

Beginning Sept. 1, 1908, when the Court of Appeals reconvenes, the Magazine Edition of the Kentucky Law Reporter will be issued weekly instead of semi-monthly.

Aug. 1, 1908

VOL. 33

NO. 3

Pages 257-384

Magazine Edition

Kentucky Law Reporter

Frankfort, Ky.

RATES:

Subscription	$5 Per Year
Binding Each Volume	$1.00

A Semi-Monthly Magazine, Reporting in
Full All the Decisions of the Court of Appeals

The Frankfort Printing Co.

Incorporated

Publishers

1908

Arrangements have been made whereby the Judges of the Court of Appeals will edit their several opinions, thus securing a degree of accuracy that can not be ob-

We are sparing no means to make the Kentucky Law Reporter the best publication of its kind in existence, and we kindly ask you to compare the present publication with the previous ones.

HARVARD LAW LIBRARY

Table of Cases.

Page.	Page.
Aetna Ins. Co. v. Robards	Isom v. Holcomb. 307
Tob. Co.'s Trustee 257	Jackson's Adm'r v. Richardson
Albin Co. v. Commonwealth.. 367	Coal Co. 289
Attay v. Knox Gem Coal Co.,	Jones v. Prewitt. 358
&c. 327	L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Lawler 302
Baker, &c. v. Cooper, &c..... 263	L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Melton 321
Black Diamond Coal & Mining	L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Schmidt
Co. v. Price. 334	Trustee. 346
Brummet v. Commonwealth .. 355	Mann v. Commonwealth 269
Bittier, &c. v. Meyer's Gd'n.. 380	Morgan, Oates & Co. v. Com-
Burt & Brabb Lumber Co. v.	monwealth. 281
Hurst, &c. 270	Mut. Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Com-
Bingham, County Atty. v.	monwealth, &c. 338
Hager, Auditor, &c..... 278	N. C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v.
Balthaser v. Ill. Life Ins. Co.. 283	Bean's Ex'or. 303
Brackett's Adm'r, &c. v. Bore-	Noland v. Stacy. 321
ing's Adm'r, &c..... 292	Northwestern Mut. Life Ins.
Board of Council of Frankfort	Co. v. Commonwealth, &c.. 338
v. Morgan, &c. 297	O'Bannon's Adm'r v. Southern
Ballard's Adm'r v. L. & N. R.	Ry. Co. in Ky. 315
R. Co. 301	Owensboro Stave & Barrel Co.
City of Covington v. District of	v. Daugherty, By, &c..... 328
Highlands. 323	O'Bryan, &c. v. Highland
City of Owensboro v. Hope. 375	Apartment Co. 349
City of Richmond v. Bennett.. 279	Phillips v. Hoskins, &c..... 378
Caine v. Rich, &c..... 261	Poole v. Slayten, For Use, &c. 373
C., N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v.	Price v. Gatliff's Ex'ors, &c.... 324
Baxter. 305	Price v. Gatliff's Ex'ors. &c. 324
Conn. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v.	Putnam v. Commonwealth. 266
Commonwealth. 338	Siler v. Jones, &c. 317
Dupoyster v. Turk. 320	Spaulding v. Thornbury..... 362
Ely v. Hartford Life Ins Co.,	Slone v. Commonwealth. 266
&c. 272	Starett v. C. & O. Ry. Co., &c 309
Frankfort Board of Council v.	Stewart v. Roberts, &c..... 332
Morgan, &c. 297	Terrell v. Trimble County... 364
Grinstead, &c. v. Kirby, Judge. 287	Thornton v. Layle. 382
Housman v. Commonwealth... 311	Weikel v. Clarke. 290
Hilton, &c. v. Hilton's Adm'r. 276	Whitley v. Whitley's Adm'r.. 281
Ill. Cent. Ry. Co. v. Curry.... 283	Webb v. Commonwealth. 316
Ill. Cent. Ry. Co. v. Common-	Williams & Sanders v. Com-wealth. 326	monwealth. 330

The Triple Expansion Ledger.

"BEST ON EARTH."

BECAUSE of the following features of merit, the sales of the Triple Expansion Ledger are increasing rapidly, and our agents are unanimous in saying it deserves the name "Best on Earth."

It has an expansion of nearly 200 per cent. You know the value of this feature, the ease in inserting sheets, and the great increase in capacity for additional accounts, as the business demands.

It is the lightest ledger made to-day; weighing less than half as much as aluminum back ledgers. You know that excess weight is unnecessary, and that bookkeepers do not like to handle a ledger weighing four or five pounds.

It has no exposed metal parts to mar the desk, a feature appreciated by all users.

It has strong, positive, quick-acting mechanism.

It is made of absolutely the best materials obtainable, the highest grade of leather and corduroy, with the finest nickel-plated finish.

The price is right, enabling the dealer to meet competition.

THE FRANKFORT PRINTING CO.
(Incorporated.)

Frankfort, Ky.

HARVARD LAW LIBRARY

Magazine Edition

Kentucky Law Reporter

Vol. 33

August 1, 1908

No. 3

COURT OF APPEALS OF KENTUCKY.

AETNA INS. CO. v. ROBARDS TOBACCO CO.'S TRUSTEE.

(Filed April 20, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Fire Insurance—Actions for Loss—Surrender of Policy—Direction for Peremptory Instruction—In this action, involving the liability of the appellant on a policy of fire insurance, evidence examined and held that the policy was surrendered by the insured with the intention that it should be cancelled by the company and was accepted by the company with the belief and understanding that it was cancelled, and the peremptory instruction asked by appellant should have been granted.

Charles H. Shield and Dorsey & Stanley for appellant.

W. P. McClain, E. C. Walker and C. K. Denton for appellee.

Appeal from Henderson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, reversing.

In December, 1906, the Farmers Bank & Trust Company, as trustee in Bankruptcy of E. T. Robards, brought this action in the Henderson Circuit Court against the appellant company, to recover $5,000, the amount of a policy issued by it to the Robards Tobacco Company on January 9, 1903. The property was destroyed by fire on March 8, 1903. The pleadings having been made up, the case went to trial before a jury and a verdict for the full amount sued for was returned.

A reversal is asked upon two grounds, first, that the motion for a peremptory instruction should have been sustained, and, second, that the verdict is flagrantly against the evidence.

Briefly stated, the contentions of the respective parties are these: The insurance company insists that on March 2, 1903, the policy was voluntarily surrendered to it by Robards, and cancelled before the fire. While Robards, although admitting that he delivered the policy to the company, claims that it was surrendered in order that the rate of premium might be adjusted and lowered, and the policy re-written according to the agreement in respect to premiums, theretofore made between the parties; and that it was understood, when the policy was delivered to the agent, that it should continue in force without modification except as to the rate of premium to be charged. For the purpose of determining whether or not the grounds for reversal, or either of them, relied upon, can be sustained, it will be necessary to state with some detail the facts shown by the record.

The appellee, E. T. Robards, and his father, J. T. Robards, were partners in the ownership and conduct of a large tobacco establishment known as the Robards Tobacco Company. In February, 1903, J. T. Robards died, leaving his son, E. T. Robards, in control of the business. The tobacco company carried a large amount of insurance on its buildings and property. This insurance was placed with several companies, one of them being the appellant. Between December 1, 1902, and February 21, 1903, the tobacco company had taken out with Starr & Thompson, local agents at Henderson, insurance in seven companies, amounting in the aggregate to $18,000. The policies issued by the appellant company, through these agents, for $5,000, were dated January 9, 1903, and expired in one year from that date. Beginning in November, 1902, and continuing through February, 1903, there was considerable correspondence between E. T. Robards, acting for the tobacco company, and C. R. Nelson, secretary of the Kentucky and Tennessee Board of Underwriters, who represented the insurance companies and had the sole authority to fix the rates that should be charged for premiums—as to the rate that should be allowed on the property of the tobacco company. The correspondence shows that the tobacco company was complaining about the high rate of insurance it had been charged, and was endeavoring to make such improvements and changes in its factory as would reduce it, and that Nelson, acting for the insurance companies, was suggesting certain improvements that should be made to secure a lower rate, and promising to make a better rate. On November 5, 1902, Nelson wrote Robards, saying that he would send one of his commissioners to re-inspect and re-bate the risk, and hoped, within a few weeks, to have a new tobacco schedule which might possibly be some improvement on the old one. In reply to this letter, Robards wrote, complaining that there was a great inequality between the rate charged his concern and some of the other factories; and, on December 9, Nelson wrote Robards that he had established a rate of $4.00 on the factory. On January 10, 1903, Robards telegraphed Nelson as follows:

"Improvements agreed on completed January 1st; Buckner inspected third. Policies expiring, we decline to renew as no reduction is authorized."

On the same day, in reply to this telegram, Nelson wrote that he was engaged in promulgating a new tariff for tobacco factories, but was not yet in a position to give a new rate on Robards' establishment, but advised him that, on any policies which he desired to have written, the premium would be charged at the last promulgated rate, and that, when the new rate was made, the policies could be reformed to meet the new rate. On January 19, Robards wrote Nelson as follows:

"Since writing you this morning at instigation of Mr. Starr, we called Mr. Buckner (who was inspector) up by telephone, and he advises us he received promulgation of rate at $3.37 on our entire plant. What does this mean? There has evidently been a clerical error made, or you are not living up to your agreement with us."

In reply to this, Nelson wrote quite a lengthy letter to Robards, explaining the delay in promulgating the new rates, and giving details to show that he had not violated any agreement. Immediately after this, Robards went to Louisville, to see Nelson with reference to getting a reduction in the rates below $3.37, but did not succeed in accomplishing his purpose. In addition to this, Starr, the local agent, at the request of Robards, went to Louisville to see Nelson for the purpose of trying to get the rate reduced, but he did not succeed.

On January 19, the rate was reduced from $4.19 to $3.37, and when this reduction was made, the local agents procured from Robards the three policies, including appellant's, that had been previously issued at $4.19, and reduced the rate on them to $3.37, returning the policies to Robards. After this, and in February, four policies in other companies were issued at the reduced rate. On March 2, 1903, none of the premiums charged for the policies issued in December, January or February had been paid, and Starr & Thompson, through their clerk, Luckett, presented a bill to Robards for the premiums. In this bill the rate on three of the policies, including appellant's issued before January 19, is shown to be $4.19, and on the others, the reduced rate; but the premiums on all of them were reduced to $3.37, making the total amount $559.50, payment of which was demanded by Luckett. This bill Robards refused to pay, contending, as he testifies, that it was agreed that the premium should be reduced below this amount. On the same day that Robards refused to pay the account presented by Luckett, Starr, the local agent, went to see him in reference to the matter, and he declined to pay the premiums to Starr. He admits that Starr told him that he had been to Louisville to see Nelson, but that he could not get any better rate. After declining to pay Starr the premiums, Robards, at this interview, delivered all the policies to him, and they were received by Starr, who took them to his office. At this point, Robards testifies that he assigned as a reason to Starr for refusing to pay the bill, that the premiums charged were at a higher rate than had been agreed upon, and no allowances had been made for the improvements—that he was willing to pay a reasonable rate, and the rate that he had contracted for, and says he delivered the policies to have rate corrected. Starr's version of the affair is that he told Robards he must either pay the rate or surrender the policies, and that Robards told him he could take them and cancel them and then handed the policies to him for cancellation. That the policies were, in fact, cancelled by the company before the fire, there is no doubt. On the 5th day of March, 1903, Robards wrote to Starr & Thompson a letter, in which he said:

"As your Mr. Starr is aware, we have declined to pay the rate of $3.35 per hundred as charged on our plant, according to the Kentucky & Tennessee Board of Underwriters, consequently surrendered the following policies under date of February 23d and 28th, respectively, Aetna, Royal Exchange, Greenwich, Home, Northern and Phoenix. You will remember that, in December, we made, through the local inspector, Mr. Buckner, an agreement with the secretary of the national board to make specific reduction in our rate, provided we should make certain improvements, consisting of fire walls, fire doors, covering with asbestos, &c. * * * According to the understanding of your Mr. Starr, this was a reduction bringing our rate down on the manufactory to less than 2 per cent. We made the improvements according to the specifications, and they were accepted by the inspector, and, notwithstanding we have lived up to the agreement in every particular, the national board of underwriters have not. We have sought, by correspondence and personal efforts, through the secretary at Louisville, the relief, and have failed. Therefore, as we stated to you some time ago, should we have a loss, we now wish to give you notice that I hold the Kentucky and Tennessee Board liable for any loss that might occur to the extent of policies written and surrendered. We are ready and willing at any time to pay a reasonable rate, and should not object to, say not exceeding 2½ per cent. on entire plant, and we have ready money to pay the premium on this amount of insurance at any time on that basis. We wish to state, furthermore, for our own protection, not that we have any hope of any recognition from the Kentucky and Tennessee Board of Underwriters under its present management, that we have contracted for, and will be in as soon as they will be received here, wire glass windows." * * *

When the policies were delivered to, and received by, Starr, on March 2, no part of the premiums on any of them had been paid, and on March 4, Starr & Thompson presented to Robards an itemized bill showing that the premiums would be $559.50 if the policies had run for the time stipulated in each of them. But this bill was credited by $473.45, the amount of the rebate to which Robards was entitled as the policies had only run a short time, leaving the amount of premiums due by Robards for the time the policies had run, that is, from the time they were issued up to the date they were surrendered, $86.05; and this amount Robards on that day paid. On March 8, 1903, the tobacco factory and its contents were destroyed by fire, and a few weeks thereafter Robards made out proofs of loss and forwarded them to the respective companies.

The record does not show any conversation or correspondence between the companies and Robards after the fire, except that he made out and forwarded proofs of loss, and thus the matter remained until December, 1906, when this action was brought.

In the fall of 1903, Robards went into bankruptcy, but in the schedule of his assets, made out and verified by him, he made no mention of these policies, or any of them; nor did the trustee in bankruptcy know anything about them. In 1905, however, there appears to have been entered an order in the bankrupt court directing the trustee to sell all claims, including insurance, that the tobacco company held; and under this order, they were sold to E. T. Robards for $200. Afterwards, in 1906, by another order made in the bankruptcy proceedings, it appears that Robards entered into an agreement with his creditors, by which it was stipulated that a part of the insurance money, if any, recovered, should be paid to the creditors and the balance retained by Robards. The record further shows that, under this agreement, the creditors were to be paid 20 per cent. of any amount collected from the insurance companies, Robards to retain 80 per cent.

As before stated, the issue narrows down to the single question, whether or not the policy was surrendered by Robards for the purpose of cancellation. Upon this point, after a careful consideration of the facts and briefs of counsel, our conclusion is that the evidence of Robards is conclusive that the policy was surrendered with the intention that it should be at once cancelled. The letter of March 5—the fact that Robards had exhausted every effort to obtain a reduction in the rate below $3.37, but had failed—the refusal to pay the premium charged, and the payment of the amount of premium due from the date of issue to the date of surrender—make this purpose and intention on the part of Robards plain. And that the agents of the company accepted the policy with the belief and understanding that it was cancelled, is not open to question. The theory of Robards that he surrendered these policies with the expectation that the company would yield to his importunities and reduce the rate, is flatly contradicted by the facts brought out in his testimony. The peremptory instruction asked for should have been granted.

Wherefore, the judgment is reversed with directions for a new trial, in conformity with this opinion.

CAINE v. RICH, &c.

(Filed April 30, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Taxes—Payment out of Purchase Money—Statutes—It was error to compel the payment of the taxes in question out of the purchase money, as provided by section 989, Kentucky Statutes, for the reason that the taxes were assessed and became due while appellees were the owners of the property, and it was their duty to pay them at the time prescribed by law. They inherited the property from their father and owned it in fee subject to the appellant's lien.

2. Construction of Statutes—Sections 989, 4024 and 4032 should be construed together and when this is done, section 989 will not authorize purchasers at judicial sales, who owe the taxes themselves, to have their own obligations discharged out of the purchase money, as against a lien holder who is only secondarily liable.

W. H. Mackoy for appellant.

Orie S. Ware for appellees.

Appeal from Kenton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker, reversing.

Samuel Rich, Sr., died intestate in 1892, domiciled in Kenton county, Kentucky, leaving eight children and a grandchild (the appellees here) as his only heirs. At his death, he was the owner of four pieces of real estate, situated in Kenton county, Kentucky, upon all of which there was a mortgage for the sum of three thousand five hundred dollars, which was owned by appellant, Caroline Caine. After the death of their father, appellees paid the interest on the indebtedness secured by the mortgage to appellant, and obtained from her several extensions of the time in which the principal might be paid. This was continued until the 7th day of May, 1904, when appellant instituted this action in equity in the Kenton Circuit Court to enforce her lien on the land. All of the appellees were made parties defendant, and afterwards such proceedings were had in the action that a judgment was rendered in favor of appellant for her debt, and enforcing her lien on the land described in the mortgage. Under this judgment the property was sold in three parcels, and was purchased by the appellees, John S. Rich, Blucher Rich and Joseph Rich, respectively. These purchases were reported by the commissioner to the court, and in due time confirmed. Afterwards it transpired that the state and county taxes on the property sold, for the years 1904, 1905 and 1906 had not been paid, and thereupon the purchasers, after due notice, made a motion, under the statute, to have the amount of the taxes summarily ascertained and paid out of the purchase money. This motion was resisted by appellant, Caroline Caine, but it was sustained by the court, and the taxes ordered to be paid out of the proceeds of the sale of the land described in the mortgage. The court also, on motion, allowed the clerk of the court a penalty of fifteen per cent. for collecting the taxes. To all of which the appellant excepted and prayed an appeal to this court to test the validity of the judgment rendered.

The proceeding to ascertain and pay the taxes out of the purchase money was under section 989 of the Kentucky Statutes, which is as follows:

"The court may, in actions for sale of real property, determine summarily, with or without written pleadings, the amount of any State, district or municipal taxes or assessment upon the property to be sold, and shall provide for the payment of the same in the judgment; and if the plaintiff fail to ask therefor the purchaser shall be entitled, at any time before the payment of the purchase price, to a credit for the amount thereof."

HARVARD LAW LIBRARY

Undoubtedly, if the purchasers had been strangers to the title, the court would have been correct in ruling that they might under the foregoing statute, cause the taxes on the land to be paid out of the purchase money; but the appellees were not strangers to the title; they and their brothers and sisters inherited the property in question at their father's death, and they were thereafter its owners in fee simple subject to the lien which secured appellant's debt due from their father's estate. The taxes involved here were assessed and became due while the appellees were the owners of the property, and it was their duty to pay them to the State at the time prescribed by law. This they failed to do, and now, because they purchased the property at judicial sale, had to enforce the lien of appellant, they are asking to be allowed to take her money and with it pay off the obligation of the Commonwealth, primarily due from themselves.

Section 4024 of the Kentucky Statutes is as follows:

"All estate, real and personal, and all interest in such estate, named and specified in the tax book, shall be assessed for taxation, and the tax paid by the owner thereof to the persons authorized by law to receive the same unless otherwise specially provided."

"Sec. 4032. Any person having a lien on property upon which the owner has failed to pay the taxes, and has become delinquent, such lienholder may pay the taxes, interest and penalties thereon and shall be subrogated to the lien of the Commonwealth, county or district therefor, and the sum so paid shall bear legal interest from the date of payment, and shall be collectible in the same manner as the original claim of the lien holder."

The appellees were the owners of the property at the time the taxes in question were assessed. Their father died intestate in 1892. His children and his grandchild were his heirs at law, and, upon his death, became the owners of his real estate in Kentucky. In 1904, 1905 and 1906 they were still the owners of the property; therefore, the state taxes for those years were assessed against them as owners, and the taxes were due from them as owners. The lien holder (appellant) was only secondarily liable for the taxes. Of course her lien was inferior to that of the state for its fiscal dues, but, under the provisions of section 4032, she had a right to pay the taxes in question after they became due, and to be subrogated to the lien of the Commonwealth for what she had paid.

By what right then can it be insisted that when the property was sold to pay off the mortgage lien, these owners could bid it in for the precise sum due the appellant, and then, out of the proceeds, pay off the taxes due the State from themselves? Let us suppose that, instead of going through the form of a judicial enforcement of the lien of appellant, these purchasers had paid appellant her debt and interest without suit, could they have claimed the right to withhold from her, out of her debt, a sufficient sum to extinguish the lien on the State for taxes which had been assessed against themselves as owners? Clearly not. There was nothing in the judicial proceeding had to change the nature of their obligation to pay the State taxes assessed against themselves. Let us suppose that the property had sold for a greater sum than the appellant's debt and interest; would not she then have had the right to require the taxes to be paid out of the surplus? And assuming that there was such surplus, to whom would it have belonged? Clearly to the appellee. And it is not a matter of doubt, that, if there had been such a surplus, they would have asserted their right to it.

Now, as said before, the appellees were the owners of the property in coparcenary. The taxes were assessable and were assessed against them as owners. It was their duty to pay them, and this duty they should have discharged. The fact that they failed to perform the duty they owed to the state, does not give them the right to shift this obligation to the shoulders of appellant.

Sections 989, 4024 and 4032, Ky. Stats., should be construed together and, when this is done, section 989 will not authorize purchasers at judicial sales, who owe the taxes themselves, to have their own obligations discharged out of the purchase money as against a lien holder who is only secondarily liable therefor.

In the argument at bar and in his brief, counsel for appellees constantly insisted that they were not the owners of the property, but only the owners of an equity of redemption. This position is unsound. Anciently a mortgagee was construed to own the title of the property upon which his mortgage rested, which became absolute at common law after the time for redemption had passed. This principle has long since passed away; and in Kentucky, the mortgagee has a lien upon the land, but not a title to it. The children of Samuel Rich, when he died intestate, became the owners of the land, as absolutely as if they had purchased it from him by deed of conveyance; and the taxes which were assessed against it after their father's death it was their duty to pay; and this obligation was their own, and not an obligation of the estate of their father.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is reversed, with directions to set aside the order allowing the payment of the taxes out of the purchase money of the land, and the entry of an order permitting appellant to withdraw the money in court for the purpose of extinguishing her judgment debt. This conclusion obviates the necessity of discussing, or deciding, either of the other two interesting questions mooted in the argument.

BAKER, &c. v. COOPER, &c.

Lands—Division of—Evidence—The evidence here is not sufficient to justify the conclusion that any fraud was practiced upon Mrs. Baker in the division of the land, or that there was a conspiracy to defraud her. C. made an advantageous trade in the division, but this fact alone is not sufficient to authorize the setting aside of the deeds. In brief, it appears that Mrs. Baker simply made a bad trade in the division and is seeking to be released therefrom. Her petition was properly dismissed by the court below.

Will Linn and N. B. Barnett for appellants.

James H. Coleman and Zeb A. Stewart for appellees.

Appeal from Calloway Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Wm. Rogers Clay, Commissioner, affirming.

On May 21, 1903, Matthew Wicker, a resident of Calloway county, Kentucky, died intestate, seized in fee-simple of five-eighths of a section of land lying in said county. He left surviving him three children and one grandchild as his only heirs at law; the appellant, Mrs. M. J. Baker, wife of W. H. Baker, and appellees, Mrs. S. A. Cooper, wife of appellee J. W. Cooper, and W. D. Wicker being the children, and Mrs. Cora Barton, wife of appellee C. G. Barton, being the grandchild. In June, after the death of Matthew Wicker, appellee, W. D.

HARVARD LAW LIBRARY

Wicker, filed his petition in the Calloway Circuit Court, asking that said land be divided in kind among the heirs. Soon after W. D. Wicker filed his petition, a conference of the heirs was called to meet at the home of said Wicker. The purpose of this conference was to determine what compensation should be paid W. D. Wicker for his services in taking care of his father. At this time, Mrs. Baker and her husband were living upon eighty acres of the land, W. D. Wicker upon another tract of eighty acres, and Barton and wife upon a third tract of eighty acres; while Cooper and wife were occupying the remaining tract, consisting of 160 acres. Cooper proposed that the heirs take the tracts upon which they lived, and that he compensate the other heirs for the additional land he should receive. Following this suggestion, which was acquiesced in by the others, he agreed to pay Mrs. Barton the sum of $425, W. D. Wicker the sum of $275, and appellant, Mrs. Baker, the sum of $75. Thereafter the parties met in Murray, and deeds were executed in conformity with this agreement. Subsequently the appellant, Mrs. Baker (the plaintiff below) instituted this action, charging Cooper, Wicker and Barton with having entered into a conspiracy to cheat and defraud her, and asking that the deeds be set aside. From a judgment dismissing the petition, this appeal is prosecuted.

According to the evidence for appellant, appellee Cooper called at her home and said that the other heirs had agreed to trade with him, and he would make the trade provided he could make a trade with her. He then asked her if she would take the land upon which she lived and be satisfied. She said "no;" that she thought she was "entitled to something in addition to that." She then suggested that they go over and discuss the matter with her husband, who was at work in an adjoining field. She then asked Cooper what he had given her brother (W. D. Wicker), and he said "nothing," but that he had given Barton $400. He then agreed to give appellant $50, but appellant told him she thought she ought to have more than that; that all she wanted was to get what the other children received. Cooper stated that the land could not be divided in kind, and that it would cost $400 or $500 to have the property sold and divided. The consideration recited in her deed, in addition to the eighty acres, was $75. The consideration in Mrs. Barton's deed was $425 in addition to the land. The deed to Wicker did not state any money consideration in addition to the land. After the party reached Murray, where they went to execute the deeds, Mrs. Baker's brother stated in her presence, that he was to get nothing in addition to his land. Willie Baker, her husband's son, also testified to the fact that Cooper had stated it would cost $400 or $500 to sell the land and divide the proceeds, and that W. D. Wicker was to receive nothing in addition to the land.

Appellee, J. W. Cooper, testified that the heirs met on the 24th of June, and he asked them what they would take to let him have the home place. Each one told him about what he would take. They could not agree in regard to the price that evening. The next morning, W. D. Wicker proposed to take $275 and eighty acres of land. Cooper agreed to give it if he could trade with Mrs. Baker satisfactorily, Barton proposed to take $425 and eighty acres of land. Cooper then went over to see appellant, Mrs. Baker, and asked her what she would take. She stated she did not know what to say, but would have to go and see her husband. She then went out to the field, where her husband was, and, after stating the matter to him, she agreed to accept eighty acres and $50. Cooper then left with the understanding that they were to meet at his house, provided he traded with the others. Thereafter, Baker met him on the road and told him they were going to back out unless they got $100. Cooper told him they could do as they pleased; that he would not give any more. Mrs. Baker said it looked like she ought to have more. Cooper told her he would not give any more. Appellant then started away, but turned around and told him she would take $75. Cooper agreed to give this amount, and the whole party then came into town to make the deeds. Cooper denied saying to Mrs. Baker that W. D. Wicker was to get nothing in addition to the land. He did tell her, however, that Barton was to receive $425, but denied having entered into any conspiracy with Barton and Wicker to defraud appellant.

W. D. Wicker testified, and denied that he had told Mrs. Baker that he was to receive nothing in addition to the land; also denied having entered into a conspiracy to defraud her.

C. G. Barton testified to the same effect, and stated that, at the time the deeds were made, appellant knew exactly what each was to receive.

The testimony as to the value of the different tracts of land is very conflicting. We are of opinion, however, that the evidence given by those who seemed to be best posted as to the value of the different tracts is to the effect that the Barton tract of eighty acres is worth about $1,000; the W. D. Wicker tract, about $1,200; and the Baker tract about $1,400. This being the case, the amount received by each of the heirs was as follows: Barton, $1,425; Wicker, $1,475; Baker, $1,475. The 160 acres of land received by Cooper was worth about $2,600.

Appellant's chief ground of complaint is that she did not receive a sum equal to that received by the other heirs; that, if she had known what they received, she would not have made the trade. While she claims that Cooper told her that Barton was to receive only $400, it is nevertheless true that she did know, prior to the execution of the deed, that Barton had received $425. She, therefore, knew what one of the heirs received, and, on this account, then, she certainly has no cause to complain. As to whether or not she knew what Wicker received, the evidence is very conflicting. While she swears that both Cooper and Wicker told her the latter was to receive nothing, and that she would not have made the trade, had she known what Wicker was to receive, she nowhere swears in positive terms that she did not know. On the other hand, C. G. Barton swears that, before the execution of the deed, she did know what each of the heirs was to receive.

The evidence is not sufficient to justify the conclusion of any fraud or conspiracy on the part of Cooper, Barton and Wicker. Barton and Wicker each made his own trade, and fixed the amount which he was to receive. The amount that they received was substantially the same as that received by the appellant, Mrs. Baker, for the land which they got was inferior in quality to that which she holds. There can be no doubt that Cooper made a good trade, so far as he was concerned, with each of his brothers and sisters. Barton and Wicker, however, are not complaining. Mrs. Baker complains on the ground that she did not receive as much as Barton and Wicker. We fail to see any ground for this complaint, as she received substantially the same as Barton and Wicker. It was not alleged, or shown, that Mrs. Baker was mentally incompetent to contract. We think the evidence shows that she simply made a bad trade, and is now seeking to be released therefrom. If we were satisfied that any fraud was practiced upon her, we would not hesitate to direct that the deeds be set aside. Cooper undoubtedly made an advantageous trade; but this fact alone is not sufficient to authorize the setting aside of the deeds. Such was the view of the chancellor, and for the reasons given, the judgment is affirmed.

PUTNAM v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed May 1, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Appeals—Failure to File Transcript—Agreement to Waive Such Failure—Section 348, Criminal Code, is a limitation upon the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals, and an agreement by the Commonwealth's attorney to waive the failure to file the transcript, does not vest the court with jurisdiction, and the appeal herein is dismissed.

S. A. Russell for appellant.

James Breathitt and Theo. B. Blakey for appellee.

Appeal from Marion Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice O'Rear, dismissing appeal.

Appellant was convicted of a misdemeanor. At the judgment term he was granted an appeal to this court. But he did not file the transcript with the clerk of this court within sixty days after the appeal was granted, nor did he obtain or apply for an extension of time for that purpose. The Commonwealth's attorney for the district and appellant's counsel have filed an agreement up here, in which they stipulate that appellant's failure to perfect his appeal seasonably shall be waived by the Commonwealth, as the representative of the latter is particularly anxious to have the important public question involved in the merits authoritatively passed upon for guidance in future similar prosecutions.

The attorney general, however, declines to accede to that agreement, upon the ground that the statute giving jurisdiction on appeal to this court in such cases, does not authorize it to be vested even by consent of parties in spite of a statute fixing the conditions upon which it may be exercised. Nor is it clear that the court could be vested with jurisdiction by consent of the parties.

The Criminal Code of Practice, section 348, provides on this subject:

"The appeal must be prayed during the term at which the judgment is rendered, and shall be granted upon the condition that the record be lodged in the clerk's office of the Court of Appeals within sixty days after the judgment."

This court has consistently construed this section of the Code as being a limitation upon our jurisdiction, it being said in Commonwealth v. Barbour, 29 Ky. Law Rep., 622:

"The record was filed in this court * * * not within sixty days after the decision complained of. The appellee makes no objection to the record's not being filed in time, but the court has no jurisdiction unless the record is filed in sixty days."

(Commonwealth v. Schlitzbaum, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1022; Atkinson v. Commonwealth, 102 Ky., 94; Stamper v. Commonwealth, 30 Ky Law Rep., 1296; Clark v. Commonwealth, decided April 16, 1908.)

The record presents, therefore, only a moot question, which the court is not at liberty to decide.

Appeal dismissed.

SLONE v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed May 1, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Homicide—Instructions—Evidence—There was evidence tending to show that deceased and Combs were acting in concert attacking Slone, and, if this was true, he had the right to take into consideration the danger at the hands of both of them in determining what was necessary in his self-defense. It was error, therefore, for the lower court to predicate Slone's right of defense wholly upon the danger at the hands of deceased.

2. Dying declarations—All that deceased said in his dying declaration may be proved, but what he said on another occasion can not be admitted.

3. Evidence—As to Declarations Before Homicide—It was error to allow proof of declarations made by Combs before the homicide as to what he and deceased had done. This could not be given because it tended to confirm Combs' testimony.

Walter S. Harkins, Joseph D. Harkins and W. H. May for appellant.

James Breathitt and Theo. B. Blakey for appellee.

Appeal from Floyd Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, reversing.

C. C. Slone was indicted for the murder of Joe Maggard. On a trial of the case, he was found guilty of voluntary manslaughter, and his punishment fixed at two years in the penitentiary. The court entered judgment upon the verdict, and he appeals.

The shooting occurred on Sunday, April 17, 1905, at Allen City, in Floyd county. Slone had a raft there, and wanted some money to pay some hands. He went to the store of a man named Akres, in which Maggard was clerk. He asked Maggard to cash a check of $10 for him. Maggard could not do this, but gave him $8, which he charged to Slone as cash. Slone then bought a pair of shoes for his wife, which he also charged to him. Maggard invited Slone to drink with him, and they then drank out of a bottle which Slone had. After drinking the whisky, they went across the street together and drank cider at another place, after which they returned to the store of Akres; and, when Slone got ready to go home, he looked at the shoes which Maggard had tied up for him, and told Maggard they were not the shoes he had bought. A difficulty followed, in which Slone punched Maggard with his pistol. At this, Maggard ordered Slone out of the house, and was following him with his pistol, when Hiram Gibson knocked the pistol up and it went off. Maggard went to the door, and, patting his breast, called upon Slone to shoot, and taunted him with being a coward. Both had their pistols in their hands and finally both got out on the ground and were quarreling, each with his pistol in his hand. Hiram Gibson was between them, endeavoring to quiet the trouble. At this juncture, Henry Combs, who was about forty yards off, ran down to where they were, with his hand in his pocket. Slone caught his arm and pulled the hand out of the pocket, and when the hand came out of the pocket, he had his pistol in it. At this juncture a shooting occurred. The proof of the Commonwealth is to the effect that Slone first shot Maggard and then turned and shot at Henry Combs, and while he was so turned, Maggard shot him twice in the back, while Henry Combs was trying to shoot him with the pistol which he had, but it would not go off; that Maggard then dropped his pistol and left, and Slone followed him; that Maggard said to Slone: "Don't shoot me any more. I am killed;" but that Slone then shot him a second time. The proof for the defendant is to the effect, by himself, Gibson and Combs, that, when Combs ran down there, Slone said, "Boys, I can't shoot with you both;" that about that time Combs shoved his pistol against Slone and that it failed to go off; that Slone then went to shooting at Combs, and that Combs got behind a tree; that then Slone wheeled and shot at Maggard, who had been shooting at him while he was shooting at Combs; that Maggard turned to leave, and that Slone shot him after he turned, but that he did not follow him. Slone had two shots in the back, which inflicted serious wounds. He was also wounded in the leg. Maggard was shot twice in the chest, either of the wounds being fatal. Slone testified that Maggard did not say to him, "Don't shoot me again. You have killed me;" and there was proof tending to show that the shooting all occurred in a very few seconds after it began. Slone testified that he and Maggard were friends, and that there had been no ill feeling between them; but he proved, by other witnesses, that Maggard had made threats to kill him, and had, on other occasions, tried to put these threats into execution. On these facts, the circuit court, in instructing the jury on self-defense, predicated Slone's right of self-defense wholly upon the danger at the hands of Maggard. This was error; for there was evidence tending to show that Maggard and Henry Combs were acting in concert; and, if Slone was attacked by both of them, he had a right to take into consideration the danger at the hands of both of them, in determining what was necessary in his self-defense. Instruction 4, given by the court, should have read as follows :

HARVARD LAW LIBRARY

"Although the jury may believe, from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant, C. C. Slone, shot and killed Joe Maggard, still, if they further believe that at the time he did the shooting and killing, as aforesaid, he, C. C. Slone, had reasonable grounds to believe, and did believe, that the said Joe Maggard or Henry Combs, acting in concert with him, was then and there about to inflict upon him, the said C. C. Slone, death or great bodily harm, then the defendant had the right to use such means as was necessary or reasonably appeared to him to be necessary to avert the impending danger, real or apparent, and if you believe that, in shooting and killing the said Joe Maggard, he (C. C. Slone) used only such means as was necessary, or reasonably appeared to him to be necessary, to avert said danger, then you will find him not guilty on the grounds of self-defense and apparent necessity."

In the second instruction given by the court, he directed the jury to find the defendant guilty of manslaughter. On another trial the court will use the words "voluntary manslaughter" in place of "manslaughter," in this instruction and in No. 3.

The dying declaration of Maggard was properly admitted as the proof was sufficient to show that he made it in extremis and after he had given up all hope of recovery. But proof was incompetent that Maggard, at another time, said that, if he died and Slone got well, he did not wish him prosecuted. All that Maggard said in the dying declaration as to the circumstances of the homicide, may be proved, but what he said on another occasion, not as a dying declaration or as to his personal wishes, can not be admitted. Henry Combs testified on the trial as a witness for the defendant. The court allowed proof of declarations made by Henry Combs before the homicide as to what he and Maggard had done. This proof should not have been admitted, as it only tended to confirm the testimony of Henry Combs, and could not be given in evidence for that purpose. The court properly allowed the proof of the statements by Hiram Gibson as to who fired the first shot, as Gibson denied making the statement and testified differently on the trial. The court also properly charged the jury that the evidence was only to be considered by them to contradict Hiram Gibson and not as substantive testimony.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, for a new trial.

MANN v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed May 1, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Indictments—Malicious Shooting—Instructions—Appellant's plea was that he did not intend to shoot the marshal, and that the firing of the pistol was accidental. The court erred in failing to submit his defense to the jury, and in instructing the jury as to the law of self-defense.

W. H. Blanton and O. H. Pollard for appellant.

N. B. Hays, D. B. Redwine and Chas. H. Morris for appellee.

Appeal from Breathitt Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn, reversing.

Appellant was indicted for the crime fixed by section 1166 of the Kentucky Statutes, for the willful and malicious shooting at, with intent to kill, James L. Stidman, but without wounding him. The facts produced upon the trial, as they appear in the record, are, in substance, as follows: While crossing a street in Jackson, appellant was seen to take a pistol from one pocket and place it in another. The marshal of the city was informed of this fact, and he followed appellant into a store, where he was standing at a counter talking to a clerk, walked up to appellant's back, laid his hand on his shoulder, and said to him, "Jim, give me that pistol." The marshal and another witness testified that he drew his pistol, turned and pointed it at the breast of the marshal, who knocked it up and it fired, the ball entering the ceiling of the room. The marshal left the room and appellant was shortly thereafter arrested. Appellant testified that he turned with the intention of complying with the marshal's request, and, in handing him the pistol, the marshal became excited and knocked the pistol up, and it "went off" accidentally. Appellant introduced a witness who tended to corroborate him. This was all the evidence introduced.

The court instructed the jury on the offense described in the indictment and coupled with it an instruction on self-defense, and then gave an instruction on the lower degree of the offense as defined in section 1242 of the Statutes, and coupled with it an instruction on self-defense, and then gave a separate instruction on self-defense. The fourth instruction was upon the question of reasonable doubt. The court further instructed the jury that, if they believed, from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that defendant was guilty, but had a reasonable doubt as to the degree of the offense committed, they should find him guilty of the lesser offense as defined in instruction number 2.

The court erred in coupling with the instructions the law of self-defense, and in giving a separate instruction thereon. There was not a scintilla of proof that the marshal made any attempt to injure appellant, and appellant did not pretend that he was acting in self-defense when the shot was fired. His only plea was that he did not intend to shoot at the marshal, and that the firing of the pistol was an accident; and the court erred in failing to submit his defense to the jury. (French v. Commonwealth, 28 Ky. Law Rep., 64, and Howard v. Commonwealth, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 465.)

The court, on another trial, if the evidence is the same, should give in substance, the following instructions. First: If the jury believe, from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant, in this county, before the finding of the indictment, did willfully and maliciously shoot at James L. Stidman, with intent to kill him, but without wounding him, then they will find the defendant guilty and fix his punishment at confinement in the penitentiary for not less than one, nor more than five years.

Second. If the jury believe, from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant, in this county, and within twelve months before the finding of the indictment herein, did, in a sudden affray, or in sudden heat and passion, without previous malice, and not in self-defense, shoot at James L. Stidman, without wounding him, then the jury will find the defendant guilty of shooting in sudden heat and passion, or in sudden affray, and will fix his punishment by a fine of not less than $50.00 nor more than $500.00, or confinement in jail for not less than six nor more than twelve months, or both, in the discretion of the jury.

Third. If the jury believe, from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant has been proven guilty, yet, if they have a reasonable doubt as to the degree of the offense which he committed, that is, whether of malicious shooting, as defined in the first instruction, or shooting in sudden heat and passion, or sudden affray, as defined in the second instruction, then they will find him guilty of the lesser offense, as defined in instruction number two.

Fourth: If the jury believe, from the evidence, that the defendant, when the shot was fired, had no intention of shooting at Stidman, and the pistol was accidentally discharged, then they will find for the defendant.

Fifth. If, upon the whole case, the jury have a reasonable doubt as to the defendant's having been proven guilty, they will acquit him.

Appellant also complains of improper remarks made by the prosecuting attorney, in his closing argument to the jury. It is not necessary to repeat them, but is sufficient to say that they were improper and ought not to have been permitted by the court. However, they were not sufficiently prejudicial, of themselves, to have authorized a reversal of the judgment.

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is reversed and remanded, for further proceedings consistent herewith.

BURT & BRABB LUMBER CO. v. HURST, &c.

(Filed May 1, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Instructions—Error to Submit Law and Facts—The instruction complained of is erroneous in that it submits both the law and facts to the jury.

2. Rule of Caveat Emptor—An officer selling land under execution does not act as agent of the plaintiff. The sale is made by law, and the rule of caveat emptor applies to such sales.

James H. Jeffries for appellant.

J. G. & J. S. Forrester and W. F. Hall for appellees.

Appeal from Harlan Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, reversing.

Appellees, M. B. Hurst, &c., brought this suit against the Burt & Brabb Lumber Company to recover damages for some poplar trees cut by the Burt & Brabb Lumber Co. from land which they alleged they owned. The defendant admitted the cutting of the trees, but denied that the land was the property of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs claim the land under a patent issued to Lewis Harris, on a survey made August 7, 1873. The defendant claimed that this patent lapped upon an older patent, No. 6436, issued to David Turner upon a survey made June 7, 1842. As the Turner patent was older than the Harris patent, the case turned entirely upon the location of the Turner patent. If the Turner patent was located as claimed by the defendant, it included the trees in controversy. If it was located as claimed by the plaintiffs, it did not include them. Lewis Harris was a son-in-law of David Turner. The defendant introduced on the trial a son of David Turner, who carried the chain in the original survey. He located the lines of the patent as claimed by the defendant, and testified that the corners and lines were marked in that survey, and identified a number of the marked trees still on the ground. The defendant proved the same facts by another son of David Turner, and by Wilson Lewis, a grandson who lived with him. The plaintiffs, on the other hand, introduced some proof tending to show that the patent was located as claimed by them; but the proof as to the marked lines and corners on the ground decidedly preponderated in favor of the defendant. The jury found for the plaintiffs, and the defendant appeals.

The court, in effect, instructed the jury simply that, if they believed, from the preponderance of the testimony, that the defendant cut any timber upon the lands set out in the petition, which the jury believed were lands of the plaintiffs, they should find for them; otherwise, they should find for the defendant. This instruction was the only one given except a general instruction that a patent is void in so far as it embraces land previously surveyed; and that, in locating a patent, course and distance must yield to known objects found on the ground. It is erroneous in that it submits both the law and the facts to the jury. The facts are for the jury, but the law is for the court. In lieu of the instructions given, the court should have instructed the jury as follows:

"1. If the jury believe, from the evidence, that the trees in controversy, or any of them, were cut from land not included in patent No. 6436 to David Turner, read in evidence, they should find for the plaintiffs the fair market value of the trees so cut, and may, in their discretion, allow interest from the time of the cutting. But, if they believe, from the evidence, that the land from which the trees were cut is included in patent No. 6436, to David Turner, they should find for the defendant.

"2. In locating a patent, course and distance must yield to marked lines or corners of the patent found on the ground.

"3. It is immaterial that the plaintiffs claim under an execution sale made on an execution in favor of defendant. The only question the jury are to determine is whether patent No. 6436 to David Turner, includes the land from which the trees sued for were cut. The deed from Ransom Turner, &c., to defendant, is only to be considered by the jury in so far as it may throw light on the proper location of the patent boundary."

Although the defendant does not hold the entire title to patent No. 6436, issued to David Turner, and may be liable to those who hold that title, for a part of the timber it cut, it is not, for this, liable to the plaintiffs, for, if it were held liable to them in this action, it might still be held liable in another action by the true owners; it can not, therefore, be held liable to the plaintiffs in this action, for any trees cut within the boundaries of that patent. The fact that the plaintiffs claim the Harris patent under an execution sale on an execution issued in favor of the defendant, gives the plaintiffs no better right than if that sale had been made under an execution in favor of any one else. The sheriff, in selling under an execution, is an officer of the law. The sale is made by the law. The rule of caveat emptor applies to such sales. The officer, in selling, does not act as an agent of the plaintiff. It was shown, in the evidence, that two of the children of David Turner, in conveying to the defendant, had conveyed only to the boundary now claimed as the boundary of the patent by the plaintiffs. This fact may be considered by the jury in determining where the true boundary of the patent is, but it is not conclusive upon the defendant. The deed referred to only calls for 175 acres of land, while the patent is for 200 acres. The instructions of the court to the jury enlightened them in no way as to the law of the case, and did not limit them to the single question of fact in the case, which was the location of the Turner patent. The proof was undisputed that the trees sued for were cut within the Lewis Harris patent, and were the property of the plaintiffs, unless they were also within the Turner patent, in which event the plaintiffs had no title to them. So, the location of the Turner patent was the only question to be submitted to the jury under the evidence.

The proof being that the actual surveying in the original entry stopped at the two chestnuts and that the other lines were not run; in the absence of any marks on the ground, the calls of the survey must control; and, if the two chestnuts are established as the corner, the survey must be closed by reversing the closing line from the beginning corner, with the proper variation on the course and for the distance called for in the patent, and then running a line from this point to the two chestnuts.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, for a new trial.

ELY v. HARTFORD LIFE INS. CO., &c.

(Filed May 1, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Life Insurance—Life of Husband—Wife Beneficiary—Assignment—Plea of Duress by Wife—Knowledge of Assignee—In an action on an insurance policy on the life of a husband, payable to his wife, on which a third party claimed a lien by assignment by the husband and his wife before the husband's death, in which the wife claims that she made the assignment under threats and duress of her husband, such duress, if shown, would not affect the validity of the assignment to the third party in the absence of proof that he had knowledge of it.

2. Same—Duress—Avoidance of Contract—Knowledge of Third Party—Duress, in order to avoid a contract, must be the act of the other party himself or his agent, or must be imposed with his knowledge or taken advantage of by him for the purpose of obtaining the agreement. Duress by a third person will not avoid a contract made with a party who was not cognizant of it.

3. Non-Resident Defendants—Judgments in Rem—Constructive Service—Validity—While it is the law that a judgment in personam against a non-resident defendant, not served with process in the jurisdiction of the court, is void, it is equally true that a judgment in rem against a non-resident defendant, though only before the court on constructive service, is not only good against him, but against all other persons claiming interest in, or title to, the property proceeded against, having notice of the proceedings.

Hobbs & Farmer for appellant.

E. L. Hutchison, J. R. Morton and Edw. P. Bradstreet, of the Cincinnati Bar, for appellees.

Appeal from Fayette Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle, affirming.

This action was instituted by appellant in the court below to recover of the appellee, Hartford Life Insurance Company, $2,000.00, alleged to be due appellant as the named beneficiary in a policy of insurance for that amount, issued upon the life of her husband, Joseph Ely, some years previous to his death, which occurred in Fayette county in September, 1898.

The Union Savings Bank & Trust Company, assignee of the Specialty Carriage Company, and the Specialty Carriage Company, both incorporated under the laws of Ohio, and having their chief offices and places of business, respectively, in the city of Cincinnati, that State, were also made parties defendant to the action, but the action was later, and on appellant's motion, dismissed as to these defendants, and thereafter prosecuted against the appellee, Hartford Life Insurance Company, alone.

The answer of the latter admitted the issual to Joseph Ely, deceased, of the policy for the benefit of appellant, but averred that the former, several years before his death, became indebted to the Specialty Carriage Company in a considerable sum, for which he executed to that company a writing acknowledging and promising to pay it, and to secure its payment, together with his wife, the appellant, Naomi Ely, by a proper writing, pledged and assigned to it the policy in question; and that the policy and written assignment were, thereupon, delivered to the Specialty Carriage Company, and that thereafter appellee, upon the presentment to it of the written assignment, consented thereto by proper statement upon the policy and by making the customary entry upon its records.

The answer further averred that, at the death of Joseph Ely, the Specialty Carriage Company still held the policy under the assignment as collateral security for his indebtedness to it, which then amounted to $2,053.57. That, soon after the death of Joseph Ely, the Specialty Carriage Company made an assignment of its property to the Union Savings Bank and Trust Company, for the benefit of its creditors, by which it came into possession of the policy in question, and, as such assignee, it made out and forwarded to appellee proof of the death of Joseph Ely, and shortly thereafter brought suit against it in the Superior Court of Hamilton county, Ohio, to recover the amount of insurance due under the policy. That appellee filed an answer in that action which admitted its indebtedness upon the policy, and willingness to pay it to whomsoever the court might adjudge, but asked that it be not required to pay until appellant could be brought before the court and be permitted to show what interest, if any, she had in the policy. The answer was made a cross-petition against appellant, who was therein, and by an order of interpleader entered by the court, made a party defendant to the action and cross-action, and called upon to answer and assert whatever claim she might have to the proceeds of the policy in controversy. It further appears, from the averments of the answer filed in the action in the Fayette Circuit Court, that copies of the petition, answer and cross-petition and order of interpleader entered by the Superior Court of Hamilton county, Ohio, making appellant a party to that action, were, together with a summons issued from that court, duly served upon her in Fayette county, Kentucky, by a person appointed by the Ohio court to perform that duty; and that, after the expiration of the time allowed her by the order of interpleader to appear in the Ohio court to assert claim to the proceeds of the policy, but before that court rendered judgment directing that the proceeds of the policy be paid the assignee of the Specialty Carriage Company, in satisfaction of the indebtedness of Joseph Ely's estate to it, as a matter of precaution, other copies of the same pleadings, order of interpleader and an additional summons were served upon appellant by another appointee of that court.

In addition to the foregoing facts, the answer pleaded in apt terms the jurisdiction of the Ohio court of the parties to, and subject-matter of, the action in that court; also the conformity to the provisions of the Ohio Code, of the steps taken to make appellant a party to the action, and afford her an opportunity to assert in that court whatever claim she might have to the proceeds of the policy, and finally that the judgment of the Ohio court was, and is, conclusive of the rights of the parties and a bar to the action brought by appellant in the Fayette Circuit Court.

The averments of the answer were traversed by reply, but later an amended reply was filed, in which the jurisdiction of the Ohio court and the validity of its judgment was denied, and it was alleged that appellant was induced to place her signature to the writing, assigning the policy on her husband's life to the Specialty Carriage Company, by the importunities and threats of her husband, and the misconduct of the carriage company, and the act, being the result of duress, did not divest her of her interest in the policy or right to its proceeds. The affirmative matter of the original and amended reply was controverted by rejoinder.

Upon the issues thus formed, and the proof taken by the parties, the court rendered judgment dismissing the action at appellant's cost, and she, being dissatisfied with the judgment, has appealed.

We think the judgment was proper. Appellant's contention that her signature to the writing, by which the policy was assigned to the Specialty Carriage Company, was the result of duress, is not fairly sustained by the evidence. Her version of that transaction is that the policy had been delivered to her by her husband after it was issued and was kept by her in a drawer, from which he took it and sent it to the carriage company which retained it several months and then sent it to her husband, with the request that he and his wife execute the assignment and return the policy. That she was induced to execute the assignment by the threats of the carriage company, to whom her husband was indebted, that he would be prosecuted for embezzlement if she did not join him in the assignment, and by the husband's threats that he would kill himself if she did not sign the paper. She did not claim that any officer or agent of the Specialty Carriage Company was present when the instrument was signed by her, or that any representative of the company had ever communicated with her on the subject, but that she had seen, and for a time had in her possession, several letters from the company to her husband, containing intimations of prosecution unless an assignment was made of the policy. None of these letters were offered in evidence. It is true, appellant testified they were burned with her house, and her daughter testified to having seen some of them, and a son, one of them. Appellant, her son and daughter say she refused to write her name to the assignment when the son, by request of the husband, carried it to her for that purpose. Appellant and her daughter also said that the husband then came and asked her to sign it, and she refused to do so until he threatened to leave home and kill himself, and that she then yielded, but wept when she signed the paper.

In view of the testimony of appellant, her son and daughters, it is strange that she said, in a letter, enclosing the policy to the carriage company, written November 27, 1895, by her for her husband—this being the first time the policy was sent: "I have had the policy in the desk at the shop for some time to send to you, but would forget to mail it." And, stranger still, that, on April 23, 1896, when the policy was returned with the assignment to the carriage company, she again wrote: "I send, under separate cover, the insurance policy (which, according to the evidence, was sent with the assignment); it was just handed me a few days ago by Ambrose." The Ambrose here mentioned was the attorney of appellant and her husband.

After this, several letters, covering a period of two years, were written by appellant for her husband to the carriage company, in one of which the company was thanked for paying a premium on the policy, and in not one of which was there complaint that appellant had acted under duress in executing the assignment, or even an intimation made on her own account or for her husband, that she had reluctantly signed it. Sterrett, the manager of the carriage company, who admittedly conducted all its correspondence with the Elys, testified that he had no information that appellant had executed the assignment under duress, but supposed that she had done so voluntarily and freely, and that he had never written a letter to her or her husband containing a threat of arrest or prosecution for embezzlement or any other crime or offense. He was corroborated by the stenographer who wrote all his letters, including the correspondence with the Elys. Another circumstance appears to be unexplained in the record. That is the failure of appellant to rely upon and plead, in her original reply, the duress complained of. The amended reply gives no reason for the omission.

Upon the question of duress, we are not prepared to say that appellant is supported by the weight of the evidence.

If, however, it be conceded that the conduct and threats of appellant's husband were such as to constitute duress, in the absence of proof sufficient to connect the carriage company with, or show its knowledge of it, such duress would not affect the validity of the assignment of the policy to it.

Duress to avoid a contract must be the act of the other party himself, or his agent, or must be imposed with his knowledge and taken advantage of by him for the purpose of obtaining the agreement. Duress by a third person will not avoid a contract made with a party who was not cognizant of it.

In Long, &c. v. Branham, 30 Ky. Law Rep., 552, there was an attempt to set aside a mortgage, one of the grounds being that the wife had executed it under duress, produced by the acts of her husband, aided by the conduct of the grantee. In respect to this complaint, the court said:

"While the evidence is conflicting, we are not disposed to disagree with the conclusion of the lower court that the weight of it is against appellant's contention that Mrs. Long executed the mortgage under duress, unless it was such as proceeded from the husband alone. That, in signing or acknowledging the mortgage, she acted with great reluctance, we are satisfied, but the excitement and distress under which she labored at the time were apparently produced by the influence upon her by him. It was the conduct of the husband, or what he said to her in the conversation between them, after the mortgage had been written, and before she acknowledged it, that gave her distress and caused her to weep." (Fightmaster v. Levi, 13 Ky. Law Rep., 412; Hall v. Hall, 118 Ky., 656.)

Although it is insisted by counsel for appellant that the claim of the Specialty Carriage Company against the estate of Joseph Ely, has not been sufficiently made out, we are unable to see that any item of it is controverted by appellant. We think the claim sufficiently established by the proof. At the time of the assignment of the insurance policy by appellant and her husband to the carriage company, the latter's indebtedness to it was $3,945.89. Between that date and his death, this amount was reduced by successive payments to $2,053.57, and this is the amount for which it obtained judgment in the Ohio court. It is apparent, therefore, that the amount of the insurance policy was not quite sufficient to pay the debt.

The course taken by appellee to bring appellant before the Ohio court seems to have conformed literally to the requirements of the statutes of that State. Section 5049 of which provides:

"Service may be had by publication in actions which relate to, or the subject of which is real or personal property in this State, when a defendant has, or claims, a lien thereof, or an actual or contingent interest therein, or the relief attempted consists wholly or partly in excluding him of any interest therein and such defendant is a non-resident of the State."

Another part of the same section contains the further provision: "That when service may be made by publication, personal service of a copy of the summons and petition may be made out of the State upon such defendant."

Although properly served with summons, copy of the petition, cross-petition and copy of the order of inter-pleader, twice, at her home in this State, appellant allowed the appointed time for answering to expire without making a defense to that action, and having thus made default, the Ohio Court proceeded to enter judgment in the case against the appellee in favor of the Specialty Carriage Company, decreeing that the proceeds of the policy of insurance owing by appellee be paid into court and applied to discharge the carriage company's debt.

Appellant's action in the Fayette Circuit Court was instituted after that in the Ohio Court, and after she had been served with process from the Ohio Court. At the time the action was brought in the Ohio court, the policy of insurance was held by the carriage company, plaintiff in that action, as security for its debt, and was filed with the petition in that action, therefore the situs of the property, the lien upon which was asked to be enforced, was in the county of Hamilton, State of Ohio, and within the jurisdiction of the court in which the action was brought. Appellant was legally notified of the pendency of that action, its nature and object, and had ample opportunity to set up a claim to the policy in that action, and this being true, we think the judgment of that court was a final determination between her, the Specialty Carriage Company, and appellee as to the disposition of the proceeds of the policy. While it is unquestionably the law that a judgment in personam against a non-resident defendant not served with process in the jurisdiction of the court is void, it is equally true that a judgment in rem against a non-resident defendant, though only before the court on constructive service, is not only good against him, but as against all other persons claiming interest in, or title to, the property proceeded against, having notice of the proceedings.

It has been held by this court that a debt due a non-resident from a person in this State may be attached and recovered by the creditor of such non-resident, by bringing the latter before the court by constructive service only, and that a judgment rendered on such state of case is a complete bar to an action subsequently brought by the non-resident against the debtor in whose hands the money was garnished; the doctrine being that the proceedings, so far as the thing attached is concerned, is an action in rem. (1. C. R. R. Co. v. Smith, 19 Ky. Law Rep., 577; Bragg v. Gaynor, 21 Ky. Law Rep., 161; Newfelder v. German American Ins. Co., 22 L. R. A., 287; Williams v. Preston, 3d J. J. M., 690; Whiting v. Johnson, 5 Dana, 391.)

The doctrine announced in these several cases that, to entitle a judgment in a proceeding in rem, authorized by a statute of the State in which such proceeding is instituted, but in which the defendant was not personally served with process and did not appear, to full faith and credit in another State, the res must have been attached or seized, or at least have been within the jurisdiction of the court rendering the judgment.

For the reasons indicated, the judgment is affirmed.

HILTON, &c. v. HILTON'S ADM'R.

(Filed May 5, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Personal Representative—Appointment of—The statute does not contemplate that persons who are related by blood, but have no interest in the estate, shall determine who shall be appointed administrator, and, although the sister of deceased and his father and mother, sought to have the administrator removed and the sister appointed, beyond the fact that he proposes to charge the five per cent. commissions for settling it, no reason is shown to have him removed. But, as he led the father and mother to believe that he would have nothing in the way of compensation, and procured their written request to the county court to appoint him, he should not be allowed commissions for his services, but should only be allowed his expenses as administrator.

J. W. Alcorn and C. C. Williams for appellants.

Sharp, Bethuram & Cooper and J. N. Sharp for appellee.

Appeal from Rockcastle Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, affirming.

Martin Hilton was killed in a railroad accident on May 28, 1906. He left his father and mother as his sole distributees and heirs at law. J. D. Hamm was the constable in the district in which they lived, and had served the father in drawing up pension papers for him. When the news came that Martin Hilton had been killed in the railway wreck, Hamm went to an attorney and had him to prepare a paper to be signed by the father and mother, designating him as the person to be appointed administrator of Martin Hilton's estate. The next morning he went to their home. The body of the son was in the house. He explained to them that an administrator would have to be appointed for the son, and they signed the paper, requesting the county judge to appoint him as administrator. He then went before the county judge and was appointed. The father and mother soon learned that the railroad company was willing to pay $5,000 for the death of Martin Hilton, and that Hamm was claiming a commission of five per cent. as administrator. They became dissatisfied and appeared before the county judge and asked that Dr. Percy Benton be appointed in lieu of Hamm. The court refused to do this, and later they moved the court to remove Hamm and appoint their daughter, Hattie Turner. The court overruled this motion and they appealed to the circuit court. In the circuit court, the case was tried again. The circuit court concurred in the conclusion reached by the county court. From this judgment the appeal before us is prosecuted.

Hattie Turner was a sister of the decedent, and was a widow. She was shown to be properly qualified to act as administrator and offered a good bond. It is insisted that the court erred in appointing Hamm, who was a stranger, although the appointment was made on the written request of the father and mother, who were the sole distributees of the estate. Section 3896, Kentucky Statutes, is as follows:

"The court having jurisdiction shall grant administration to the relations of the deceased who apply for the same, preferring the surviving husband or wife, and then such others as are next entitled to distribution, or one or more of them whom the court shall judge will best manage the estate."

The proof shows, without question, that the father and mother are not qualified to act as administrator. But, as they were the sole distributees of the estate, it was proper for the county court, on their motion, to appoint a suitable person as administrator. It is not controverted that Hamm is a suitable person. While Hattie Turner was a sister of the deceased, she had no interest in his estate, and the county court was not required to wait until the next term before making an appointment when both of the sole distributees requested the appointment of Hamm. The purpose of the statute is that the surviving husband or wife shall be preferred and then such other relations as are next entitled to distribution. Here there was no wife, and Hattie Turner, who was not entitled to distribution in any part of the estate, had no control of the matter. It often happens, when a person dies, that administration should be granted promptly upon the estate, and it has been the universal custom in the county courts to appoint some suitable stranger at once when requested by all of those who are entitled to distribution. The statute does not contemplate that persons who are related by blood but have no interest in the estate, shall determine who shall be appointed as administrator. We, therefore, conclude that the court properly appointed Hamm upon the showing made at the time.

On the question whether Hamm should have been removed and Mrs. Turner appointed, on the proof that was made before the county court, nearly two months afterward, the county judge and the circuit court, who were both upon the ground and heard and saw the witnesses, refuse to remove him. We must give some weight to these findings, and, as the evidence is conflicting, we have concluded, with some hesitation, not to disturb their finding. But the weight of the evidence clearly shows that Hamm obtained the consent of the old people to his appointment upon his professions of friendship for them, and the statement that it would not be a nickle in his pocket. The old people had a right to understand, from what he said at the time, that he would charge them no commission; and, as soon as they learned that he was proposing to charge commissions, they asked for removal. In view of the way in which his appointment was secured and the circumstances surrounding the old people at the time, as he has insisted upon the appointment, he should not be allowed any commissions for his services, and should only be allowed his expenses as administrator.

Judgment affirmed.

BINGHAM, COUNTY ATTORNEY v. HAGER, AUDITOR, &c.

(Filed May 5, 1908—Not to be reported.)

County Attorney—Prosecuting Suits by Auditor's Agent—In prosecuting suits instituted by the auditor's agent, as the law provided, in May, 1904, the time the proceeding was instituted, the county attorney discharged an official duty which was covered by his annual salary allowed him by the fiscal court, and he was not entitled to special compensation.

W. W. Davies, Eli H. Brown, Jr., and Sweeney, Ellis & Sweeney for appellant.

James Breathitt and Chas. H. Morris for appellee.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, affirming.

In May, 1904, A. J. Bizot, as auditor's agent, instituted a proceeding in the Jefferson County Court in the name of the Commonwealth against the Southern Pacific Co., under sections 4241, 4260 and 4363, Kentucky Statutes, to list for assessment certain property which had been omitted from taxation for the year 1904. The suit was prosecuted to judgment, which fixed the amount of the taxes at $26,000. R. W. Bingham, as county attorney, appeared in the action and assisted in its prosecution. The taxes having been paid into the treasury, he filed this suit against the Auditor to require him to issue a warrant in his favor for $6,500, being 25 per cent. of the total amount paid into the treasury. The circuit court sustained a demurrer to his petition, and he appeals.

His rights to the relief claimed is based by his counsel on section 4068, Kentucky Statute:

"The county attorney shall prosecute under the preceding sections, and he shall receive for his services twenty-five per cent. of the amount recovered."

It will be observed that this section only refers to the preceding sections. It does not refer to sections that follow it in other parts of the act. Sections 4241, 4260 and 4263 are not sections that precede section 4068. That section is a part of article 2, regulating the assessment of property. In it are penalties provided against taxpayers, against the assessor and against other officers; section 4068, which follows these provisions, refers to them. The meaning is that the county attorney shall prosecute the persons who are subject to the penalties prescribed under the preceding sections, and that he shall receive for his services 25 per cent. of the amount recovered. The section has no reference to taxes paid into the treasury and it was not intended to give the county attorney a right to 25 per cent. of such taxes. In prosecuting suits instituted by the auditor's agent, as the law then stood, the county attorney discharged an official duty which was covered by the annual salary allowed him by the fiscal court, and he was not entitled to special compensation. (Spalding v. Thornberry, 103 S. W., 291; 108 S. W., 907; Terrill v. Trimble Co., 108 S. W., 848.) The statute has been since changed.

Judgment affirmed.

CITY OF RICHMOND v. BENNETT.

(Filed May 5, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Deeds—Construction of—Exemption of Building Pavement—The sole question, in this case, is whether the condition in the deed that the grantor should never be required to build a pavement, was a personal exemption, or went with the land to the heirs and assigns of the grantor. The language of the deed shows that it was intended as a personal exemption. To consider it a covenant running with the land would have to be done by inference, and this is not allowed in construing deeds which affect the public interest.

T. H. Collins, John H. Chandler, Maximilian Schoetz and Hines, Chandler & Norman for appellant.

A. R. Burnam & Son for appellee.

Appeal from Madison Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn, reversing.

Appellant, Waller Bennett, is the owner of a house and lot at the corner of Main and Fifth streets, and extending back with Fifth street to North street, in the city of Richmond, two chains and fifty-four links. Appellee's grantor, prior to appellee's purchase of the property, had deeded to the city of Richmond a strip twelve feet wide along the edge of his property, which now constitutes a part of Fifth street, for the following consideration:

"In consideration of two hundred and fifty-two dollars, in hand, and the building by the trustees of the city of Richmond, Ky., of a good post fence on the eastern side of my lot, and the further consideration that said trustees, for themselves and the said town of Richmond agree that I shall never be compelled to grade, curb or build a pavement at any of said proposed new street on the eastern side of my lot, have this day sold and do hereby convey," &c.

After obtaining this strip of land, appellant, City of Richmond, constructed a board walk along this street next to the property of appellee. The walk, in course of time, having decayed and become greatly out of repair, the city council, by ordinance regularly passed, ordered and directed appellee to repair the walk. Whereupon, by agreement between the parties, appellee instituted this suit, enjoining the city from enforcing the ordinance, until the question could be judicially determined. Appellant demurred to the petition, which was overruled, and it declined to plead further, and the circuit court entered judgment that, by virtue of the condition and reservation in the deed from appellee's grantor to the city, appellee was exempted from building the pavement, and permanently restrained the city from proceeding against him for that purpose.

The sole question presented by the demurrer was whether the condition in the deed that the grantor should never be required to build a pavement was simply a personal exemption, or went with the land to his heirs and assigns. Appellee's contention is that the covenant in the deed from Chenault to the city of Richmond exempting this property from assessment for the purpose of building a sidewalk is a covenant running with the land owned by him. Appellant claims that the exemption is a personal exemption from assessment, and was for the benefit of Chenault so long as he owned the property. There is much contrariety in the decisions as to what covenants are personal or collateral, and which are attached to the realty, or covenants running with the land. Appellee cites the case of Beinlein, &c. v. Johns, &c., 102 Ky., 570, and section 2342, of the Kentucky Statutes, which are to the effect that every estate in land created by deed or will, without words of inheritance, shall be deemed a fee simple, or such other estate as the grantor or testator had the power to dispose of. This principle is correct, but we are of the opinion that it does not apply to the case at bar, for it is not a case of title or easement, but of a benefit reserved in a deed—a question of the extent of the exemption reserved—a question which touches the public.

In our opinion, it is unreasonable to construe this language in the deed: "I (Chenault) shall never be compelled to grade, curb or build a pavement, at any said proposed new street on the eastern side of my lot," as meaning that the lot then owned by Chenault should forever be relieved from liability for the improvements named, and thereby compel other citizens of the town to pay for same. Certainly, the parties to the deed did not intend such a construction, even if the city council had the power to grant such relief, which, however, is not decided. The language used in the deed shows that it was intended as a personal exemption to Chenault, and to consider it as a covenant running with the land would have to be done by inference, and this is not allowed in construing deeds and other contracts which affect the public's interest.

This court, in the case of Kligus, &c. v. Trustees of Orphanage of Good Shepherd, &c., 94 Ky., 439, in construing a statute which was claimed to exempt certain property from an assessment for street improvements, said:

"And not being clearly and expressly exempted from due proportion of the cost of constructing adjacent streets, it can not be held to so exempt without violating a well established rule of construction. For, as said in Sedgewick on Statutory and Constitutional Law, 344, statutes under which exemptions from common burdens are claimed 'are regarded with a jealous eye and strictly construed.'"

The same rule should apply to the case at bar. To grant appellee's contention would relieve this property from such burdens for all time to come, and place the same on the other citizens of the town, which, in our opinion, from the language used in the deed, was not intended by the parties to it.

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is reversed and remanded, for further proceedings, consistent herewith.

The whole court sitting.

WHITLEY v. WHITLEY'S ADM'R.

(Filed May 5, 1908—Not to be reported.)

J. J. Osborne for appellant.

M. C. Swinford and Swinford & Webster for appellee.

Appeal from Harrison Circuit Court.

Judge Nunn delivered the following response to petition for rehearing, overruling.

Appellee asks a withdrawal of the opinion herein and an affirmance of the judgment for the reason that there was proof showing that Harriett Whitley, for several years before her death, was of unsound mind, and, therefore, unable to put the law in motion to obtain her rights, and the Statute of Limitation did not run against her claim while she was of unsound mind. On another trial, appellee can ask an instruction upon this point.

Petition for rehearing overruled.

MORGAN, OATES & CO. v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed May 5, 1908—To be reported.)

Revenue and Taxation—Agency for Selling Sewing Machines—Selling Without License—Liability—Under section 1, sub-division 4, article 12, Act of 1906, Kentucky Legislature, a license is required "on each agency for selling sewing machines," and, by section 12, sub-division 1, a fine is imposed for a violation thereof; a firm engaged in selling sewing machines which employed an agent to drive about over the country from house to house to sell sewing machines, furnishing a wagon for that purpose, requiring him to carry machines with him for immediate delivery when sold, is guilty of maintaining an agency in the meaning of the statute, and liable to a fine unless having a license therefor.

Gibson & Kincheloe for appellant.

James Breathitt and Theo. B. Blakey for appellee

Appeal from Hopkins Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle, affirming.

The appellants, T. M. Morgan, Nick Oates and Martin J. Morgan, partners composing a firm doing business as Morgan, Oates & Company, complain that they were illegally convicted and fined $51.00, in the court below, under an indictment charging them with the offense of maintaining a sewing machine agency and employing an agent to sell sewing machines in Hopkins county, without having a license so to do.

Section 12, sub-division 1, article 12, Act of 1906, entitled "An Act relating to Revenue and Taxation," provides:

"Any person who shall engage in any business or sell or offer to sell, any article on which a license is required, before procuring the license and paying the tax thereon as required by law, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, be fined not less than fifty nor more than one thousand dollars for each offense, unless otherwise specially provided."

HARVARD LAW LIBRARY

Section 1, sub-division 4, of article 12, same act, provides:

"Before engaging in any occupation or selling any article named in this sub-division of article 12 (page 202) of this act, the person desiring to do so shall procure license and pay tax thereon as follows: * * * On each agency for sewing machines employing one agent, for each county, ten dollars. On each additional agent for sewing machines, each county, five dollars."

The indictment under which appellants were convicted was based upon the foregoing provisions of the act, supra. The right of trial by jury by the parties was waived and the law and facts submitted to the court, whose judgment was as above indicated.

The evidence introduced by the Commonwealth proved, beyond doubt, that appellants composing the partnership of Morgan, Oates & Company, have a store or ware room at Morton's Gap, and another at White Plains, Hopkins county, in each of which they kept for sale pianos, organs and sewing machines, and that, within a year before the finding of the indictment the firm of Morgan, Oates & Company, employed Allen Thompson to act as salesman, and consequently the firm's agent; under which employment he was required to haul from the store and ware rooms, referred to, sewing machines and sell them in Hopkins county. That for this work appellants furnished Thompson a sewing machine wagon containing, in large letters, the name of the firm, and paid him a commission upon all sewing machines sold or exchanged by him. Thompson testified to having made numerous sales and exchanges of such sewing machines in Hopkins county; and other witnesses that they had bought of Thompson sewing machines, or had seen him sell or trade them to others. Thompson's sales were all made at the homes of the purchasers, where he invariably carried the sewing machines for inspection, and oftentimes left them for trial, before effecting the sales. He made no concealment of the fact that the sewing machines he was peddling were the property of appellants, and the persons who bought machines of him knew that he was the agent of appellants and traded with him as such. Oates and T. M. Morgan, members of the firm in question, testified in their own behalf, but neither of them attempted to contradict the witnesses of the Commonwealth. They did, however, state that they did not receive or sell sewing machines on commission, but kept in stock pianos, organs and sewing machines, which they bought and sold for a profit, and were accustomed to pay for at the end of four months from their purchase of them, whether sold by them or others within that time or not.

It was contended by appellants on the motion for a new trial in the court below, and they now insist, that they were not the agents, or their places of business agencies for the sale of sewing machines, for which reason, it is claimed, they should have been adjudged not guilty as charged. We do not regard this contention tenable. The offense charged in the indictment was, not that appellants became agents or established an agency for the sale of sewing machines by receiving from the manufacturer or a dealer, such machines to sell for it or him, or that they made such sales as agent for the manufacturer or dealer, but that they had and maintained a sewing machine agency by employing agents, or an agent, to sell such machines in Hopkins county as Thompson was employed to sell and did sell. If employing an agent to drive about over the county from house to house to sell sewing machines, furnishing him with a vehicle for that purpose, requiring him to carry such machines with him for immediate delivery when sold, and, upon consummating a sale, to take of the purchaser a written obligation, whereby the latter undertakes to pay appellants for the machine upon the installment plan, is not establishing or maintaining an "agency for sewing machines" in the meaning of the statute, we are at a loss to know by what name such an enterprise should be known.

We do not think it material whether the agent in such an undertaking be paid a stated salary, or a commission upon sales made by him; in either event he is an agent, and in employing him for such work and having him perform it, the employer or principal establishes and maintains an agency for the sale of sewing machines, for which the law requires him to procure license. It is admitted that appellants did not have license authorizing them to establish or conduct an agency for sewing machines, when they employed Thompson, or at any time during the work of the latter in peddling sewing machines under and by virtue of such employment. Being without such license they were guilty of the offense charged; therefore, the fine of which they complain was legally imposed by the judgment rendered.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R. CO. v. CURRY.

(Filed May 5, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Trabue, Doolan & Cox and J. Smith Hays for appellant.

Beckner & Jouett for appellee.

Appeal from Clark Circuit Court.

Judge Hobson delivered the following dissenting opinion:

Judge Barker and I concur in the conclusion reached by the court, as the oral contract and the written contract here were substantially the same, but we do not concur in so much of the opinion as holds that, a connecting carrier is bound by a parol contract made without his authority by the initial carrier and of which he had no notice. The cases cited do not sustain this conclusion. They were suits on the written contracts under which the connecting carrier had accepted the goods. Having accepted the goods under the written contracts he was held bound thereby. But where there is a verbal agreement made by the initial carrier not incorporated in the bill of lading under which the connecting carrier receives the goods, and not made by his authority, or brought to his notice, the rule is different.

"The liability of the second carrier is not under the contract made with the first carrier, but upon the contract, express or implied, under which the second carrier has accepted the goods for transportation." (6 Cyc., 487; Hutchinson on Carriers, section 248; Dwyer v. R. R. Co., 7 L. R. A., 478; Thomas v. R. R. Co., 116 Ky., 879.)

It seems to us the court should follow the rule it has heretofore laid down.

We, therefore, dissent from the opinion.

BALTHASER v. ILLINOIS LIFE INSURANCE CO.

(Filed May 5, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Life Insurance—Contract for Extended Insurance—Default—Failure to Apply for Extension—Recovery Denied—A policy of life insurance by a husband for his wife for $2,000 provided that, upon his failure to pay the fourth premium, he was entitled to paid-up insurance of $300, cash surrender value of $102 or extended insurance, if applied for, of five years and six months. He made three payments and defaulted on the fourth, and died without applying for extended insurance.

HARVARD LAW LIBRARY

Held—That, having failed to exercise the option of applying for the extended insurance, the other provisions, with reference to paid-up insurance, automatically went into effect, and there could be no recovery on the contract for extended insurance.

D. G. Park and Hal S. Corbett for appellant.

Wheeler, Hughes & Berry for appellee.

Appeal from McCracken Circuit Court.

Opinion of the Court by Judge Settle, affirming.

July 31st, 1899, Louis Balthaser obtained of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Kentucky, a policy of $2,000.00, upon his life; his wife, the appellant, Maude K. Balthaser, being the beneficiary named in the policy. After the issue of this policy, the Mutual Life Insurance Company of Kentucky went out of business, but before doing so sold and conveyed its property and assets to the appellee, Illinois Life Insurance Company, the latter assuming its insurance contracts and policy liabilities, the policy on the life of Louis Balthaser being of the number.

The annual premium on the policy in question was $55.88. The first premium was paid as of the date of the policy, July 31st, 1899, and was thereafter paid July 31st, 1900, and July 31st, 1901; making three payments of premium altogether. When the fourth premium became due July 31st, 1902, the insured failed to pay it. With respect to such a default the policy provided:

"If any premium should not be paid as agreed, the policy shall then become void, except as specified in the table endorsed hereon."

The table referred to contains the following provision:

"The amount of paid-up insurance, the cash value of extension, if applied for, to which the assured is entitled after failure to pay a third or any subsequent annual premium, is shown in the following table."

The table shows that upon Louis Balthaser's failure to pay the fourth premium he was entitled to paid up insurance of $306.00, cash surrender value of $102.00, or extended insurance, if applied for, of five years and six months. As he died December 16th, 1905, the period of extension, if the extended insurance had been applied for, would have gone beyond the date of his death. Claiming to be entitled to the extended insurance, appellant, as the beneficiary named in the policy, furnished appellee proofs of her husband's death and demanded of it payment of the full amount of insurance named in the policy. Appellee failed to comply with the demand, and appellant thereupon brought this action in the circuit court to recover it.

It is the contention of appellant that when the insured failed to pay the fourth premium on the policy at its maturity, it was appellee's duty to notify him of the necessity of making the election allowed by the provisions of the policy, and that, as this was not done, he had until his death, which occurred within five years of the default in payment of premium, to make such election, and, not having done so, the right to take the benefit of the extended insurance could be exercised by appellant after his death, and at any time within the five years named; which right was asserted by her within that time. On the other hand it is contended by appellee, and such was the defense set up by its answer, that the default in payment of the premium rendered the policy in question void, except that the insured had the right to elect at that time to demand paid up insurance to the amount of $300.00, accept the cash surrender value of the policy which was $102.00, or apply for extended insurance, which would have carried the policy in force for a further period of five years and six months, and beyond his death; but that, as he then failed to apply for such extended insurance, he automatically became entitled to the paid up insurance, which was all the beneficiary could realize upon the policy at his death.

It would seem, therefore, that the right of appellant to recover upon the policy the extended insurance entitling her to the entire $2,000.00 named in the policy, depends upon whether the insured could have availed himself of such extended insurance without applying therefor. This question has been settled by this court adversely to the appellant's contention. It seems to be conceded that the insured did not apply for the extended insurance and that no claim therefor was made by appellant until she demanded the entire $2,000.00 for which the policy was issued.

The case of Michigan Mutual Life Insurance Company v. Mayfield's Adm'r. 28 Ky. Law Rep., 825, involved the construction of a policy containing provisions similar to those under which appellant claims the right to avail herself of the extended insurance; the only difference being that the policy in the Michigan Mutual Life Insurance Company allowed thirty days after the default in the payment of premiums to make application for the extended insurance. In passing upon the rights of the parties, under this provision, the court said:

"The solution of the question depends upon the terms of the policy. The parties were capable of contracting. It is the business of the court to ascertain and enforce the contract. It is expressly provided, in clause six, that the company is not liable for the payment of the insured sum; that the policy shall cease and determine after the premiums have been paid for three years, if default be made in the payment of any premium thereafter. It is then provided that the policy is valid as a non-participating policy for a fractional part of the sum insured, this sum to be paid on the death of the insured. This provision is automatic in character. When the insured failed to pay the premium, as shown by the table of paid up insurance, printed on the policy. It is not necessary that the insured should do any thing as a prerequisite to the right to paid-up insurance. By the 5th clause of the policy the insured has the right to give written notice to the company within thirty days after the default in the payment of the premium, and in lieu of the paid-up insurance, provided for in the policy, to have the full amount insured carried as non-participating insurance, without further payment of premiums for the time specified in the table relating to extended insurance. The right under this clause of the policy is optional with the insured. He can substitute extended insurance in lieu of paid up insurance, if he desires. However, after the default in the payment of the premiums, until he exercises this option, his rights are determined by the clause of the policy which provides for paid up insurance. It is insisted, however, as the insured has 30 days in which to apply for extended insurance, that the policy for the full amount remains in force until the expiration of 30 days. This contention is in the face of the plain terms of the policy. To take this view of it we would have to hold that the policy remains in force for 30 days after default in the payment of premiums, although it is expressly provided that the company is not liable for the payment of the insured sum after default in the payment of the premiums, but only for a paid-up policy for a fractional part of the sum insured. * * * If we so held, we would say that the clauses intended to fix the rights of the parties upon the default of the payment of the premium, did not become operative until thirty days thereafter, and that appellant carried the risk for 30 days without compensation. Either the clause providing for paid up insurance, or the one for extended insurance became operative and in force upon the default in the payment of the premium, as both of the clauses could not be in force at the same time. As the paid up insurance clause automatically went into force upon the default in the payment of the premiums, the insured could not substitute the extended insurance in lieu thereof without making the election to which reference has been made. As the insured did not make the election, his personal representative cannot do so. The provisions of the policy fixing the rights of the parties upon the default of the payment of the premiums differ widely from the provisions in the policies which this court has been called upon to construe, both by counsel for the appellant and appellee. In most of these cases the insured was not entitled to paid up insurance, unless he had, before the expiration of a certain period, surrendered his policy and demanded paid up insurance. In the case at bar, as we have stated, the insured was entitled to paid up insurance for a specified sum without any further act upon his part, other than default of the payment of premiums."

HARVARD LAW LIBRARY

In the more recent case of Wortham, &c. v. Illinois Life Insurance Company, a policy issued by the same company and precisely like the one under consideration in this case, was involved. In the opinion of that case it is said:

"It will be observed that the policy does not provide for a written application to the company. All that it requires is that the extended insurance shall be applied. That being the case, it could be applied for either orally or in writing."

One of the issues in the case, supra, was that Mrs. Wortham, the insured, had made application to Rue, the alleged agent of the insurance company, for the extended insurance provided for by the policy. It was, however, claimed by the insurance company, that Rue was not its agent, so, upon the issues as to whether she made such application, and whether Rue was the agent of the company, this court held that the trial court should have allowed the case to go to the jury, and, because of its failure to do this, the judgment of the lower court was reversed.

In the case at bar, the policy does not provide when the application for extended insurance shall be made; this being the case, the insured, in order to obtain the benefit of the extended insurance available under the policy, could have applied therefor when he made default in the payment of the premium. However, the question of whether he might have entitled himself to the extended insurance, by applying for it within a reasonable time after the default in the payment of the premium, or at any time before his death, is not before us, and need not be decided. It is enough to say that he did not make the necessary election, or apply for the extended insurance, either at the time of the default in the payment of premium, or before his death, and this being true, neither his personal representative, nor the beneficiary in the policy, could do so after his death.

We do not think notice from the insurance company requiring him to make the election was necessary. He had notice of the time of the maturity of the premium and had, in his possession, the policy of insurance upon his life, and must be presumed to have had knowledge of its provisions with reference to his right to take the extended insurance, and of the necessity of his making application therefor. The right of election was in the insured alone, and having failed to exercise the option by applying for the extended insurance, the other provision with reference to paid up insurance automatically went into effect. There being no contrariety of testimony as to the only question that was decisive of the case, a peremptory instruction requiring the jury to find for appellee would have been proper. However, the appellant cannot complain that the case was submitted to the jury, and the instructions were more favorable to her than she was entitled to ask or demand.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

GRINSTEAD, &c. v. KIRBY, JUDGE JEFFERSON CIRCUIT COURT.

(Filed May 6, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Gaming—Betting on Races—Selling French Pools on Race Track—Statutes Considered—Kentucky Statutes, sec. 1960, makes it a felony for any one to set up and carry on any machine or contrivance used in betting whereby money or other thing may be won or lost. Sec. 1961 provides that "no prosecution shall be commenced under sec. 1960 later than five years after the commission of the offense, nor shall its provisions apply to persons who sell combination or French pools on any regular race track during the races thereon." Held—That in adopting sec. 1961 the Legislature evidently had in mind granting a privilege to the regular race tracks during the races thereon.

2. Same—To hold that the men who sell the pools may not be punished, but that those who buy them may be punished, would be to give no effect to that part of the act which limits the selling of the pools on regular race tracks during the races thereon. The object of the exception was not to protect those who sell the pools, but what the Legislature had in mind was to protect the regular race tracks during the races thereon. Manifestly the Legislature intended that the selling of combination or French pools on any regular track, during the races thereon, should not be illegal.

A. E. Richards and Helm Bruce for plaintiffs.

A. P. Humphrey and D. W. Baird for defendant.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, denying motion dissolving injunction.

Under the statutes in force previous to 1893, this court held that the machine known as French Pool or Paris Mutuel, used in betting on horse races, was a contrivance used in betting within the meaning of the statutes, and that the persons who conducted the business were indictable. (Commonwealth v. Simons, 79 Ky., 618; Commonwealth v. Cheek, 100 Ky., 1.) In 1893 the Legislature, in revising the statutes of the State, adopted the Kentucky Statutes. Section 1960, Kentucky Statutes, makes it a felony for any one to set up and carry on a machine or contrivance used in betting whereby money or other thing may be won or lost. Section 1961, Kentucky Statutes, is in these words: "The change of the name of the games, banks, tables, machines or contrivances mentioned or included in the preceding section, shall not prevent the conviction of any person violating the provisions thereof; but no prosecution shall be commenced under said section later than five years after the commission of the offense, nor shall its provisions apply to persons who sell combination or French pools on any regular race track during the races thereon. An indictment for a violation of the preceding section may charge the accused in one count with any or all of the offenses mentioned or included therein."

Section 1877 provides that any persons who engage in any hazard or game on which money or property is bet, won or lost shall be subject to a fine of not less than $20 and not more than $100. The question is presented whether, under section 1961, persons may buy combination of French pools on any regular race track during the races thereon. It is insisted that the only effect of section 1961, so far as combination or French pools are concerned, is to exempt the persons who sell them from the operation of section 1900, under which the setting up of the machine or contrivance would be a penitentiary offense; and that persons who buy the combination or French pools on any regular race track during the races thereon, may be prosecuted under section 1977. It is urged that the language of section 1961 goes no further than this, and does not except from the operation of section 1977 those who buy combination or French pools on any regular race track during the races thereon. But an act of the Legislature, like any other instrument, must be so construed as to carry into effect the intention of the makers. In Bailey v. Commonwealth, 11 Bush, 691, this court, after referring to the rule that the words in a statute are to be taken according to the approved use of language, said: "But there are other rules of construction of equal dignity and importance which must not be overlooked, and which, although not incorporated in our statute, are as binding upon the courts as if embodied in it. One of these rules is that 'every statute ought to be expounded, not according to the letter, but according to the meaning,' and another that 'every interpretation that leads to an absurdity ought to be rejected;' and still another that a law 'ought to be interpreted in such a manner as that it may have effect and not be found vain and illusive.'"

This rule was recently followed and approved by this court in New South Brewing Co. v. Commonwealth, 29 Ky. Law Rep., 873. The exception in the statute in favor of combination or French pools sold on any regular race track during the races thereon, was not in the previous statutes, and we must assume that the Legislature had some purpose in inserting this exception in the present act. Under the former Constitution special legislation was allowed. The different racing associations operated under special charters, which conferred upon them privileges more or less broad. When the new Constitution came into effect, and special legislation was prohibited, it was perceived by the Legislature that some general provision must be made, if the privileges which these racing associations then enjoyed, were to continue. The raising of horses for the track had long been a favored industry in a large part of the State, and much capital was invested in it. The Legislature evidently had in mind granting a privilege to the regular race tracks during the races thereon. It will be observed that, under the statute, any person who sells combination or French pools elsewhere than on any regular race track, or during the races thereon, is guilty of a felony under section 1960. This shows that the Legislature did not have in mind exempting merely the selling of combination or French pools from the provisions of the act, but that they intended to provide that those who sold these pools on any regular race track, during the races thereon, should not be punished. To hold that the men who sell the pools may not be punished, but that those who buy them may be punished, would be to give no effect to that part of the act which limits the selling of the pools on regular race tracks during the races thereon. The object of the exception was not to protect those who sell the pools. What the Legislature had in mind was the benefit to the regular race tracks during the races thereon. The privilege of selling the combination or French pools on any regular race track during the races thereon would be entirely nugatory if all who buy the pools may be punished. It can not be presumed that the Legislature intended in one section of the act to legalize the selling of the pools and in another section to impose a penalty on all those who buy pools. If the buying of the pools is illegal, then the offering to sell them is an incitement to others to violate the law; and, therefore, illegal. But, manifestly, the Legislature intended that the selling of combination or French pools on any regular race track during the races thereon should not be illegal.

We, therefore, conclude that the circuit judge properly granted the temporary restraining order. This conclusion makes it unnecessary for us to consider any of the other questions raised by counsel. Chief Justice O'Rear did not hear the argument, and did not participate in this decision.

Motion denied.

JACKSON'S ADM'X v. RICHARDSON COAL CO., &c.

(Filed May 6, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Master and Servant—Death of Servant—Falling of Roof of Mine—Action for Damages—Allegation of Petition—Sufficiency—In an action of an administrator of a deceased miner, against the owners of the mine for damages for negligently causing his death by the falling of the roof of the mine, an allegation in the petition "that it was not the duty of the servant to prop the mine, but that it was the duty of the owners to keep the roof in a reasonably safe condition, and to have a competent mine boss to inspect the mine, but they negligently failed to prop the mine or to have such mine boss," states a good cause of action and a demurrer thereto was improperly sustained.

J. M. McDaniel, O. H. Pollard and B. G. Williams for appellant.

Gourley & Roberts and Sutton & Hurst for appellees.

Appeal from Lee Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Wm. Rogers Clay, Commissioner, reversing.

Appellant, Jane Jackson, as administratrix of her deceased husband, Joseph J. Jackson, instituted this action in the Lee Circuit Court, against appellee, Richardson Coal Company, to recover damages for the injury which resulted in the death of her husband. The allegations of the original petition with reference to the negligence of the defendant are: That the Richardson Coal Company was engaged in the operation of a coal mine in Lee county, Kentucky; that appellant's intestate was employed by the defendant, and was engaged in drawing stumps in the mine of the defendant, and while so engaged in this duty was injured from a fall of slate in the mine; that the fall of slate was caused by the gross negligence of the defendant, its agents and servants, in failing to securely and adequately prop said slate and keep same adequately propped; that defendant negligently failed to regularly inspect the premises where intestate was at work, and to give proper instructions relating to the safety and security of carrying on the work; and also negligently failed to exercise the care which the character of the work and premises required.

A demurrer was filed to this petition, and pending said demurrer, an amendment was filed to the petition, making an additional defendant a party to the action, and amplifying the allegations of the petition as to the negligence by adding the charge that it was the duty of the defendant to employ a competent mine boss, which the defendant failed to do, and the further charge that the defendants did not furnish said intestate a reasonably safe place in which to work.

On July 9th, 1907, a demurrer was filed to the petition as amended, and, pending this demurrer, a second amended petition was filed, in which it was charged that the roof which fell and injured appellant's intestate was not one which, in the ordinary course of business, the intestate was charged with the duty of propping.

Upon the hearing of the demurrers, the court dismissed the petition and amended petitions, and the plaintiff appeals.

In support of the ruling of the trial court, counsel for appellees insist that the petition and amended petitions are defective in that they contain no allegation of failure on the part of the appellees to furnish the necessary timber for props at the place of injury; that it is a well-settled rule that, in removing stumps or pillars of coal in a mine, it is the duty of the miner to prop the roof with timbers to prevent its falling; while the only duty of the mine owner is to furnish timber for that purpose. Counsel cite the cases of Sandy River Cannel Coal Co. v. Caudill, 22 Ky. Law Rep., 1175, and East Jellico Coal Co. v. Golden, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 2056. It is true the principle contended for by counsel for appellees is laid down in the cases supra; but those cases were decided upon the facts as therein developed. If, upon the hearing of this case, it should turn out that the facts are the same, the same principle would apply. But for the purpose of passing upon the demurrer herein, we can not assume that the facts are the same as in those cases. The only facts we can consider are those set out in the petition and amended petitions. The demurrer admits these facts to be true. The allegations of the petition and amended petitions do not show that it was the duty of appellant's intestate to prop the mine. On the contrary, the allegation is made that it was not his duty. Furthermore, in the amended petition it is charged that it was the duty of appellee to keep the roof in a reasonably safe condition, but they negligently failed to do so. Appellant also charged that it was the duty of appellees to have a competent mine boss to inspect the mine, and that it likewise failed to perform its duty in this respect.

We are of opinion that the facts stated in the petition and amended petitions are sufficient to constitute a cause of action. If, upon the trial of the case it should turn out that the facts as therein stated are not true, but are as claimed by counsel for appellees, a different question will be presented.

For the reasons given, the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer to the petition and amended petitions.

WEIKEL v. CLARKE.

(Filed May 6, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Services Rendered—Action for—Part Performance—Compensation Recoverable—One who is employed by another to render two kinds of service, is entitled to a reasonable compensation for the service he rendered, although he may not have accomplished both the things he undertook to perform.

2. Same—In an action for service rendered in the absence of any agreement for the price to be paid therefor, it is a question for the jury to fix a reasonable sum for the service shown by the proof to have been performed.

O. H. Harrison for appellant.

Bodley & Baskin for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas Branch, Third Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, affirming.

This is an appeal from a judgment rendered against the appellant, who was defendant in the court below, in favor of appellee, plaintiff below, for $250.00.

Appellee was engaged in the brokerage business and also accepted employment to adjust business difficulties between parties who sought his assistance. The appellants, Rolph and Little, were the owners of capital stock in the F. Weikel Chair Company. Weikel was anxious to sell his interest in the corporation, and to induce Rolph and Little to sell theirs. He had a prospective purchaser, provided Rolph and Little would sell. Weikel also had some personal disagreement with Rolph, who was threatening to institute legal proceedings against him, and also against the corporation. In order to adjust the differences between himself and Rolph, and to influence Rolph and Little to sell their stock, Weikel sought the assistance of appellee, and succeeded in enlisting his efforts to accomplish the desired ends. In the settlement of the matter, appellee went to see the father of Rolph and prevailed on him to influence his son to desist from his contemplated suits. He also obtained from Rolph and Little a satisfactory agreement with reference to the sale of their stock—thus accomplishing everything that appellant desired. As compensation for his services, he demanded of appellant the sum of $250.00, which he refused to pay; and thereupon he instituted this action against him.

After denying generally the averments of the petition, appellant pleaded in substance that the service performed by appellee was gratuitous. In an amended answer he set up that appellee and his son were partners, engaged in business under the partnership of P. N. Clarke & Company, and the right of recovery, if any, was in the partnership. A reply denying the affirmative matter in the answer completed the pleadings.

Each of the parties testified in behalf of their respective contentions, and there was some other evidence introduced in support of the claim asserted by appellee. The failure to make the son of Clarke a party, or to prosecute the action in the name of the partnership, is of minor importance. The evidence conduces to show that, under the business arrangements between Clarke and his son, the charge for the service rendered did not become a partnership asset, but was the individual property of Clarke. Upon the conclusion of the evidence, the court instructed the jury that, if they believed that Weikel requested Clarke to go to Philadelphia to see the father of Rolph and use his influence to prevent the son from instituting proceedings against Weikel, and also to induce Rolph and Little to consent to sell their interests in the Weikel Chair Company, and further believed that Clarke complied with the requests so made, and did go to Philadelphia, and through his influence prevented the institution of suits against Weikel, or did induce Rolph and Little to sell their interests in the corporation, then the jury should find for Clarke in such sum as they may believe from the evidence the services so rendered by him were reasonably worth, not exceeding $250. They were further instructed that unless they believed from the evidence that said services, or some of them, were rendered by Clarke at the instance and request of Weikel, they should find for Weikel, and so, if they believed the services were rendered gratuitously.

The objection urged to the instructions by appellant is, that they authorized the jury to allow Clarke reasonable compensation, if he rendered either branch of the service which he agreed to perform. Under the contract as stated in the petition, Clarke agreed to do two things, first, to go to Philadelphia and secure the influence of Rolph's father to induce the son not to institute the contemplated suits, and second, to prevail on Rolph and Little to sell their stock. It was not necessary to a recovery by Clarke that he should show that he accomplished both of these things. If he had failed in one, but succeeded in the other, he would have been entitled to a reasonable compensation for the service he did perform; although the evidence introduced in his behalf tended to show that he succeeded in doing both. Looking at the instructions from either standpoint, they were not prejudicial to appellant. The jury evidently believed, and had the right to believe, from the evidence, that Clarke succeeded in accomplishing both purposes for which his services were engaged. But, if they had concluded that he only succeeded in accomplishing one of these purposes, they might yet have allowed him $250.00 for that.

Upon the whole case, we are unable to perceive in what respect the substantial rights of appellant were prejudiced by any ruling of the trial court, and, therefore, the judgment is affirmed.

BRACKETT'S ADM'R, &c. v. BOREING'S ADM'R, &c.

(Filed May 6, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Pleading—Failure to Ask Personal Judgment—Refusal to Render Judgment—In this action in which Moss was made a party by Brackett's Adm'r, it no where appearing that a personal judgment was sought against Moss for land sold Brackett to Boreing, the lower court did not err in refusing to render a personal judgment against Moss.

2. Debtor and Creditor—Offset by Debtor—Debts Owed by Creditor—In the absence of a contract to that effect, a debtor is never a trustee for his creditor. The law is well settled that a debtor may purchase debts due from his creditor to others, at less than their value, and demand a settlement for the full amount of the debt so purchased.

3. Evidence—Exceptions Not Acted On—Waiver—Exceptions to the competency of testimony filed in an action, that are not acted on by the trial court, are, on appeal, deemed to have been waived.

4. Settlement—Unsatisfactory Evidence—Judgment Not Disturbed—Where the evidence on a question of settlement is so vague and unsatisfactory as to leave the mind in doubt, the judgment of the chancellor thereon will not be disturbed.

5. Attachments—Notice—Effect—In this case Boreing was in debt to Brackett; Hendrickson had attached the money due from Boreing to Brackett in Boreing's hands, which was sustained, and so much of the money due to Brackett by Boreing as equalled the Hendrickson judgments was then due, not to Brackett, but to Hendrickson. At the same time the bank's assignee attached in Boreing's hands the money thus due to Hendrickson. Held—That Boreing was holding money or property in which Hendrickson had an interest, and the service of the attachment on him was notice that it was the purpose of the bank to attach the funds so held by him.

N. B. Hays, J. Smith Hays and Dishman & Dishman for appellants.

Cook & Jones for appellees.

Appeal from Bell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Wm. Rogers Clay, Commissioner, reversing.

This is the second appeal of this case; the opinion on the former appeal will be found in 28 Ky. Law Rep., 386.

In 1889, John Brackett sold to Vincent Boreing and M. J. Moss his land. Boreing and Moss, as part of the consideration therefor, executed their note to Brackett for $1,612.79. Brackett, who had purchased a tract of land from E. Carrico and executed his note in part consideration therefor, pledged the Boreing and Moss note as collateral security. In 1891, Brackett, for the benefit of Carrico, brought suit against Boreing and Moss on the note of $1,612.79, alleging that it was wholly unpaid, and that it was part of the purchase price of the land sold and conveyed by him to Boreing. He also alleged that he was indebted to E. Carrico, and, to secure the latter in his debt, had pledged the note to him, but that Carrico, not wishing to incur the expense and trouble of an action, had returned the note to him to collect and refused to join in the action. On July 19, 1897, P. Hendrickson filed his petition to be made a party to the action, and praying that it be taken as an answer and cross-petition against Boreing and Brackett. In this pleading, he set up that he had obtained judgments and return of "no property found" in 1893, and that he had taken out an attachment to the action instituted thereon and summoned Boreing and Moss as garnishees, attaching any money in their hands that they owed Brackett.

At the same term, the three actions that were pending in the court—E. Gregory v. Brackett, Hendrickson and Boreing, P. Hendrickson v. Brackett and Boreing, and Hogan Miller and Dink Miller v. Brackett, Hendrickson and Boreing—all of which were actions by creditors upon return of "no property found" against John Brackett, in which Boreing was garnishee—were consolidated with the suit of John Brackett v. Vincent Boreing, &c., above referred to.

On September 10th, 1897, William Lock, assignee of the Cumberland Valley Bank, which had procured judgments against P. Hendrickson amounting to $781.24, and upon which execution had been returned "no property found," instituted an equitable action against P. Hendrickson and V. Boreing, in which he alleged that he was "informed, believes and charges it to be true that defendant, V. Boreing, had in his hands considerable money which is owing to one John Brackett, but had been attached by and will be and is due and owing to defendant, P. Hendrickson." On October 30th, 1899, Lock filed an amended petition in which he fully sets out the attachment lien of Hendrickson, and then says: "At said time the said Boreing was indebted to said Brackett by note for purchase money on land in the sum of $1,612.79, with interest from September 24th, 1890, until paid, and also the sum of $3,178.00 for and on account of purchase money that was due and owing said Brackett." Boreing was summoned to answer and disclose any legal or equitable interest or other property in his hands belonging to said Hendrickson on September 10th, 1897.

On January 31st, 1900, Hannah Hendrickson, administratrix of P. Hendrickson, filed a petition for revivor, and asked that she recover of John Brackett and V. Boreing the sum of $250.00, pursuant to a compromise agreement between John Brackett and Hendrickson, which she alleged was executed on August 17th, 1898. On December 28th, 1900, V. Boreing filed his answer to this petition, which, in part, is as follows:

"He (Boreing) says that on the 8th day of August, 1898, by writing, the said P. Hendrickson then and there signed and delivered to this defendant and sold and assigned each of the judgments held by him against said John Brackett and mentioned in the said petition of Hannah Hendrickson; and this defendant is and has been, ever since, the owner and holder of said judgment." * * *

On January 14th, 1901, Hannah Hendrickson, by a verified reply, pleaded non est factum as to the alleged writing of August 8th, 1898. On October 21, 1901, Brackett's administrator filed a reply to said answer of Boreing, in which it was denied (1) that Boreing purchased the three judgments of Hendrickson against Brackett, or that Hendrickson executed, signed or delivered the alleged writing of August 8th, 1898; (2) that John Brackett made a full and complete settlement with his creditor, P. Hendrickson, on August 17th, 1898; that said settlement was made in good faith, without notice, actual or constructive, of any assignment of said judgments to said Boreing; (3) that if said writing of assignment was ever made, it was procured for the further purpose of defrauding the said Brackett and his creditors, and was procured by fraud, covin and deceit; (4) that if Boreing did pay said Hendrickson the alleged $100.00, for the alleged assignment of said judgments, he did so as the agent of said Brackett, and the $100.00 so paid, was the money of said Brackett, which the said Boreing held in trust for him.

On the former appeal of this case the judgment was reversed, and the trial court directed to enter a judgment in favor of Brackett's administrator for the sum of $3,178.00, with interest from July 5th, 1899, in addition to the judgment on the note as given by the circuit court. Upon the return of this case, it was submitted to the court for the determination of the following questions: (1) Whether personal judgment should go against M. J. Moss for the sum of $3,178.00, with interest. (2) To determine the conflicting claims between Brackett's administrator and Boreing, as to the various judgments claimed to have been purchased by Boreing. (3) To determine the conflicting claims between Boreing and Hendrickson's administratrix with reference to the Hendrickson judgments. (4) To determine the conflicting claims between Boreing and the assignee of the Cumberland Valley Bank. Thereupon the trial court held that Brackett's administrator was not entitled to a personal judgment against Moss for $3,178.00, with interest; that Boreing's administrators were entitled to credit for the amount of the judgment in favor of Hogan and Dink Miller, and for the amount of the judgments in favor of P. Hendrickson; also for certain other credits which are not disputed; that the claim of Hannah Hendrickson, administratrix of P. Hendrickson, against the administrator of John Brackett, by reason of the alleged settlement made between Brackett and Hendrickson, should be dismissed; also that the claim of the assignee of the Cumberland Valley Bank be dismissed. Judgment was then entered accordingly, and Brackett's administrator and the assignee of the Cumberland Valley Bank prosecute this appeal.

First. It appears that Brackett's administrator simply made Moss a party defendant to the action. Nowhere in the record did Brackett or his administrator pray for a personal judgment against Moss for the land sold by Brackett to Boreing. Under these circumstances, Brackett's administrator was not entitled to a personal judgment against Moss, and the lower court did not err in so holding.

Second. Brackett's administrator contends that Boreing's administrators are not entitled to credit for the Hogan and Dink Miller and P. Hendrickson judgments upon the following grounds: (a) Boreing was indebted to Brackett, and, after the service of the attachment by the attaching creditors on Boreing, the money of Brackett was tied up in Boreing's hands, and was then held by Boreing as trustee for Brackett, and he could not, therefore, use the money of Brackett to purchase the judgments of the attaching creditors, as the relationship then existing between Brackett and Boreing was thereby made one of trust. (b) Boreing entered into a positive agreement with Brackett to purchase the judgments in question for the benefit of Brackett.

A. In support of the first proposition, counsel for Brackett's administrator cite several authorities, but an examination of these authorities shows that they do not go to the extent of holding that a debtor, who is garnisheed, thereby becomes a trustee for his creditor whose funds are attached. On the other hand, the authorities, in certain jurisdictions, hold that the garnishee, by virtue of the attachment, becomes the trustee merely of the attaching creditors. (Perkins v. Guy, 2 Mont. 8., 15; Roger, &c. v. Fleming, &c., 58 Mo., 438.) Manifestly, unless there is a contract to that effect, a debtor is never a trustee for his creditor. Nor do we see how the fact that the funds in the debtor's hands are attached, can at all change the relation which the debtor sustains to his creditor. The law is well settled, that a debtor may purchase debts due from his creditor to others at less than their value, and demand a settlement for the full amount of the debts so purchased (Young v. Miller, 7 B. Mon., 540; Otwell v. Cook, 9 B. Mon., 357; McBrayer v. Dean, &c., 100 Ky., 398); and we fail to see any reason why this rule should be changed merely because the cred tor, from whom such claim has been purchased, has also filed suit and obtained an attachment against the debtor. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the attachments against Boreing by the judgment-creditors of Brackett did not make Boreing a trustee for Brackett, so as to require that he should be entitled to set off against Brackett only the amounts actually paid for the judgments.

B. As to whether or not Boreing acted as the agent of Brackett in the purchase of the Hogan and Dink Miller and Hendrickson judgments, the evidence is about as follows: Boreing swears positively that he had no agreement or understanding with Brackett whereby he was to purchase such judgments as the agent of Brackett. Moss, who made the purchases for Boreing, swears that they were purchased for Boreing, and not for Brackett. On the other hand, Brackett swears that Boreing agreed with him to purchase the judgments in question for his (Brackett's) benefit. There are also certain letters from Boreing and Moss to Brackett. Moss, in one of his letters, advises Brackett to settle with Hendrickson; Boreing also wrote to Brackett that Hendrickson was anxious to settle, and asked Brackett what he (Boreing) should do. Brackett's reputation for truth is discredited by several witnesses. The letters of Boreing and Moss to him tend somewhat to confirm his statements. It does not appear, however, in the record, that Brackett ever acted upon the suggestion of Moss, or that Moss acted for Brackett in making the settlements with the Millers and Hendrickson. Nor does it appear that, after the receipt of the letter from Boreing, Brackett acted upon the suggestion therein contained and directed Boreing what to do. On the contrary, it appears that Brackett thereafter effected, or attempted to effect, a compromise with Hendrickson. In this attempted settlement, he acted upon his own initiative. He did not, nor did he pretend to, act through the intervention of Boreing as his agent or trustee. We must, therefore, conclude that he decided to ignore Boreing's proposition, and to act for himself with reference to the settlement of the Hendrickson judgments.

Brackett's administrator contends that the evidence of Boreing and Moss is incompetent, for the reason that both Brackett and Hendrickson were dead at the time this testimony was given. It does appear that, at the time a portion of their testimony was offered, Brackett and Hendrickson were both dead. While Brackett's administrator filed exceptions to certain answers of Boreing and Moss, it does not appear that these exceptions were passed upon by the trial court, and they will, therefore, be deemed to have been waived. (Lewis v. Wright, &c., 3 Bush, 311; Patterson, &c., v. Hansel, &c., 4 Bush, 654; Hon v. Harned, 18 Ky. Law Rep., 864.)

With the evidence of Boreing and Moss upon the one side, and the evidence of Brackett, and the letters to Brackett from Boreing and Moss, on the other, with nothing to show that he (Brackett) ever acted upon the suggestions contained in the letters, we are unable to say that the conclusion of the chancellor that Boreing acted for himself in purchasing the judgments in question is erroneous. It appears however, according to the testimony of Moss, that Boreing paid $100.00 for the Hendrickson judgment, and also agreed to pay the fee of Weller and Hays. In the year 1903 judgment was entered directing Boreing to pay the fee of Weller and Hays and that he be given credit for the amount so paid, as against Brackett. Whether this judgment was entered because of the agreement on behalf of Boreing to pay the fee of Weller and Hays, or whether it resulted alone from the fact that Weller and Hays had a lien upon the judgments in question for the amount of their fee, does not appear. In either event, the amount so directed to be paid was in effect a part of the purchase price paid for the judgments, for Boreing had purchased the Hendrickson judgments prior to that time and was then the owner and holder of them. Manifestly, then, it would be improper for Boreing to set off both the full amount of the Hendrickson judgments and the amount of the fee paid Weller and Hays. Brackett's estate can not be charged with the judgments in full and a portion of the purchase price paid for the judgments. In this respect the judgment herein is erroneous. As the judgment of 1906 directed that Boreing be given credit for the amount of the Weller and Hays fee, the amount so credited should be deducted from the amount of the Hendrickson judgments.

Third. The assignment of the Hendrickson judgment by Hendrickson to Boreing appears to have been made on August 8, 1858, Hannah Hendrickson, as administratrix of P. Hendrickson, filed a settlement alleged to have been made between Hendrickson and Brackett by the terms of which it was agreed that Hendrickson should be paid the sum of $250.00. She, therefore, claims the amount going to her husband under that settlement. It appears, however, that the settlement in question was made on August 17, 1898, about nine days after the assignment previously made by her husband to Boreing. The evidence as to the exact time when the assignment from Hendrickson to Boreing was made, and the evidence as to whether any such settlement was ever effected between Brackett and Hendrickson are so vague and uncertain as to leave the mind in doubt; and for this reason the judgment of the chancellor, dismissing the claim of Hannah Hendrickson, will not be disturbed. (Burt & Brabb Lumber Co. v. Bailey, 22 Ky. Law Rep., 1264; Spencer v. Society of Shakers, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 854.)

Fourth. The last question to be determined concerns the claim of the assignee, Cumberland Valley Bank. The bank contends that it has a lien on the money owing Brackett by Boreing for the satisfaction of its debt against Hendrickson, and that this lien is superior to the claim of Boreing arising out of his purchase of the Hendrickson judgments. It appears that the bank's action was filed on September 10, 1897, after it had procured judgments and a return of "no property found" against P. Hendrickson. This action was instituted prior to the time that Boreing purchased the Hendrickson judgments. At the time of the institution of this suit, Hendrickson had obtained judgments against Brackett, and attachments had been issued against Boreing. These attachments had been sustained. The original petition, filed by the bank's assignee, alleged that "he is informed, believes and charges it to be true that defendant, V. Boreing, had in his hands considerable money, which is owing to one John Brackett, but had been attached by and will be and is due and owing, to defendant, P. Hendrickson." To this suit Boreing and Hendrickson were both made parties. Thereafter an amended petition was filed making Brackett a party defendant, and Brackett entered his appearance. Between the filing of the original petition and the amended petition, Boreing bought the judgments in question. The trial court dismissed the claim of the bank's assignee on the ground that Brackett, who was a necessary party, had not been made a party to the action prior to the time that Boreing bought the judgments, and that Boreing was in no sense the debtor of Hendrickson.

Section 439 of the Civil Code of Practice is as follows:

"After an execution of fieri facias, directed to the county in which the judgment was rendered, or to the county of the defendant's residence, is returned by the proper officer, either as to the whole or part thereof, in substance, no property found to satisfy the same, the plaintiff in the execution may institute an equitable action for the discovery of any money, chose in action, equitable or legal interest, and all other property to which the defendant is entitled, and for subjecting the same to the satisfaction of the judgment; and in such actions persons indebted to the defendant or holding money or property in which he has an interest, or holding evidence or securities for the same, may be also made defendants."

This court has held that the above section was intended to enable the creditor to subject to the payment of his claim any money, choses in action, equitable or legal interest, and all other property to which the debtor is entitled; that the statute is remedial and should be liberally construed, with a view to promote its object, which, evidently, was to enable a creditor, after a return of "no property found," to reach, by this kind of proceeding, all property of the judgment-defendant. (Merriwether v. Bell, &c., 22 Ky. Law Rep., 844; Farmers' Bank of Kentucky v. Morris, &c., 79 Ky., 157.)

In this case Boreing was indebted to Brackett; Hendrickson had attached the money due from Boreing to Brackett in Boreing's hands; the attachment had been sustained, and so much of the money due Brackett by Boreing as equaled the Hendrickson judgments was then due, not to Brackett, but to Hendrickson, whose attachment had been sustained. At this time the bank's assignee attached in Boreing's hands the money thus due to Hendrickson. We are, therefore, of opinion that Boreing was holding money or property in which Hendrickson had an interest, and the service of the attachment upon him was sufficient notice that it was the purpose of the bank's assignee to attach the funds so held by him. Boreing had notice of the purpose of the attachment, and the fact that Brackett was not then a party could in no way affect his liability. Before final judgment Brackett was made a party. In the meantime, Boreing bought the Hendrickson judgments at his peril. Nothing that he could do after the service of the attachment could defeat the claim of the bank to the funds attached in his hands. The trial court, therefore, erred in dismissing the claim of the bank's assignee. Upon the return of the case, the court will direct the payment by Boreing's administrators to the assignee of the Cumberland Valley Bank of its debt, interest and costs. Boreing's administrators will then be credited against Brackett's administrator with the full amount of the Hendrickson judgments, less the Weller and Hays fees, but will not be entitled to credit for the amount directed to be paid to the assignee of the Cumberland Valley Bank.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment as to Hendrickson's administratrix is affirmed, and the judgment as to Brackett's administrator and the assignee of the Cumberland Valley Bank is reversed, and cause remanded with directions to the trial court to enter judgment in conformity with this opinion.

BOARD OF COUNCILMEN OF THE CITY OF FRANKFORT V. MORGAN, &c.

(Filed May 6, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Municipalities—Taxes—Action to Recover—Defense—Burden of Proof—In an action by a city against a tax-payer, to recover taxes due the city, the burden is on the tax-payer; if he desires to resist payment, not only to point out in his answer the particular grounds relied on, but he must establish their existence by proof.

2. Same—Validity of Levy—Presumption—Under section 157, of the Constitution, authorizing cities of various classes to levy taxes, the presumption is that the council or authority levying the tax has not exceeded its power, and the tax-payer, in attacking the validity of a tax upon the ground that it exceeds the constitutional limit, must point out in his pleading the grounds he relies on, and sustain his contention by evidence.

Wm. Cromwell for appellant.

298 B'D OF COUNCIL'N CITY OF FRANKFORT V. MORGAN, &C.

John W. Ray for appellees.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, reversing.

This suit, was brought by appellant to recover taxes alleged to be due the city for the years 1897 to 1906, inclusive. The petition reads as follows:

"The plaintiff, Board of Councilmen, for cause of action herein, says: The defendant is indebted to the city of Frankfort for city taxes on real estate, with interest and penalties thereon, as set forth and shown by the tax bill filed herewith as part hereof. Said taxes are for the years 1897, 1898, 1900 and 1901 and upon the property set forth and described in said tax bill. Said property was properly listed by the city assessor for city taxation in each of said years. The ordinance levying the taxes, for each of said years, was duly adopted by the common council, and all the steps necessary to secure a lien upon said property, for said taxes, have been duly and properly taken.

"Defendant has no personal property in the city out of which said taxes could be made. The ad valorem levy imposed by the common council for each of said years is as follows:

"1895 $— per $100.00 in value.

"1896 $— per $100.00 in value.

"1897 $— per $100.00 in value.

"1898 $— per $100.00 in value.

"1899 $— per $100.00 in value.

"Due demand for said taxes has been made, and a tax receipt therefor tendered defendant by the proper collecting officer, and no part of same has been paid.

"The plaintiff is entitled to recover herein as follows: For the year 1897, $59.45, with interest thereon at 8 per cent. from Oct. 1st, 1897; and $59.45, with like interest from Oct. 1st, 1898; and $47.85 with like interest from Oct. 1st, 1900; and $47.85 with like interest from Oct. 1st, 1901, and 5 per cent. penalty on said taxes.

"The plaintiff holds a first lien upon said property for the satisfaction of the city's demand hereinbefore set forth. Said property is described as follows:

"On the south by the property of Mrs. W. C. Herndon, on the north by Campbell street, on the east by an alley and on the west by Logan street.

"WHEREFORE, plaintiff prays that it recover of the defendant herein, taxes, interest and penalty, as follows: For the years 1897, $59.45 with interest at 8 per cent. per annum from Oct. 1st, 1897; and like interest from Oct. 1st, 1898, on $59.45; and $47.85 with like interest from Oct. 1st, 1900; $47.85 with like interest from Oct. 1st, 1901, and 5 per cent. penalty on each of said years' taxes, and that said lien be adjudged and enforced, and that said property be sold in satisfaction of the plaintiff's said demand.

"Plaintiff prays for its costs and all proper relief." The tax bill, or exhibit, mentioned in and filed with the petition reads as follows:

"Frankfort Ky., December 26, 1902.

Mrs. John H. Morgan,

To City of Frankfort, Dr.

To City taxes for the year 1897.....	59.45
To City taxes for the year 1898.....	59.45
To City taxes for the year 1900.....	47.85
To City taxes for the year 1901.....	47.85

$214.60

B'D OF COUNCIL'N CITY OF FRANKFORT V. MORGAN, &C. 299

2 lots 50 feet on Logan, between Campbell and Todd streets, 192 feet deep, valued at $1,000.....$2,000
1 lot 180 Logan between same streets, 192 feet deep, valued at $1,300.
Tax rate for years 1897, 1898, 1900 and 1901, $1.45 on the $100.
Penalty 5 per cent..... $10.73

$225.33

"I certify the foregoing list to be true and correct.

"BEN MARSHALL, City Clerk."

An amended petition was filed, and with it an exhibit certified by the City Clerk, seeking to recover taxes alleged to be due for the years 1902, 1904 and 1905; the tax rate for these years being $1.70 on each one hundred dollars' worth of property for 1902, and $1.50 on each one hundred dollars' worth of property for the years 1904 and 1905.

The answer traversed generally the allegations of the petition, but did not specifically deny that the defendant owed taxes for the years mentioned—the averment on this point being "they deny that they or either of them are indebted to the City of Frankfort for taxes as set out in the accounts filed as part of the petition and amended petition, "The answer further sets out, that:

"They deny that the tax rate imposed by ordinance was $1.45 per $100 in value for the years 1897, 1898 or was $1.70 per $100 in value for 1902, or was $1.50 per $100 in value for years 1904 and 1905, and deny the power and authority of the common council to levy or fix the tax at such figures for either of the said years named. Defendants say that Frankfort is and was a city of the third class and during all the years named above had a population of less than ten thousand people and because of the provisions of section 157 of the Constitution the plaintiff had no power to levy or collect taxes in excess of seventy-five cents on the one hundred dollars of value, for other than school purposes, and that the tax rate for school purposes in said city as provided for the several years was and is as follows, 25 cents on each $100 of valuation for each of the years sued on except 1905, and for 1905 50 cents on each $100 of valuation."

In a reply it was denied that the city during any of said years had less than ten thousand inhabitants, or that by reason of the section of the Constitution mentioned the city had no power to levy and collect taxes in excess of seventy-five cents for all purposes other than school purposes, and denied that the tax rate for said years for school purposes excepting 1905 was only twenty-five cents on the one hundred dollars' worth of property.

On motion of the appellant, who was plaintiff below, the action was submitted for judgment upon the pleadings and exhibits, whereupon the petition was dismissed.

The only question before us is whether or not the city was entitled to a judgment on the petition, notwithstanding the averments contained in the answer. Or, to put it in another way, did the answer present issues that placed the burden of proving the allegations of the petition upon the plaintiff. If it was necessary that the city should prove the averments of the petition, then the action of the lower court was correct. On the other hand, if the answer did not present any defense, or if it was necessary that the defendant should prove the averments thereof, it must be reversed.

The sections of the Kentucky Statutes applicable are sections 3396 and 3397, reading as follows:

"On the first day of January in each year, after the assessment of the city taxes, the tax collector shall make out tax-bills against all persons or corporations owing taxes on real estate, with a description and location of the property assessed, and upon which taxes are due, and the amount thereof, which bills shall be certified by the city clerk as being true and correct lists, and he shall furnish said lists or bills to the city attorney, whose duty it shall be to bring, without delay, suits for the recovery thereof in the circuit court of the county.

300 B'D OF COUNCIL'N CITY OF FRANKFORT V. MORGAN, &C.

"Said lists or bills, when certified by the city clerk, shall be prima facie evidence that the property was properly listed by the city assessor, that the ordinance levying the taxes was duly adopted, and that all the steps necessary to secure a lien on the property have been duly and properly taken, and that the person owing the taxes has no personal property in the city out of which said taxes could be made."

It was formerly the rule in this State that in actions to recover taxes the petition must affirmatively set up the existence of every fact necessary to show that all the provisions of the statute authorizing the imposition of the tax were complied with by the assessing officers. But this rule has been changed by the statute supra, as well as by the later decisions of this Court, Alexander v. Aud, 28 Ky. Law Rep., 69, Hughes v. Owens, 29 Ky. Law Rep., 140, the purpose of the statute and decisions being to put upon the tax-payer, when sued, to recover taxes, the burden of pointing out the particular defects in the creation, levy or assessment of the tax that he relies on to defeat its collection. In the case before us, the tax bill certified by the city clerk is made prima facie evidence that all the steps necessary to secure a lien on the property were duly and properly taken. It is not necessary that the tax bill filed as an exhibit with the petition as a basis of the cause of action should be the identical bill made out by the tax collector, or that the tax collector's name should appear on it. The bills made out by the tax collector are required to be delivered to the city clerk, and when the city clerk certifies a bill similar to the exhibit filed with the petition, such bill is made, by the statute, presumptive evidence of the correctness of all preliminary steps. If the tax-payer desires to resist the collection of the taxes, he must not only point out in his answer the particular grounds relied on, but he must establish their existence by proof. The city is not required to introduce any evidence until the tax-payer has made out a case that will overcome the legal presumption that the proceedings by the city and the taxing officers are regular. This rule of law, and the practice growing out of it, does not impose any unreasonable burden upon the tax-payer. The facts upon which he may desire to rely are matters of public record, that he has the right to inspect in the preparation of his defense; and if he has a legitimate defense, he can easily establish it by proof. On the other hand it prevents a delinquent taxpayer from interposing defenses lacking in merit to defeat the collection of taxes that are due; and enables the city to collect promptly the taxes due it. The city government cannot exist without the money derived from the collection of taxes; and every tax-payer should be required to pay his proportion of the burden. If he fails in this the city, in attempting to enforce the collection of taxes, will not be put to the necessity of showing affirmatively that the law was complied with in the levy, assessment and attempted collection of the taxes. It is true that in the levy and imposition of taxes, the city and taxing authorities should be required to observe all the substantial provisions of the law authorizing its collection; and if they have not done so, the tax cannot be exacted.

In respect to the defense that the population of the city, in the years named, was less than ten thousand, it will be necessary to examine section 157, of the Constitution, which provides in part that:

"The tax rate of cities, towns, counties, taxing districts and other municipalities, for other than school purposes, shall not, at any time, exceed the following rates upon the value of the taxable property therein, viz: for all towns or cities having a population of fifteen thousand or more, one dollar and fifty cents on the hundred dollars; for all towns or cities having less than fifteen thousand, and not less than ten thousand, one dollar on the hundred dollars; for all towns or cities having less than ten thousand, seventy-five cents on the hundred dollars; and for counties and taxing districts, fifty cents on the hundred dollars; unless it should be necessary to enable such city, town, county or taxing district to pay the interest on, and provide a sinking fund for, the extinction of indebtedness contracted before the adoption of this Constitution." * * *

The limitations upon the tax rate contained in this section are mandatory, and cannot be exceeded or evaded by the council or other authority vested with the power to levy taxes. A city having a population of less than ten thousand cannot, without the approval of the voters, at an election, impose a greater tax rate than seventy-five cents on the one hundred dollars, unless it be necessary to pay an indebtedness contracted before the adoption of this Constitution, or for school purposes. But, here again, the tax-payer, who is assailing the tax, must prove the averments of his pleading. The presumption is that the council or authority levying the tax has not exceeded its power; and the taxpayer attacking the validity of the tax upon the ground that it exceeds the constitutional limitation must point out in his pleading the grounds he relies upon and sustain his contention by evidence. (Maysville & Lexington T. P. R. Co. v. Wiggins, 20 Ky. Law Rep., 724; Sparks v. Robinson, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 2336; O'Brien v. City of Owensboro, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 469; Town of Bardwell v. Harlin, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 101.)

Upon the return of the case either party may amend his pleadings.

The judgment of the lower court is reversed for proceedings in conformity with this opinion.

BALLARD'S ADM'X v. LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD CO.

(Filed May 7, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Lewis B. Herrington and Smith & Smith for appellant.

Benjamin D. Warfield and John T. Shelby for appellee.

Appeal from Madison Circuit Court.

Judge Nunn delivered the following dissenting opinion:

The question in this case is not whether Hodge was acting in the service of the company at the moment he killed John Ballard, or whether he was assigned to use the compressed air hose, the instrument that produced Ballard's death.

The law is: The master is required to furnish the servant a reasonably safe place to work and reasonably safe tools and appliances and reasonably careful fellow servants to work with. It is alleged in the petition that Hodge was not a careful person, but, on the contrary, was a reckless and dangerous person; that he possessed such habits for a long time and the defendant knew that he was a reckless and dangerous person, and kept him in its employment with that knowledge, and failed to warn the plaintiff's intestate of his dangerous character, and by reason thereof his intestate lost his life. The gravamen of the charge is that the defendant owed deceased the duty to furnish him a reasonably safe person with whom to labor, but, on the contrary, the master knowingly furnished him a reckless and dangerous servant to work with, and by reason thereof the deceased lost his life. And the truth of this is admitted by the demurrer. In my opinion a cause of action was stated in the petition. The court, in its opinion, notwithstanding it was alleged in the petition that this compressed air hose was a dangerous instrument and the defendant knew that fact, which was admitted to be true by the demurrer, says that it seems inconceivable that if such an instrument was dangerous that defendant could have known it; that but one instances of such an injury has been recorded, and that was Curry, referred to in the Texas case cited in the opinion. It is possible that other injuries of any kind may have occurred, and defendant heard of them as well as Curry's injury, but this is a question of evidence with which the court has nothing to do. The only question involved on this appeal was, whether a cause of action was stated in the petition. In my opinion, if it had been alleged and proven in the cases cited in the opinion, that the persons who threw the lump of coal, placed the torpedo upon the track and played pranks with the compressed air hose had been doing so for a long period of time, making it dangerous to their fellow servants, and that the defendant in each case knew of the fact and failed to discharge them, and the persons injured had been placed to work with them without any warning of the character of persons they were placed with, the results in the cases would have been different.

For these reasons, I dissent from the opinion of the court.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO. v. LAWLER.

(Filed May 8, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Benjamin D. Warfield and J. I. Blanton for appellant.

J. J. Osborne for appellee.

Appeal from Harrison Circuit Court.

Judge Lassing delivered the following response to petition for rehearing; petition denied.

The question as to whether the plaintiff, Pat Lawler, intended to step from the top of the flat car, four and a half to five feet, across to the platform of the passenger car, or whether he intended to step down perpendicularly, from four and a half to five feet, to the station platform, was not material to the decision of this case. With his foot caught in the standard stirrup near the top of the flat car on which he was standing, it was not important on which of the two above-named places he intended to land, for as soon as he lost his equilibrium, his fall and consequent injury was certain. We fell into the error of saying that he undertook to step from the top of the flat car to the platform of the passenger car, because he, himself, said so, and we did not notice in the re-district examination that he corrected this mistake. Our statement on this subject was not intended to be material, but merely historical in giving the general outline of the facts. Appellee Lawler put his heel in the standard stirrup, and then stepped out into space. That the standard stirrup caught his heel and held it so as to make his fall and consequent injury inevitable, was not the fault of the railroad.

The petition for a rehearing is overruled.

Judges Nunn and Hobson dissenting.

N. C. & ST. L. RY. CO. v. BEAN'S EX'OR.

(Filed May 8, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Railroads—Action for Damages Against—Trespassers—Evidence—
In this action against appellant for the death of decedent, who was a trespasser upon its track at the time he was killed, its liability depends entirely upon whether or not those in charge of the engine after they discovered the peril of the deceased, could, by the use of ordinary care, have stopped the train in time to prevent its striking him. The evidence examined, and Held—That a peremptory instruction should have been given, directing the jury to find for appellee

Wheeler, Hughes & Berry and R. L. Shemwell for appellant.

Hendrick, Miller & Marble for appellee.

Appeal from Marshall Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, reversing.

The decedent, W. A. Bean, a man about seventy-five years of age, partially blind, as well as deaf, was killed by one of the trains of appellant company, while walking along its track in the day time. In this action by his executor to recover damages, he was awarded the sum of $750.00 by a jury. Of this verdict and judgment thereon, the appellant complains, and asks a reversal, chiefly because the trial judge refused its request to direct the jury to return a verdict in its favor. It also complains of error in the instructions; but, if it was entitled to a peremptory instruction, it will not be necessary to inquire into the correctness of the instructions given by the court.

The appellant did not introduce any evidence, so that the first question to be investigated is whether or not the testimony introduced in behalf of appellee was sufficient to take the case to the jury.

It is conceded that the deceased was a trespasser at the time he was struck and killed by a passenger train going in the same direction that he was walking on the track. The accident occurred at a point about a mile and a half north of the town of Benton, in the direction of Paducah, to which point the train was going. His body was thrown from the track some fifty feet north of a trestle, which was about 116 feet in length. A crossing, known as the Rickman crossing, is south of the trestle and about 2,800 feet from it. The track for more than a mile south of where the deceased was struck, is perfectly straight, and a person in the engine would have an unobstructed view of a person walking on the track at any place within a mile south of the point where appellee's intestate was killed.

The liability of appellant depends entirely upon whether or not the persons in charge of the engine, after they actually discovered the peril of deceased, could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have prevented striking him. Being a trespasser, the railroad company did not owe him the duty of look out or warning, or any duty except to exercise ordinary care, by using all reasonable means at hand to prevent injury to him, after his peril was actually discovered. (C. & O. Ry. Co. v. Nipp's Adm'r, 30 Ky. Law Rep., 1131; Smith's Adm'r v. Illinois Central R. Co., 28 Ky. Law Rep., 723; L. H. & St. L. R. R. Co. v. Jolly's Adm'r, 28 Ky. Law Rep., 939; C. & O. Ry. Co. v. Barbour, 29 Ky. Law Rep., 339.)

No person was introduced as a witness who saw the deceased when he was struck, nor is there any direct testimony conducing to show when or where the deceased came upon the railroad track, or how long he had been walking on the track before he was struck, or when his peril was discovered by the persons in charge of the train, or that after actually discovering his peril they could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have stopped the train in time to avoid injury to him—the only evidence upon these material points are some circumstances that will be noticed in the course of the opinion.

Mrs. Ratcliffe, who was a passenger on the train, testified that the train whistled for the Rickman crossing and then whistled several times between there and where the deceased was killed. She did not know what had happened until the train stopped, when she learned that a man had been killed; that the train did not slacken in its speed, and she could not tell how far it ran after she heard the alarm whistle.

J. M. Johnson, who was also a passenger on the train, did not remember to have heard it whistle for the crossing, or that he heard any whistles until it gave the alarm whistle, and a few minutes afterward, the train suddenly checked its speed and ran probably one hundred yards before it stopped. Asked if after the alarm whistle sounded it was kept up until the train stopped, or did the whistling cease before the train stopped, he answered that the whistling stopped before the train had come to a standstill. He did not know how fast the train which consisted of an engine, baggage car, smoker, and one coach, was running.

Monroe Collins, also a passenger, heard the alarm whistle sounded several times, and although the train ran probably one hundred or two hundred yards beyond the place where deceased was struck before it came to a stop. That the body was found between thirty-five and fifty feet from the north end of the trestle. The hat of deceased was found under the edge of the trestle.

Hinson testified that on the Sunday following the accident, which happened on Friday, he discovered a spot or two of blood on the trestle, fifty or sixty feet from the south end.

J. G. Morgan, who was in company with Hinson, said that about the middle of the trestle there was something that looked like blood, but he could not tell certainly what it was. That the place where the body was thrown by the impact was fifty or sixty feet from the place where he saw what he believed to be spots of blood.

Boyd Hinson also said he saw on the trestle some spots of either blood or paint—he thought it was blood.

Another witness testified that the body was found fifty feet from the north end of the trestle, which was 116 feet in length; and that he saw some spots of blood, as he thought, on the trestle, about 95 feet south of the place where the body was found.

Other witnesses, introduced as experts, said that a train like the one that killed deceased, running thirty-five or forty miles an hour, could be stopped inside of 400 feet.

We have given the substance of all the testimony introduced, and, in our opinion, it fails to make out even by circumstantial evidence, a state of case that would authorize a submission to the jury. The fact that the train ran about 100 yards or probably more after the alarm whistle was sounded, that some spots of blood were found about ninety feet south of the point where the body was found, that if deceased had been walking on the track the engineer, if keeping a look out, must have seen him in time to have stopped the train. If he exercised ordinary care—fall far short of showing when the peril of the deceased was actually discovered by the trainmen, or that, in the exercise of ordinary care by the use of all reasonable means at hand, they could have prevented striking him, after his peril was so actually discovered.

We can not supply the failure in the evidence for appellee to show the existence of these facts so indispensable to a recovery by assuming that, as the track was straight, the persons in charge of the engine must have discovered the peril of deceased in time to prevent injury to him by the exercise of ordinary care on their part. He may have been struck at the south end of the trestle, or in the middle of the trestle or at the north end of it. The blood spots found on the trestle do not necessarily show that he was at that point when hit by the engine, as it is not an uncommon occurrence that persons are carried on the pilot or cow-catcher of the engine for a hundred yards or more before falling off on the side of the track. But, if it should be assumed that the deceased was in the middle of the trestle when struck by the engine, there is a total failure of proof as to when the persons in the engine discovered his peril. And they were under no duty to discover it any sooner than they did, whenever that was. They may not have been keeping a lookout, or, if keeping one, may have concluded that the deceased, if he was either at the south or north end of the trestle, would get off the track in time to avoid being injured. In cases like this, where it is sought to recover for injury to a trespasser on the track, there must be some evidence conducing to show two things: First, when the persons in charge of the train actually discovered his peril; and, second, that, after the discovery, they could, by the exercise of ordinary care, with the use of all reasonable means at hand, prevent injury to him.

Having reached the conclusion that the peremptory instruction requested should have been granted, the judgment of the lower court is reversed, with directions to proceed in conformity with this opinion.

C. N. O. & T. P. RY. CO. v. BAXTER.

(Filed May 8, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Railroads—Spark Arresters—Injury to Eye—Statutes—In this action by the appellee for the recovery of damages for an injury which resulted to his eye by the emission of a cinder from its chimney, there should have been a peremptory instruction to find for appellant, for the reason that the evidence is such as to warrant the belief that the cinder would have escaped through a spark arrester of the most approved pattern, so small was it. Moreover, the language of the statute, (section 782) shows that it was enacted to prevent injuries from sparks of fire, and was not intended to apply to cinders small enough to enter the human eye.

A. G. DeJarnette and John Galvin for appellant.

Clore, Dickinson & Clayton and Overton S. Hogan for appellee.

Appeal from Grant Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Wm. Rogers Clay, Commissioner, reversing.

Appellee, George Baxter (plaintiff below), instituted this action to recover damages of appellant, Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway Company, for an injury to one of his eyes, alleged to have been caused by a spark or cinder from one of its freight trains. The jury awarded appellee damages in the sum of $925.00, and the railroad company complains.

Appellee was a man 45 years of age, and had been working on railroads for about 25 years. At the time of the accident, he was in the employ of appellant, and was engaged, with some 20 other hands, leveling and ballasting its track. A freight train approached, and appellee and the other hands stepped back into a ditch to allow it to pass. As the train passed, a spark or cinder escaped from the locomotive and lodged near the inner corner of appellee's eye, at a point between the corner and iris. Appellee described the accident in the following language: "We was in the ditch, waiting until it passed. When it went up, the sparks was rolling out pretty bad; high wind, elements was filled with sparks, and one got in my eye." Appellee further stated that the engine cast out a greater amount of cinders and sparks than he had ever seen one do before. When the cinder got in his eye, it burned and pained him greatly. He immediately extracted part of it; then Heber Justice, who worked with him, extracted a second piece. Afterwards, appellee removed one more piece. The next morning, Dr. A. D. Blain extracted a fourth fragment that was imbedded in the ball of the eye. He had never had any trouble with his eyes prior to the accident. If they were diseased in any way, he had no knowledge of it, as he had never had them treated. Heber Justice, who claims to have been near when the accident occurred, corroborates the statements of appellee as to his injury and the removing of the cinder, as well as the amount of sparks emitted by the engine.

Dr. A. D. Blain, a physician, testified that appellee came to his office on October 29. He examined appellee's eye and found in it, right at the corner, a small cinder, about the size of the head of a pin. He found blisters on the eye around where the cinder was sticking. The eye was slightly burned by the cinder, and was red, and the lids were swollen. He removed the cinder and proceeded to treat the wounded condition for about five or six days. Thought appellee was getting along all right, but, on the seventh or eighth day, his eye was much worse. Prior to that time he had never turned up appellee's eye-lids. Upon examination at that time, he found what is termed granulated lids in the right eye. At that time he had no trouble with his left eye. Did not believe that the cinder had anything to do with causing the disease to the eye, but was of opinion that the inflamed condition might make it more susceptible to infection. On cross-examination, he stated that the disease known as granulated lids is an infectious disease. The hot cinder could not have conveyed the poison there. To become infected, it was necessary that the foreign poison be placed there by some means. At the time of the trial, could not see any scar in the eye. The transparent or clear part of the eye was not affected or touched by the cinder. On re-direct examination, the witness testified that, where the surface of the eye is inflamed, it is in the best possible condition to fertilize bacteria. The eye would be much more liable to be inoculated, with disease, when the mucous membrane is inflamed and irritated.

Appellee bases his cause of action upon the negligence of appellant in failing to comply with section 782, of the Kentucky Statutes, which requires all railroad companies to "place in, on or around the tops of the chimneys of engines a screen, fender, damper, or other appliance, that will prevent, as far as possible, sparks of fire from escaping from such chimneys." Appellee's contention is that, it being unlawful to operate engines that are not provided with proper spark arresters, and the statute being designed for the protection of the property and person of the citizen, it follows, as a logical sequence, that there is liability for an injury resulting from a violation of the statute. Assuming, however, that the statute in question was enacted for the purpose of preventing such an injury as appellee received, it does not appear, in this case, that the injury was a probable consequence of appellant's violation of the statute. Nowhere in the record is the size of the cinder disclosed. Appellee claims to have removed two pieces of cinder from his eye; his witness, Heber Justice, a third piece; while Dr. Blain extracted a fourth piece. The piece extracted by the latter was about the size of the head of a pin. There was no testimony as to the size of the other pieces. Assuming that they were not separate cinders, but all particles of one cinder (a supposition not at all probable), and that all of the pieces were of the same size as the one extracted by Dr. Blain, it is manifest that all four pieces would have made but a small cinder. Indeed, the very fact that the cinder entered appellee's eye without striking the iris, and remained there, shows that it was necessarily very small. To make out a case, it is not sufficient merely to show a defective spark arrester and an injury; the injury must have been the probable result of the defective apparatus. It does not appear that appellee's injury was caused by a cinder which a proper screen would have arrested. On the contrary, the evidence as to the size of the cinder is so conclusive as to make it reasonably certain that it would have escaped through a spark arrester of the most approved pattern. The failure to have a spark arrester was not then, the cause of appellee's injury, for the reason that the cinder would have escaped, notwithstanding the spark arrester.

Furthermore, it is manifest, from the language of the statute, that it was enacted to prevent injuries resulting from sparks of fire. It was not intended to apply to cinders small enough to enter the human eye. Indeed, the very effect of a spark arrester is to increase, rather than diminish, the danger to the eye. Large sparks may be seen and avoided; small ones penetrate the eye before we are aware of them. The spark arrester separates the sparks into particles, thus making them smaller and more likely to penetrate the eye. It can not be said, then, that the purpose of the statute is to avoid injuries made more likely to occur by a strict compliance with its terms. Trains must be run by engines. Engines are run by steam. Steam is produced by coal. Coal emits smoke and cinders. While it is possible, in a large degree, to prevent the emission of sparks of fire, it is also true that, up to this time, no device has been invented with openings sufficiently fine to prevent the emission from the coal now in use of cinders small enough to enter the eye, and at the same time permit the smoke itself to escape. Negligence can only arise from a failure of duty possible of performance. The law imposes no liability where human wisdom and foresight can not prevent the injury.

For the reasons given, we are of opinion that the trial court should have given a peremptory instruction to find for the appellant.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, for further proceedings consistent herewith.

ISOM, &c. v. HOLCOMB.

(Filed May 8, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Pleading—Action to Enforce Lien—Infants—The material allegations of the petition were controverted by answer. To entitle the plaintiff to a judgment enforcing his lien, his allegations should have been supported by evidence, but, aside from this, under section 126, Civil Code, although no answer had been filed by the infants, it was necessary to prove the material allegations of the petition. In addition to these errors, no recovery could be had until the required affidavit was filed. (Section 3872, Kentucky Statutes.)

Fields & Fields and Ira Fields for appellants.

Salzer & Baker for appellee.

Appeal from Letcher Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, reversing.

In 1903, the appellee, David Holcomb, filed his petition against the appellants, Mary Isom, who, before her marriage with William Isom, was the widow of Grant Holcomb, and the children of Grant Holcomb, averring that in 1893 he sold to Grant Holcomb, under a verbal contract, a tract of land containing one hundred acres, for the agreed price of three hundred dollars, $138 of which had been paid. That, when the sale was made, Grant Holcomb took possession of the land and occupied it until his death, after which time his widow and children continued in possession. He averred a willingness to execute to the heirs a deed for the land in conformity with the contract, provided they should pay him the sum of $162.00, the balance due—or, that the contract be rescinded and that he be restored to the possession of the land. The children being under the age of twenty-one, a guardian ad litem was appointed for them, and they also filed an answer by their mother, as next friend and guardian. In this answer, they denied that there was no written memorial of the contract between David and Grant Holcomb, or that he agreed to pay for the tract of land three hundred dollars, or any price, except three dollars per acre; or that there was due him on the purchase price of the land any sum except $42.00. For further answer, they set up that Grant Holcomb purchased all the land in a certain boundary, to which David Holcomb could make a good title, the number of acres to be ascertained by survey. That, in pursuance to this agreement, the land was surveyed and it was found to contain only sixty acres, which, at the agreed price of three dollars per acre, would make the purchase money $180.00, of which $138.00 had been paid—leaving a balance of $42.00, which had theretofore been and was again tendered to David Holcomb. They further averred that, after the purchase, Grant Holcomb made lasting and valuable improvements on the land to the amount of $944.00. They expressed a willingness to perform the contract and pay David Holcomb $42.00, or a greater sum at the rate of three dollars per acre, if the tract of land was found to contain more than sixty acres. They asked that plaintiff convey to them the land, or, failing in this, that they recover of him the value of the improvements placed thereon.

By order of court a survey was made, but the record does not show the number of acres found by the surveyor.

Afterwards, by agreement of parties, the affirmative matter contained in the answer was traversed of record. No evidence was taken by either party, or exhibits filed, nor was there any affidavit that the claim asserted for the balance of the purchase money was just. With the record in this condition, the court, at the September term, 1905, entered a decree adjudging that Grant Holcomb was indebted to David Holcomb in the sum of $162.00, for the balance of the purchase money, and that he had a lien to secure the payment of it on the tract of land described in the petition; and directed a sale of so much thereof as might be necessary to satisfy the indebtedness.

In pursuance of this judgment, the land, after having been appraised at $1,000.00, was sold and purchased by one R. J. Holcomb for $230. The purchaser executed bond, with David Holcomb as surety. Afterwards, by an order of court, the equity of redemption was ordered to be sold, and, after being appraised at $500.00, it was sold to David Holcomb for $149. We have not made a calculation, but it appears that both sales realized a sufficient sum to pay the debt, interest and costs. A deed was made, conveying the property to David Holcomb.

The appeal before us was granted on behalf of the infants, by the clerk of this court, and we are asked to reverse the judgment of the lower court because of error committed in rendering it before any proof was taken to sustain the averments of the petition.

Although all the material allegations of the petition were controverted by the answer, the court rendered a judgment giving to plaintiff the relief prayed for in his petition. With the pleadings in this condition, it was necessary, to entitle the plaintiff to the relief prayed for, that he should have supported by evidence the allegations of his petition. Failing in this, he was not entitled to take judgment as if by default for the amount claimed. Aside from this, under section 126, of the Civil Code, although no answer had been filed by the infants, it would have been necessary to prove the material allegations of the petition. In addition to these errors, under section 3872, of the Kentucky Statutes, no recovery could be had for the demand sued upon until the required affidavit was filed.

Upon a return of the case, the lower court will set aside the sales and order a survey made, for the purpose of ascertaining the quantity of land in the boundary described in the petition, to which David Holcomb can make good title—unless it has heretofore been done—and, as David Holcomb has expressed a willingness to execute the contract, upon payment to him of the amount due on the purchase price, with interest from November 30, 1893, until paid, estimating the land to which he can make title, at three dollars per acre, to be credited by $118, as of November 30, 1893, and $20, as of November 30, 1897—the court will, if it is deemed best for the infants, accept from David Holcomb a deed to the widow and children—the widow to have the same interest therein as if Grant Holcomb had died the owner thereof. If the persons representing the children, do not desire to pay the purchase money herein named, or the court does not deem it best for their interest, then the case may be referred to a commissioner to ascertain the value of the permanent and lasting improvements, if any, placed thereon by Grant Holcomb and appellees, and the reasonable rental value of the land during the time they have been in possession. If there is found to be any sum due them, they will be given a lien on the land to secure the same, as well as the amount of purchase money paid, viz: $138, with interest, and if it is not paid by David Holcomb, the land will be sold to satisfy the amount found due appellee. In other words, the case will be adjudged by the chancellor, according to equitable principles.

Wherefore, the judgment is reversed, with directions for a new trial, in conformity with this opinion.

STARETT v. C. & O. RY. CO., &c.

(Filed May 8, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Railroads—Injury to Trespasser—Drunk or Unconscious—Lookout—Appellant had no right upon the track of appellee at the place he was injured, and, therefore, the company owed him no lookout duty whatever. The question whether he was drunk or unconscious from sickness was immaterial.

2. Instructions—Expert Testimony—Physical Facts—An instruction that expert testimony must give way to physical facts, was erroneous. It invaded the province of the jury, telling them what weight to give to evidence. It was also error to instruct the jury that, after seeing appellant, the engineer was not required to stop the train, that the presumption was that he would heed the warning and leave the track in time to prevent the injury. Had the man been standing on the track, it might be different, but a man sitting on a cross-tie of a railroad track asleep or unconscious presents an unusual spectacle, and it was the province of the jury to determine whether or not an engineer of ordinary prudence, seeing a man in such situation, ought not to commence to check his train in time to prevent the injury, should it transpire that he was unconscious or asleep.

A. D. Cole for appellant.

W. H. Wadsworth, LeWright Browning and Worthington & Cochran for appellees.

Appeal from Mason Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker, reversing.

The appellant, Edward Starett, either under the influence of liquor, or being sick and faint, sat down on the end of a cross-tie of appellee's railroad track, just outside of Maysville, Kentucky. He rested his elbows on his knees and his face in his hands, and went to sleep, or became unconscious. While in this position, one of appellee's trains passed along and knocked him off the track, inflicting severe personal injuries, one of which required the amputation of an arm at the shoulder joint. To recover damages for this injury, which he alleged to have been the result of the negligence of those in charge of the train, he instituted this action.

Appellant was clearly a trespasser, and, therefore, the company owed him no duty, except that of ordinary diligence to prevent injuring him after his peril was actually discovered by those in charge of its train. The question as to whether or not the appellant was drunk, or unconscious from sickness, was immaterial. He had no right upon the track of appellee at the place where he was injured, and, therefore the company owed him no lookout duty whatever. (C. N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Reynolds' Adm'r, 31 Ky. Law Rep., 529.)

The circuit judge properly sustained the exceptions to C. M. Barnett's deposition, because the notice to appellee's counsel was not sufficient, under the Code. Appellant should have retaken the deposition if he desired to use it upon the trial.

Instruction No. 7, given by the court, is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that the opinion of expert witnesses in this case, when opposed to the physical facts proven, must give way to such physical facts." This instruction is clearly erroneous. It invades the province of the jury, and tells them what weight to give to the evidence. In addition to this, we do not understand the application of the instruction to the facts in this case. The expert testimony went simply to the ability of the engineer to stop the train in a given distance, and we can not recall any physical facts proved which would conflict with this evidence. At best, the instruction is a mere legal abstraction, and is bad for that reason, if no other.

We think instruction No. 6 should have been omitted altogether.

Instructions Nos. 1 and 2 should have been embraced in one instruction, and the court should have omitted that part of instruction No. 2 which told the jury that, after seeing the appellant sitting on the cross-ties, the engineer was not required to check the speed of the train or to stop it, "but they had the right to presume plaintiff would heed the warning and leave the track in time to prevent the injury, and this presumption prevailed and lasted until the defendant, Donehoo, saw, or had reasonable grounds for believing, that plaintiff did not intend to leave the track, or was oblivious to his surroundings." In this case, as said before, it is not questioned that the appellant was a trespasser, but the evidence tends to show—and, we think, does show—that the engineer actually saw appellant at a sufficient distance to have stopped the train in time to prevent injuring him. We do not think that, as a principle of law, it can be stated that, where a trespasser is seen sitting upon the track, with his head in his hands and his hands resting on his knees, apparently asleep or unconscious, the presumption is that he will hear and obey the signals of the engineer, warning him of the approach of the train. This, undoubtedly, would be true if the trespasser were walking or standing on the track. In that case, the very fact that he was moving or standing up would indicate that he was not asleep or unconscious, but had possession of his faculties, and the engineer would have the right to suppose that he would hear and obey the danger signals. But the same rule would not necessarily prevail where the situation is as detailed in this case. A man sitting on a cross-tie of a railroad track, apparently asleep or unconscious, presents an unusual—not to say extraordinary—spectacle, and we think it was the province of the jury to determine whether or not an engineer of ordinary prudence, seeing a man so situated, ought not to commence checking the train in time to prevent injuring him if it should transpire that he was unconscious or asleep. Our view as to what the court should have said on the subject of appellant's apparent peril, when seen by the engineer, sitting on the track, is expressed in an instruction directed to be given by the trial court in the opinion in the case of Hovius v. Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Ry. Co., &c., 32 Ky. Law Rep., 786; and upon another trial of this case, we suggest that the principle therein expressed be incorporated in the instruction to the jury in this case, if the facts are substantially the same as upon the former trial.

The evidence as to appellant's having been drunk on other occasions than the day on which he was injured was incompetent, as it tended to throw no light upon his condition at the time he was hurt; and, as said before, the question as to whether or not he was drunk, or unconscious from sickness, is immaterial. If it was sought to show that appellant was an habitual drunkard, for the purpose of affecting the question of damages, by reason of his being incapacitated for further labor, then the evidence should have been limited by the court to that question.

For these reasons, the judgment is reversed for a new trial consistent with this opinion.

HOUSMAN v COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed May 7, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Criminal Law—Trial for Murder—Death from Wound—Doubtful Proof—Conviction for Malicious Cutting—Legality of Instruction—On the trial of one indicted for murder by willfully cutting and wounding another with a knife, where the deceased lived for some time after the difficulty, and the proof was conflicting as to whether he died of the wound inflicted or from improper treatment, it was proper for the court to instruct the jury under section 1166, Ky. Statutes, for malicious cutting and wounding, and also under section 1242 for cutting in sudden heat and passion, and a verdict for malicious cutting was properly rendered.

2. Misconduct of Commonwealth's Attorney—Argument to Jury—Limitations Allowable—Much latitude is allowed the Commonwealth's Attorney in the presentation of his case to the jury, the only limitation being such as require him to confine himself to the facts introduced in evidence, and the fair and reasonable deductions and conclusions to be drawn therefrom, and, bounded alone by these limitations, he may, with propriety, appeal to the jury with all the power, force and persuasiveness which his learning, skill and experience enable him to command, and of this character of argument the accused can not complain.

McCormac & Warren and B. C. Seay for appellant.

James Breathitt, Theo. B. Blakey, Thos. B. McGregor, Chas. H. Morris and W. H. Hester for appellee.

Appeal from Graves Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, affirming.

Appellant was indicted for the willful murder of Flem Poplin. On a plea of "not guilty" he was tried, convicted and his punishment fixed at imprisonment for five years in the penitentiary. To reverse that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

He complains that the trial court did not properly instruct the jury, and that the prosecuting attorney, in his closing argument, was guilty of such misconduct as warrants a reversal. His chief objection to the instructions is that the court instructed the jury under sections 1166 and 1242, of the Kentucky Statutes, in addition to the usual instructions given on a trial where the charge in the indictment is murder. The deceased lived for some time after the difficulty, and much evidence was introduced on the trial tending to show that his death was due to a lack of treatment or improper treatment, rather than to the wound with the knife which had been inflicted by appellant. To meet this phase of the case the trial judge instructed the jury that if they believed appellant willfully, feloniously and not in his necessary self-defense, cut and wounded, Flem Poplin with a knife, a deadly weapon, with intent to kill him, but from which cutting and wounding he did not die, then they should find him guilty of malicious cutting and wounding, and fix his punishment at not less than one year nor more than five years imprisonment in the penitentiary (as authorized by section 1166, Ky. Statutes). The court also instructed the jury that if they believed the cutting was done in sudden heat and passion, and without malice, and that death did not result therefrom, then they should find the accused guilty and fix his punishment as defined by section 1242, of the Kentucky Statutes, at a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $500, or confinement in the county jail for not less than six months nor more than twelve months, or both, in the discretion of the jury.

The jury, in their verdict, stated that they found the accused guilty of malicious cutting.

By section 202, of the Criminal Code, upon an indictment for an offense the defendant "may be found guilty of any offense included in that charged in the indictment." By section 263 an offense and the attempt to commit the offense, if the attempt be punishable, may be punished under an indictment for the offense; and, by section 264, if an offense be charged to have been committed with particular circumstances, the offense without the circumstances or with part only is included in the offense; although that charged may be a felony and the offense without the circumstances a misdemeanor only.

The precise question arising in this case was decided by this court in Bush v. Commonwealth, 78 Ky., 238. In that case, as here, there was proof tending to show that the death of the deceased was due to another cause. The circuit court refused to instruct the jury as to malicious wounding. For this cause the judgment was reversed. The court, by Judge Hines, said:

"If a new and wholly independent instrumentality interposed and produced death, it cannot be said that the wound was the natural or proximate cause of the death. (14 Gratton, 601, Livingston v. Commonwealth). This view of the law was not so presented to the jury as to give the appellant its full benefit. It should have been clearly and definitely presented to the jury, that, if they believed, from the evidence that death would not have resulted from the wound but for the intervention of the disease, they should not find the accused guilty of murder or manslaughter, but that they should find him guilty of willful and malicious shooting and wounding, under section 2, article 6, chapter 29, General Statutes; or of shooting and wounding in sudden affray, or in sudden heat and passion, without malice, under section 1, article 17, chapter 29, General Statutes, section 262, of the Criminal Code, reads:

"Upon an indictment for an offense consisting of different degrees, the defendant may be found guilty of any degree not higher than that charged in the indictment, and may be found guilty of any offense included in that charged in the indictment."

"While the offenses denounced in section 2, article 6, chapter 29, of the General Statutes, and in section 1, article 17, of the same chapter, are not degrees of the offense charged in the indictment, they are, in the language of the section quoted from the Code, 'included' in the offense charged." (See also to same effect Payne v. Commonwealth, 20 Ky. Law Rep., 475.)

In the case at bar the circuit court followed the rule laid down in these cases. Bush v. Commonwealth was approved in an opinion by Judge Lewis, in Fenston v. Commonwealth, 82 Ky., 549, and in Barnard v. Commonwealth, 94 Ky., 285, where the court by Judge Bennett, said:

"Here the crime of assaulting with intent to rob can not be made out without establishing an assault or assault and battery with such intent; and if the assault is committed without the additional circumstances of an intention to rob, then the assault is but a mere misdemeanor. But the intent to rob, and a conviction for it, absorbs the misdemeanor, into the higher crime of felony; so likewise the higher crime of murder absorbs the offense of the mere assault and battery. But if the murder be not established, the party may be punished for the assault and battery, and if the person was not convicted of the assault with intent to rob, but committed a common assault and battery, he may be found guilty of a misdemeanor, because it is but a degree of the crime of assault with intent to rob."

These principles were followed in Fagan v. Commonwealth, 38 S. W., 430; Parrott v. Commonwealth, 47 S. W., 452, and Commonwealth v. Yarnell, 68 S. W., 136. The rule thus laid down by this court is approved by the text writers. In Bishop's New Criminal Law, volume 1, section 780, the rule is thus stated:

"In felonious homicide, committed by an assault and a beating, there may be a gradation of offenses, the particulars of which will somewhat vary with the laws of the State in which it is committed. The lowest offense will be assault, the next above it will be battery, the next will sometimes be assault with a dangerous weapon with intent to kill, the next manslaughter, the next murder, and the last murder in the first degree. Each one of these, except the last, will be a less crime included in the greater. And where the common law rule that there can be no conviction for misdemeanor on an indictment for felony does not prevail, a person on trial for any higher one of these offenses may be convicted of any lower one which the proofs establish, if the indictment is, as it always may be made, in a form to include the lower."

The statement of the text is fully borne out by the adjudicated cases where the statutes are similar to those in force here. Thus in State v. Parker, 66 Iowa, 586, under a statute just the same as ours sustaining a conviction for an assault with intent to commit great bodily injury, under an indictment for murder, the court said:

"It can not be doubted that an assault is included in the crime of murder. Usually an indictment, in express words, charges an assault with felonious intent. Of necessity, an assault must have been literally committed in all cases of murder by direct violence. The intent with which the assault is committed relates to its character and indicates its degree. It is discovered, not in the extent or nature of the violence, but in the animus of the perpetrator. It follows that an assault, whether with an intent to murder, to maim, or to inflict a great bodily injury, is included in the crime of murder."

The same ruling was made under similar statutes in Alabama, (Daughdrill v. State, 113 Ala., 7; Thomas v. State, 27 So., 920; Letcher v. State, 39 So., 922; in Texas, Green v. State, 8 Tex. App., 71; Bean v. State, 25 Tex. App., 343; in Kansas, State v. O'Kane, 23 Kans., 244; in Nevada, Ex Parte Curnow, 21 Nevada, 33; in Vermont, State v. Scott, 24 Vermont, 427; in Massachusetts, Commonwealth v. Goodhue, 2 Met., 193, in Delaware, State v. Fleetwood, 35 A., 775; in Ohio, State v. Dowell, 1 Ohio Dec., 38; in Arkansas, Davis v. State, 45 Ark., 464; in Tennessee, Lang v. State, 16 Lea, 433; in Georgia, Thomas v. State, 121 Ga., 331; Smith v. State, 126 Ga., 544; Watson v. State, 116 Ga., 607; in Arizona, Mapula v. Territory, 80 P., 389.) In all of these cases cases the indictments were for murder and the defendant was held punishable for assault. There are a great number of cases applying the same principles to other offenses, but it is deemed unnecessary to cite from other States any but cases of homicide. The decisions, as Mr. Bishop well says in the note to the section quoted, "are not discordant."

The case of Buckner v. Commonwealth, 14 Bush, 603, simply follows Connor v. Commonwealth, 13 Bush, 722. There is nothing in either of these cases conflicting with those cited above. They were decided by the same court that decided Bush v. Commonwealth. Buckner v. Commonwealth being also written by Judge Hines who wrote the opinion in Bush v. Commonwealth. The rule which was followed in Bush v. Commonwealth was pressed upon the court in Connor v. Commonwealth, and the court held that the rule did not apply to the case then before it for the reason that an indictment to be good for the statutory offense referred to must negative the exceptions contained in the statute, and this an indictment for murder does not do. The court, on page 721, thus sums up its conclusion:

"The appellant may have been willing to reply that the Commonwealth could not prove either malice or an intention to kill the deceased; and, not having been notified by the indictment that there would be an attempt to prove that the deceased died within six months may have omitted to prepare that he did not. Not only so, but it is a well settled rule of criminal pleading that an indictment for an offense created by statute must describe the offense in the words of the statute, or in words of similar import. (1 Bishop's Crim. Proc., section 360; Commonwealth v. Turner, 5 Bush, 317; Commonwealth v. Tanner, 8 Bush, 2.) And it is also a rule of such pleading that if the statute creating an offense contains in its enacting clause exceptions, it is necessary to negative such exceptions in the indictment, so as to show that the defendant does not come within any of them."

The rule announced in the Connor case was applied in Commonwealth v. Heath, 99 Ky., 182, and is also followed harmoniously by the courts of other States. (22 Cys., 467.) The authorities harmoniously support the rule and also as one of the exceptions to it that there can be no conviction for the lesser offense where the allegations of the indictment are not sufficient to sustain a conviction for it. Both the Connor case and the Bush case are, as to this, in accord with the authorities generally. In a case of willful shooting, if death results, the offense is murder. (Rapp v. Commonwealth, 14 B. Mon., 499.) Where, therefore, murder is charged in the indictment and the proof fails to establish the circumstance that the person wounded died of the wound in a year and a day, the case falls literally within the provision of section 264, of the Code, above referred to.

Complaint is made of the argument of counsel for the Commonwealth in closing the case. Much latitude is, of necessity, allowed an attorney in the presentation of his case, the only limitations being such as require him to confine himself to the facts introduced in evidence and the fair and reasonable deductions and conclusions to be drawn therefrom, and the application of the law, as given by the court, to the facts proven. Controlled, regulated, and bounded alone by these limitations an advocate may, with perfect propriety, appeal to the jury with all of the power, force and persuasiveness which his learning, skill and experience enable him to command, and of this character of argument the accused may not complain, even though he feels that his conviction may be traceable more directly to the argument of counsel than to the facts proven.

Judgment affirmed.

O'BANNION'S ADM'R v. SOUTHERN RAILWAY CO. IN KY.

(Filed May 12, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Edwards & Godson for appellant.

Wallace & Harris and Edward Colston for appellee.

Appeal from Woodford Circuit Court.

Judge Nunn delivered the following dissenting opinion:

I agree, in the main, with the facts stated in the opinion, except it magnifies the size of the train and the down grade on which it was running, and leaves the impression that the train was moving fast upon a down grade and, therefore, was hard to control. The proof shows that it was up grade to the point where the engineer and fireman were first seen on the curve, each looking out of the window on his side; and a witness who saw the train before it reached the curve, testified that it was moving very slowly when it reached that point. The proof also shows, without contradiction, that the train was stopped within the distance of two hundred and fifty-one feet from the place where the alarm whistle was sounded, and from the time those in charge undertook to stop it, which shows that it must not have been running at a rapid rate of speed. The opinion concedes that there was some evidence showing that those in charge of the train must have seen the child, if it was upon the track, for a distance of five hundred and forty-nine feet, and those in charge of the engine could have saved it, but says that there was no evidence showing that the child was upon the track, except at the place and at the moment it was killed. It is true that no eye witness stated to the contrary, but the circumstances proven show that it was reasonably certain that the child was on the track and had moved, after getting on it, a distance of seventy-five feet. The proof shows, without contradiction, that the child left the yard through a hole in the fence and passed down a little path to the track and at that point, and in the center of the track, it left its little red bonnet and moved seventy-five feet in the direction in which the train was going, at which point it was killed. Considering the place where the bonnet was found, and the age of the child, it is reasonable to infer from the proof that the child passed down this little path, got upon the track and tottled down the track in an attempt to follow its mother, who had shortly before left the house, going in that direction, to gather turnip greens. But the court says the bonnet at that place was no evidence that it was dropped at that point by the child; that the wind might have moved it to that place. That might be true, but there is no evidence of any wind blowing that day. The only place the child could have left the yard was through this hole in the fence, which is a strong circumstance that the child passed down this little path and left its bonnet where it got upon the track. It may be that the court, in speaking of wind, had reference to that produced by the train in passing, if so, it would have carried the bonnet in the direction of the child, and the distance would have been less than seventy-five feet, unless the bonnet had been dropped by the child further back than where the path enters upon the track. From the facts proven indicating the rate of speed of the train, it is clear that the train was not moving fast enough at that point to create a suction sufficient to move the bonnet, which was lying flat in the center of the track.

In view of these facts, I am of the opinion that there was sufficient evidence to authorize the court to submit the case to the jury.

The court says that this two-year-old child was a trespasser, yet it was incapable of any discretion. It is a lamentable fact, for which the court is not in any way responsible, that the General Assembly of the State of Kentucky has enacted a law requiring those in charge of trains to keep a lookout for stock upon the track to keep from killing or injuring it; yet, they have not enacted any law for the protection of children who have not arrived at the age of discretion and accountability. It seems that it felt a greater concern for the protection of property than for human lives. The statute was passed for the protection of stock upon the idea that it could not think and act with reason, therefore, it must be protected by those in charge of trains. Is there not a greater reason for the protection of infants under the age of discretion?

WEBB v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed May 12, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Homicide—Idiots—Continuance—Affidavit for—It was not error to refuse the continuance asked for on the ground that the absent witness, if present, would testify that defendant was so feeble-minded that he did not know right from wrong, and had always been in that condition. The court properly refused the continuance on the ground that such a fact was susceptible of proof by other witnesses who were easily accessible.

2. Same—Idiocy is a state of mind that any one can distinguish as readily as the ordinary medical man.

3. Instructions—Defense of Another—In an instruction the right of the defense of another was predicated upon the fact that neither such other nor the accused, could have averted the apparent danger to the former by any other reasonably safe means. This is the law.

Harlin & White for appellant.

James Breathitt, Attorney General, and Thos. B. McGregor, Assistant Attorney General, for appellee.

Appeal from Barren Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice O'Rear, affirming.

Appellant appeals from a judgment convicting him of murder. On the trial, his counsel relied on two defenses: First, that he was an idiot, not knowing right from wrong; second, that one Shirley, indicted with him as an aider and abettor, was in such imminent danger at the hands of the deceased as to make it apparently necessary to slay him to save Shirley; or, to state it differently, the necessary defense of another. The errors relied on for reversal are two. The first is, that the trial court refused appellant a continuance upon his affidavit, showing the absence of Dr. Winlow, a witness who had been recognized in his behalf, but owing to his illness, could not attend the trial. It it stated that this absent witness was well acquainted with appellant, and would testify that he was so feeble-minded that he did not know right from wrong, and had always been in that condition; and that appellant's father was also an idiot. The court refused the continuance upon the ground, we presume, that such a fact, namely, that the defendant is an idiot, was susceptible of proof by any number of witnesses who were easily accessible; and that it was not shown in the application that the defendant could not establish the fact by any other witness. Unlike lunacy, which may be present in such a subtle form as to require the skilled student of mental diseases to discover it, idiocy is a state of mind that any one can distinguish as readily perhaps as the ordinary medical man. Several witnesses did testify for appellant that he had not a strong mind, and their testimony may be said to cover substantially the point upon which Dr. Winlow was desired to be introduced. In addition, the affidavit for continuance was allowed to be read to the jury as the deposition of Dr. Winlow. We are of opinion that the trial court did not abuse a sound judicial discretion in refusing the continuance. It is true that by virtue of a provision of the Constitution (section 11, Bill of Rights), the accused was entitled to compulsory process for his witness. But, unless it was shown that the witness would testify to some material and relevant fact which could not be established by other evidence accessible to the accused, and equally convincing in its probative value, then he was not entitled to have the trial postponed till he could get such witness. (Kennedy v. Commonwealth, 78 Ky., 447; Robards v. Commonwealth, 94 Ky., 499.)

The second ground urged for reversal is that the trial judge, in instructing the jury upon the right of defense of another, predicated such right upon the fact that neither such other nor the accused could have averted the apparent danger to the former by any other reasonably safe means. This, we think, is the law. The person put in jeopardy of life or limb by an assailant may strike to the death, even if apparently necessary, to save himself. What he has the right to do, another has the right to do in his behalf. But although the person assailed might not have had any other way of averting the danger to himself, than to kill his assailant, still if his rescuer could, with reasonable safety to himself and him who is assaulted, avert the danger to the latter without taking the life of the assailant, he must do so.

The trial court did not err in the rulings upon either of the grounds relied on.

Judgment affirmed.

SILER v. JONES, &c.

(Filed May 12, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Written Instruments—Construction of—The writings or deeds herein considered do not evidence a purchase and sale of the property in controversy, but are testamentary in character, therefore, appellant and his sister should contribute from the shares they received from their mother's estate to their brothers and sisters, so that all would be equal.

2. Limitation—Must be Pleaded—Limitation, to be available, must be pleaded, and can not be reached by demurrer. (80 Ky. Law Rep., 25.)

E. L. Stephens and H. H. Tye for appellant.

HARVARD LAW LIBRARY

R. L. Pope and Greene & VanWinkle for appellees.

Appeal from Whitley Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lassing, reversing.

Appellant filed suit in the Whitley Circuit Court against appellees, in which he alleged that Emily Siler died in October, 1890, leaving surviving her six children and three grandchildren, only heirs at law of a deceased daughter. That, since the date of her death, Polly Jones, one of her daughters, has died, leaving surviving her Bertha Jones, her only child, and John Jones, her husband. That, shortly prior to her death, Emily Siler was in the possession of and claiming title to a considerable body of land, which she had received from her father, Benjamin Rose. That, in the year 1890, and but a short time before her death, and, while she was in ill health, she undertook to divide among her children her landed estate, and as a means to this end, she executed writings whereby she attempted to convey to her said children the shares or parts which she desired them to have. That the writings by which the said lands were conveyed to her children were testamentary in character, and, while they were executed as and for deeds, they were, in fact, intended to operate as a will. That the clause "And $100, paid in hand," was placed in the said instruments of writing after their execution and without the knowledge of Emily Siler. That no part of the $100 mentioned in the writing was in fact paid. It is further alleged that, in 1887, one Wilmer Siley had instituted a suit contesting the right and title of Emily Siler in, and to, two hundred acres of the land which she was claiming and which she conveyed to her children. That, in 1893, this litigation was decided adversely to Emily Siler, so that those of her children to whom she had given the land in question were deprived of the portion of her estate which she had attempted to give them. That, after the determination of this suit, his brothers and sisters, whose land had been taken from them, asserted an interest in the lands which had been conveyed to plaintiff and Polly Jones, which lands were all of the lands not involved in the litigation in question. That thereupon plaintiff, and his sister, Polly Jones, sought the advice of counsel, and, having become satisfied that their brothers and sisters had an interest in the land which their mother had conveyed to them, he and his sister thereupon agreed that he should buy out the interest of the other heirs in and to the land in question. That, acting under this agreement, he had so purchased the shares of all of the children of Emily Siler and of the grandchildren therein. That his sister, Polly, never repaid to him any part of the purchase money so expended by him. That she fully understood and appreciated all that had been done, and that at the date of her death, she only claimed an undivided one-seventh in and to the land in question.

He asked that the deeds be canceled, and that he be adjudged the owner of an undivided six-sevenths interest in the tract of land, and that the appellees, as the only heirs at law of his sister, Polly, be adjudged the owners of the remaining undivided one-seventh interest therein. That, inasmuch as the land could not be divided, he asked that it be ordered sold and the proceeds divided among himself and the appellees, according to their interests. Copies of the deeds from his mother to himself and his sister were filed with, and made part of, the pleadings. To this petition a demurrer was sustained with leave to amend, and plaintiff declining to amend, the petition was dismissed, because of which ruling he appeals.

The first question which we deem it necessary to determine, is the character of the writing by which Emily Siler attempted to invest her children with the title to the land. Was this a sale and conveyance for a valuable consideration, or was it a gift and testamentary in character? It is alleged, in the petition, and for the purposes of the demurrer, is taken as true, that the recitals set out in the deeds of a consideration of $100 paid was placed therein after the execution of the papers, and without the knowledge or consent of the grantor. Each of the papers recites that, for and in consideration of "will" the conveyance is made. Each deed contains the provision that the property shall not be disposed of during the life of the grantor except with her consent. Hence, the very language used in drafting the writing shows that the grantor regarded them as testamentary. She was aiming to make an equal division of her estate among her six living children and the heirs at law of her deceased daughter. She executed to each a similar writing. After her death the title to five of the tracts of land which she undertook to give to five of her children proved to be invalid, and the land was taken from them and plaintiff and his sister, Polly, were left possessed of all of the landed estate which their mother owned, while their brothers and sisters and the children of their deceased sister got nothing. When this condition arose, after having consulted with lawyers, it was agreed by himself and his sister, Polly, and the other heirs of his mother, that they were all entitled to share equally in the lands which his mother had deeded to himself and his sister, Polly, and that, by special agreement and arrangement between himself and his sister, Polly, made, the record does not show when, but certainly after 1893, he bought out the interest of the other heirs, with the express understanding and agreement that his sister, Polly, should she desire to do so, could pay one-half of the money so expended by him in purchasing the interest of the other heirs, and retain one-half of the land. That the said sister entered into this agreement with him is admitted by the demurrer, and it is further admitted that, at the date of her death, although still in the possession of the deed which her mother had executed to her, she was claiming but a one-seventh interest in the land, recognizing title in her brother to the remaining six-sevenths.

There is nothing in the record to show when this agreement between plaintiff and his sister, Polly, was consummated, further than that it must have been done at sometime between 1893 and the death of his sister, Polly, and the record is silent as to when this occurred. The agreement between himself and his sister, as set up in the pleading, under which he purchased the interests of his brothers and sisters in the land, is not such an agreement as the law requires to be in writing, and hence, it does not fall within the Statute of Fraud. Nor does it come within the rule laid down by this court in the cases of the Commonwealth v. C & O. R. R. Company, 94 Ky., 16, and Howton v. Gilpin, 24 Ky. Law. Rep., 630; for it was not an agreement on his part to purchase land for her, but was an agreement entered into between them by which he was to purchase the interest of his brothers and sisters in the land in question. It is true that it is alleged that she had the right to pay one-half of the purchase price and take one-half of the land, still, it was not obligatory on her that she do so. She furnished no part of the money, but, having recognized the right of her brothers and sisters to an interest in the land, and having encouraged and induced her brother, the plaintiff, to purchase same, she would be estopped from denying his title under said purchase. Section 2077, Kentucky Statutes, provides as follows:

"When any real or personal estate shall be devised to any one of the heirs at law of the testator, and the title to the same, or any part thereof, shall prove invalid, such devisee shall have contribution from the others unless it shall appear from the will, that such was not the intention of the testator."

Being of opinion that the writings or deeds under consideration do not evidence a purchase and sale of the property, but are testamentary in character, as a matter of equity and right plaintiff and his sister, Polly, should have contributed from the shares which they received from their mother to their brothers and sisters, so as to make them all equal, and especially should they be permitted to do so, when it is alleged that they had agreed to and wanted to do so. Appellees occupy no better position than Polly Jones would occupy, if living, and if she, by her conduct and agreement, induced her brother, the appellant herein, to purchase five-sevenths of the land, under a statement that she was not claiming same nor asserting title thereto, they are now estopped from denying his right thereto, unless by his own laches he has lost that right. This latter question is not now before us, nor have we in any wise considered the question of limitation herein, for the reason that this court, in the case of Swinebroad v. Wood, 30 Ky. Law Rep., 25, has expressly decided that the defense of limitation, to be available, must be pleaded, and cannot be reached by demurrer. Taking the allegations of the petition as true, if appellees do not elect to pay to appellant one-half of the money which he paid out for the five-sevenths of the land so purchased by him, with interest from the date of its payment by him, the land should be sold, and, out of five-sevenths of the proceeds thereof, appellant should be paid his money, with interest. If anything remains, appellant should receive one-half thereof and appellees one-half. Of the remaining two-sevenths of the proceeds of the sale, one part should be paid to appellant and one part to appellees.

For the reasons indicated, the judgment is reversed and remanded, for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

DUPOYSTER v. TURK.

(Filed May 12, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Lands—Quieting Title—Section 11, of the Kentucky Statutes, authorizes the institution and maintenance of an action to quiet title by one who owns the title and is in the actual possession of the land. As appellant did not have the actual possession of the land at the time he instituted the action, his petition was properly dismissed.

Turner & Turner for appellant.

John E. Kane for appellee.

Appeal from Carlisle Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker, affirming.

This action was instituted in the Carlisle Circuit Court for the purpose of quieting the plaintiff's (appellant's) title to a tract of land containing nine hundred acres, and known as Cane Island, situated in Carlisle County, on the banks of the Mississippi river. The petition alleges title to the land to be in the plaintiff, and that he had been in the actual, adverse possession of it for fifty years prior to the institution of the action. The appellee (defendant) controverted all the allegations of the petition and pleaded title in himself.

Cane Island ought more properly to be described as a peninsular, it being ordinarily bounded by water on three sides; but when the Mississippi river is high, the back water makes it an island.

The evidence shows, without contradiction, that in 1897 the appellee purchased all of the land in controversy from parties claiming to own it, and that they executed to him a deed therefor, which he placed upon record in the Carlisle county court; that thereupon he took actual possession of the land, constructed a four-strand barbed-wire fence across the neck of the peninsular, thus enclosing it; erected buildings upon it, and has had the actual possession thereof ever since.

Section 11, of the Kentucky Statutes, authorizes the institution and maintenance of such an action as this by one who owns the title, and is in the actual possession of land. These two facts are essential to its maintenance. As the appellant did not have actual possession of the land at the time he instituted his action, his petition was properly dismissed. (Cornellison v. Foushee, 101 Ky., 261; Smith v. White, 19 Ky. Law Rep., 802; 41 S. W., 436; Packard v. Beaver Valley Land & Mineral Co., 96 Ky., 252; Smith v. Lewis, 21 Ky. Law Rep., 400; 55 S. W., 551; Armitage v. Wickliffe, 12 B. Mon., 494; Smith v. Gatliff, 9 Ky. Law Rep., 533, 5 S. W., 558; Moses v. Gatliff, 11 Ky. Law Rep., 356, 12 S. W., 139.)

Judgment affirmed.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD CO. v. MELTON.

(Filed May 13, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Benjamin D. Warfield and Waddill & Dempsey for appellant.

Clay & Clay and Gordon, Gordon & Cox for appellee.

Appeal from Hopkins Circuit Court.

Judge Hobson delivered the following response to petition for rehearing, overruling same.

We are unable to see that the Indiana Statute, as construed is in violation of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, or that any right guaranteed thereby is denied by the decision in this case. We endeavored to show this in the original opinion. We are also unable to see that the conclusion we reached is not in keeping with the construction of the statute by the Supreme Court of Indiana. Our conclusion is sustained by the following cases in other States under similar statutes; Georgia, &c., R. R. Co. v. Miller, 90 Ga., 571; Railroad Co. v. Kochler, 37 Kans., 463; Georgia, &c., R. R. v. Hicks, 22 S. E., 613; Campbell v. Cook, 86 Texas, 630; Galveston, &c., R. R. v. Mohrman, 93 S. W., 1090; Sherman v. Texas, &c., R. R., 91 S. W., 561. Hancock v. Norfolk, &c., R. R., 32 S. E., 679; Rutherford v. Southern R. Co., 35 S. E., 136; Mott v. Southern R. Co., 42 S. E., 601; Sizemore v. Southern R. R. Co., 47 S. E., 420; Nicholson v. Transylvania R. R. Co., 51 S. E., 40; Texas R. R. v. Carlin, 111 Fed., 777; 189 U. S., 354; Edge v. R. R. Co., 104 S. W., 90.

The petition is overruled.

NOLAND v. STACY.

(Filed May 13, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Under the statutes the children mentioned in this action are barred from taking an appeal from the order probating the will of their father, as more than five years have elapsed from the date of probate in the county court, and they are barred from filing an action to impeach the order as they brought no such action within twelve months after their arrival at age.

Riddell & Friend for appellant.

Clarence Miller for appellee.

Appeal from Estill Circuit Court.

Opinion of the Court by Judge Nunn, affirming.

It appears that appellee, Elizabeth Stacy, is the widow of Alden Stacy, who departed this life in February 1900, leaving a will by which he devised to his widow all of his property in fee. The will was duly probated in the Estill county court in the month of March, 1900, and the order of probate has never been set aside, modified or appealed from.

Appellant, A. D. Noland, purchased from appellee a tract of land, which was devised to her by her husband, at the price of $4,000.00. He paid $3,000.00 of it and this suit was brought to recover the balance of $1,000.00 and to enforce the lien on the land for its payment. Appellant answered, setting up the will of Alden Stacy and the order probating it, and alleged that it had never been appealed from, vacated or modified, and also alleged that deceased, Alden Stacy, had a daughter, Paulina, who married S. M. Tipton and died before her father, leaving Forrest and Bessie Tipton, her only children and heirs at law, they then being infants having no guardian, curator or committee known to him in this state, and that Forrest and Bessie Tipton have now arrived at the age of twenty-four and twenty-two respectively, and that, by reason of their being infants, at the time of the probate of the will, they have the right to appeal from the order probating same, and to have it set aside and that they have an interest by descent from their father, A. Stacy, in this land; and alleged that the title conveyed by appellee to him is imperfect, and asked that these children be brought before the court and required to assert their interest in this land, if any they had. A demurrer was sustained to this answer, and, appellants refusing to plead further, the court rendered judgment against him for the $1,000.00, enforced the lien and directed the land to be sold to satisfy it.

The only question presented on this appeal is whether or not the will of Alden Stacy, namely, Forrest and Bessie Tipton, are barred by limitation from appealing from the order of the county court probating the will. By section 4850, of the Kentucky Statutes, it is provided that an appeal from an order of the county court probating or rejecting a will to the circuit court shall be within five years after the judgment is rendered probating or rejecting the will, and prosecuted to the Court of Appeals within one year after the final decision in the circuit court. There is no saving clause in this statute for the benefit of infants with reference to appeals to the circuit court from the county court; but by section 481, of the statutes, there is a provision for the benefit of infants, who are not parties to the action in the circuit court and who appeal, providing that such infants shall not be barred from instituting an action in equity for the purpose of impeaching the decision of the circuit court, and having a retrial of the question of probate, provided a petition in equity is filed within twelve months after attaining full age. This court has repeatedly decided that these provisions of the statutes are conclusive of the question; that the other provisions of the statutes with reference to saving the rights of infants do not apply in cases with reference to wills; nor do the provisions of the Civil Code with reference to appeals apply to appeals from orders probating or rejecting wills. (Arterburn's Ex'or v. Young, &c., 14 Bush, 509; Duff, &c. v. Duff, &c., 103 Ky., 348; Bohannon v. Tarbin, &c., 25 Ky. Law Rep., 515; Abbott, &c. v. Taylor, &c., 11 Bush, 335; and Hughey, &c. v. Bidwell's Heirs, 18 B. Monroe, 207.)

Under the statutes and the authorities cited, these children are barred from taking an appeal from the order of the county court probating the will of A'den Stacy, as more than five years have elapsed from the date of probate in the county court, and they are barred from filing an action in equity to impeach the order of probate, even if such an action could be brought to impeach an order of the county court, as they brought no such action within twelve months after their arrival at age.

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

CITY OF COVINGTON v. DISTRICT OF HIGHLANDS.

(Filed May 13, 1908—Not to be reported)

1. Taxation—Water Works system—A water works company, owned and operated by a city for the purpose of promoting the comfort, health and inhabitants of the city, is of a governmental and public nature and for that reason exempt from taxation.

2. Res Judicata—This court has repeatedly held that a judgment in behalf of the State, municipality or district, does not prevent the owner thereof from contesting the right of the State, municipality or district to collect taxes on the same property for other and subsequent years.

F. J. Hanlon for appellant.

Samuel C. Bailey and Chas. W. Youngblut for appellee.

Appeal from Campbell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle, reversing.

This is an appeal from a judgment of the Campbell Circuit Court whereby appellee, District of Highlands, recovered of appellant, City of Covington, $2,357.50 tax for the year 1906, assessed against the latter's water plant, situated, in part, in the District of Highlands.

In Commonwealth v. City of Covington, 107 S. W., 231, 32 Ky. Law Rep., 837, Commonwealth v. City of Newport, 107 S. W., 231, 32 Ky. Law Rep., 820; it was held that a water works system owned and operated by a city for the purpose of promoting the comfort, health and happiness of its inhabitants, is of a governmental and public nature and for that reason exempt from taxation under the State Constitution, section 170, providing that public property used for public purposes shall be exempt from taxation.

These two cases followed and were rested upon the opinion of this court in the case of Board of Councilmen of City of Frankfort v. Commonwealth, 29 Ky. Law Rep., 704, which either overruled or nullified all cases previously decided by this court in which such property had been held subject to taxation.

The three cases, supra, decided adversely to appellee's contentions every question involved in the case at bar. It is true counsel for appellee attempts to distinguish this case from those, supra, upon the ground that the right of appellee to recover from appellant taxes upon its water works plant was fixed and determined in a suit between the same parties, by judgment of the Campbell Circuit Court rendered March 25, 1902, whereby appellant was held liable to appellee for taxes alleged to be due on the property in question for the years 1899, 1900 and 1901, and that on appeal to this court that judgment was affirmed, (City of Covington v. District of Highlands, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 433.) Upon that judgment appellee rests a plea of res adjudicata, it being contended that it operates as an estoppel to the defense interposed by appellant in this case.

HARVARD LAW LIBRARY

In other words, it is insisted for appellee, that the liability of the City of Covington for taxes assessed against its water works system by the District of Highlands for the years 1899, 1900 and 1901, having been fixed by the former judgment, such liability continued to exist for all taxes assessed against the same property in favor of the District of Highlands for each successive year since the rendition of such judgment; regardless of the later decisions of this court overruling, in effect, the opinion of the case in which the former judgment was rendered. In support of this contention appellee cites the case of New Orleans v. Citizens Bank of Louisiana, 167 U. S., 571. Such is not the law in this State, for this court has repeatedly held that a judgment in behalf of the State, a municipality or district, recovering a tax against property for one year, does not prevent the owner thereof from contesting the right of the State, such municipality or district to collect taxes on the same property for other and subsequent years; also that a judgment enjoining the collection of taxes for one year, is not a bar to the taxation of the same property another year. (Bell County Coke & Improvement Co. v. City of Pineville, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 923; Louisville Bridge Co. v. City of Louisville, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1658; Henderson Bridge Co. v. City of Henderson, 90 Ky., 623; Henderson Bridge Co. v. Commonwealth, 99 Ky., 623; City of Newport v. Commonwealth, 21 Ky. Law Rep., 42; Negley v. City of Henderson, 22 Ky. Law Rep., 922.)

In First National Bank of Covington v. City of Covington, 198 U. S., 100, the Supreme Court, in affirming a judgment of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky, rejected a plea of res adjudicata in a case involving a question of taxation, similar to the one under consideration, upon the ground that:

"In the State of Kentucky an adjudication involving the taxes for one year can not be pleaded as an estoppel in suits involving taxes for other years."

From what we have said it follows that the judgment of the circuit court, holding appellant's water plant liable for taxes to the District of Highlands, was error. Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with directions to the lower court to dismiss the action.

Whole court sitting.

Chief Justice O'Rear, Judges Nunn and Carroll dissenting.

PRICE V. GATLIFF'S EX'ORS, &c.

(Filed May 13, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Assignment—Bills of Exchange—Purchaser of Notes for Value—Law of State of Iowa—The notes in controversy were executed to an Iowa concern, sent to it and by it assigned to Price who sues on them. The law of that State places such paper upon the footing of a bill of exchange, and being placed upon such footing defenses existing between the antecedent parties can not apply to Price, the purchaser of the notes, if he was in good faith their purchaser for value, and without any notice of infirmity or fraud in obtaining the notes sued on.

C. W. Lester for appellant.

H. H. Tye for appellees.

Appeal from Whitley Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn, reversing.

This action was instituted by appellant upon three notes, each of which was dated October 4, 1902, and due, one in nine, one in ten and the other in twelve months from their date, and are exactly alike, except as to date of payment. We copy one of the notes, which is as follows:

"75.00.

Iowa City, Iowa, October 4, 1902.

"Twelve months after date, for value received, we promise to pay to the order of the Equitable Manufacturing Co., at the First National Bank, Iowa City, Iowa, seventy-five dollars.

(Signed) "JOS. GATLIFF & CO."

These notes were executed for the purchase price of a box of jewelry sold and delivered by the Equitable Manufacturing Co., through its agent, to appellees. The company warranted the goods to be as represented. Upon receiving the goods appellees signed the notes sued on, which were sent to them in blank, and returned them to the Equitable Manufacturing Co., by United States mail, in Iowa City.

Appellant claims that the notes were assigned to him in due course, before their maturity, for value and without any notice to him of any want of consideration or fraud in obtaining them, and asked judgment upon them for their full value.

Appellees defended the action, and claimed that the notes were obtained by fraud, covin and misrepresentation on the part of the Equitable Manufacturing Co. and its agent; that they represented and guaranteed the jewelry to be of value and such as represented; when, in fact, the jewelry was of no value, and that they ascertained this fact shortly after the execution and delivery of the notes sued on and offered to return the jewelry, and did eventually turn it over to the attorneys and agents of the Equitable Manufacturing Co. This was denied by reply, and this issue was tried by a properly instructed jury which found in behalf of appellees. There was no error committed by the court in the trial of this issue, and if this was the only question involved, we would affirm the judgment.

Appellant's counsel contends that the court should have given a peremptory instruction to the jury to find in his behalf. For the reason that the notes were made payable at a bank in the State of Iowa, and the law of that State, which he pleaded, places such notes on the footing of a bill of exchange when sold and transferred for value before maturity, and to a person having no knowledge of any infirmity or fraud in the execution and obtaining of the notes, and he files with his petition, and makes a part of it, a copy of what is termed as "The Negotiable Instrument Act of Iowa," which took effect in that State in March, 1902. The act is similar to the Negotiable Instrument Law enacted in this State in 1904, which was after the date of the execution of the notes sued on.

Appellees, in their answer, denied that appellant, Price, was a purchaser of these notes for value without notice of their infirmities, and alleged that the contract, under and by virtue of which the notes sued on were given, was made and entered into in the State of Kentucky; that the notes were executed in the State of Kentucky, and it was the intention of the parties to the contract that the law of Kentucky was to govern the rights of the parties under the contract, and that the law of Kentucky was to control in fixing and determining the validity and effect of the notes; that it was never contemplated by the parties to the contract that the law of the State of Iowa was to govern, or that the validity or effect of the contract was to be tested, construed or interpreted, in any way, under or according to the laws of the State of Iowa; that the contract, under and by virtue of which the notes sued on were executed, arose and first existed in the State of Kentucky on the 22d day of September, 1902; that the notes were executed without any reference whatever to the State of Iowa, and the law of that State had nothing whatever to do with the execution of the notes. This answer was not sufficient.

HARVARD LAW LIBRARY

In the case of Stephens v. Gregg, &c., 89 Ky., 461, the action was instituted upon a note similar in language to the note sued on in this action. That note, according to the law of the State of Ohio, was placed upon the footing of a bill of exchange, and the defendant in that action undertook to plead a set-off. This court held in that case that the note was placed upon the footing of a bill of exchange by the law of Ohio, and, consequently, the defense of set-off existing between the antecedent parties could not be allowed against appellees, who were innocent purchasers for value. Under the authority of that case if Price, the appellant, was in good faith the purchaser of the notes sued on for value and without notice of any infirmities or fraud in obtaining the notes sued on, he can recover the amount of them, as they, upon their face, show that they were negotiable and payable at a bank in the State of Iowa, and the law of that State places them upon the footing of a bill of exchange; and this is the only real issue in the case.

It appears that Price was at the head of the Equitable Manufacturing Co. for years. He knew the business methods of that concern and the character of jewelry that it was selling, and it is a little strange that he would credit notes that he held against the manufacturing company, a solvent concern, for the full amount of these notes, and take an assignment thereof without recourse, not knowing at the time the payors of the notes, whether they were solvent or not, they residing in this State and he in the State of Iowa.

On another trial of the case the court will submit this issue to the jury. In giving an instruction on appellees' counterclaim it should not allow them to recover on it any greater sum than the amount of the notes, with interest. The Equitable Manufacturing Co. is not before the court in this action, and appellant, as its assignee, should not be required to lose more than the amount of the notes and their interest in any event. On becoming assignee of the notes he did not assume any liabilities of the manufacturing company to appellees. Appellees can only prevent his recovering the amount of the notes sued on, provided the facts justify them as herein stated.

For these reasons the judgment of the lower court is reversed and remanded, for further proceedings consistent herewith.

While court sitting.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R. CO. v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed May 13, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Trabue, Doolan & Cox, Hazelrigg, Chenault & Hazelrigg and J. M. Dickinson for appellant.

T. L. Edelen, C. J. Whittamore and R. B. Franklin for appellee.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

Judge Hobson delivered the following response to petition for rehearing:

No right of appellant under the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States is violated by the decision. As shown by the opinions of the court cited in the opinion herein, taxes have been imposed based on the assessments in controversy. All other taxpayers than railroads were taxed and if some railroads escaped

It is no reason that others should go free while all taxpayers of other classes paid their taxes. If any railroads escaped they are still liable for their taxes unless barred by limitation.

When the board made an assessment and sent out the preliminary and the final notices as provided by the statute that the assessment had been made, its action was final and the legal effect of its action must depend on what they did and not on the secret intentions of the Auditor.

The petition for re-hearing is overruled, but the opinion is extended as above indicated.

ATTAY v. KNOX GEM COAL CO., &c.

(Filed May 15, 1908—Not to be reported)

Lands—Liens—Levy of Execution—A. recovered judgment against appellee, execution issued, which he levied on its land, which was sold and bought by A. for his debt. The facts bring the case clearly within the provisions of section 1691, Kentucky Statutes, and the lower court properly held that A. was entitled to a lien on the land for his debt by reason of his execution.

John H. Wilson for appellant.

James D. Black, J. M. Roberson and S. B. Dishman for appellees.

Appeal from Knox Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, affirming.

Richard Attay recovered a judgment in the Knox Circuit Court against the Knox Gem Coal Co. for $213.75, with interest and costs. On June 23, 1902, an execution was issued on the judgment and levied on a tract of land that was the property of the coal company. The land was sold on July 28, 1902, and was bought by Attay for his debt. The land not having been redeemed, Attay received a sheriff's deed for it and instituted this proceeding by notice, under the statute, to recover possession. The company and W. C. Freeman were made defendants to the motion. On final hearing the circuit court held that Attay acquired a lien on the land by the levy of his execution for his debt, interest and costs, and adjudged a sale of the land for the debt, under section 1691, of the Kentucky Statutes. From this judgment Attay appeals.

Section 1691, of the Kentucky Statutes, which is a part of the act regulating a proceeding of this character, is as follows: "If it appears in the proceedings aforesaid that the title of the defendant in the execution to the land sold was only equitable, or the land encumbered by mortgage or lien, the court shall, if the purchaser required it, subject the land to the payment of the debt of the execution creditor in the same manner it would do if there was a return of no property found, and may cause such pleadings to be filed and parties brought before the court as may be necessary to a final equitable judgment in respect to the rights of all parties interested."

The facts, as shown on the trial, were these: The Knox Gem Coal Co., prior to the year 1902, had become greatly involved, and suits had been brought against it to enforce payment of the debts. It had bought the tract of land in controversy from John A. Black for $10,000, and owed Black a balance of something over $3,000 on the purchase money. W. G. Freeman, who was president of the company, had advanced to it money from time to time, and had a claim against it for $16,000, for money which he had advanced. Black sued to enforce his vendor's lien, Freeman sued and took out an attachment lien, and other creditors brought suits with attachments. These suits were consolidated, and, at the January term, 1902, the land was ordered sold in the consolidated actions for the satisfaction of the debts. No sale, however, was made under the judgment, for the reason that Freeman paid off the lien debt of Black and compromised with a number of the creditors under an agreement he had made with the other two stockholders in the company, by which he was to take their stock and assume the debts of the company. This was the situation of the title at the time Attay's execution was issued in June following, and at the time the land was levied on and sold. The land not only cost the company originally $10,000, but it had spent on it considerable other sums in opening a coal mine.

HARVARD LAW LIBRARY

When Freeman paid Black the balance of his purchase-money lien, as between him and the company he was entitled, by subrogation, to Black's lien on the land, for the debt was the debt of the company. Freeman also held an attachment lien on the land for his own debt, and the judgment ordering a sale of the land had not been executed. It is clear, therefore, that the case falls literally within the provisions of section 1691, Kentucky Statutes, and that the court properly held that Attay was entitled only to a lien on the land for his debt by reason of the levy of his execution. The answer which Freeman filed was sufficient to raise all the questions presented by the proof. The judgment is in accord with the rights of the parties, and does substantial justice.

Judgment affirmed.

OWENSBORO STAVE AND BARREL CO. v. DAUGHERTY, BY NEXT FRIEND.

(Filed May 19, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Master and Servant—Duty of Master to Instruct Servant—The duty of instructing an inexperienced servant in the dangers of his employment is one that rests primarily upon the master, and where such a servant is exposed to dangers that are unknown to him, the servant is not required to show gross negligence on the part of his superior.

2. Same—A servant who is acting under the direction of his superior may properly obey his orders, unless the danger is so obvious and imminent that a servant of ordinary prudence would not take the risk, and the jury could not have been misled by an instruction having in view this principle.

E. B. Anderson for appellant

LaVega Clements and Ben D. Ringo for appellee.

Appeal from Davless Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, affirming.

William Daugherty in the fall of 1906 was working for the Owensboro Stave and Barrel Co. He was eighteen years of age; and had been in the service of the company about two months, but he had been working on the inside of the factory only about two days. He was working at one of the planers bearing off staves. A man named Lewis Evans had charge of the planer and worked at the front end of the machine. The planer contained some knives which cut the staves as they passed through it. There was a metal covering, but the knives stuck out at the back about an inch beyond the cover. The knives revolved rapidly and when the staves were going through there was a good deal of dust about the back end of the machine. Evans took an oil can and oiled a bearing on the front end of the machine. He then handed the oil can to William Daugherty, indicating to him to oil a bearing on the back of the machine. In oiling this bearing, Daugherty's hand came in contact with the revolving knives and two of his fingers were cut off. He had not been instructed as to the danger and was not aware that the knives protruded beyond the metal covering, or that there was any danger in putting his hand where he did. When he was placed at work at the machine he was told to do what Evans directed him to do. This suit was brought by him to recover for his injuries. The jury found for him and fixed the damages at $800; and from the judgment entered on the verdict the defendant appeals.

The chief ground for reversal is that the court misinstructed the jury or failed properly to instruct it. The instructions are longer than necessary and more favorable to the defendant than they should have been, in so far as they required gross negligence on the part of Evans, to warrant a recovery. The duty of instructing an inexperienced servant in the dangers of his employment is one that rests primarily upon the master and where such a servant is exposed to dangers which are unknown to him without instruction as to them, the servant is not required to show gross negligence on the part of his superior. The boy had come to the factory from the country, and his inexperience with the machinery was well known. He knew that the knives were revolving because he could hear the noise and he also knew they would cut because he could see that they cut the staves; but he did not know that they protruded beyond the metal covering, or that there was danger of his hand's being cut in oiling the bearing. It was a very dangerous place for one who was ignorant of the danger and the danger was such that an inexperienced boy should not have been put at work without proper instruction and warning. It is insisted that the danger was obvious, and that it is one of the cases where no instruction was necessary; but the dust that came out of the machine would, to some extent, prevent the boy from seeing clearly, and as the knives were revolving rapidly, he would have no intimation of the danger unless his attention was called to it; for the knives could not be seen as they revolved, and it would be a natural conclusion that they were revolving inside of the covering, and did not extend out beyond it. The court, therefore, properly refused to instruct the jury peremptorily to find for the defendant. By its instructions the court substantially told the jury that if the plaintiff was inexperienced in the character of work in which he was engaged, and had not sufficient age or intelligence to understand the danger, and if this was known to the defendant's agent in charge of the machine, and he, knowing the danger, negligently directed the plaintiff to oil the machine without any warning or instruction, and by reason of this, he was injured by using ordinary care for his own safety, they should find for him. The court also told the jury that if the plaintiff was of sufficient age, intelligence and discretion to understand the danger, or if the injuries he received were due to his own want of ordinary care, they should find for the defendant. He also instructed them that if the danger of oiling the planing machine was so patent or obvious that an ordinarily prudent person of his age and experience would not have attempted to do the work, then they should find for the defendant.

While the instructions of the court are more numerous than necessary, we do not see that the defendant was substantially prejudiced by them. Under the instructions the jury must have found for the defendant, if they believed from the evidence that the plaintiff was of sufficient age, intelligence and discretion to understand the danger in oiling the machine. This is the main ground upon which it is insisted that the verdict should have been for the defendant, and this instruction was so clear that the jury could not have misunderstood it. The instruction as to contributory negligence was also clear. The verdict of the jury is undoubtedly a finding by them that the plaintiff had not capacity to understand the danger, and that he used ordinary care in oiling the machine. It is insisted that the defendant was prejudiced by the instruction in which the jury were told that if the danger was so patent and obvious that an ordinarily prudent person of the plaintiff's experience would not have attempted to do the work, they should find for the defendant. But the meaning of this instruction was obviously to submit to the jury the question of whether the boy was justified in obeying the orders of his superior. A servant, who is acting under the direction of his superior, may properly obey his orders unless the danger is so obvious and imminent that a servant of ordinary prudence would not take the risk. It is this principle that the court had in mind in giving the instruction, and as the law governing the case on other points had been previously given, we do not see how the jury could have been misled by this instruction. On the whole cause it seems to us that the judgment is right and should not be disturbed.

Judgment affirmed.

WILLIAMS AND SANDERS v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed May 19, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Criminal Law—New Trials—Defendant Tried Without His Knowledge—This case is reversed as to Walter Sanders for the reason that it appears from the record and from his affidavit for a continuance, that he did not know that he was being tried with his co-defendant; that he had no counsel, and that he was under the impression that Williams alone was being tried. The record does not show why he had no counsel. It also appears that the only connection he had with the alleged robbery was in picking up the bill and handing it to Williams.

2. Aiding and Abetting—Instructions—An instruction required the jury to believe that S was present, aiding and abetting W. in the robbery, and the jury may have construed the picking up of the money to be a sufficient aiding and abetting, but he must have aided and abetted with the knowledge that W. was robbing another of the money.

Smith & Smith for appellants.

James Breathitt and Tom B. McGregor for appellee.

Appeal from Madison Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn, reversing.

On the 10th day of October, 1906, the grand jury of Madison county returned into court an indictment charging appellants, Roy Williams and Walter Sanders, with the crime of robbery, committed by putting one Jesse Story in fear and forcibly taking from him, against his will, five dollars in money.

In the month of October, of that year, Roy Williams was placed upon trial, and the jury failed to agree upon a verdict. At the February term, 1908, both of the defendants were placed upon trial, and the jury found them guilty and fixed their punishment at confinement in the penitentiary for a term of two years. Their motions for a new trial were overruled, and they have appealed to this court.

The evidence, as it appears in the record, is very conflicting. It appears that five boys, including appellants, had assembled in a schoolhouse and were playing "craps" and cards, and that they drank two quarts of whisky during the game. It appears that Jesse Story was not engaged in the game of cards, but was banker for his brother, James, and one Casey, who were playing against appellants. Each side accused the other of taking money that they had not won. Finally appellant, Roy Williams, according to the Commonwealth's evidence, drew a pistol and presented it at Jesse Story and demanded a surrender of a five dollar bill. Story threw it upon the floor and said: "There it is," and appellant, Walter Sanders, who was sitting on the floor, picked it up and handed it to Roy Williams without making any remarks. Then the parties separated.

The instructions of the court are correct in as far as they apply to the case of Roy Williams; and there was evidence introduced tending to show his guilt, and, therefore, the judgment against him is affirmed. But we are not satisfied that Walter Sanders has had a trial according to law. The only evidence connecting him with the robbery was the act of picking up the bill and handing it to Williams, and the court, in the instructions, only required the jury to believe that he was present and willfully aided and abetted Williams in the act; and the jury may have construed the instruction as meaning that the picking up the bill and handing it to Williams was sufficient aiding and abetting in the meaning of the instruction. The law requires something more than this. He must have aided and abetted, with the knowledge on his part that Williams was robbing Jesse Story of his money. There must have been a guilty purpose and knowledge on the part of Walter Sanders. Intentionally picking up the bill and handing it to Williams was not sufficient to conclusively show a wrongful or guilty intention on his part.

He filed an affidavit with his motion for a new trial, which was not contradicted in any way, stating that he was tried without any knowledge, on his part, that he was being tried; that he was under the impression that Roy Williams alone was on trial; that he had no attorney representing him; that he did not know his legal rights, and that his case was greatly prejudiced by being tried with Williams. The record does not show that he had counsel, nor why he did not have. Section 11, of the Constitution, provides: "In all criminal prosecutions the accused has the right to be heard by himself and counsel."

The case of Turner v. Commonwealth, 89 Ky., 78, was an appeal from a life sentence. The case had been pending in this court for several terms before the appeal was dismissed. The opinion was rendered on a motion to redocket it. One of the grounds presented by appellant to sustain his motion, was that he was not represented by counsel on the appeal in this court, and the court said: "A suggestion that the prisoner is without counsel or unable to employ one would require the interposition of the court in his behalf."

It has been the custom of the courts of this State, as well as most of the States, and is a commendable one, when a prisoner is unable to employ counsel, for the court to designate some one to defend him, and it is the duty of such counsel, which he owes to his profession, when so designated not to withhold his assistance nor spare his best exertions, in the defense of one who has the double misfortune to be stricken by poverty and accused of crime. (Coo'e's Constitutional Limitations, 5 Edition, 407.) We, however, do not understand the provision of the Constitution and the authorities cited to require the court to appoint counsel for a defendant charged with a felony when he does not desire the aid of counsel, and when the court can see that the person charged is a person of, at least, ordinary intelligence and can fully appreciate the position which he occupies; but in a case like this, when the defendant is without education and has not mind enough to know when he was placed in jeopardy, we are of the opinion that it was the court's duty to interpose and see that he was properly represented.

For these reasons the judgment of the lower court against Walter Sanders is reversed and remanded, for another trial, and the judgment against Williams is affirmed.

STEWART v. ROBERTS, &c.

(Filed May 19, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Contracts—Instructions—Evidence—Appellant resisted a claim for commissions for the sale of his land, setting up in a paragraph of his answer that the contract relied on was not the one he made, and that his signature to it was obtained by the fraud of appellee. It was error for the court not to allow him to introduce proof to sustain this plea, and the court erred to his prejudice in an instruction which directed the jury to find for appellees if they believed that they procured a purchaser for the land, when the answer set out that while they brought a purchaser they stated that the contract was at an end and that it was done for an accommodation.

C. C. Williams and Hazelrigg, Chenault & Hazelrigg for appellant.

S. D. Lewis and Bethurum & Bethurum for appellees.

Appeal from Rockcastle Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn, reversing.

On May 16, 1906, appellant entered into a contract with appellees by which he authorized them to find him a purchaser who would pay $32,000 for about 1,600 acres of land. That part of the contract involved in this case is as follows:

"Said party of the first part hereby agrees to pay to the said party of the second part as his commission for finding a purchaser for said real estate the sum of one thousand ($1,000) dollars. * * *

"This contract may be cancelled by said party of the first part at any time after thirty days from the date hereof, by giving to said party of the second part thirty days' notice, in writing, of his desire to have same cancelled."

This action was instituted upon this contract by appellees to recover the one thousand dollars. Appellant answered the petition, denying the affirmative matter, and by a second paragraph he pleaded as follows:

"The defendant, A. W. Stewart, for further answer and defense says that the contract as set up and described by the plaintiffs, and the same filed in this suit, is not the contract that he made with the plaintiffs."

"He says that at the time said contract was made and entered into, that he did not read said contract, but that the same was read to him by the plaintiff, ——— Roberts, and that said contract did not read, or was not read to the defendant by said R. B. Roberts, with whom it was made, and now set out in said contract.

"The defendant says that the contract he made with the plaintiffs was for only a period of thirty days, and that said contract, as read to him by plaintiff, R. B. Roberts, was not to run longer than thirty days, and that said contract did not provide that it should be cancelled by the defendant giving to the plaintiffs thirty days' notice, in writing, of his desire to have the said contract cancelled.

"The defendant says that he did sign the contract filed by the plaintiffs in their petition, but that it was falsely and fraudulently represented to him at the time he signed the said contract by the plaintiff, R. B. Roberts, who alone acted for the plaintiffs in making the contract, to be a contract for only thirty days, and that it was read to the defendant, A. W. Stewart, by the said R. B. Roberts, as being a contract for only thirty days, and with the agreement and understanding that said contract was for only thirty days, and should terminate at the expiration of said thirty days, he signed said contract solely and wholly upon the false and fraudulent statement and representations made to him by the plaintiff, R. B. Roberts; that at the time he signed said contract he was unable to read the same and did not read same, and signed it on the statements and representations of the plaintiff, R. B. Roberts, which statements were false and fraudulent as to the contents of said contract.

"The defendant further states that the contract, as set up by the plaintiffs, is, therefore, not the contract that he agreed to sign and did sign.

"The defendant further answers, avers and charges that at the expiration of the said thirty days after the signing of said contract, the plaintiffs told him that said contract had expired, and that he, Stewart, might sell his land if he wished to do so, and that, thereupon, he did sell said land, and that plaintiffs did not assist him in procuring the purchaser for the said land, and had nothing to do with obtaining a purchaser therefor."

Appellees filed a reply controverting the affirmative matter in the answer.

The land was sold by appellant and conveyance made August 3, 1906. One of appellees conducted the purchaser to appellant's home about the 25th of July, and appellant claims that it was done as an accommodation, and that appellee said at the time that he knew that their rights, under the contract, were at an end, which was denied by appellees.

The court gave only one instruction to the jury, and it is as follows: "Gentlemen of the jury, if you believe from the evidence that the plaintiffs, or either of them procured for the defendant a purchaser for the land described in the contract sued on, you will find for them the amount sued for, to-wit, $1,000; unless you so believe, you will find for the defendant."

The court, on the trial of the case, ignored the second paragraph of appellant's answer, and refused to allow him to prove the allegations therein. He was asked by his counsel whether the contract presented in evidence was the contract that he made with appellees, and whether he read it at the time he signed it, or if it was read to him, and the court sustained objections to all questions upon this subject and avowals were made stating, in effect, that the contract presented was not the contract made with appellees; that the one he made was to expire in thirty days; that it was expressly so agreed, and that when he signed it he believed it was so written in the contract; that it was so read to him, before he signed it, by one of appellees, and he would not have signed it if he had known that it contained a clause requiring him to give thirty days' notice, in writing, to appellees before it could be cancelled; that this language was not read to him, nor anything like it; that one of appellees came to him while he was in a field at work; that he could read but little, and could not read any without his spectacles, which he did not have with him at the time, and he had to rely, and did rely, solely upon appellees in reading it.

The court erred to the prejudice of appellant in refusing this evidence. The jury, under the instructions given by the court, found for appellees $1,000; and they could not have done otherwise as it amounted to a peremptory instruction in their behalf. The court should have permitted the evidence offered by appellant, and have given an instruction on his defense as set up in the second paragraph of his answer and amendments thereto; for if either one of appellees practiced the fraud mentioned, in obtaining the contract, appellant would not be bound by it for a longer period than thirty days, and as the purchaser was furnished to appellant more than two months after the date of the contract, he would not be responsible to appellees, under the written contract, to pay them the $1,000 for their services. But would only be responsible for the value of the services, not exceeding $1,000, performed by them in obtaining a purchaser after the expiration of the written contract. And then only in the event that appellant had reason to believe that appellees were acting in his behalf with the intention of receiving pay for their services, and appellant received their services without, at the time, notifying them that he would not pay them.

For these reasons the judgment of the lower court is reversed and remanded, for further proceedings consistent herewith.

BLACK DIAMOND COAL AND MINING CO. v. PRICE.

(Filed January 30, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Master and Servant—Mining—Injury to Servant—Negligence of Master—Explosion of Fire Damp—Evidence—Evidence considered and held to show gross negligence in the owner of a coal mine in suffering fire damp to accumulate therein and in not providing proper ventilation, thereby rendering it a dangerous place in which to work, and by the explosion of which the plaintiff was injured.

2. Evidence—Reports of Mine Inspector—Competency—In an action for damages by an employe against a coal mining company for damages for injury received by the explosion of fire damp negligently permitted to accumulate in the mine, evidence of two reports of the mine inspector made shortly before the explosion, was admissible, showing the existence of conditions calculated to produce fire damp.

3. Duty of Master—Safe Place to Work—Obvious Danger—It is the duty of a mine owner to have his mine in a reasonably safe condition for the performance of the duties of the employes therein, and a failure to do so renders the owner liable for an injury caused thereby "unless a danger incident to the employment is known to the servant, or is an obvious danger, he may rely upon the implied assurance and superior knowledge of his employer that the premises are reasonably safe for the purpose for which they are being used."

4. Evidence—Similar Explosions—Subsequent to Injury—Admissibility—Reversible Error—On the trial of an action for damages to an employe in a mine by the explosion of fire damp, it was a reversible error in the court to allow evidence to be introduced showing that other like explosions had occurred in the same mine after the one by which the plaintiff was injured. Evidence of previous similar accidents were admissible, but subsequent ones are not competent for any purpose.

Gordon, Gordon & Cox for appellant.

R. Y. Thomas, Jr., for appellee.

Appeal from Muhlenburg Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle, reversing.

Appellee, L. E. Price, an employe of the appellant, Black Diamond Coal and Mining Company, while engaged at work in its mine was injured by an explosion of fire damp or gas which occurred therein. For the injuries thus received, he sued appellant in the court below and recovered a verdict and judgment against it for $1,000 damages. Appellant was refused a new trial, and by this appeal seeks a reversal of the judgment.

We will discuss the evidence no further than to say that it seemed to have fairly sustained appellee's contention that his injuries were caused by the gross negligence of appellant and its servants, his superiors in the mine, in that it conduced to prove the existence of fire damp in the mine previous to and at the time of the accident, and that its presence was, or ought to have been, known to appellant. It also conduced to prove that the machinery or appliances used by appellant for maintaining ventilation in its mine was insufficient for that purpose, and the want of proper ventilation produced the conditions that created fire damp, and by reason thereof made the mine dangerous.

The evidence further conduced to prove that appellant's mine manager, by whose direction appellee and certain of his fellow servants, approached the place of the explosion, was personally guilty of gross negligence in not making a test of whether there was fire damp in the room into which they were ordered, by causing it to be entered with a safety lamp before they went into it, instead of which he caused one of the servants to enter it with an ordinary miner's lamp or torch, which caused the explosion and consequent injury to appellee and several of his companions.

There was a contrariety of evidence as to the question of whether his injuries were of a permanent character, but there was sufficient evidence on this question to authorize its submission to the jury.

As it was the duty of appellant to provide its employes with a reasonably safe place to work, and especially to warn or protect them against hidden dangers; and its negligence in the particulars named caused appellee's injuries, it is clear that the jury ought to have returned a verdict in his behalf for some amount.

We see no ground for appellant's contention that the lower court erred in overruling the demurrer to the petition. We fail to see that the petition is lacking in any averment of fact essential to a correct statement of appellee's cause of action, hence the demurrer was properly overruled.

Appellant is equally without ground of complaint as to the ruling of the trial court in admitting as evidence the two reports of the mine inspector as to the condition of appellant's mine shortly before the explosion. One of the reports was made about a month and the other nine days before the explosion, both reports showed the existence in the mine of such conditions as were calculated to produce fire damp, liable to explode at any time to the destruction of life as well as property.

Inspection of mines is required by statute, and by the same authority certain duties of a precautionary nature are required of mine owners, the object of which is to protect the lives of their employes.

The two reports in question gave to appellant notice of the dangerous condition of its mine and were sufficient to have impressed it with the necessity of removing the elements of danger, which, if done, would have prevented appellee's injuries.

It is not material whether the reports laid the cause of the bad ventilation obtaining in the mine to a defect in the plan of ventilation in use by appellant or, as claimed by appellant, to the insufficiency of the apparatus for distributing fresh air in the mine, if from either cause the danger was produced, the obligation on the part of appellant to remove it was the same.

The admissibility of such reports of inspection as competent evidence was recognized by this court in the case of Andricus' Adm'r v. Pineville Coal Co., 28 Ky. Law Rep., 704, for the purpose of showing the plan of ventilation, and that such fact was known to the mine owner.

As it is the duty of the mine owner to take every reasonable precaution to have his mine in a reasonably safe condition for the performance of the duties of his employes therein, "unless a danger incident to the employment is known to the servant, or is an obvious danger, he may rely upon the implied assurance and superior knowledge of his employer that the premises are reasonably safe for the purpose for which they are being used."

The reports of the mine inspector being clearly competent, they were properly allowed to be read to the jury.

Notwithstanding the many objections urged by appellant's counsel to the instructions, we are unable to find any error in them. On the contrary they present, with admirable clearness, the law, and, as we think, all the law applicable to the issue involved, and this being true no error could have resulted in refusing the instructions asked by appellant.

There were, however, two errors committed by the lower court on the trial to which we shall now advert. The first being the ruling of the court in requiring to be read to the jury such parts of the affidavit of appellant's chief agent as had reference to the steps taken by appellant to procure the attendance of Garrett as a witness in its behalf. The affidavit was filed to obtain a continuance on account of the absence of Garrett, who was appellant's mine foreman, and present directing the work of appellee and his fellow-servants, at the time of the explosion. Garrett lived at Central City only a few miles from the place of trial. Both a subpoena and attachment had issued against him at appellant's request but neither had been executed upon upon him. In brief, appellant had failed to procure the attendance of Garrett and this fact, together with the steps taken to that end, were set out in the affidavit, as was an expression of appellant's belief that the witness was evading the sheriff and process of the court to avoid giving his testimony in the case. In addition the affidavit set forth with great particularity the facts in respect to Garrett's relations with appellant, and to the mine, the condition of the mine, the explosion and the conduct of appellee in connection therewith, to which it was claimed Garrett would testify. By consent of appellee, the court, to prevent a continuance of the case, permitted appellant to read to the jury, as if it were a deposition, that part of the affidavit containing the facts to which it was expected Garrett would, if present, testify.

Before closing its testimony, appellant's counsel read to the jury only so much of the affidavit as purported to contain the facts claimed to be known to Garrett and expected to be proved by him. But after this was done appellee's counsel in the presence of the jury said to counsel by whom the affidavit had been read, "Did you read all that deposition?" To which appellant's counsel replied: "Yes, sir." Appellee's counsel then said: "You didn't read it all; all this affidavit is filed and I want it all read; want all the affidavit read."

Counsel for appellant objected to the foregoing statements of appellee's counsel and to the reading of the formal, and theretofore omitted, parts of the affidavit, but the court overruled the objection and required the previously omitted parts of the affidavit to be read; to which appellant at the time excepted.

At the time of the ruling referred to, the court said to the jury:

"Gentlemen of the jury, you understand that this is an affidavit for continuance and there is put into it what the absent witness would swear. Mr. Cox (appellant's counsel) as is the usual case for attorneys, read that part of the affidavit showing what the witness would state; that is usual and that is all that is necessary to read to the jury. There is a part there showing the reasons of the absence of the witness; that is usually addressed to the court in order that he may determine whether they are entitled to read the evidence. That is intended for the ear of the court and not the jury and that is the part omitted, but I think the other party may have that read if he asks it."

The court should not have required to be read that part of the affidavit which had been omitted by appellant's counsel. It related only to the question of diligence on the part of appellant in the matter of attempting to secure the attendance and oral testimony of the absent witness, and the further question whether the testimony was so material and important as that appellant could not safely go into trial without it. These questions should be addressed to the court and are to be determined by the court. The jury are not concerned with them and should not hear them read or be allowed to consider them. (Lindell v. Commonwealth, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1307.)

Probably the statements of the court that appellant's counsel had acted as usual in omitting such parts of the affidavit, prevented the inquiry of opposing counsel as to whether he had read it all and the insistence of the latter that all of it be read, from making the impression on the jury that appellant's counsel had intentionally suppressed some material part or parts of the affidavit because of its being hurtful to his client, but this is doubtful. While it is not clear that the admonition of the court was explicit enough to enable the jury to fully understand his meaning, in view of what was said by the court and its probable effect upon the jury, we would be unwilling on account of the error, in allowing the previously omitted part of the affidavit to be read to the jury, to reverse the judgment.

A more serious error was committed by the trial court, however, in permitting appellee to prove other explosions in the mine since the accident. The testimony was irrelevant, misleading and highly prejudicial. It may and doubtless did impress the jury that appellant was not only negligent, but so wantonly or recklessly disregardful of the safety of its employes that it was unwilling to profit by the lesson given it from the accident causing the injuries of appellee and certain of his fellow-servants and thereafter permitted the same conditions to continue in the mine, at the imminent risk of further similar accidents and probable loss of life to its employes; and, therefore, that such misconduct aggravated appellant's offense in suffering appellee to be injured. Whether this incompetent testimony increased the amount of or otherwise influenced the verdict in appellee's behalf we, of course, cannot say, but that it was reasonably calculated to do so, we have no doubt; at any rate, in view of the manifest incompetency of the evidence, we can not afford to speculate as to its effect upon the jury; nor as to whether or not its effect was removed by the admonition of the court as to the purpose of its admission. Evidence of previous similar accidents from the same cause would have been competent to show the dangerous character of the continuing conditions and that the defendant's attention was called thereto, but subsequent similar accidents are never competent for any purpose.

338 MUT. BENEFIT LIFE INS. CO. V. COMMONWEALTH, &C.

For this error of the court the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, for a new trial and further proceedings consistent with the opinion.

.. Whole court sitting.

MUTUAL BENEFIT LIFE INSURANCE CO. v: COMMONWEALTH,
&c.

NORTHWESTERN MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO. v. COMMON-WEALTH, &c

CONNECTICUT MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO. v. COMMON-WEALTH, &c.

(Filed February 18, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Insurance Companies—Taxation—Liability—Premiums on Face of Policy—Under Kentucky Statutes, section 4226, every life insurance company, other than fraternal assessment companies, not organized under the laws of this State, but doing business therein, are required to pay a tax on premiums receipted for on the face of the policy for original insurance, without regard to whether it was paid in cash or otherwise, or not paid at all, but as to renewal premiums the tax is assessed only upon the amount the company receives in cash or by note or in some manner other than cash.

2. Same—Premiums Not Collected—Set Apart for Emergency—Designated as Dividend—Where, however, an insurance company stipulated in its policy for a premium larger than was necessary to carry its risks, but which might be needed in certain conditions, and set aside so much of the first premium as a guarantee against misfortune, and for the succeeding years did not collect the whole amount first stipulated, but designated it as a dividend, the company was not liable to taxation on the premiums stipulated, but only for the amount actually collected.

D. W. Lindsey, W. O. Harris, Humphrey & Humphrey, Tyler Barnett, Barnett & Barnett and William Cromwell for appellants.

N. B. Hays and Chas. H. Morris for appellees.

Appeals from Franklin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker, reversing.

These three cases involve precisely the same questions, and were heard together. In deciding them, we shall use, for the purpose of illustrating the principles of law involved, the data furnished by the record in Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co. v. Commonwealth of Kentucky, &c.

In this action the appellee charges the appellant with having received, and with failing to report for taxation, in each of the years respectively ending June 30th, 1900, to June 30th, 1904, inclusive, certain sums of money as premiums on business done in this State.

It is not claimed that it failed to make a regular report, for each of the years, of premiums received; but the contention on the part of the appellee is that such reports did not embrace all of the premiums received by appellant, but on the contrary omitted premiums to the extent of the amounts alleged in the petition for the years respectively mentioned.

The following table will show the dates of the reports made for each year ending June 30th; the amount of the premiums reported for each year, as received in this State or out of this State, on business done in this State; the amounts of such premiums appellee claims should have been reported, the alleged deficits in the reports, and the tax claimed by appellee to be due on such deficit:

Date of Report.	Amt. Prens. Reported.	Amt. Prens. Claimed.	Alleged Deficit.	Tax Claimed.
July 1, 1900	$497,587.25	$563,582.03	$65,994.78	$1,319.89
July 1, 1901	545,024.89	607,440.89	62,416.00	1,248.32
July 1, 1902	561,681.78	626,397.74	64,715.96	1,294.32
July 1, 1903	578,399.48	642,093.00	63,693.52	1,273.87
July 1, 1904	601,962.28	666,802.53	64,840.25	1,296.80

It is clearly shown by the evidence, and conceded by counsel for the State, that the reports as made by the appellant company embrace all first, or original, premiums—the premiums receipted for on the face of the policies—and also the subsequent, or renewal premiums, except to the extent that such renewal premiums were reduced by what is termed “dividends.” It is the contention of the appellee that such renewal premiums should have been reported without such reduction or abatement, as having been received by the company “in cash or otherwise;” while the appellant company contends that the reduction for the nominal, or stated, premium as made was a contract right of the policy holder, and constituted no premium or part of premium received by the company “in cash or otherwise.” And these opposing contentions present the question in this case.

The case turns upon what shall be the construction given to section 4226, of the present Kentucky Statutes, which is the revenue law of 1902, as carried into these statutes. This section, 4226, in our present Kentucky Statutes, is a revision of section 4227, of the Kentucky Statutes, prior to the revenue law of 1902. Section 4227, of the tucky Statutes, prior to 1902, reads as follows:

“Every life insurance company, other than assessment life insurance companies, not organized under the laws of this State, but doing business therein, shall, on the first day of July in each year, or within thirty days thereafter, return to the Auditor of Public Accounts, for deposit in the insurance department, a statement, under oath, of all premiums received in cash or otherwise in this State, or out of the State, on business done in this State during the year ending the 30th day of June last preceding, or since the last returns were made, and shall, at the same time pay into the State treasury a tax of two dollars upon each one hundred dollars of said premiums as ascertained and upon payment, file a statement thereof with the Secretary of State.”

The present section, 4226, reads as follows:

“Every life insurance company, other than fraternal assessment life insurance companies, not organized under the laws of this State, but doing business therein, shall, on the first day of July, in each year, or within thirty days thereafter, return to the Auditor of Public Accounts, for deposit in the Insurance Department, a statement, under oath, of all premiums receipted for on the face of the policy for original insurance, and all renewal premiums received in cash or otherwise in this State, or out of this State, on business done in this State during the year ending the 30th day of June, last preceding, or since the last returns were made, and shall at the same time pay into the State treasury a tax of two dollars upon each one hundred dollars of said premiums as ascertained.”

The language of section 4227 is: * * * “all the premiums received in cash or otherwise in this State or out of the State, on business done in this State during the year ending the 30th day of June last preceding." * * *

The present statute reads: * * * "all premiums receipted for on the face of the policy for original insurance and all renewal premiums received in cash or otherwise in this State or out of this State on business done in this State during the year ending the 30th day of June, last preceding." * * *

This difference will be observed. The original statute was: "All premiums received in cash or otherwise in this State." The present statute is: "All premiums receipted for on the face of the policy for original insurance, and all renewal premiums received in cash or otherwise in this State." The significance of this change is apparent when we come to consider the facts. A policy of insurance stipulates for a certain annual premium. It acknowledges the receipt of the first annual premium. This first annual premium may or may not be received in full by the insurance company, but under our present statute it matters not whether the original premium is or is not paid in full by the policy holders. The present statute requires a tax on premiums receipted for on the face of the policy for original insurance. The old statute simply provided for all premiums received in cash or otherwise, making no distinction between first premium and subsequent premiums. The present statute does make a distinction, requiring the tax to be paid upon the full premium receipted for on the face of the policy for original insurance, without regard to whether it was paid in cash or otherwise, or not paid at all. The present statute provides, however, in regard to the other premiums as follows: "All renewal premiums, received in cash or otherwise in this State."

The appellant, every year before a premium falls due, determines how much of the stipulated premium it will exact from the insured. The diminution, whether it be called a "dividend" or a "surplus," goes in abatement of the renewal premium, and the insured pays only the difference. The insurance company, therefore, receives not the full renewal premium, but the difference between the stipulated premium and this dividend or portion of surplus. All that the insurance company receives in cash or otherwise is this difference. The old statute taxed the insurance company upon the amount which it received in cash or otherwise on the original premium, as well as upon what the insurance company received in cash or otherwise upon subsequent premiums. The present statute taxes the insurance company upon the full amount of the original premium without regard to whether the insurance company receives it or not; but in reference to renewal premiums, taxes the company simply upon the amount it receives of these renewal premiums in cash or otherwise. It is obvious that the word "otherwise" means payment by note or payment in some manner other than cash.

The Commonwealth is claiming to tax the appellant upon money which it never received at all. The appellant says that it is only required to pay upon money which it receives in cash or otherwise, except that it admits that it is bound to pay the full tax on the original premium receipted for on the face of the policy, without regard to whether it in fact received such premium or not.

The answer sets out the course of business of the appellant, and shows what money it has received and what money it has not received, and shows that the difference between it and the Commonwealth is that the Commonwealth is attempting to charge it with the full amount of premiums stipulated for in the face of the policy, although it does not exact and has not the right to exact such full amount, being required to give to the policy holder the advantage of the dividend or surplus, or whatever it may be called, in diminution of the nominal premium.

We will now examine some of the adjudications of other courts on similar or analogous questions.

The case of The German Insurance Co. v. Van Cleave, 191 Ill., 410, involved the question, whether premiums rebated to the insured upon the cancellation of the policies should be included in the words "gross amount of premiums received," as used in a taxing statute. The court said:

"In the construction of the act, effect is to be given to the intention of the Legislature, and that intention appears to be to levy a tax on the gross income of foreign fire insurance companies. The object is to require such companies to pay, at designated times, a tax of two per cent. on the gross receipts of their business for the previous calendar year." * * *

"According to the argument which would include premiums returned on canceled policies, if an insurance company should issue a policy and receive a premium and at once cancel the policy and return the premium it would have done the amount of business represented by the policy and the amount received would be a premium for insurance business done. We do not think the language used will bear that construction. The merchant would not think of including in the gross receipts of his business any sales of goods with the privilege of return, on the part of the purchaser, where they are in fact returned. In such a case there is, in the end, no sale and no business done, in any proper sense." * * *

"The apparent purpose of the act is to levy a tax on gross income, and not upon money which is in no sense revenue to the insurance company."

In People v. Miller, 177 N. Y., 515, it was held:

"Premiums unearned by a domestic insurance company, and paid in advance, but refunded upon cancellation of policies, should not be included in the 'gross amount of premiums received' for business done, in this State, for the purpose of taxation, and this, notwithstanding the statute declares the term 'gross premiums' shall include, in addition to all other premiums, such premiums as are collected from policies subsequently canceled and from reinsurance, since no 'business is done' after the cancellation of a policy."

In State v. Hibernia Insurance Co., 38 La. Ann Rep., 465, the statute provided for an insurance license "based on the gross amount of premium, provided the gross amount of annual premiums shall not include unearned or returned premiums and re-insurances." The insurance companies deducted as "unearned and returned premiums and re-insurance" the rebate allowed to insurers. It does not appear clearly in the opinion what this rebate was. The State contended that rebates were not to be deducted. The court said:

"But we think it very clear that, in using the term 'gross amount of premiums' the law refers to premiums actually received or earned; and as, by the terms of their contracts, the companies allowing such rebates only receive the difference between the premium stipulated and the rebate, it seems clear that such difference only constitutes the gross premiums earned. The contracts are made with the full knowledge and understanding that such rebates are to be allowed, and it is a mistake for the State to say that they are mere voluntary returns by the company."

Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. v. Durenkamp, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 2249, grew out of an ordinance of the city of Covington requiring insurance companies to pay one and one-half per cent. on premiums "received on business done in the city of Covington from a named date to another named date." The court held that this meant premiums on new policies issued between those dates; as otherwise no meaning would be attached to the words "on business done." The court said:

"There is no clearer or more reasonable rule of construction than that every clause or word of an ordinance should be presumed to have been intended to have some force and effect. And 'ordinances levying taxes and imposing duties on citizens are to be construed most strongly against the government, and in favor of the citizen, and their provisions are not to be extended by implication beyond the clear import of the language used, or to enlarge their operation so as to embrace matters not specifically pointed out, although standing upon a close analogy;' (Sutherland on Statutory Construction, section 361; United States v. Wigglesworth, 2 Story, 369;) and 'statutes regulating trade and the conduct of merchants ought to be perfectly clear and intelligible to persons of their description.' (Dwaris on Statutes, 742.)"

The case of Commonwealth v. Penn Mutual Life Insurance Co., decided by the appellate branch of the Court of Common Pleas of Pennsylvania, and reported in 1 Dauphin Co. Rep., 233, involved the precise question we have here. In their opinion the question for adjudication is stated as follows:

"This case was, by consent of the parties, tried by the court without a jury.

"It is an appeal by the defendant from the settlement of an account by the Auditor General, approved by the State Treasurer, for a tax on net earnings or income for the years 1873 to 1887, inclusive, with interest and penalties for failure to report and pay. From the evidence we obtain the following finding of facts:

"1. The defendant is a mutual life insurance company, incorporated by the act of assembly of the State of Pennsylvania, approved February 24, 1847 (P. L., 159), and several supplements thereto, only one of which, approved March 11, 1870 (P. L., 384), need be specifically mentioned.

"2. During the years for which this tax is claimed, and for many years previous, the business of the defendant was that of mutual life insurance, on the level premium plan. Each policy issued, stipulated for the payment of an annual premium graduated for a given amount of risk, according to the age of the insured at the date of the policy. The rate of premium was fixed at a figure higher than that which experience had shown to be sufficient to meet the risk. The insured could not be called upon to pay more than the rate so fixed; he might not be called upon to pay so much. In fact, he never was called upon, after the first year, to pay it at all, but an abatement was made at the beginning of each year, the amount of which depended upon the calculations of the actuary applied to the treasurer's statement of the business of the preceding year; and in making this statement, the treasurer always included in his figures, as though it had been received by the company, the amount of this abatement, which had been made from the premiums of the preceding year, and which had not actually been received by the company. The amount of the abatement, thus ascertained by the calculations of the actuary, applicable to the premiums of each policy holder, was then deducted from the amount of the premium stipulated for in the policy, and the balance only was collected and received by the company. These abatements are called, on the books of the company, and in its annual statements and its reports to the Insurance Commissioner, 'dividends to policy holders' or 'surplus to policy holders.' But they are, in fact, just what we have stated above."

And then, among other things, it is said:

"But we think the so-called 'dividends to policy holders' are not 'net earnings or income,' and do not represent such earnings, and that defendant is not liable to tax in respect to them. Notwithstanding the mass of testimony and exhibits on this point, including the ingenious questions of the able counsel on either side, followed by answers from the officers of the company, called as witnesses, not always as clear or intelligent as might have been expected, the facts are few and simple, as we have found them above.

"It is strenuously contended by the able special counsel for the Commonwealth, that, because these abatements are entered on the books of the company as 'dividends to policy holders' or 'surplus to policy holders,' they, therefore, represent net earnings or income, and furnish a measure of the liability of the company to taxation. Whatever these statements may be called, they are, in reality, what we have stated in the finding of facts. The amounts they represent are mere negative quantities, abstract statements not of what is, or is to be received or to 'come in,' but of what is not to be received. The calculations are made for the express purpose of determining how much of the amount which the company might receive shall not be received, and one of the items which make up the apparent amount upon the basis of which this calculation is made, is the sum which was abated and not received during the preceding year. In short, the whole proceeding is merely a method by which the books of the company are made to show what would be the actual gross debtor and creditor account of the company, if the whole amount of the premiums was collected and a part was afterwards returned to the policy holders, while in fact, it is neither collected nor returned. The reason for fixing the premium stipulated for at a higher rate than sufficient, under ordinary circumstances, to cover the risk is, of course, that the company may be strong enough to stand in case of extraordinary mortality among its members.

"It is a fallacy to suppose that the real nature of the transaction is, that the policy holder pays his whole stipulated premium, and receives his share of the dividend or distribution of surplus. The relation between him and the company is not that suggested to one of the witnesses by the counsel for the Commonwealth. This witness was both a salaried officer of the company and a policy holder, and he was asked by counsel, 'if you owe $130 annual premium and the company pay you the amount of your salary less this sum, and give you a receipt for this, is it not the same to you as if it pay your salary in full and you pay the $130?' The answer must be, of course, 'it is.' But it is the same only because he happens to unite two characters in the same person—officer and policy holder. The transaction is really and essentially double. The officer gets his whole salary, and the policy holder pays his premium. And if the salary were subject to an income tax, honesty would require that it be all returned for taxation, and not the amount less the premium paid.

"The mutual debts are of a different nature, one from the other, and if on suit for one, the other was set up in defense, it must be as a set-off. But if the policyholder were sued for his annual premium, and used the dividends as a defense, pro tanto, it would be by way of recoupment simply; not as independent claim to balance in part the claim against him, but part of the data to show the amount which he really owed. This shows that the transaction here is essentially simple."

The difficulty which surrounds the appellant in this case, grows out of his method or bookkeeping, and its use of terms out of their ordinary signification. What really happened in every case was that the stipulated premium was much larger than the company actually needed to carry the risk under ordinary conditions; but if extraordinary conditions should arise, the whole might be needed. Thus, if an epidemic swept over the country, the losses among its policy holders would, perhaps, be abnormal, and then the company would need the full amount of the contract premium. Now, in order to prepare in advance against such untoward contingencies of the future, the company collected the first year, the full amount of the premium, and set aside so much of it as was over-payment, as a guaranty against misfortune; and then said to its policy holders: "You need not pay hereafter, the full amount of the stipulated premium, but may omit the overplus, because we have already collected from you more than you should have paid, under ordinary circumstances, and we are holding that as protection against extraordinary losses. This overplus thus far, is still on hand, and, as long as it remains, you will not have to pay the full amount of the premium." The company, on its books, calls this a "dividend," and pretends to credit the annual premium with it.

Now, the truth is, that this over-payment is not a dividend in any sense of the term; nor is the failure of the company to collect the full amount of the premium in after years a credit in any sense of the term. A sum of money applied as a credit can never be used for the same purpose again. If I owe "A" fifty dollars and he owes me five notes of one hundred and fifty dollars each, when I credit him on the first note with the fifty dollars I owe him, he can not require me to credit that same sum on the remaining four notes as they fall due. But that is just what the State is insisting on being done in this case. The policy holder makes the over-payment of premium technically called "loading," and the company holds this sum and calls it a "dividend," and the State says that this is a crediting of this same sum on each of the after accruing premiums, and should be considered as so much collected each year by the company, and as having been paid "otherwise" than as cash.

In order to bring this matter before our minds distinctly, let us assume that in 1900 "A" takes out a policy in the appellant company, in which the stipulated premium is one hundred and fifty dollars per annum; that of this sum one hundred dollars would be sufficient to carry the risk in ordinary times, and that fifty dollars is what is called "loading" collected in order to meet the contingencies of the future. Now, in 1900, the policy holder pays the full amount of the premium—one hundred and fifty dollars. After that the company says to him, "You need only pay one hundred dollars per annum; and as long as the fifty dollars of over-payment, you made in 1900, remains unexhausted, your annual premium will be really one hundred dollars, instead of one hundred and fifty dollars as stated in the policy." The account in five years would be stated as follows:

1900. Beginning of the insurance period—premium paid,	$150 00
1901. Premium paid	100 00
1902. Premium paid	100 00
1903. Premium paid.....	100 00
1904. Premium paid	100 00
1905. Premium paid	100 00

Total	$650.00
-------------	----------

Obviously, the total amount of money paid by the policy holder, and received by the insurance company, is six hundred and fifty dollars, and it has received no more, either in cash or otherwise; and on the sum so received it is conceded that appellant has paid the tax due. Now, to tax the company on the fifty dollars per year, which it did not collect, but left in the pockets of its policy holders, is to tax it on money that it never received, either in cash or in any other manner.

To consider the over-payment of fifty dollars, made at the beginning of the contract period, as money belonging to the policy holder, and a credit to be made each year on the annual premium, is to make the same sum of fifty dollars pay in credits a debt equal to itself each year, during the life of the policy. If the policy continued for twenty years, then, one sum of fifty dollars would pay off and extinguish a thousand dollars of debt due for premiums; i. e., each year it would be credited on the contract premium of one hundred and fifty dollars, and reduce it to one hundred. So that, as said before, one sum could be credited on annually accruing debts ad infinitum.

If we look only at the method of bookkeeping of the appellant and have regard only to the terms it uses, there is much in the appearance of the case thus presented to warrant the position of the Commonwealth as to its right to tax the so-called "dividends" said to be annually credited on the premiums due from policy holders; but the law looks below the mere appearance of things, and has regard to the reality; and thus looking, it sees that the appellant misuses the terms "dividend" and "credit," and, as shown above, pays no dividend and allows no credit; but that, in reality, all that it does is to collect on the first premium a sum sufficient to meet the contingencies of any given year of the future, and then abstains from collecting any further over-payments while the first remains on hand.

If it were permissible to extend our investigation from the law of the case, into the realm of economic policy, much might be said in favor of encouraging these so-called "annual dividend paying" companies, who manage their affairs economically and leave in the pockets of the people these misnamed "dividends" rather than, as is done by the deferred dividend companies, collect unnecessary premiums and hold them for long periods of time; thus piling up gigantic sums of money in our financial centers with which, it is charged, politicians are corrupted, speculation is engendered, and the fair prospect of legitimate commerce is one day paralyzed by the unnatural stringency of the money market, and on another maddened with the intoxication of an equally unnatural inflation of capital; all in the interest of the speculators and brokers, and detrimental to that of the people at large. But with this phase of the question, we have nothing to do; our duty is wholly performed by construing the statute so as to require the corporation to pay taxes on every dollar it actually receives either in "cash or otherwise," but not extending its terms so as to make it pay on what it does not receive, but leaves in the pockets of its policy holders.

For these reasons, the judgments are reversed with directions to dismiss the petitions.

Whole court sitting.

Chief Justice O'Rear and Judge Nunn dissenting.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD CO., &c. v. SCHMIDT, TRUSTEE, &c.

(Filed February 21, 1908—To be reported.)

Railroads — Mortgages — Trustee — Authority — Action—Reimbursement—Persons Liable—Where an unfinished railroad executed to another road a lease upon its road and also a mortgage, in order to obtain funds to complete the road, and the lessee executed a mortgage on its earnings to the trustee for the bondholders, the three writings which were executed simultaneously, must be considered as one contract, though the mortgage of the earnings considered alone, created merely a dry, naked trust, where by the other mortgage, the trustee was authorized to take possession of the road, which, under the law then in force, he could not do, his only remedy was to bring a suit in equity as trustee against the lessee road for the benefit of his trust, and was entitled to be reimbursed by the bondholders for the expenditure he was required, in the prosecution of such suit, for which the lessee road, as one of the bondholders, was liable for its proportional share, although the suit was against its wishes and not for its benefit.

Helm & Helm, Helm Bruce & Helm and Benj. D. Warfield for appellants.

Trabue, Doolan & Cox for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, Second Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle, affirming.

After many years' litigation and great expense, A. L. Schmidt, as trustee for various holders of bonds of the Northern Division of the Cumberland and Ohio Railroad Company, appellants' lessor, financially compelled of appellants an accounting for the earnings it received from its lease of that company's road, accrued to July 1st, 1890, and for the amount thereof, to-wit: $90.053.34, appellee obtained judgment against appellant as of March 21st, 1898. The recovery was had under certain mortgages upon the road bed and property of the Northern Division of the Cumberland and Ohio Railroad Company, and its earnings, received by appellant as lessee of the road.

The sum thus recovered, less a credit for 250 coupons and 24 bonds of the Northern Division of the Cumberland and Ohio Railroad Company which appellant then claimed to own, was paid by it under rule into court, and subsequently distributed.

The order awarding the rule under which appellant paid the money into court, is as follows:

"But the allowance of the said credit on account of the 250 coupons, and on account of the 24 bonds, shall not be taken and held as an adjudication by the court herein that the said Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company, as beneficiary under the trust held by plaintiff, is exempt from or liable for any part of the charges and expenses of the plaintiff trustee and said trust. If it shall hereafter appear, upon the distribution of the fund herein, that said coupons should not have been paid in full, but should have been paid pro rata with other coupons, or that the amount allowed the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company on said 24 bonds is more than the pro rata share of said bonds, then the amount of excessive payment made upon said coupons or upon said bonds, shall be adjusted in the distribution of the fund herein whenever the same shall be made, so as to equalize the beneficiaries under the said trust with the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company as the owner of the 250 coupons and said 24 bonds."

By a subsequent ruling of the court, an accounting for earnings from the same source was required of appellant from the year 1890 down to the year 1898, and after much delay in the lower court, and an appeal to this court (Schmidt v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 37 Ky. Law Rep., 21) appellee obtained judgment against appellant on March 1st, 1905, for $128,431.75, with six per cent. interest from February 21st, 1903. When appellant was called upon to settle this judgment it amounted to $144,371.36, and in addition, there was due appellee as ordinary costs in the action, $523.10.

In settling this judgment, appellant claimed the right to retain and did retain $11,549.70 on account of 20 bonds of the Northern Division of the Cumberland and Ohio Railroad Company it owned and which it insisted should be paid out of appellee's recovery. These bonds amounted to 20-250 of the amount recovered and after deducting the $11,549.70, appellant paid appellee $133,344.76.

When the payment was made the lower court entered the following order:

"The plaintiff claims that the amount of $133,344.76, this day paid in by the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company, is not in full of plaintiff's claim under the judgment herein rendered on March 1st, 1905, and this action is retained on the docket for the purpose of hereinafter, by proper proceedings, determining that question and any other questions not heretofore finally disposed of."

Later appellee filed in the court below his affidavit setting forth the items and amounts of extraordinary costs, in the matter of attorney fees, commissioners' fees, and other necessary expenses, he was compelled to incur in the prosecution of the claims of his cestuis que trust, and asked a rule against appellant, requiring it to pay into court the amount it retained when it paid over the $133,344.76, or enough thereof to pay its (appellant's) proportion of the extraordinary costs and expenses set forth in appellee's affidavit. By its response to the rule, appellant denied any liability on its part for the costs and expenses sought to be recovered and presented various reasons for its unwillingness to pay them; the principal ones being that appellee, Schmidt, was given no authority express or implied, by the instrument making him a trustee, to bring or maintain the action in which such costs were incurred; that the interests of the trustee and his co-plaintiffs all the while were adverse to those of appellant, and that throughout the litigation appellant was represented by counsel of its own choosing.

The response of appellant was held insufficient, the rule made absolute and judgment entered compelling appellant to pay the costs claimed under the rule, amounting, altogether to $8,901, with six per cent interest on $6,670 thereof from June 30th, 1900, and like interest on $2,231 thereof from March 1st, 1905. Appellant complains of that judgment and by this appeal seeks its reversal.

The several items embraced in the aggregate of costs for which appellee was given judgment, appear to be correct charges and such in amount as should be apportioned to and accounted for by appellant.

We find in the record an opinion written by the judge of the circuit court, which sets forth his views upon the questions of law arising on the rule and response supported by abundant authority. A careful reading of the opinion convinces us of the soundness of the conclusions therein expressed; for which reason, and because it aptly expresses our views upon the questions involved, we adopt and make it a part of this opinion. The opinion is as follows:

"In support of defendant's response to the rule, it is earnestly contended that the mortgage of the earnings does not impose any duty upon the trustee and under it he had no authority to sue as trustee alone, and that the instrument merely created a naked or dry trust. From this viewpoint it is urged that the action was maintained by the bondholders and by Schmidt in his individual right as a bondholder, associated with other bondholders, and as the proceeding was not for the benefit of the defendant, and was contrary to its wishes, the rule underlying the case of Thirwell v. Campbell, 11 Bush, is here applicable. Counsel in this contention has fallen into the error of considering the mortgage of the earnings by itself and not in connection with the other contracts and deeds made by the parties contemporaneously. The mortgage of the earnings standing alone would indeed create only a naked trust in Speed, or Schmidt, his successor, but the Court of Appeals has said in L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Schmidt, 112 Ky., 721, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 2097:

"It has been held by this court several times that these papers executed contemporaneously not only for the benefit of the lessor and lessee, but also for the benefit of the bondholders, must be read together as one contract citing four previous decisions of the court upon these same contracts to the same effect.' (Phillips v. C. & O. Ry. Co., 110 Ky., 33.)

"Looking, therefore, to the other instruments and particularly to the other mortgage made to the same trustee, dated July 2nd, 1879, we find many important duties devolving upon the trustees in the event of a default in the payment of the interest upon the bonds. By that instrument, the trustee is authorized, after such default in the mortgagor, to enter upon and take possession of the railroad, and its franchises and property and operate the road, or, under certain circumstances, to sell the property. Under the law of this State, existing at that time and now in force, the mortgagee could not take possession, but was compelled to enforce his lien by a suit in equity. A fair construction of that instrument made the trustee the active and responsible representative of the bondholders, and he was under said deed, by implication, clothed with authority to institute and conduct any suit for or on behalf of his trust as might become necessary for the preservation of the estate committed to him or for the benefit of his cestuis que trust, the bondholders. The mortgage of the earnings was an addenda to the original mortgage, and gave the bondholders additional security, and must be read with the mortgage of July 2nd, 1879.

"An examination of this record shows that, although the trustee, Schmidt, formally associated with him some of the holders of the bonds in the institution of the proceedings and sued alone in his own right as a bondholder, he has, nevertheless, throughout this long litigation, prosecuted the action as trustee and recovered as such. The bondholders associated with him formally in the petition, have not been seen or heard from so far as the record before me shows, since the filing of the petition, and from start to finish the trustee has borne the heat and burden of the contest.

"The respondent or defendant resisted the efforts of the trustee as lessee of the mortgagor, and not as bondholder. If this controversy had been between the trustee and a bondholder for an adjustment of some difference between them, then the action would have been what is characterized in equity practice as litigious, and only ordinary costs would have been allowed, but the controversy was not between the trustee and a bondholder. It was between the trustee, seeking to carry out the provisions of the trust, against one in open hostility to the trust, seeking to defeat its provisions, although itself a small holder of bonds and interest coupons.

"The entire question at bar seems to have been thoroughly gone into and disposed of by the Court of Appeals in the case of Phillips v. The Southern Division of the C. & O. Ry. Co., 110 Ky., 33. The defendant in this proceeding was a defendant owning all the issue of bonds, amounting to three thousand dollars, except five hundred dollars thereof, and one of the contentions made was, that the action should not be allowed, as 'It will put the C & O. or L. & N. to a great expense in the matter of fees to the trustee and his attorney.'"

Answering this the court said:

"That certainly is no argument against the sufficiency of the petition, or in favor of the right of appellee to maintain its plea in abatement. The parties to the lease and mortgage contemplated that it was possible that just such a condition would arise, which would render this action necessary; and that to administer the trust and to enforce the provisions of the contract the trustees would be entitled to compensation, and likewise the attorneys which it might be necessary to employ. Hence it was expressly agreed by the parties that this expense was to be paid before anything else, out of the proceeds of the mortgaged property. The parties to that contract should not complain of the expense which may be incurred, for they had reason to believe such might be incurred, and provided for its liquidation. It is likewise without reason to complain of the trustee proceeding to do the very thing which the contracting parties made it his duty to do, to-wit: to look to the collection of the fund to pay the bonds, receive the net income for operating the road under the lease, to cancel the bonds when paid, and, if there was default in their payment, to forthwith institute a proceeding like this one.

"The only difference between this case and the case there decided was, that in that mortgage, it was expressly provided for compensation to the trustee and for his costs; in this case, the deed is silent as to the compensation for the trustee or the re-imbusement of costs and expenses. When the contract creating the trust was executed there arose an implied obligation on the part of the holders of bonds that the trustee should be re-imbursed any necessary expenditures he might be required to make in the discharge of the duties cast upon him as such trustee. It formed a part of the consideration between the trustee and his cestuis que trust, and bound the holder of each bond or interest coupon.

"The recovery was by the trustee and for the trust estate, and the money withheld by the respondent, as the owner of the bonds, was a part of the recovery, and it should bear its proportion of the costs. The response is adjudged insufficient and rule made absolute."

Judgment affirmed.

Whole court, except Judge Barker, sitting.

O'BRYAN, &c. v. HIGHLAND APARTMENT CO.

(Filed February 28, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Municipalities—City Ordinances—Building Permits—Reasonable Regulations—Avoiding Fires—The courts recognize the right of cities, under the police power, to make rules and regulations necessary to protect the health and morals of the city, and such as may be necessary to prevent the spreading of fires; the only restriction being that in passing such ordinances is that they shall be reasonable. The use of one's property, under the law, means such use and enjoyment as will not unnecessarily endanger or destroy the property of others.

2. Same—Property Owner—Injunction—A property owner may sue and enjoin the erection of a building in violation of the reasonable building regulations of the city required by its ordinances.

3. Same—Reasonable Regulations—An ordinance of a city denying the right to erect a frame building therein, without a written permit from the building inspector, and within the fire limits of the city, held to be a reasonable regulation.

4. Building Permits—Revocation by Inspector—A permit to erect a building, given by the building inspector under a misstatement or misconception of the facts may be withdrawn or revoked by the inspector.

5. Building Inspector—Control of Board of Safety—Right to Cancel Permits—Under Kentucky Statutes 1903, section 2861, the building inspector of a city is subject to the order of the Board of Public Safety, and where complaint is made to such board, it may decide that the inspector had no right to issue such certificate because in violation of the building ordinances, and such board may cancel the certificate, though the work on the building may have commenced.

Gibson, Marshall & Gibson for plaintiffs.

J. W. S. Clements for defendant.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, First Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lassing. (In Chambers.) Refusing to dissolve injunction.

The appellee is the owner of a large stone and brick building, used as an apartment house, situated on Cherokee road, in Louisville. The building occupies practically the entire lot owned by appellee, and runs from the street back to an alley. On the west of this building appellants own a lot which likewise runs from the street back to the alley. Upon a portion of their lot, fronting on the street, is a residence, in the rear of which is a frame stable. There is a vacant space or lot between appellants' residence and appellee's building. This space is thirty or more feet in width. Sometime prior to December 6, 1907, appellants made application to the building inspector of Louisville, for a permit to build a stable upon this vacant lot owned by her, and the permit granting her the right to erect a frame stable thereon was issued to her. Upon learning that such a permit had been issued appellee protested and sought to have the building inspector revoke the permit. When his attention was called to the fact that the stable, as proposed to be erected, would be within less than sixty feet of appellee's apartment house, the inspector ordered that the work on the stable should be suspended pending investigation. Following the issuing of this order, appellants applied for, and secured, a permit to erect a dwelling upon the vacant lot fronting on the street. Having secured a permit to erect a dwelling, appellants proceeded to build the stable, and appellee applied for, and was granted a temporary restraining order, enjoining appellants from building the stable. Following the granting of this restraining order the Board of Public Safety, on application by appellee, took the matter up, and after hearing, directed the inspector to cancel the permit to build the stable, and, acting under this order, the permit was canceled by the inspector and appellants notified of this fact. The temporary restraining order was, upon hearing, continued in force, and the case is now brought before me, seeking to have the injunction dissolved.

Four questions are raised. First, that the ordinances, upon which appellee bas' its contention, are unconstitutional; second, that if the ordinances are not unconstitutional, appellee has no right to maintain the action, but that it must be prosecuted in the name of the city; third, that the permit to erect the stable having been granted, and work having been begun, it can not thereafter be revoked; and, fourth, that the ordinances upon which appellee relies do not govern or regulate the character of building which appellants contemplated erecting.

Courts of last resort generally recognize the right of municipalities to pass all reasonable rules and regulations that may be necessary to protect the health and morals of the city, and to make such regulations as may be necessary to prevent the spreading of fires, and protect property within the corporate limits. The exercise of these functions, on the part of the municipality, is under the police power, and the only restriction and limitation thrown around the act of the municipality in passing such ordinances, is that they shall be reasonable. This principle was distinctly recognized by this court in the late case of Tilford, Building Inspector v. Belknap, 31 Ky. Law Rep., 662, in which Judge Settle, speaking for the court, said:

"It goes without saying that, in the exercise of its governmental functions and under the police power, a municipality may enact ordinances for the safety of the public. * * *

"This includes the right to establish, by ordinance, rules and regulations to prevent the spreading of fires, and for the protection of property within the corporate limits, but such rules and regulations must be reasonable."

In 8 "Cyc.," page 1062, this right of the city to pass such reasonable rules and regulations as are necessary for the protection of property, is thus stated:

"A city may, by ordinance, forbid the erection, alteration, or repair of buildings within certain districts or boundaries without denying the equal protection of the law, as such regulations are within the police power."

This right, qualified only to the extent that the rules and regulations shall be reasonable, is now recognized by courts of last resort with such a degree of uniformity as to justify the conclusion that it is general.

In determining whether or not the ordinances under consideration are constitutional the only proper and legitimate subject of inquiry is, are they reasonable? If they are reasonable, then the municipality clearly had the right, in the exercise of its police power, to pass them, and the wisdom of its so doing, is not a subject of judicial investigation. The law presumes that in the enactment of public ordinances the municipality, through its legislative boards, acts in good faith and for the best interests of its citizens, and, therefore, so long as the ordinances are reasonable a citizen may not complain even though by reason thereof his unlimited and unrestrained use and enjoyment of his property is, to some extent, abridged or denied. The idea of absolutism in the use and enjoyment of our property has long since been exploded, and the now well recognized doctrine is that, the use and enjoyment of our property guaranteed by the Constitutions, State and Federal, means such use and enjoyment as will not unnecessarily endanger or destroy the property of others. The ordinances involved in this controversy are sections 15, 64, 65 and 70. Section 15 provides:

"That no excavation shall be commenced, no wall, structure, building, part or parts thereof, or sign board exceeding ten feet in height, shall be built, constructed, altered, repaired or removed in said city until a permit has been issued for the proposed work by the building inspector."

Section 64 provides: "No frame dwelling, building, or structure shall be erected in the city of Louisville without a written permit from the building inspector; and it is further provided that no frame dwelling, building or structure shall be erected within the 'fire limits' of the city of Louisville."

Section 65 provides: "No frame, veneered, iron clad or any building, the enclosing walls of which are constructed of combustible material, shall be erected, moved or remodeled within the 'fire limits' of the city of Louisville, or repaired when damaged to the extent of 50 per cent., exclusive of the foundation, of its value by fire or decay, and no such building shall be erected, or moved without the 'fire limits' of the city of Louisville within sixty feet of any permanent brick, stone, concrete or iron building, and no frame, veneered, or iron clad building erected beyond the fire limits of the city of Louisville prior to the enactment of this ordinance, and situated within sixty feet of any permanent brick, stone, concrete or iron building shall be enlarged, remodeled, moved or repaired, when damaged by fire or decay, to the extent of 50 per cent., exclusive of the foundation, of its value, without the written permission of the inspector of buildings."

Section 70 provides: "That wooden structures not more than two stories high, the highest point of the roof not exceeding twenty-eight feet above the grade of the public alley, and not more than twenty-five feet square on the ground floor, may be erected on the rear of a lot at a point where such lot abuts the public alley and used only for servants' quarters, privy, stable, coal house, laundry, &c., without the fire limits of the city of Louisville."

It is conceded that the proposed building is located without the "fire limits," but within the city limits of the city of Louisville. In order that these four sections of the ordinances of the city of Louisville, governing and controlling the erection of buildings within the city limits, may be thoroughly understood, they must be read and construed together, for it is only in this way that the purpose, aim and intent of the city government, in their enactment, can be arrived at. It will be observed that section 64 denies to the property holder, unqualifiedly, the right to erect any frame dwelling, building or structure within the city of Louisville, without the written permission of the building inspector so to do, and denies absolutely the right to erect any frame dwelling, building or structure within that portion of the city embraced within what is known as the "fire limits."

Section 15 denies the right of the owner to build, alter or remove any building or sign board, exceeding ten feet in height, anywhere within the city limits until a permit has been applied for and issued by the building inspector.

Section 65 provides, among other things, that no frame, veneered, iron clad, or any building, the enclosing walls of which are constructed of combustible material, shall be erected or moved without the "fire limits" of the city of Louisville, within sixty feet of any permanent brick, stone, concrete or iron building without the written permission of the building inspector.

Section 70 provides for the erection of wooden structures for certain designated purposes on the rear of lots without the fire limits, and, when considered by itself, this section would support the contention of appellants, but, when read in connection with sections 15, 64 and 65, the purpose and meaning of section 70 is clear. It is the duty of the building inspector to see to it that all proposed buildings within the city limits conform to the requirements of these ordinances, the first one of which is that no building, other than a sign board, not exceeding ten feet in height, shall be erected within the city limits unless a permit is first procured authorizing same. This, I take it, is not an unreasonable regulation. When we consider that in the growth and development of a city covering, as in this case, a large territory, many buildings are necessarily at all times, during seasonable weather, in process of erection or construction, and in order that the city may be enabled to protect its citizens against the ravages of fire it is absolutely indispensable that the city authorities should know in advance the character of the building which any lot holder may propose to erect upon his premises. Now when section 70 is read in connection with section 15, it is unnecessary, and would be surplusage, to have added thereto the provisions of section 15, for, as above stated, they must be read together, and, when it is stated in section 15 that no building or structure shall be erected in the city until a permit is first procured so to do, it is wholly unnecessary to have this same subject-matter incorporated in each following section. Under section 70 a lot owner may, having first complied with the provisions of section 15, erect on the rear of his lot, a frame building, provided his right to do so is not denied by section 65, which must be read in connection with sections 15 and 70. Reading these three sections together, and uniting them the one with the other, as they must be in order to determine appellants' rights, we have the following: A property owner, living within the city of Louisville, and without the "fire limits," having first procured a permit allowing him to do so, may erect on the rear of his lot, where said lot abuts on the public alley, a wooden structure not more than two stories high, the highest point of the roof not exceeding twenty-eight feet above the grade of the public alley, and not more than twenty-five feet square on the ground floor, to be used for servants' quarters, privy, stable, coal house, laundry, &c., provided said proposed structure is not within sixty feet of any permanent brick, stone, concrete or iron building.

By section 64 it will be observed that the property owner is denied absolutely the right to build any frame building or structure of whatever kind or nature within what is known as the "fire limits." This regulation is for the protection of the public—for the general good of the city—and is based upon the past experience of municipal authorities that, in the more thickly settled portions of a city, which are the parts embraced within the "fire limits," fires are prevented and controlled only by the exercise of the most rigid rules and regulations; the most important of which is that which requires that all buildings and structures within such territory be constructed, as far as possible, out of incombustible material. When these requirements are strictly observed and enforced, and an adequate fire department is maintained, the danger from fire, though still great, is reduced to its minimum. Now, in the out-lying districts of a city the danger from fire is not so great for the reason that the buildings are not so close together, and as long as they are kept separated, the one from the other, the danger of a conflagration in case of fire is lessened, but as the city grows and develops these out-lying districts become built up and more thickly settled; structures of a more permanent character, built of more durable material, gradually take the place of temporary or wooden structures, and hence, section 65 provides that no wooden structure shall be built, even upon the rear of a lot within less than sixty feet of a permanent structure, the walls of which are constructed of some non-inflammable material, such as brick, stone, concrete or iron. I am of opinion that such regulations are not only not unreasonable, but are wise and highly beneficial to the general welfare and protection of the property and lives of the citizens of the municipality. Similar provisions have been approved and upheld in the cases of Eureka City v. Wilson, 15 Utah, 67; Lemon v. Guthrie Center, 113 Iowa, 36; Fire Department of New York v. Gilmore, 149 N. Y., 453; Coffman v. Stein, 138 Ind., 49, and the First National Bank of Mt. Vernon v. Sarrls, 129 Ind., 201.

The next question is, has appellee the right to maintain this suit? Under the general principle that for every wrong there is a remedy, one, feeling himself aggrieved, has a right to go into court and have it determined whether or not he has cause for redress. Our court, so far as I am advised, has not passed upon this direct question, but it has been many times passed upon by courts of last resort in other States. In the case of the First National Bank of Mt. Vernon v. Sarrls (Ind.), 28 Am. St., 185, it was held that an injunction would lie at the suit of a property holder to prevent the rebuilding or repairing of wooden buildings in violation of a municipal ordinance establishing "fire limits," &c., and, in the case of Coffman v. Stein (Ind.), 46 Am. St., 368, it was held that a property owner has a right to enjoin the removal of a wooden building to a place within the "fire limits" in violation of a city ordinance forbidding it. In the case of Griswold v. Brega (Ill.), 52 Am. St., 350, it was held that neighboring property owners might enjoin one from moving a wooden building to a point within the "fire limits" in violation of an ordinance regulating such removal. In this last case it was held that property owners might enjoin not only the one seeking to so remove the building, but might enjoin the city from issuing a permit authorizing it to be removed. These are all well considered cases, and there is good reason and common sense in the rule which permits a property owner, who feels that his property is about to be injured and that its danger and risk from loss by fire will be materially increased by the erection of the proposed frame building, to take such steps as are necessary to compel the one seeking to erect the building to do so in strict conformity with the reasonable rules and regulations of the city, applicable thereto.

The contention of appellants that the permit to build, having once been issued, can not be revoked, is not well taken. It is evident from the facts in this case that, at the time the permit was issued, either the building inspector was not thoroughly familiar with his duties in the premises, or else he issued the permit under a mis-statement or misconception of the facts; I am inclined to the opinion that the latter is the correct theory, for as soon as he was notified that the proposed building was within sixty feet of a permanent structure, and, therefore, came within the inhibition of section 65, above quoted, he at once notified appellants to discontinue the work until an investigation could be made. Therefore, the permit was issued without right or authority in law, and was in direct conflict with and a violation of the plain provision of the law, as set out in section 65, and being so issued, if appellants procured the permit without giving to the building inspector a full exhibit of the facts, they can not now complain because it is withdrawn or revoked. However, it appears in the record that this permit was ordered revoked and canceled by the Board of Public Safety. Under section 2861, of the Kentucky Statutes, this board, among other duties, has exclusive control of the department of buildings and the building inspector is, therefore, subject to the order and direction of the Board of Public Safety, and this board, complaint having been lodged with it, heard the right of the building inspector to issue the permit in question, and after a hearing, that he had no such right and directed the permit canceled. The Board of Public Safety, having exclusive control of this department of the city government, being clothed with full power and authority to see that the ordinances governing and controlling and regulating the department of buildings were carried into effect, determined that this permit was improperly granted, and, directed it to be canceled. I am of opinion that the Board of Public Safety, in so doing, acted clearly within the line of its duty, and aside from this, I am of opinion that if the building inspector himself, on his own initiative, had canceled this permit, appellants could not complain, for if he had a discretion in the matter, which he could exercise in granting the permit, if he had exercised this discretion upon a mistake of fact, upon discovering that he had done so, he would clearly have a right to revoke the permit.

The fourth objection urged by appellants has already been answered in passing upon the first, wherein it is held that no building of any character, other than the erection of sign boards, not exceeding ten feet in height, can be conducted or carried on within the city limits unless a permit has first been procured so to do.

On the whole case, I am of opinion that the injunction should be not dissolved. In this conclusion I am joined by all my associates on the bench, except Judge O'Rear, who was not present, and Judge Settle, who, for personal reasons, did not sit in the case.

BRUMMETT v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed March 19, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Homicide—Joint Indictment—Separate Trial—Proof of Conspiracy—Declaration of Co-conspirator—Competency—In the trial of B., jointly indicted with H., for the murder of W., in which a conspiracy is charged, evidence of a statement made by B. to witness A., prior to the killing of deceased that "if he had such men as me and M., that he already had H. in with him, who was not afraid of hell, that sometime when W. came ranting around on the ridge, we would uncap his head and leave him for his friends to carry home," Held—To be competent to show a conspiracy between B. and H. to kill W., and hence the declaration of H., in the absence of B., was properly admitted to the jury as evidence against B.

2. Same—Evidence—Statements Made by Wife of Accused—Competency—On the trial of B., indicted with H. for killing W., in which it was claimed that the killing was done because of some real or fancied insult by W. to B.'s wife, it was incompetent to prove statements made by B.'s wife to a witness in the presence of H. in reference to the time that her husband intended to go to the town of M. with a load of melons (on one of which trips he was killed), as the effect of such evidence was to make the wife an unwilling witness against her husband without giving her a chance to deny it.

J. Bertram, T. A. Wallace and Edwin P. Morrow for appellant.

James Breathitt, T. B. McGregor, Harrison & Harrison and Charles H. Morris for appellee.

Appeal from Wayne Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lassing, reversing.

Appellant, Marshall Hall, and others, were jointly indicted for the murder of Levia Woolridge. A detailed statement of the evidence concerning this homicide, may be found in the records of the two appeals of Hall v. Commonwealth, before this court, in 29 Ky. Law Rep., 435, and 31 Ky. Law Rep., 464. On the first appeal in the case of Hall v. Commonwealth, the judgment of conviction was reversed because certain statements of appellant, not made in Hall's presence, were admitted in evidence against Hall when there had not been any testimony introduced which showed, or tended to show, the existence of a conspiracy. Upon the return of the case for trial the Commonwealth introduced a witness, Burch, whose testimony made out a prima facie case of conspiracy, and, this having been done, the testimony of appellant, offered on the first trial, was again offered in evidence. The second trial resulted in Hall's conviction, and, upon appeal to this court, the judgment of the lower court was affirmed.

When the case of the Commonwealth against appellant was called for trial, the witness, Burch, had left the State and his testimony was not procured, and, it is insisted for appellant that the statements of the witness, Hall, which were not made in the presence of appellant, should not have been permitted to go to the jury as evidence against him, in the absence of a showing on the part of the Commonwealth, that there was a conspiracy. The Commonwealth introduced two witnesses who testified to conversations which they had with appellant, and it is insisted that these conversations show conclusively that appellant had conspired with Hall to kill Woolridge. The declarations and statements which appellant is credited with having made are as follows:

The witness, Henry Miller, testified that sometime in the spring of the year, before Woolridge was killed, "appellant said to me if he could get such men as me and Owen Adkins in with him, to keep the dogs off, that they would uncap Woolridge's head sometime when he came over the hill ranting around, that he already had Hall with him."

Owen Adkins testified that in January of the year that Woolridge was killed, he heard some shots fired down at appellant's house and sometime after the shooting, when appellant and others were going to town with a load of lumber, he had a conversation with appellant, in which appellant said to him:

"If he had such men as me and Henry Miller, that he already had Hall, in with him, who was not afraid of hell, that sometime when Woolridge came ranting around on the ridge, we would uncap his head and leave him for his friends to carry home."

Hall was not present at either of these conversations and for that reason it is urged that this testimony does not tend to show a conspiracy, because only one of the men was present. This is undoubtedly true, if the testimony were offered against Hall. Hall was certainly not bound by any statement made by appellant in his absence, unless a conspiracy was first proven, but this evidence was offered for the purpose of showing that appellant had said, in substance, that he and Hall had conspired together for the purpose of killing Woolridge. This is not a new question, for, in the case of Allen v. Commonwealth, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 807, where four brothers had been jointly indicted for the assassination of Dulaney Peters from ambush, a witness was introduced on the trial of two of these brothers, who testified to statements made by them to him, which tended to show that they had conspired with the others to kill Peters. Upon review here it was held that this was competent evidence against the brothers who made the statements to the witness, but not against the other brothers. That case is decisive of the question under consideration. We are of opinion that this evidence, as against appellant, made out a prima facie case of conspiracy between appellant and Hall to kill Woolridge, and, hence, the declarations made by Hall, in the absence of appellant, were properly admitted to the jury as evidence against appellant.

Counsel for appellant also complains that the court erred in permitting the witness, Bob Sullivan, to detail a conversation which he had with appellant's wife sometime before.

The conversation complained of is as follows:

"I was at appellant's house one day, some time before the killing of Woolridge, and appellant's wife said to me that her husband might get me a job in the Steubenville oil field, running a gas engine, or something of the kind, and for me to go down and find out when Woolridge was going to Monticello again, as he was hauling watermelons there, and that I could ride that far with him on the wagon, as I went to the oil field, and she said for me to come by and spend the night with her before I went, as she wanted to send a letter by me to her husband in the oil field. Hall was present at this conversation, but took no part in it, further than to say that he would show me the way to the oil field."

Appellant was not at home at the time. Clearly this testimony detailing the conversation with and statements of the wife was incompetent, but, it is insisted for the Commonwealth, that this was not prejudicial to him nor an error for which the case should be reversed.

Section 606 of the Code, expressly provides that neither the husband nor the wife shall testify for or against the other, except in certain designated cases, and this is not one of the exceptions. To permit the witness to detail a conversation with her is, in effect, making her an unwilling witness against her husband without giving her the right to say whether or not she made the statements attributed to her. We can not say that this testimony was not prejudicial for, when considered in the light of the facts and circumstances as developed by the testimony in this case, it undoubtedly weighed heavily against appellant in the minds of the jury. When it is remembered that appellant was charged with having conspired with Hall and others to kill Woolridge, because of some real or fancied insult or indignity which Woolridge had offered appellant's wife, it is easy to see how the minds of the jury might be influenced by these statements attributed to her, for, if this conversation was believed, it showed that she was taking notice of the movements of Woolridge and was arranging for this witness to notify her when Woolridge was next going to town with a load of watermelons, and when she received this notice, she was preparing to send a letter or note to her husband by this witness. Hall was present and heard all these arrangements. It later developed, in the testimony, that Woolridge was assassinated when returning from town, where he had been to dispose of a load of watermelons, and thus the testimony of the alleged conversation of the wife is made to dovetail in with and connect the statements, which the husband is alleged to have made sometime before the killing, as to how Woolridge could be killed, with the actual manner in which he was killed, and in this way this alleged conversation might be, and no doubt was, made an important link in the chain which the Commonwealth was forging to show appellant's guilt, although when the deed was actually done, he was some fifteen or twenty miles away. When considered in this light, it will readily be seen that the admission of this testimony was an error which might result in total miscarriage of justice. No such conversation may have taken place. The witness, actuated by improper motives, may have manufactured the conversation out of the whole cloth, and yet appellant would be helpless, for his wife not being permitted to testify, he would have no way of refuting it. In this way a conviction could be secured by perjured or trumped up testimony, supposed to come from the lips of his wife, carrying with it all the force, effect and conviction which such statements, if true, would and should carry. It was because of the wife that the trouble between appellant and Woolridge originated. It would be but natural to presume that she took an active interest in the plans of her husband, if he had any, by which he proposed to avenge the wrong done her, or the insult offered her. Interwoven throughout the testimony in this case, is the one idea that it was to satisfy a feeling of hatred against the deceased, growing out of some insult offered the family or wife of appellant, that caused Hall and appellant to enter into the foul conspiracy to kill him.

Hall was a member of appellant's family and had been for sometime prior thereto. He was charged with having actually committed the murder and it will not do to say that statements which purport to come from the lips of appellant's wife, which even tend to show the existence of a conspiracy, would fall lightly or without weight upon the ears of the jury. It will not do to speculate as to what effect this testimony had. It is true an awful crime has been committed; a man has been foully assassinated; and the ends of justice will be satisfied only when the guilty one or ones have been punished therefor. Appellant may or may not be guilty; he might have been convicted without the introduction of the evidence complained of, but this is not for us to say; our province is to see that he has a fair trial, conducted according to the forms of law, and that upon his trial only legal and competent evidence is produced against him.

Because of the introduction of this incompetent testimony, the judgment is reversed and remanded, for another trial consistent with this opinion.

JONES v. PREWITT.

(Filed March 19, 1908—To be reported.)

Land—Sale of—Encumbrance—Price of Land Covered by Right of Way—Executory Contract—Refusal of Purchaser to Accept Deed—Although the rule in this State, as announced in certain cases is, that when a purchaser accepts a conveyance, with knowledge of the existence of a highway or railroad thereon, he can not obtain an abatement of the purchase price or a cancellation of the contract on account of the incumbrance, this principle will not be applied to railway rights of way against a purchaser under an executory contract, in the absence of evidence showing that it was the intention of the purchaser to pay for the land enclosed in the right of way, where he objects in a reasonable time to accept a conveyance of the property that would require him to pay for the right of way.

Jouett, Byrd & Jouett for appellant.

Pendleton, Bush & Bush for appellee.

Appeal from Clark Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, reversing.

On March 13, 1906, the parties to this controversy entered into the following contract:

"This contract witnesseth: I have this day bought of Lizzie T. Prewitt all of that part of her Weathers farm that lies north of the line that we have agreed upon, said line begins at a point on the Clintonville pike a little north of where three locust trees stand, and runs in an easterly direction to a point a little south of a walnut tree in Van Meter's line. I agree to pay for said land at the rate of one hundred dollars per acre—the whole amount to be paid when the deed is made. I am to have possession of the land as soon as it is paid for, and of the house as soon as Mrs. Prewitt can get her part of the line fence built and the house repaired that Mr. Connor is to move into.

"W. Y. JONES."

On March 20, they had the land surveyed, when it was found to contain 184 acres. In 1889, the Kentucky Union Railway Company condemned, under the statute, a right of way through this tract of land. The right of way contained 5.28 acres, and the company was required by the judgment of the court to pay Mrs. Prewitt, who then owned the land, $396, for the land actually taken, $2,062 for fencing, and $1,542, for damages to her adjacent lands. Soon after the condemnation proceedings, the railroad company took possession of the land condemned, and were in the possession and use of it, and the same was enclosed by a fence at the time the contract, before mentioned, was entered into. At the time and before the contract was made, Jones knew of the existence of the right of way through the land he contemplated purchasing, but nothing was said by either party before or at the time the contract was entered into, about the title or ownership of the right of way. After the survey was made, Mrs. Prewitt tendered to Jones a deed for the entire tract, including the land embraced in the right of way, and demanded of him payment in accordance with the contract. Jones declined to accept or pay for the land covered by the right of way. The question at issue between the parties, as stated in the agreed case, is: "Whether or not under the terms of the contract of sale, Mrs. Prewitt is entitled to be paid for the land covered by the right of way, at the rate of one hundred dollars per acre, amounting to 5.28 acres, and whether or not, under the terms of said contract of sale, Jones should be required to accept said land covered by said right of way as a part of the land purchased by him under the contract and to pay plaintiff therefor at the above price per acre fixed by the contract."

The lower court adjudged in favor of Mrs. Prewitt, and Jones appeals.

To support the judgment, appellee depends upon the following cases decided by this court:

In Butt v. Riffe, 78 Ky., 352, Butt purchased of Riffe, a tract of land which was conveyed to him, Riffe retaining a lien for the unpaid purchase money. In the deed, Riffe warranted the title generally, and stipulated that he would give Butt free and full possession of the land on a day named in the conveyance. After Butt took possession under the conveyance, Napier instituted an action in the Lincoln Circuit Court, asserting a right of way over the land. A trial resulted in a judgment decreeing that Napier was entitled to a passway, embracing a strip of land 25 feet wide and one-half a mile long through the land. After this judgment was entered, Riffe instituted an action on the notes for the unpaid purchase money. In defense to this action, Butt asserted as a counterclaim the damage he had sustained by reason of the recovery of the passway by Napier—alleging that, at the time of sale and conveyance, he was ignorant of any claim that Napier had a passway and that Riffe had concealed from him the existence of such a right. The lower court sustained a demurrer to the answer and counterclaim. On appeal this court, although holding that the passway obtained by Napier was a breach of the covenant of warranty in the deed for which he was entitled to recover damages, said in the course of the opinion:

"It is further argued by counsel for Riffe that, if the facts pleaded constituted a breach, Riffe is also liable on his covenant for that part of the land embraced by the public highway, that constitutes a part of one of the tracts. We think not. No more than if the Commonwealth had entered upon the land, after the purchase by Butt and condemned a part of the tract for a public road. Such covenants have never been held to embrace an entry by the State in the exercise of the right of eminent domain. It is no eviction for which the grantor can be made liable when the land is taken for public use and the purchaser, when a public highway is on land at the date of his purchase, must be held to know of its existence and to have made his bargain with a knowledge of the inconvenience resulting from it."

In Bird v. Bank of Williamstown, 11 Ky. Law Rep., 868, Northcut sold a tract of land to Bird by the acre, conveying the same to him by a deed with covenant of warranty. In a suit by the bank as assignee of the notes executed for the purchase price, Bird set up as a defense that there was a deficit of 3.7-8 acres in the quantity of land, as Northcut had previously conveyed it to the Cincinnati Southern Railway, that was in possession at the time Bird purchased. It is stated in the opinion that Bird knew that the railway run through the land at the time he purchased, and he agreed that its right of way was to be counted as a part of the purchase. In disposing of the case, the court said:

"It is true a covenant of warranty in a deed binds the grantor for quiet enjoyment by the grantee, and protects the latter against encumbrances affecting the title, or that he may be compelled to remove to possess and enjoy the estate. But if a public highway be upon land at the time of the purchase, the purchaser should be presumed to know of its existence and to buy with an expectation and knowledge of any inconvenience arising from its existence. It is perfectly evident, from Bird's own testimony, that he knew when he made the purchase that the railway company had the right of way through the land. The railroad was then being operated over it, and aside even from the understanding when the verbal purchase of a part of the land was made, that the land embraced by the right of way of the railroad should be surveyed to him, it should be counted, because he knew of the existence of such right when he purchased and could as well be heard to complain of the then existence of an ordinary public road over the land."

In Weller v. Fidelity Trust & Safety Vault Company, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1136, one Nesbitt conveyed to the trustees of the Walnut street Baptist Church of Louisville, a certain parcel of land situated at the corner of 26th and Market streets, described as follows:

"Beginning at a point in the center of 26th street, where it is intersected by the south line of Market street, and running thence eastwardly 4 with the south line of Market street 115 feet; thence southwardly, and parallel with said 26th street, 177 feet, more or less, to Congress street, if extended; thence westwardly with said Congress street 115 feet to the center line of 26th street; thence northwardly with the center line of 26th street to the point of beginning."

The purchase money notes were assigned to the Fidelity Trust and Safety Vault Co., and in a suit upon them it was insisted that no recovery should be had, because a strip of 15 feet wide was in the adverse possession of the city of Louisville at the time the conveyance was made, and that there should be either a cancellation of the contract or an abatement of the notes to the extent of the value of the strip of land so held adversely. It appeared that the strip of land in question was a part of 26th street, and was used as a part of the street at the time the conveyance was made, and that the trustees, when they accepted the deed, knew that this strip of land was occupied and used by the city as a street and that it could not be taken from it. In disposing of the case, the court said: "The street was an open and notorious highway upon the land at the time of the purchase. The occupancy and use of the strip as part of the street is not a breach of the warranty. It was not only open and visible, but the vendees were acquainted with all the facts and knew that it was a public street of the city of Louisville." Citing with approval the Riffe and Bird cases, supra, the judgment of the lower court rejecting the defense, was affirmed.

In the two last named cases the vendees accepted deeds with actual knowledge of the existence of the encumbrances upon the land. In the Riffe case it is held that there is no eviction for which the grantor can be made liable when the land is taken for a public use, and that a purchaser, when a public highway is on the land at the date of his purchase, must be held to know of its existence and to have made his bargain with knowledge of the inconvenience resulting from it. In that case, the point here in controversy was not directly involved, but in the other two cases and particularly in the Bird case, it was. There is, we think, a sound distinction between the cases cited and the one at bar. The case at bar is in effect an action for the specific performance of a contract. Mrs. Prewitt asks the chancellor to adjudge that she is entitled to be paid for land actually in the enclosed possession of the railroad company, and that it is reasonably certain it will continue to hold indefinitely or forever. She has heretofore received compensation for the land and is now demanding that she be paid again for it. In other words, she asks the chancellor to compel Jones to pay one hundred dollars an acre for land, the use or possession of which he will never, in reasonable probability, enjoy, and that she has parted with all her right, title and interest in, except exceedingly remote reversion, contingent upon it being abandoned by the railroad company. The enforcement of this contract would be manifestly unjust and inequitable. It is such a contract as the specific performance of will not be adjudged. It can not fairly be said that it was in the contemplation of the parties when the contract was entered into that Jones should be required to pay for this land. It seems evident that if the matter had been discussed or it had been suggested that he would be required to pay for it, that he would have declined to do so—especially as he was buying the land at so much per acre, and expected, under the terms of the contract, to be placed in the possession of.

In 26 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 67, the principle is announced, supported by numerous authorities, that:

"Before the discretion of a court of equity will be exercised in favor of the specific performance of a contract, it must appear that the contract is fair, just and equitable in all its parts. If, therefore, a decree of specific performance would work a hardship or injustice upon the defendant, or operate oppressively upon him, a court of equity will decline to interfere."

In Story's Equity, section 750, the author says:

"Indeed the proposition may be more generally stated that courts of equity will not interfere to decree a specific performance except in cases where it would be strictly equitable to make such a decree."

Our own court, in Woolums v. Horsely, 93 Ky., 582, said:

"There is a distinction between the case of a plaintiff asking a specific performance of a contract in equity and that of a defendant resisting such a performance. Its specific execution is not a matter of absolute right in a party, out of sound discretion in the court. * * * Thus, a hard or unconscionable bargain will not be specifically enforced, nor if the decree will produce injustice or under all the circumstances, be inequitable it will be rendered. In other words, a court of equity will not exercise its power in this direction to enforce a claim that is not, under all the circumstances, just as between the parties, and it will allow a defendant to resist a decree where the plaintiff will not also be allowed relief upon the same evidence. A contract ought not to be carried into a specific performance unless it be just and fair in all respects. When this relief is sought, ethics are considered, and a court of equity will sometimes refuse to set aside a contract and yet refuse its specific performance." The same doctrine is announced in Ratterman v. Campbell, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 173; McCutchen v. Rawleigh, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 549.

If Jones, after entering into the contract, had, after the land was surveyed and the quantity ascertained, accepted a deed in which he obligated himself to pay for the whole number of acres, with knowledge of the encumbrance, it might reasonably be said that, in entering into the contract, he consented to pay for the land included in the right of way; and we conclude that the fact that the vendees in the cases cited had accepted deeds was a potent factor in inducing the court to hold that they could not have an abatement of the purchase price. Whatever the reason for the opinions, we are not disposed to extend the doctrine laid down in these cases so as to embrace an executory contract like the one before us. In other jurisdictions there is irreconcilable conflict of authority upon the question we are considering—some of the courts making a distinction between railroad rights of way and public highways—holding that the existence of a right of way for a railroad might be a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment and possession when the existence of a public highway would not be. The cases upon this question are collected in 8 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, page 124, and 11 Cyc., 1124. Although the rule in this State, as announced in the foregoing cases, is that, when the purchaser accepts a conveyance with knowledge of the existence of a highway or railway, he can not thereafter obtain an abatement of the purchase price or a cancellation of the contract on account of the encumbrance, this principle will not be applied to railway rights of way, as against a purchaser under an executory contract, in the absence of evidence showing that it was the intention of the purchaser to pay for the land enclosed in the right of way, when he objects in seasonable time to accepting a conveyance of the property that would require him to pay for the right of way.

Wherefore, the judgment of the lower court is reversed, with directions to proceed in conformity with this opinion.

SPALDING v. THORNBURY.

(Filed March 24, 1908.—To be reported.)

1. County Attorneys—Duties—Compensation—Sections 126, 127, 128, 129 and 131 prescribe the duties of the county attorney, and sec. 132 prescribes his compensation. This must necessarily include his compensation for all services rendered, where other compensation is not allowed therefor.

2. Same—All services rendered under section 127 must stand alike. The statute makes it his duty to institute or defend actions and proceedings when "directed" by the county or fiscal court. If the statute had contemplated an employment the word "employed" would have been used instead of "directed."

3. Additional Duties Imposed by Statute—Commission Provided—Where, by statute, duties are imposed upon the county attorney and compensation, by way of commission is provided, he is entitled to such compensation in addition to his salary. The salary named in section 132 only covers the services required of him by law and for which no other compensation is provided.

4. Salary—Contingent Fees—The salary of the county attorney is part of the current expenses of the county and must be paid out of the general fund provided for that purpose. It can not be paid by way of contingent fees out of other fund, nor is it contemplated by the statute that his salary shall be contingent and not fixed by the fiscal court.

Wm. C. McChord, Wm. W. Spalding, T. L. Edelen and Chinn & Edelen for appellant.

H. W. Rives and Jno. M. McChord for appellee.

Appeal from Marion Circuit Court.

Response to petition for re-hearing by Judge Hobson, overruling.

Since the opinion was delivered, oral argument has been had upon the petition for re-hearing, and we have again carefully considered the questions raised. It is insisted for the appellant that the annual salary provided by sec. 132, Kentucky Statutes, covers only the services required of the county attorney absolutely by the preceding sections, without any direction from the county or fiscal court; but that it does not include services which are only to be rendered by him when directed by the county or fiscal court. We can not concur in this construction of the statute. Sections 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, and 131, prescribe the duties of the county attorney; and section 132, which immediately follows, prescribes his compensation. We think this must necessarily include his compensation for all services required of him by the preceding sections, where other compensation is not allowed therefor. We can not see how it can include part of the services rendered under section 127 and not include the others, there being nothing in the statute to justify the court in making a distinction. All the services rendered under section 127 must stand alike, there being nothing in the statute to show the contrary. Not only so, but the words of the statute refute the idea that an employment of the county attorney is contemplated by that section. The language of the section is that "when so directed by the county or fiscal court" he shall institute or defend actions and proceedings of every character, before any of the courts of the Commonwealth in which the county is interested. The statute makes it his duty to institute or defend the actions when directed by the county or fiscal court. It leaves him no discretion. If an employment had been contemplated, he would not be required to act unless the proposed compensation was satisfactory to him. If the statute had contemplated an employment of the county attorney, the word "employed" would have been used instead of the word "directed." The county court is without authority, except in a very limited degree, to make contracts for the county, but by the terms of this statute it is the duty of the county attorney to attend to any action when directed by the county court. This shows that the Legislature did not have in mind an employment of the county attorney and that it contemplated that such services as he rendered, when directed by the county court, should be included in his official duties and covered by his annual salary. Where by statute duties are imposed upon the county attorney and compensation by way of commissions or otherwise is provided by the statute, he is entitled to such compensation in addition to his salary allowed by the fiscal court under section 132, Kentucky Statutes. The salary named in that section only covers the services required of the county attorney by law and for which no other compensation is provided.

It is also insisted for appellant that the annual salary provided for by section 132, need not necessarily be a fixed sum, but may be made to depend upon contingent fees. The word "salary" may be defined generally as a fixed annual or periodical payment for services depending upon the time and not upon the amount of the services rendered. (24 Am. & Eng. Cyc., 1015.)

It is true that sometimes, to give a statute effect, the word will be given a broader construction, but this will not be done where the language of the statute forbids this construction. Sec. 132, Kentucky Statutes, not only provides that the county attorney shall be allowed annually, a reasonable salary, but it adds "to be paid out of the county levy." Claims against the county are allowed by the fiscal court and are payable out of the county levy. To make an allowance payable out of the county levy, must necessarily mean that a certain sum is to be allowed, so that the county treasurer will have a definite order of the fiscal court to direct him in the payment of the claim. By section 1072, Kentucky Statutes, the county judge shall receive an annual salary payable in quarterly installments by the county. Manifestly this refers to a certain sum to be allowed by the fiscal court and paid quarterly. While the allowance to the county attorney is not required to be paid quarterly, the sense is evidently the same. The salary of the county attorney is a part of the current expenses of the county and must be paid, like other current expenses, out of the general fund provided for that purpose. It can not be paid by way of contingent fees out of other funds. Nor is it contemplated by the statute that the salary of the county attorney shall be contingent and not fixed by the fiscal court.

In the case at bar appellant's salary had not been fixed before his election. After his election, the fiscal court made the two orders quoted in the opinion. If it was the intention of the fiscal court by these two orders, to fix his salary, and if the annual salary was fixed lower than it would have been but for the previous order allowing him contingent compensation in certain cases, a case of mutual mistake is presented and the fiscal court may, in its discretion, when it sets aside the order as to the attorney's contingent compensation, make an order fixing the annual salary for all of the attorney's services at such a sum as it deems just. We do not determine that the fiscal court did make a mistake. We only determine that if it did make a mistake, and if it desires to correct this mistake, it may correct it as any other mistake may be corrected, by making now an order for such an annual salary as it deems just to cover all of the attorney's services.

The petition for re-hearing is overruled, but the opinion is extended as above indicated.

TERRELL v. TRIMBLE COUNTY.

(Filed March 24, 1908—To be reported.)

1. County Attorneys—Fixed Salary—Additional Compensation—Proceeding to Collect Taxes—Where the fiscal court, by a previous order, had fixed the salary of the county attorney, it had no authority to make him an additional allowance for bringing a suit, or for his services in collecting certain taxes due from a distilling company, as it was his duty to render such service, when directed by the fiscal court, by virtue of his office as county attorney.

2. Same—Duties—Compensation—When the fiscal court has fixed the compensation of the county attorney, it has no power to increase or diminish it during his term. And it is his duty to perform all his official duties for the compensation fixed.

3. Same—Employing Additional Counsel—Expenses Incurred—Allowance Therefor—But where a county attorney is directed by the fiscal court to institute proceedings to collect certain taxes and to employ other counsel to assist him therein, the county should bear his reasonable expenses incurred in the prosecution of the work and any sums paid in securing other counsel in the necessary prosecution of the work.

William Carroll and Claude B. Terrell for appellant.

G. W. Peak, Jr., for appellee.

Appeal from Trimble Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, reversing.

At the regular November election, 1901, Claude B. Terrell was elected County Attorney of Trimble county. He qualified and entered upon the discharge of the duties of the office January 6, 1902. By an order made at the October term, 1902, the salary of the County Attorney was fixed at $400 per year. On January 23, 1905, the fiscal court entered the following order:

"It appearing to the satisfaction of the court, that Harry M. Levy, owner and proprietor of the Richwood Distillery, of Trimble county, Kentucky, is indebted to Trimble county for interest due on taxes due on whisky during the bonded period, or until withdrawn from bond, and the tax paid thereon. It is therefore ordered, all the justices voting in the affirmative, that Claude B. Terrell, county attorney, be, and he is hereby, empowered to collect said interest due and to institute suit for the same against the said Richwood Distillery, or the proprietor thereof, if necessary to recover the amount due thereon, and he is empowered to employ such counsel as he may deem necessary to assist him in the prosecution of said suit."

Terrell proceeded under the order and collected taxes to the amount of $1,351.96, and on November 13, 1905, the fiscal court made this order:

"It appearing to the satisfaction of the court that Claude B. Terrell, has collected of the Richwood Distillery Company the sum of $1,351.96, as interest on whisky tax, it is now ordered that he be, and he is hereby allowed 25 per cent. of the amount so collected, said per cent. to be retained by him out of the sum collected by him, and it is further ordered that he be allowed a like sum per cent. for any other back taxes collected by him."

Terrell retained twenty-five per cent. of the amount he had collected, amounting to $337.99, and paid over the balance to the county. On October 5, 1906, the fiscal court made an order directing the county attorney, then in office to collect from the former county attorney, Claude B. Terrell, the money which he had retained under the order of the former fiscal court, there having been a change of magistrates in the meantime. Thereupon this suit was brought in the name of Trimble county against Claude B. Terrell to recover the money. He answered, setting up all of the facts as above stated, and also alleged that, in discharging the duties required of him by the fiscal court, he had expended, in his necessary expenses, a sum in excess of $100, as he had to make trips to Louisville, Covington, Frankfort, and other places, to obtain the necessary information and attend to the matter. He further alleged that the sum allowed to him was only a reasonable compensation for the services which he had rendered, and that he had paid his expenses out of his own means. The circuit court sustained a demurrer to the answer and Terrell appeals.

It is not material that Terrell did not bring a suit to collect the taxes. The fact that the taxpayer paid over the taxes without suit gives him no right to compensation which he would not have, if he had brought a suit against the taxpayer, which had been prosecuted to judgment or settled before trial. The ascertainment of the amount of taxes due was preliminary to a suit, and it was the duty of the county attorney to conduct a proceeding of this character, when directed by the fiscal court, under section 127 of the Kentucky Statutes. The fiscal court had fixed, by a previous order, the reasonable salary to be paid annually to the county attorney for his services, under section 132, of the Kentucky Statutes, and this allowance was in full of all his official services as county attorney, including both those required of him expressly by the statute, or which he rendered upon direction of the fiscal court or the county court, under section 127 of the Kentucky Statutes. When the fiscal court had fixed his compensation, it was without power to increase or diminish his compensation during the term for which he was elected, under section 161 of the Constitution. And, it was his duty to perform all his official duties for the compensation so fixed. The fiscal court was without authority to allow him other compensation for his official services, for this would be to increase his compensation during his term of office. The order of the fiscal court, therefore, allowing him to retain the twenty-five per cent. of the amount which he had collected, was in violation of the Constitution and void. The money which he retained under that order was the money of the county, as the fiscal court has no authority to dispose of the money of the county, except as may be provided by law. (Spalding v. Thornberry, 103 S. W., 291, 31 Ky. Law Rep., 738; McNew v. Commonwealth, 93 S. W., 1047, 29 Ky. Law Rep., 540; McNew v. Nicholas County, 100 S. W., 324, 30 Ky. Law Rep., 1147; and, Butler v. James, 116 Ky., 575, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 801.)

But, while it was the duty of Terrell, when directed by the fiscal court, to institute proceedings to collect the taxes referred to in any court of the Commonwealth, it was not incumbent upon him to pay his own expenses, necessarily incurred in discharging the duties required of him by the fiscal court. The county was entitled to his personal time and attention, but when it required him to leave his county and attend to its business, like any other client who sends his attorney off to attend to his business, it should bear his reasonable expenses incurred in the prosecution of the business. This should include not only his personal expenses, but any sums paid in securing other counsel, or in the necessary prosecution of the work.

The court erred in sustaining the demurrer to the answer in so far as it set up the expenses incurred by Terrell. To the extent of his reasonable expenses he was entitled to retain the money in his hands, and was only liable for the balance over and above the reasonable expenses. When the fiscal court directs the county attorney to proceed with the case and authorizes him to employ counsel to assist him, and acquiesces in such employment, or ratifies it, the compensation of such additional counsel is a proper charge against the county, and such sums as may be paid to the counsel thus employed by the authority of the fiscal court, and with its acquiescence, are properly paid.

The judgment is reversed and cause remanded, for further proceedings consistent herewith.

ALBIN CO. v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed March 3, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Contract—Hiring Convicts—Bond of Indemnity—Construction of Contract—A bond was given by B. to the prison commissioners of the Kentucky penitentiary for hire of convicts with the F. & D. Company as surety. The contract was finally made by B. & M. but the bond was not changed. By consent, the contract was sold to appellant company on condition that it give a bond for its faithful performance. The F. & D. company agreed to sign the bond if provision was made to pay a certain indebtedness of B. & M. to the State for the hire of the convicts, which was done by paying cash in part, and giving notes for the balance to be held in trust by the agent of F. & D. Company. Held—That the deposit of the notes was not only for indemnity, but was also for the purpose of paying the indebtedness of B. & M. to the State and was enforceable under sec. 18, Civil Code.

2. Same—Board of Prison Commissioners—False Statement By One Member—Effect on Contract—In a contract made with the prison commissioners, for the hire of convicts, a false statement made by one of the commissioners as to the value of the business, the contractor was to engage in, was not the statement of the board and the State is not responsible for such false representations, if made.

3. Corporation—Authority to Contract—Plea of Ultra Vires—A corporation, having power to purchase and sell real estate and to engage in trading in general merchandise, after buying a business and giving its notes for the price can not, in an action on said notes, plead that its act was ultra vires in bar of said action.

Kohn, Baird, Sloss & Kohn and Moses Pulverman for appellant.

N. B. Hays, C. H. Morris and W. M. Smith for appellee.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker, affirming.

William Preston Bybee, about the 6th day of February, 1899, was negotiating with the prison commissioners of the Eddyville penitentiary, for a contract by which he was to lease or hire the services of not less than fifty, nor more than one hundred of the convicts, to be used for the manufacture of brushes for a period of four years from the 1st day of January, 1899, with the privilege of extending the contract for four more years, and for which he was to pay the Commonwealth thirty-five cents per day for each convict hired to him; the payments to be made on the 10th day of each month for the labor of the preceding month.

The prison commissioners required, as a condition precedent to the proposed contract, the execution by the lessee, of a bond conditioned in the sum of three thousand dollars for the faithful performance of the contract on the part of the lessee and the prompt payment of the contract price for the hired convicts. In order to meet the requirements of the commissioners, Bybee had prepared a bond conditioned as required, with the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland as his surety, for which he paid to its general agent, Willis S. Mullen, the fee charged by the company for becoming surety on the bond in question.

The prison commissioners did not make a contract with William Preston Bybee, but afterwards entered into a contract with Bybee and McClelland in all respects similar to that above described, which William Preston Bybee anticipated would be made with him alone.

The prison commissioners, however, seem to have been under the impression, and to have claimed, that the bond prepared by William Preston Bybee, and on which the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland was surety, was a good and sufficient bond to cover the contract made with Bybee and McClelland. The latter firm took charge of the convicts, installed the necessary machinery, and proceeded with the manufacture of brushes, under their contract, until the 8th day of January, 1900, when, with the consent of a majority of the prison commissioners, they sold out their machinery, stock on hand and lease contract to the Albin Company, which took charge of the business and proceeded with the manufacture of brushes.

Before the prison commissioners would consent to the assignment of the contract of Bybee and McClelland to the Albin Company, they required of the assignee, a bond conditioned for the faithful performance of its contract. In order to meet this requirement, the assignee applied to the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland to go on its bond, but its general agent, Willis S. Mullen, declined to do so, unless some provision was made for the payment of the indebtedness of Bybee and McClelland to the State of Kentucky, which, at that time, amounted to two thousand four hundred and ninety-two dollars and seventy-two cents. Mullen did not admit that his company was surety on the bond of Bybee and McClelland, but he recognized the fact that the State claimed that it was the surety for them by reason of its being the surety on the individual bond of William Preston Bybee, before mentioned; and being uncertain as to what would be the outcome of this question, he declined to become surety on the Albin Company's bond unless some provision was made, as before said, looking to the final extinguishment of the indebtedness of Bybee and McClelland to the State. There is a good deal of contrariety of opinion between the parties litigant here, as to what was the legal effect of the acts done in reference to securing the indebtedness of Bybee and McClelland, and these various opinions will be noticed more at length hereafter; but there is no dispute that the following receipt was executed by Willis S. Mullen, as general agent of the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland:

"Received of the Albin Company check for eleven hundred and seven dollars and seventy-two cents ($1,107.72), made payable to Willis S. Mullen, General Agent of the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland, for payment to the Auditor of Public Accounts of the State of Kentucky, for the account of Bybee & McClelland, also fourteen (14) one hundred ($100) dollar notes made by the Albin Company to Bybee & McClelland, said notes to be endorsed by Willis S. Mullen, General Agent, proceeds of which notes, if collected by said Willis S. Mullen, to be applied to the account of Bybee & McClelland, with the State of Kentucky; said notes to be held in trust by said Willis S. Mullen, General Agent, until they became due, or until said Bybee & McClelland have settled their indebtedness to the State.

"WILLIS S. MULLEN, Gen Agt."

There is no dispute that the trustee, Mullen, paid over to the Commonwealth of Kentucky, the amount of cash—one thousand one hundred and seven dollars and seventy-two cents—received by him at the time he executed the above receipt. This cash payment reduced the indebtedness of Bybee and McClelland to one thousand three hundred and eighty-five dollars.

Mullen having failed to pay over to the Commonwealth any of the proceeds of the fourteen notes, mentioned in the above receipt, the Commonwealth instituted this action against the Albin Company, W. P. Bybee, F. A. McClelland, the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland and W. S. Mullen, and in the petition set out the foregoing facts, praying a judgment against all of the defendants for the sum of one thousand three hundred and eighty-five dollars due to it from the firm of Bybee and McClelland.

Mullen filed an answer admitting that he held the notes mentioned in the receipt, and that he had collected two of them, and offered to pay over the amount collected and to make such disposition of the notes as the court should direct.

The Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland denied that any contract was ever made between William Preston Bybee and the prison commissioners of the Eddyville penitentiary; denied being surety on the contract of Bybee and McClelland; and also denied being indebted as surety or otherwise to the Commonwealth for the sum of one thousand three hundred and eighty-five dollars sued for, or any part of it.

The Albin Company alleged that the fourteen notes in question were deposited with Willis S. Mullen as indemnity merely against any lawful claim which the Commonwealth might have against it by reason of its suretyship on the bond of William Preston Bybee, and alleged that the prison commissioners did not make a contract with Bybee, and that he owed it nothing; that the contract of the prison commissioners was with Bybee and McClelland, and, therefore, its co-defendant, the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland owed the Commonwealth nothing; that it had been defrauded by Bybee and McClelland and the prison commissioners into buying out that firm, and it had been damaged in the sum of eleven thousand dollars, which it made a counterclaim against the State of Kentucky, and a cross-petition against its co-defendants Bybee and McClelland. It also set up an indebtedness of Bybee and McClelland of five hundred dollars for borrowed money, which it made a cross-petition against them. In addition it pleaded that under its charter it had no authority to embark in the business of manufacturing brushes, and that all of its acts and doings with reference to the purchase of the contract of Bybee and McClelland and their machinery and stock on hand, were ultra vires and void.

Upon the trial of the case the circuit judge held that the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland was not a surety on the bond of Bybee and McClelland, and dismissed the petition as to it, and awarded a judgment in favor of the Commonwealth against the Albin Company for one thousand three hundred and eighty-five dollars. This judgment it now seeks to reverse on this appeal.

The first question with which we are confronted is the legal effect of what was done at the time of the assignment by Bybee and McClelland to the Albin Company towards securing the payment to the State of the amount admitted to have been due to it from Bybee and McClelland. If, as is contended by the Albin Company, the deposit of the notes with Willis S. Mullen was alone, to indemnify the surety company against the claim of the Commonwealth, as surety for the money due by Bybee and McClelland, then the State's claim to this fund falls to the ground, because the trial court dismissed the petition as to the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland, and the State is not complaining of this ruling. But if the deposit was made for the purpose of paying off the admitted indebtedness of Bybee and McClelland, then the Commonwealth, under section 18 of the Code of Practice, is entitled to enforcement of the contract made for its benefit, although it was not a party to it. (Allen v. Thomas, 3 Met., 198; Smith v. Smith, 5 Bush, 625; Paducah Lumber Co. v. Paducah Water Co., 89 Ky., 340, 11 Ky. Law Rep., 738; Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. Schmidt, 112 Ky., 717, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 2097.) Willis S. Mullen testified positively that he demanded the payment to himself of the cash and the deposit of the notes as indemnity to his company, and we do not at all doubt his candor on this subject. That he had in mind only the indemnification of his company against a disputed claim of the Commonwealth may be readily believed; but what the other parties to the transaction had in mind is a different question. It must not be overlooked that the Albin Company was purchasing the contract with the State, and the machinery and stock on hand of Bybee and McClelland, and for the purchase price it was to pay them one thousand one hundred and seven dollars and seventy-two cents in cash, and to deliver to them fourteen notes of one hundred dollars each. These were the property of Bybee and McClelland, and two things could be accomplished by the action which was taken in regard to them; primarily the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland was to obtain indemnification against the claim which it did not admit; but, secondarily, the debt of the State against Bybee and McClelland, admitted to be due and owing, was to be paid off and discharged, and in so doing the indemnification of the Fidelity and Deposit Company would be made perfect; for the assertion of this claim was what it feared. The receipt, itself, clearly shows that both of these things were to be done. By its language it is specially provided that the one thousand one hundred and seven dollars and seventy-two cents cash turned over to Willis S. Mullen, was to be paid to the Auditor of Public Accounts of the State of Kentucky for the account of Bybee and McClelland. There is, therefore, no doubt as to what the parties meant to be done with the cash paid. Nor is there much doubt as to what was meant to be done with the notes. The proceeds of these, if collected by Willis S. Mullen, were to be applied to the account of Bybee and McClelland with the State of Kentucky. In short, it is plain that the parties meant that what the Albin Company was to pay to Bybee and McClelland for their contract with the State, their machinery and stock on hand, was to be put in the hands of Willis S. Mullen to pay off and discharge the indebtedness of Bybee and McClelland to the Commonwealth. No other meaning can be obtained from the language used in the receipt; and this receipt constitutes the written understanding of all the parties in interest as to what was to be done with the trust fund of cash and notes placed in the hands of Willis S. Mullen.

It would be difficult to show a reason for making a distinction between the purposes for which the cash and the notes were placed in the hands of Mullen. Nobody disputes that all of the cash paid over to the trustee was to be by him turned over to the State in payment of the debt due by Bybee and McClelland, and nobody disputes that as fast as the notes were collected (if collected at all) the money was to be paid over at once to the State. Now, if the cash was to be paid to the State, why is it that the notes were only held for indemnification? The notes were to be turned into cash, and when so converted, the cash was to be paid to the State; and this being true, we are bound to conclude that the notes, like the cash, were placed in the hands of the trustee for collection, and when collected, to be paid on the debt due by Bybee and McClelland to the State.

Herman Albin, the president of the Albin Company, himself deposed on the subject in hand, and gave this account of what transpired between himself, McClelland and Mullen as to the notes:

"A. Well, we went to see Mr. Mullen—Mr. McClelland and I—and we asked Mr. Mullen, of the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland, to go on our bond, as we understood they were on the bond for the brush company, and Mr. Mullen said he would not go on the bond unless the Bybee Brush Company or William Preston Bybee—I don't know which the contract was in, but whichever it was—would first clear up matters with the State; and Mr. McClelland then said they had outstanding, owing them from the different parties they had sold brushes to, and they hadn't collected for, that were due, some of them, and on the other hand they themselves owed money; that they wanted to use this money to pay off, and part would go to the State, and Mr. Mullen said: 'You let me hold some of these notes, and that will be security, and I will pay part to the State.' Mr. Mullen wanted it understood that while he was not liable, still he wanted to be sure that he was not on the bond."

"Q. Mr. Mullen was acting as agent of the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland?"

"A. Yes, sir; he was acting for the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland; he was their general agent in Kentucky. He then said, 'Mr. McClelland, you let me have those notes, and when they are collected, I will turn them over to the State.'"

This shows that McClelland and Mullen, as well as the Albin Company, understood that the notes were to be collected and the proceeds turned over to the State, and in this way the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland would be fully indemnified by the payment to the State of what was due it. The fact that it subsequently transpired that the State did not have a just claim against the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland is immaterial. All of the parties in interest agreed that the cash and notes deposited with Mullen by McClelland and the Albin Company were for the purpose of using the property of Bybee and McClelland to pay their just debt to the State.

The Albin Company, through its president, having consented that the notes executed and delivered by it to Bybee and McClelland should be assigned to Willis S. Mullen, as trustee for the payment of the State's debt, no offset or discount which it afterwards had could affect the State's claim to the proceeds of the notes. Herman Albin, its president, was present when the assignment was made, and not only knew of it, but consented to it; for this was in large part in the interest of his company, because the Fidelity and Deposit Company would not agree to become its surety until the debt of the State against Bybee and McClelland was secured: so that it may be truly said the Albin Company had a beneficial interest in the assignment made to Mullen.

The counterclaim for damages against the State for the alleged fraud of its commissioner in falsely representing the value of the plant which Bybee and McClelland desired to sell, was not sustained by the evidence. Herman Albin, who alone, deposed upon this question, claims that J. M. Richardson, one of the commissioners, made false statements to him as to what Bybee and McClelland were making out of their contract; but it is difficult to understand upon what principle the State can be bound by the individual acts of one commissioner out of three. The board of commissioners act as a body, and assuming it to be true (which we do not decide, however) that Richardson made false statements to Albin as to the value of the plant of Bybee and McClelland, the Commonwealth can not be made responsible in damages for these false representations.

We are of opinion that the plea of ultra vires is not sustained. The incorporators and stockholders of the Albin Company are Herman Albin, his wife, and a man by the name of Sales, all living in Louisville, Kentucky. Herman Albin is shown to be the dominant spirit and controller of the corporation. It was incorporated under chapter 56, of the General Statutes of Kentucky, and by its articles of incorporation has the power to make contracts and acquire, by purchase or otherwise, property, both real and personal, and sell, convey and transfer the same; possessing the same powers as private individuals enjoy. The general nature of the corporation was to sell or trade in merchandise, principally furniture, carpets, personal and house furnishings and such other wares that may be deemed advisable to be carried. Whether or not this corporation had the power to enter into a contract with the State and lease from it convicts, and carry on the business of manufacturing brushes, we need not now stop to inquire, for that question is not before us. The notes in question were given for the purchase from Bybee and McClelland of their machinery, stock on hand, and their contract with the State. Certainly the purchase of the machinery and the stock on hand was clearly within the purview of this trading corporation, which was authorized to buy both real and personal property, and to sell and convey it as individuals may. Moreover, the corporation has, by its act, obtained possession of all the property of Bybee and McClelland, and thus deprived the State of all opportunity to make its debt out of them. It can not now plead ultra vires in bar of the State's claim for the notes delivered to Bybee and McClelland in payment for their property.

In the case of Underwood, &c. v. The Newport Lyceum, 5 B. Mon., 129, 41 Am. Dec., 260, it was held that the Newport Lyceum, although it had no authority, under its charter, to issue bank bills or to do a banking business, yet it could not escape, under the plea of ultra vires, from paying a debt incurred in having bank bills and other material for carrying on the business of banking prepared and printed. The court said that, although to carry on the business of banking was ultra vires, yet the defendant corporation had general power to purchase the articles named, and would have to pay for them, although it could not use them after they were purchased. So in the case at bar, the Albin Company had a general right to buy the machinery and stock on hand and the contract from Bybee and McClelland, and can not escape paying the purchase price therefor, although it might be conceded that to carry on the business of broom-making in the penitentiary, would be beyond its power under its charter.

In Bigelow on Estoppel, page 467, it is said: "However, if a contract with a corporation has been performed in good faith by the other party, and the corporation has received the benefits thereof, it probably can not interpose against its duties assumed thereunder the defense of ultra vires."

In Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law, 2nd edition, volume 29, title 'Ultra Vires,' page 50, it is said: "It is now very well settled that a corporation can not avail itself of the defense of ultra vires when the contract has been in good faith fully performed by the other party, and the corporation has had the full benefit of the performance and of the contract."

In Green's Brice's Ultra Vires, page 721, the law is thus stated: "There seems to be no substantial reason whatever for not extending the principle here involved to all analogous cases. If liable in one case, why should not a corporation be always liable to refund the money or property of a person which it has obtained improperly and without consideration, or if unable to return it, to pay for the benefit obtained thereby? To say that a corporation can not sue or be sued upon an ultra vires arrangement is one thing. To say that it may retain the proceeds thereof which have come into its possession without making any compensation whatever to the person from whom it has obtained them, is something very different, and savors very much of an inducement to fraud." In Note A, Id. 729, the author has collated and discussed at great length many cases bearing upon the subject in hand, and it is there said: "In the United States the defense of ultra vires interposed against a contract wholly or in part executed, has very generally been looked upon with disfavor." And this principle is upheld by Louisville Tobacco Warehouse Co. v. Stewart, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 934.

Upon the whole case, we are clearly of opinion that the judgment of the trial court in awarding the Commonwealth a judgment against the Albin Company for the amount of the notes and cash in the hands of the trustee, Willis S. Mullen, was correct, and it is, therefore, affirmed.

POOLE, &c. v. SLAYTON, FOR USE, &c.

(Filed March 19, 1903—To be reported.)

Road supervisors—Appointment—Salary—Taxation—Maintenance of Roads and Bridges—Where a sum as large as $7,000 per annum is actually collected from the taxpayers of a county and expended for road and bridge purposes by the fiscal court, it is a sufficient maintenance by taxation to authorize the employment of a road supervisor at a reasonable salary, under Ky. Statutes, 1903, sec. 4314, authorizing the appointment of a road supervisor when the roads are worked by taxation.

Belcher and Sparks for appellants.

Willis and Meredith for appellees.

Appeal from Muhlenburg Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by William Rogers Clay, Commissioner, reversing.

Appellee, T. J. Slayton, suing for himself and other tax-payers of Muhlenburg county, instituted this action to recover of appellant, D. U. Poole, the sum of $1,200.00, $600.00 of which was allowed him as salary for services rendered as road and bridge supervisor of Muhlenburg county for the year 1904, and the remaining $600.00 for his services in the same capacity for the year 1905. It is claimed by appellee that appellant's appointment was illegal and void, and the allowance of his salary was unwarranted by law for the reason that the roads and bridges of Muhlenburg county were not maintained by taxation, and that the right to elect a road and bridge supervisor exists only in case the roads and bridges are maintained by taxation.

It appears that, on the 10th day of November, 1903, the fiscal court of Muhlenburg county levied an ad valorem tax of fifty cents on each one hundred dollars worth of property, and also a poll tax of one dollar and a half on each and every male inhabitant of said county over the age of twenty-one years, "for the purpose of paying off the existing indebtedness of said county, and to defray the current and necessary expenses of same."

On November 15th, 1904, a similar levy was made for the same purpose. On the 16th day of November, 1904, an order was entered by the fiscal court appropriating twenty-five cents on each one hundred dollar's worth of property in the county for road and bridge purposes. There was expended for road and bridge purposes by the county of Muhlenburg for the year 1904, $7,841.76; for the year 1905, $7,560.15. In the county clerk's office there is a record called "claims allowed by the fiscal court of Muhlenburg county," which has a column in which are placed the amounts allowed on county roads and bridges.

The above amounts are shown by this record to have been expended for the two years referred to.

Appellant was elected road and bridge supervisor of Muhlenburg county on April 4th, 1904. He entered upon his duties on April 20th, 1904, and served two years. On November 15th, 1904, he was allowed his first year's salary of $600.00. On April 12th, 1905, his second year's salary was allowed.

The only question in this case is, whether or not the roads were maintained by taxation, for, under section 4314, Ky. Statutes, the power to appoint a supervisor of roads exists only when the roads are worked by taxation. Section 4306 provides that "public roads shall be maintained, either by taxation or by hands allotted to work thereon," or both in the discretion of the fiscal court. It is contended by counsel for appellee that no tax for road and bridge purposes pursuant to section 4307 was specifically levied, and that the appropriation by the fiscal court of the funds collected by the county levy for the years 1904 and 1905 did not, therefore, constitute a maintaining of the roads by taxation. While it is true that no specific levy was made for road purposes for the years in question, it is equally true that no specific levy was made for any other purposes. The county did levy an ad valorem tax of fifty cents, but under no circumstances could it go beyond this limit; no additional levy for road and bridge purposes could have been made. As shown above, the levy for each of the years in question was made to defray the current and necessary expenses of the county. The validity of the levy is not now before us. The money has been collected from the taxpayers, and they can not recover it back.

Was the expenditure for road and bridge purposes a current and necessary expense, as defined in section 1882, Ky. Statutes? In Combs, &c., v. Letcher county, &c., 21 Ky. Law Rep., 1057, this court said: "Moreover, we should not hesitate to hold that the creation of a courthouse fund by levies, of course within lawful limits, is a 'necessary expense' within the meaning of section 1882, supra, which is the section relied on by appellants." Manifestly, therefore, if the creation of a courthouse fund by levies is a "necessary expense" within the meaning of section 1882, the maintenance of the roads and bridges of the county is likewise a "necessary expense." Indeed, their maintenance is just as necessary an expense as any other expense that can be incurred by the county. Furthermore, as the levies for the years in question did not specify the particular purposes for which they were made, the appropriation of funds for road and bridge purposes did not constitute an appropriation of money for purposes other than those for which it was collected, as prohibited by section 180 of the Constitution. It does not appear that any donations were made to the county for the years in question. The only funds that it had available were collected under the county levies for these years. These funds were paid by the tax-payers. The appropriations for road and bridge purposes were made out of the funds collected from the taxpayers, and it seems to us, therefore, unreasonable to say that where about $7,000.00 for each of the years mentioned was expended for road and bridge purposes, which sums were levied by the fiscal court and collected by taxation, the roads and bridges were not maintained by taxation. Where a sum as large as $7,000.00 per annum is actually collected from the tax-payers and expended for road and bridge purposes, we think it a sufficient maintenance by taxation to authorize the employment of a road supervisor at a reasonable salary.

We, therefore, conclude that the payment of appellant's salary was not unauthorized by law.

For the reasons given, the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to dismiss appellees' petition.

CITY OF OWENSBORO v. HOPE.

(Filed March 24, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Municipalities—Street Improvement—Discretion of City—Review—Absence of Negligence—A city authorized to establish, grade and regrade the streets thereof, assumes a certain public duty with respect thereto, and its judgment or discretion as to the time when and the manner in which they shall be improved, is beyond review unless in making and maintaining the improvements it acts with culpable negligence.

2. Same—Dedicating Land for Street—Compensation to Owner—Award by Jury—Presumption—When a strip of land is dedicated for a street, it is implied that it may be graded so far as may be necessary to fit it for such purpose, and it will be presumed that the jury, in awarding compensation under the writ of ad quod damnum have estimated the inconvenience of the owner and injury to his remaining property likely to ensue from the necessary grading of the surface. And until the city has once exercised its right to grade the street, the adjacent lot owners have notice that its surface is subject to such change as the city may order in its discretion, when it sees proper to improve the highway.

3. Original Construction—Consequential Damages—For such consequential damages as result to an adjacent lot because of the original construction of the grade of a street, when not done negligently, the lot owner is not entitled to recover from the city; the street having been previously dedicated, or acquired by the city for that purpose.

4. Right to Grade Street—Passage of Ordinance—Subsequent Acts of Lot Owner—Damages Therefor—The right of a city to have a street graded attaches at the time the ordinance authorizing it passed, and a lot owner can not abridge this right by erecting a house or fences or setting out trees along the property line. In so improving his property he took the chances of sustaining a loss by the proper construction of the street when that event happened.

George W. Jolly for appellant.

Wilfred Carico, Watkins & Birkhead for appellee.

Appeal from Daviess Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice O'Rear, reversing.

This action at law was filed in the Daviess Circuit Court by appellee, Hope, against the City of Owensboro, for the recovery of damages alleged to have been sustained by him by the lowering of the established grade in constructing a macadam roadway opposite his property. The plaintiff's lot fronts on the east side of Clay street, and fronts forty feet extending back east, and was used as a residence.

In building the new street, on the new grade, it is alleged the street was lowered three and a half feet, and that he had shade trees in front of his house on his lot which would be destroyed.

The petition states:

"He further states that the defendant city, by an ordinance duly enacted, approved and published, ordered and directed this plaintiff to lower his said sidewalk from its present position to the grade established aforesaid. To do this he says he will be required to excavate the whole of the front of his said lot to a depth of three and one-half feet, which will necessitate a new concrete sidewalk, a retaining wall of at least three and a half feet in height, and steps or a stairway to enable him and others to get from Clay street to his said lot and residence.

"The said excavation will destroy his said shade trees in front of his said property. He says all of this has been made necessary by the excavation and changing of the grade of the said street in front of his said property.

"He further states that the said excavation on said street has destroyed his ingress to and egress from his said property, and that he is by reason of said excavation of said street and lowering of its grade, the plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of at least seven hundred and fifty dollars."

Prior to the improvement of the street, by having it graded, macadamized, curbed and paved, as recited, it appears to have been laid out as a street, its natural surface being used for such travel as had occasion to traverse it. It is gathered from the record that the locality in that vicinity was but sparsely settled, and not until the work now in question was ordered by the council, had the city taken any steps to establish the permanent grade of the street or of its sidewalks. Notwithstanding, appellee and others saw proper to erect buildings and fencing, and to set out shade trees adjacent to the street, upon the assumption that the city would never alter the natural grade of the street, or that if it did, appellee and other property holders could claim compensation for damages thereby inflicted upon their abutting property.

A city authorized to establish, grade and regrade the streets within its territory, assumes a certain public duty with respect to these highways. Its judgment or discretion as to the time when and as to the manner in which the highway shall be improved is generally beyond review, and absolutely so unless in the plan or manner of making or maintaining the improvements it acts with culpable negligence.

When a strip of land is dedicated, or is acquired by condemnation, for the purposes of a highway, it is implied that it may be graded so far as may be necessary to fit it for the purposes for which it was set apart; and in either case, it will be presumed that the dedicator, or the jury, in awarding compensation under the writ of ad quod damnum, have estimated the inconvenience of the owner and injury to his remaining property likely to ensue from the necessary and proper grading of the surface. And until the municipality has once exercised its right to grade the street, the adjacent lot owners have notice that its surface is subject to such change as the municipality may order in the fair exercise of its discretion when it sees proper to improve the highway.

Some authorities hold that the duty of a municipality to grade its streets as may be necessary is a continuing one, and when the power is granted by the Legislature, can not be abrogated by contract or act of estoppel. (Smith's Modern Law of Municipal Corporations, section 318; Elliott Streets and Roads, 343, et seq.; Dillon Municipal Corporations, section 686; Gozzle v. Georgetown, 6 Wheat., U. S., 593.) But a distinction is recognized between the rights of abutting owners where no grade has before been fixed, and where one has been made. The reason is not far to seek. As already pointed out, the owner is presumed to have been compensated for the injury done by a proper grading of the adjacent highway when he accepted the price for the dedicated strip, or considered the benefits and disadvantages that would accrue from the opening of the road when graded for use. On the other hand, if the damages were awarded by a jury, they must have been instructed and considered the inconvenience that would result to the adjacent remaining lot, and as such damages must all be recovered in one action, such improvements in their nature being deemed permanent, the presumption arises that such grade, when fixed and constructed, and its consequences were alike permanent and inseparable. The adjacent owner may then erect buildings with respect to the permanent structure of the street. It is true the town has the right to change the grade, as it ought to do when the public good demands. But in that event, if it takes or injures the adjacent property, that is a taking for the public, and the public should pay for it. It was to meet that precise condition in part that section 242, of the present Constitution of this State, was adopted, reading:

"Municipal and other corporations, and individuals invested with the privilege of taking private property for public use, shall make just compensation for property taken, injured or destroyed by them; which compensation shall be paid before such taking, or paid or secured, at the election of such corporation or individual, before such injury or destruction. The General Assembly shall not deprive any person of an appeal from any preliminary assessment of damages against any such corporation or individual, made by commissioners, or otherwise; and upon appeal from such preliminary assessment, the amount of such damages shall, in all cases, be determined by a jury, according to the course of the common law."

Before this Constitution it was held by this court that the municipality had the right to alter a grade once established, without liability to adjacent lot owners, provided in doing so no private property rights of theirs was invaded, such as obstruction of light, air, or ingress and egress. (Louisville v. Louisville Rolling Mill Co., 3 Bush, 416; Keasy v. Louisville, 4 Dana, 154.) But construing section 242, Constitution, supra, this court, in City of Henderson v. McClain, 102 Ky., 402, 19 Ky. Law Rep., 1450; City of Mt. Sterling v. Jephson, 21 Ky. Law Rep., 1028; City of Ludlow v. Detweller, 20 Ky. Law Rep., 894, and Barfield v. Gleason, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 128, held that the former rule was changed, the language of the section indicating a purpose to give the property holders compensation for injury to property as well as for property actually taken in public improvements. But the question here presented has never before arisen in this court, and in Henderson v. McClain, supra, was expressly reserved. It was there said: "But it is argued on behalf of appellant that there is no legal right or equity in a person who dedicates land for street purposes, or in his assignee, to compensation for the original establishment of a grade line and the reduction of the natural surface of the street for street purposes to such line, for the reason that, when dedicated unconditionally, the dedicator must be supposed to have contemplated and consented that a grade should be established and the inequalities of the surface brought to some proper level, and to have embraced in his grant or dedication the right to establish such a grade. This question, however, is not presented by the record. If the law be that consequential damages are not recoverable for the original establishment of the grade of a street which has been dedicated (and this question is expressly not here decided), the fact that such establishment is original is matter of defense, and such fact does not appear in this record."

This record, however, does raise and present the question for decision. We hold, that, for such consequential damages as result to the adjacent lot, because of the original construction of the street's grade, when not done negligently, the lot owner is not entitled to recover from the city, the street having been previously dedicated, or acquired by the city for that purpose.

Another question is presented: Appellee and his vendors had maintained their improvements on the lot in question made with reference to the natural grade of the street for more than fifteen years. It is argued from this fact that the city had thereby, by a kind of acquiescence, established the natural grade as the permanent grade of the street. But we think there is a wide and essential difference between a municipality's acquiring a right of way for a street by prescription, and being estopped by lapse of time from improving the right of way or street. Laches of public officers are not generally accounted against the public. Particularly ought it not in this matter. For concededly it was within the discretion of the municipal council when the public welfare demanded, and its resources would admit of, such an improvement. If it could be held that a failure of the council for fifteen years to order a certain kind of improvement worked an estoppel on the public in the matter so that it could not thereafter be exercised, it would result that it was not the judgment of the municipal council that would determine when such improvement should be made. The public does not lose the right to have its proper officials exercise such a question although previous boards declined or deemed it inexpedient to make the improvement.

We think the right of the city to have the street graded was, when the ordinance complained of was passed, precisely as it was when the strip of ground occupied by the street was first dedicated for that purpose. It follows that appellee could not abridge this right by erecting a house, or fences or setting out trees along the property line. In so improving his property he took the chances of sustaining a loss by the proper construction of the street when that event happened.

Other objections to the judgment assigned as errors by appellant need not be noticed, as it follows from what has been said, that there can be no recovery by appellee in this case in any event.

Judgment reversed, remanded for proceedings consistent herewith. Whole court sitting.

PHILLIPS v. HOSKINS, &c.

(Filed March 12, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Husband and Wife—Infancy of Husband—Deed for Sale of Land—Disaffirmance by Husband—Where a husband, while an infant, joined his wife in a deed of trust on her land, and after becoming of age joined her in a mortgage on the same land for another purpose, the mortgage operated as a disaffirmance of his deed.

2. Same—Under Kentucky Statutes 1903, section 2129, providing that the husband must join in a deed conveying his wife's land, the wife is not bound by a deed made by her and her husband while he was an infant, which deed he disaffirmed after becoming of age.

Charles M. Lindsay for appellant.

R. C. & J. J. Davis and Chas. F. Taylor for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, First Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, affirming.

Bettle Williams and J. C. Hoskins contracted, in writing, to sell and convey to C. M. Phillips a tract of land in Jefferson county, containing about twenty acres. They tendered Phillips a deed in execution of the contract, which he declined to accept on the ground that there was a defect in the title. This suit was thereupon filed to compel an execution of the contract. The circuit court held the title good, and Phillips appeals.

It is undisputed that Mrs. Williams owned the land in 1895. She was then the wife of T. D. Williams from whom she has since been divorced. On October 31, 1895, she and her husband made a deed to R. H. Hoskins, by which they conveyed to him the land in question and some other property in trust for her sole and separate use, and for the use and benefit of the children of her body. At the time this deed was made Mrs. Williams was of age, but her husband, T. D. Williams, was not of age. She had, at the time, one child, who is an infant and still living. After the execution of the deed, the Farmers and Drovers Bank brought suits against her and took out attachments, which were levied on the land. The circuit court sustained the attachments and gave judgments against Mrs. Williams amounting to $10,000. She superseded the judgments, with R. H. Hoskins as her surety, and he also signed as her surety certain bonds to secure the discharge of some attachments. To secure Hoskins she and her husband, T. D. Williams, on July 23, 1896, and after her husband became of age, executed a mortgage to Hoskins, by which they mortgaged the property to him to secure him as surety on the bonds referred to. After this had been done, John C. Lewis Co. brought an action upon a return of no property found, in which it sought to subject the property to its debt. Hoskins in that action set up his mortgage. The case progressed to judgment; the court ordered the land sold and the proceeds of the sale to remain subject to the order of the court. The land was sold and brought something over $10,000. It was bought in for Mrs. Williams, and she paid the purchase money bonds. After all this, the judgments against Mrs. Williams were affirmed by this court. In these proceedings the infant child of Mrs. Williams was not made a party, and it is insisted that Mrs. Williams' title to the land is not perfect.

By section 2128, Kentucky Statutes, a wife may make contracts as a single woman, except that she may not make any executory contract to sell or convey or mortgage her real estate unless her husband join in the contract. By section 2129, the husband and wife may sell and convey her lands, but the conveyance must be acknowledged and recorded in the manner required by section 506, Kentucky Statutes, which is in these words: "The conveyance may be by the joint deed of husband and wife or by separate instrument; but in the latter case the husband must first convey, or have theretofore conveyed. The deed as to the husband may be acknowledged or proved, and recorded as heretofore provided."

The purpose of the statute in requiring that the husband must join in conveyances of the wife's land is not only to protect the husband in his rights, but to protect the wife by giving her the counsel and guidance of her husband. In the case at bar, the husband was an infant when the deed of trust to Hoskins was executed. The deed was not void as to him, but it was voidable. He had the right to ratify it when he became of age, or to disaffirm it if he saw proper. After he became of age, he united with his wife in the mortgage of the property to Hoskins. This instrument made an entirely different disposition of the property from that made by the deed of trust. The deed of trust set apart the property for one purpose; the deed of mortgage applied it to another. The latter instrument was inconsistent with the former, and, being inconsistent, operated as a disaffirmance by the husband, of the deed which he had executed during his infancy. The purpose of the statute regulating the conveyance of the wife's land would be entirely defeated if she was held bound by the deed made when her husband was an infant and after he had, upon becoming of age, disaffirmed it.

Under the statute the wife's land may be conveyed by the joint deed of the husband and wife. Her powers are from the statute and she can not convey her land except in the manner provided by it. To be a conveyance of the wife's land under the statute, the deed must be the valid act of the husband, otherwise he has not conveyed. To hold her bound by a deed not binding on the husband or valid as to him would be to allow her to convey her land without the concurrence of the husband. This would be to deny to the statute the fair meaning and effect of the words used. Her land may be conveyed by the joint deed of herself and her husband, but when the instrument is of no effect as to the husband, it is not the joint deed of himself and wife. It is only her deed, and she can not, by her deed alone, convey her land.

We, therefore, conclude that Mrs. Williams was not bound by the deed of trust executed to R. H. Hoskins in 1895, and that the title to the property remained in her notwithstanding the execution of this instrument. This being true, her son has no interest in the property and her title to it is the same as it was before this deed was executed. Judgment affirmed.

BITTIER, &c. v. MYERS' G'D'N.

(Filed April 29th, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Divorce and Alimony—Agreed Order—Title to Real Estate—Divesting Husband of Title—Validity of Order—Parties to Action—Under Kentucky Statutes, section 2123, providing for the making of orders for the care and custody of the children in a divorce proceeding between the parents, it was error in the court to enter an order purporting to be an agreed order, by which the husband was divested of the fee-simple title to a house and lot for the benefit of infant children who were not parties to the action.

C. L. Raison, Jr., for appellants.

John W. Rodman, guardian ad litem.

Appeal from Kenton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn, reversing.

Appellant, Maggie Bittier, purchased from her co-appellant, Carry Myers, a house and lot in the city of Covington, Kentucky, of the value of six or seven thousand dollars. Mrs. Bittier paid part of the purchase price, and executed to Mrs. Myers her notes for the remainder. Appellee and others were giving it out in speech that she owned an interest in the property, which had the effect to cause appellant, Bittier, to become doubtful of her title to the property, and she brought this action, under section 11, of the Kentucky Statutes, to quiet her title, Mrs. Myers joining in the action with her. The controversy grew out of the following facts:

In the year 1903, Mrs. Myers sued her husband for a divorce and alimony. On December 30th, 1903, the court rendered a judgment granting her a divorce and adjudging her alimony. We copy that part of the judgment which applies to the question before us:

"It is established by this record that the defendant, Harvey Myers, is the owner of an estate not exceeding $18,000 in value. It is adjudged that the defendant, Harvey Myers, convey by warranty deed to the plaintiff, Carry W. Myers, for her natural life, with remainder in fee simple to the children of plaintiff and defendant, to-wit, Ethel, Amella and Elsie Myers and Adela Harvey, the residence property described in the pleadings as follows: (Here follows the description which we omit.) Said property shall be used as a home for the plaintiff and such of the children as may remain with her; but with the consent of both parties hereto, may be sold for reinvestment, and any purchaser at said sale, need not look to the application of the proceeds. Defendant shall also transfer absolutely to plaintiff the household goods in said residence, excepting his library and his other personal belongings which he may remove at any reasonable time. The defendant will also pay plaintiff the sum of $500 on or before January 10th, 1904; $500 on or before June 30, 1904; $500 on or before January 10, 1905; $500 on or before June 30, 1905; the defendant will also maintain $3,000 of his insurance on his life for the benefit of plaintiff and their children. The defendant will also provide suitable wearing apparel for his unmarried children, and pay for their tuition. These conveyances, transfers, payments and insurance shall be in full satisfaction of all claims of plaintiff against defendant for alimony, dower, support, insurance, maintenance and all other claims now or hereafter, vested or contingent and in full of all her other interest in, or claims upon or against, his estate, or any part thereof. The dwelling house so ordered to be conveyed is of the value of $6,000. The household goods in said residence are of the value of $2,000, and it therefore follows that the conveyance and payments to be made by defendant to plaintiff aggregate $10,000.'

Thereafter, and in the same action at a term of court six or seven months after the first judgment was rendered, the parties in that action, by their attorneys, appeared in court and by agreement entered the following order:

"Came plaintiff by her attorney, C. L. Ralson, Esq., and defendant by his attorney, Ulie J. Howard, Esq., and on the joint motion of both parties the judgment herein as to alimony is now corrected and modified as follows: The real estate to be conveyed by defendant to plaintiff was misdescribed in the original judgment and should have been and is described as follows: (Here the right description is given, which we omit.) Said judgment is further amended by providing and it is now ordered and adjudged that defendant shall convey to plaintiff a fee-simple title to said property without limitation or entailment and plaintiff releases and cancels all her right in and claim to the life insurance on defendant's life and he agrees to maintain at least $3,000 thereof for the benefit of the children of plaintiff and defendant. In all other respects the judgment shall stand.

The defendant in that action, Harvey Myers, did not convey this house and lot to his wife and children as provided in the first judgment, but conveyed to Carry W. Myers the fee-simple title as provided in the last judgment. The first three children named in the judgment are of age, and consented to the last, or second judgment, but Adela Harvey is an infant and is unable to consent to it, and it is claimed for her that she has an interest in this house and lot by reason of the provisions of the first judgment copied above; and that the court and the parties had no right to divest her of that interest after the term of court at which the judgment was rendered, and for this reason the last agreed judgment, by which her mother, Carry W. Myers, is given the fee-simple title to the house and lot, is void as to her. We are of the opinion that this is error. Appellee and her sisters were not parties to that proceeding; they were not bound by the judgment rendered therein, whether upon the court's own motion or by agreement of the parties thereto. Both parents were and are under legal obligations to maintain and support their infant children; but the court, in such an action, did not have the power to make an order allowing the wife alimony or for the care and maintenance of their infant children, which, in effect, would divest Harvey W. Myers of the fee simple title to this house and lot. Section 2123 of the Kentucky Statutes, is as follows:

"Pending an application for divorce, or on final judgment, the court may make orders for the care, custody and maintenance of the minor children of the parties, or children of unsound mind, or any of them, and at any time afterwards, upon the petition of either party, revise and alter the same, having in all such cases of care and custody the interest and welfare of the children principally in view; but no such order for maintenance of children or allotment in favor of the wife shall divest either party of the fee-simple title to real estate."

But it is contended that the first judgment fixing alimony was agreed to by the parties. It does not so appear upon the face, except possibly by inference, but a person can not be divested of the title to real estate by mere inference. The second judgment does appear to be an agreed judgment; and it also appears that Myers made the conveyance in conformity thereto, and in our opinion passed the fee simple title in the house and lot to Carry W. Myers.

Appellee, by the first judgment, did not receive a vested interest in the property. Her father is still legally bound, and, we have no doubt, will support her. In addition to this, the first judgment gives appellee a greater interest in the insurance policy, which about equals the interest she claims in the house and lot, and the change of the judgment better secured the support and maintenance of Carry W. Myers, which was equitable and just, as by the judgment Harvey W. Myers was thereafter released from any further support of her.

For these reasons the judgment of the lower court is reversed and remanded, for further proceedings consistent herewith.

THORNTON V. LAYLE.

(Filed April 22, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Actions—Injury by Vicious Cow—In this action for an injury by a vicious cow, it was error to peremptorily instruct the jury to find for the defendant where the evidence showed that plaintiff was asked to milk defendant's cow while he was away from home, the latter assuring him that the cow was perfectly gentle. The plaintiff knew nothing about the cow and relied upon the representations as to her gentleness.

2. Res Gestae—The rule that excludes the declarations of witnesses after the happening of an event because not a part of the res gestae, has no application to the acts of unreasoning animals.

W. B. Moody and H. G. Botts for appellant.

John W. Douglass and Clore, Dickinson & Clayton for appellee.

Appeal from Owen Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker, reversing.

The appellant (plaintiff) was gored by the appellee's (defendant's) cow while he was trying to milk her; and to recover damages for the injuries received he instituted this action. Upon the trial before a jury, the court, after the evidence for the plaintiff was in, awarded a peremptory instruction requiring the jury to find for the defendant. This appeal questions the correctness of that ruling.

The evidence showed that the defendant, an old man of about seventy years of age, was the owner of two jersey cows, which he had raised and which he had theretofore habitually milked himself. On the occasion involved here, the defendant wished to be absent from his home for several days, and, that his cows might be regularly milked during his absence, he employed the plaintiff, his neighbor, to perform this service for him.

The plaintiff, in his testimony, deposed, substantially, that, when the plaintiff was negotiating with him to do the milking, he (defendant) told him (plaintiff) that the cows were perfectly gentle; that he (plaintiff) knew nothing of them himself; that relying upon the assurance of the defendant, he went to the latter's home and tried to milk the cows; that when he went into the stall where one of them was it immediately turned on plaintiff and fiercely gored him in the stomach or bowels, inflicting very serious wounds, the direct effect of which was to necessitate a very painful surgical operation to be performed, and from which he was permanently injured. It is not necessary to set forth the evidence of the extent of plaintiff's injuries on this appeal, as there can be no doubt that it establishes the infliction of very painful wounds, and, perhaps, permanent impairment of his power to earn money.

James Brown testified for the plaintiff, that some time before plaintiff was hurt, he went to Layle's house to return a wagon he had borrowed from him, and was told to put it in the barn lot. He did so, but when he drove into the lot the cows threw down their heads and bellowed, and their actions were such that he told the defendant he thought they were wild and spiteful, but the defendant said: "You are a stranger to them; they are afraid of strangers and act that way."

Everett Raiser testified that he was called in by the plaintiff after he was hurt, and, among other things, said:

"We tried to get the cows in the stalls by taking a gate and holding it in front of us, but we had no sooner gotten in view of the cows than they made at us and we had to run and drop the gate."

S. S. Thornton testified that he was present when Mr. Layle employed the plaintiff to milk the cows for him, and in part said: "George (plaintiff) asked him (defendant) if the cows were gentle, and Mr. Layle said they were perfectly gentle."

In addition to the foregoing evidence, it was shown that the next morning after the plaintiff was gored, he sent for James Samford, a son-in-law of the defendant, who lived nearby, and the witness was asked this question: "If you saw the plaintiff, George Thornton, and James Samford the next day after the plaintiff was hurt by the cow of the defendant, state all that you saw?" The answer to this question was excepted to, and the exception sustained, whereupon the following avowal was made: "I saw the plaintiff and James Samford in the barn lot and they had just gotten in the lot when I saw Mr. Samford run to a road wagon that was in the lot and climb in it. He was in a big hurry, and George Thornton run to a fence and climbed over it. He was in a hurry too. The cows were after them. They showed fight and were vicious." This evidence was ruled incompetent by the court, because, it is said in the briefs, it was not a part of the res gestae. We do not think this principle applies to the question in hand. The rule that excludes the declarations of witnesses after the happening of an event because not a part of the res gestae has no application to the acts of unreasoning animals. Declarations of witnesses are admitted as a part of the res gestae because they are supposed to be natural exclamations or statements made as a part of the thing done when the witness has not had time to concoct a self-serving story. The lower animals act according to their natural instinct, and do not make evidence to suit the occasion. The cow that is vicious in the morning was vicious the night before, there not having been time in the interim to spoil its natural temperament by cruelty or abuse. Of course, a perfectly gentle cow may be made wild or vicious by a long series of abuse and mistreatment; but this was not the case here. Nothing was done to the cows between the time they gored the plaintiff, in the evening, and the next morning when they viciously attacked (according to the avowal) the plaintiff and Samford.

With this evidence in, clearly the plaintiff was entitled to have the merits of his case passed on by the jury. He showed that he knew nothing of the disposition of the cows at the time of the employment; that he asked the owner, who did know them, and was assured that they were perfectly gentle. On the contrary, they were vicious and savagely attacked the plaintiff, goring him as before stated. It is true, that in actions of this character, the plaintiff must introduce some evidence tending to bring home to the owner knowledge of the vicious disposition of the cattle (Thompson on Negligence, sections 842-877; Adams v. Simpson, 31 Ky. Law Rep., 604; Nisbet v. Well, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 511; Stewart v. East Jellico Coal Co., 24 Ky. Law Rep., 420); but with this principle in mind, there was no element of a meritorious cause of action on the part of the plaintiff lacking, assuming his evidence to have been true; and the court should have overruled the motion for a peremptory instruction, and allowed the case to be tried out before the jury on its merits.

Judgment reversed for another trial under principles consistent with this opinion.

INDEX

APPEALS—	Page.
1. Failure to File Transcript—Agreement to Waive Such Failure—Section 348, Criminal Code, is a limitation upon the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals, and an agreement by the Commonwealth's attorney to waive the failure to file the transcript, does not vest the court with jurisdiction, and the appeal herein is dismissed. Putnam v. Commonwealth	267
2. Under the statutes the children mentioned in this action are barred from taking an appeal from the order probating the will of their father, as more than five years have elapsed from the date of probate in the county court, and they are barred from filing an action to impeach the order as they brought no such action within twelve months after their arrival at age. Nolan v. Stacy	321
BETTING ON RACES—See Criminal Law, 5. 6.
BILLS AND NOTES—
Assignment—Bills of Exchange—Purchaser of Notes for Value—Law of State of Iowa—The notes in controversy were executed to an Iowa concern, sent to it and by it assigned to Price, who sues on them. The law of that State places such paper upon the footing of a bill of exchange, and being placed upon such footing defenses existing between the antecedent parties can not apply to Price, the purchaser of the notes, if he was in good faith their purchaser for value, and without any notice of infirmity or fraud in obtaining the notes sued on. Price v. Gatliff's Ex'ors, &c.	324
COMMISSIONS—See Lands, 6.
CONTINGENT FEES—See County Attorneys.
CORPORATIONS—See Contracts, 1, 2, 3.
CONTRACTS—
1. Hiring Convicts—Bond of Indemnity—Construction of Contract—A bond was given by B. to the prison commissioners of the Kentucky penitentiary for hire of convicts with the F. & D. Company as surety. The contract was finally made by B. & M., but the bond was not changed. By consent, the contract was sold to appellant company on condition that it give a bond for its faithful performance. The F. & D. Company agreed to sign the bond if provision was made to pay a certain indebtedness of B. & M. to the State for the hire of the convicts, which was done by paying cash in part, and giving notes for the balance to be held in trust by the agent of F. & D. Company. Held—That the deposit of the notes was not only for indemnity, but was also for the purpose of paying the indebtedness of B. & M. to the State and was enforceable under section 18, Civil Code. Albin Co. v. Commonwealth	367
2. Same—Board of Prison Commissioners—False Statement by One Member—Effect on Contract—In a contract made with the prison commissioners, for the hire of convicts, a false statement made by one of the commissioners as to the value of the business the contractor was to engage in, was not the statement of the board and the State is not responsible for such false representations, if made. Idem	367

CONTRACTS—Continued—	Page.
3. Corporation—Authority to Contract—Plea of Ultra Vires— A corporation, having power to purchase and sell real estate and to engage in trading in general merchandise, after buying a business and giving its notes for the price can not, in an action on said notes, plead that its act was ultra vires in bar of said action. Idem	367
CRIMINAL LAW—
1. Homicide — Instructions — Evidence — There was evidence tending to show that deceased and Combs were acting in concert attacking Slone, and, if this was true, he had the right to take into consideration the danger at the hands of both of them in determining what was necessary in his self-defense. It was error, therefore, for the lower court to predicate Slone's right of defense wholly upon the danger at the hands of deceased. Slone v. Commonwealth	266
2. Dying Declarations—All that deceased said in his dying declaration may be proved, but what he said on another occasion can not be admitted. Idem	267
3. Evidence — As to Declarations Before Homicide — It was error to allow proof of declarations made by Combs before the homicide as to what he and deceased had done. This could not be given because it tended to confirm Combs' testimony. Idem	267
4. Indictment—Malicious Shooting—Instructions—Appellant's plea was that he did not intend to shoot the marshal, and that the firing of the pistol was accidental. The court erred in failing to submit his defense to the jury, and in instructing the jury as to the law of self-defense. Mann v. Commonwealth	269
5. Gaming—Betting on Races—Selling French Pools on Race Track—Statutes Considered—Kentucky Statutes, section 1960, makes it a felony for any one to set up and carry on any machine or contrivance used in betting whereby money or other thing may be won or lost. Section 1961 provides that "no prosecution shall be commenced under section 1960 later than five years after the commission of the offense, nor shall its provisions apply to persons who sell combination or French pools on any regular race track during the races thereon." Held—That in adopting section 1961 the Legislature evidently had in mind granting a privilege to the regular race tracks during the races thereon. Grinstead v. Kirby, Judge	287
6. Same—To hold that the men who sell the pools may not be punished, but that those who buy them may be punished, would be to give no effect to that part of the act which limits the selling of the pools on regular race tracks during the races thereon. The object of the exception was not to protect those who sell the pools, but what the Legislature had in mind was to protect the regular race tracks during the races thereon. Manifestly the Legislature intended that the selling of combination or French pools on any regular track, during the races thereon, should not be illegal. Idem	287

CRIMINAL LAW—Continued—	Page.
7. Trial for Murder—Death from Wound—Doubtful Proof—Conviction for Malicious Cutting—Legality of Instruction—On the trial of one indicted for murder by willfully cutting and wounding another with a knife, where the deceased lived for some time after the difficulty, and the proof was conflicting as to whether he died of the wound inflicted or from improper treatment, it was proper for the court to instruct the jury under section 1166, Kentucky Statutes, for malicious cutting and wounding, and also under section 1242 for cutting in sudden heat and passion, and a verdict for malicious cutting was properly rendered. Housman v. Commonwealth	311
8. Misconduct of Commonwealth's Attorney—Argument to Jury—Limitations Allowable—Much latitude is allowed the Commonwealth's attorney in the presentation of his case to the jury, the only limitation being such as required him to confine himself to the facts introduced in evidence, and the fair and reasonable deductions and conclusions to be drawn therefrom, and, bounded alone by these limitations, he may, with propriety, appeal to the jury with all the power, force and persuasiveness which his learning, skill and experience enable him to command, and of this character of argument the accused can not complain. Idem	311
9. Homicide—Idiots—Continuance—Affidavit for—It was not error to refuse the continuance asked for on the ground that the absent witness, if present, would testify that defendant was so feeble-minded that he did not know right from wrong, and had always been in that condition. The court properly refused the continuance on the ground that such a fact was susceptible of proof by other witnesses who were easily accessible. Webb v. Commonwealth	316
10. Same—Idiocy is a state of mind that any one can distinguish as readily as the ordinary medical man. Idem	316
11. Instructions—Defense of Another—In an instruction the right of the defense of another was predicated upon the fact that neither such other nor the accused, could have averted the apparent danger to the former by other reasonably safe means. This is the law. Idem	316
12. New Trials—Defendant Tried Without His Knowledge—This case is reversed as to Walter Sanders for the reason that it appears from the record and from his affidavit for a continuance, that he did not know that he was being tried with his co-defendant; that he had no counsel, and that he was under the impression that Williams alone was being tried. The record does not show why he had no counsel. It also appears that the only connection he had with the alleged robbery was in picking up the bill and handing it to Williams. Williams & Saunders v. Commonwealth	330
13. Aiding and Abetting—Instructions—An instruction required the jury to believe that S. was present, aiding and abetting W. in the robbery, and the jury may have construed the picking up of the money to be a sufficient aiding and abetting, but he must have aided and abetted with the knowledge that W. was robbing another of the money. Idem	330
14. Homicide—Joint Indictment—Separate Trial—Proof of Conspiracy—Declaration of Co-conspirator—Competency

CRIMINAL LAW—Continued—

Page.

—In the trial of B., jointly indicted with H., for the murder of W., in which a conspiracy is charged, evidence of a statement made by B. to witness A., prior to the killing of deceased that "if he had such men as me and M., that he already had H. in with him, who was not afraid of hell, that sometime when W. came ranting around on the ridge, we would uncap his head and leave him for his friends to carry home," Held—To be competent to show a conspiracy between B. and H. to kill W., and hence the declaration of H., in the absence of B., was properly admitted to the jury as evidence against B. Brummett v. Commonwealth

355

15. Same—Evidence—Statements Made by Wife of Accused—Competency—On the trial of B., indicted with H. for killing W., in which it was claimed that the killing was done because of some real or fancied insult by W. to B.'s wife, it was incompetent to prove statements made by B.'s wife to a witness in the presence of H. in reference to the time that her husband intended to go to the town of M. with a load of melons (on one of which trips he was killed), as the effect of such evidence was to make the wife an unwilling witness against her husband without giving her a chance to deny it. Idem

355

COUNTY ATTORNEYS—

1. Prosecuting Suits by Auditor's Agent—In prosecuting suits instituted by the auditor's agent, as the law provided, in May, 1904, the time the proceeding was instituted, the county attorney discharged an official duty which was covered by his annual salary allowed him by the fiscal court, and he was not entitled to special compensation. Bingham v. Hager, Auditor, &c. 278
2. Duties—Compensation—Sections 126, 127, 128, 129 and 131 prescribe the duties of the county attorney, and section 132 prescribes his compensation. This must necessarily include his compensation for all services rendered, where other compensation is not allowed therefor. Spalding v. Thornbury 362
3. Same—All services rendered under section 127 must stand alike. The statute makes it his duty to institute or defend actions and proceedings when "directed" by the county or fiscal court. If the statute had contemplated an employment the word "employed" would have been used instead of "directed." Idem 362
4. Additional Duties Imposed by Statute—Commission Provided—Where, by statute, duties are imposed upon the county attorney and compensation, by way of commission is provided, he is entitled to such compensation in addition to his salary. The salary named in section 132 only covers the services required of him by law and for which no other compensation is provided. Idem 362
5. Salary—Contingent Fees—The salary of the county attorney is part of the current expenses of the county and must be paid out of the general fund provided for that purpose. It can not be paid by way of contingent fees out of other fund, nor is it contemplated by the statute that his salary shall be contingent and not fixed by the fiscal court. Idem 362

COUNTY ATTORNEYS—Continued—	Page.
6. Fixed Salary—Additional Compensation—Proceeding to Collect Taxes—Where the fiscal court, by a previous order, had fixed the salary of the county attorney, it had no authority to make him an additional allowance for bringing a suit, or for his services in collecting certain taxes due from a distilling company, as it was his duty to render such service, when directed by the fiscal court, by virtue of his office as county attorney. Terrill v. Trimble County	364
7. Same—Duties—Compensation—When the fiscal court has fixed the compensation of the county attorney, it has no power to increase or diminish it during his term. And it is his duty to perform all his official duties for the compensation fixed. Idem	364
8. Same—Employing Additional Counsel—Expenses Incurred—Allowance Therefor—But where a county attorney is directed by the fiscal court to institute proceedings to collect certain taxes and to employ other counsel to assist him therein, the county should bear his reasonable expenses incurred in the prosecution of the work and any sums paid in securing other counsel in the necessary prosecution of the work. Idem	364

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR—

1. Pleading—Failure to Ask Personal Judgment—Refusal to Render Judgment—In an action in which Moss was made a party by Brackett's Adm'r, it no where appearing that a personal judgment was sought against Moss for land sold by Brackett to Boreing, the lower court did not err in refusing to render a personal judgment against Moss. Brackett's Adm'r v. Boreing's Adm'r, &c.	292
2. Offset by Debtor—Debts Owning by Creditor—In the absence of a contract to that effect, a debtor is never a trustee for his creditor. The law is well settled that a debtor may purchase debts due from his creditor to others, at less than their value, and demand a settlement for the full amount of the debt so purchased. Idem	292
3. Evidence—Exceptions Not Acted On—Waiver—Exceptions to the competency of testimony filed in an action, that are not acted on by the trial court, are, on appeal, deemed to have been waived. Idem	292
4. Settlement—Unsatisfactory Evidence—Judgment Not Disturbed—Where the evidence on a question of settlement is so vague and unsatisfactory as to leave the mind in doubt, the judgment of the chancellor thereon will not be disturbed. Idem	292
5. Attachments—Notice—Effect—In this case Boreing was in debt to Brackett; Hendrickson had attached the money due from Boreing to Brackett in Boreing's hands, which was sustained, and so much of the money due to Brackett by Boreing as equalled the Hendrickson judgments was then due, not to Brackett, but to Hendrickson. At the same time the bank's assignee attached in Boreing's hands the money thus due to Hendrickson. Held—That Boreing was holding money or property in which Hendrickson had an interest, and the service of the attachment on him was notice that it was the purpose of the bank to attach the funds so held by him. Idem	292

- DEEDS—See Husband and Wife, 1, 2— Page.
1. Construction of—Exemption of Building Pavement—The sole question, in this case, is whether the condition in the deed that the grantor should never be required to build a pavement, was a personal exemption, or went with the land to the heirs and assigns of the grantor. The language of the deed shows that it was intended as a personal exemption. To consider it a covenant running with the land would have to be done by inference, and this is not allowed in construing deeds which affect the public interest. City of Richmond v. Bennett 279
 2. Written Instruments—Construction of—The writings or deeds herein considered do not evidence a purchase and sale of the property in controversy, but are testamentary in character, therefore, appellant and his sister should contribute from the shares they received from their mother's estate to their brothers and sisters, so that all would be equal. Siler v. Jones, &c. 317
 3. Limitation—Must be Pleaded—Limitation, to be available, must be pleaded, and can not be reached by demurrer. (30 Ky. Law Rep., 25.) Idem 317
- DIVORCE AND ALIMONY—See Husband and Wife.
- DURESS—See Life Insurance, 1, 2.
- EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—
- Personal Representative—Appointment of—The statute does not contemplate that persons who are related by blood, but have no interest in the estate, shall determine who shall be appointed administrator, and, although the sister of deceased and his father and mother, sought to have the administrator removed and the sister appointed, beyond the fact that he proposed to charge the five per cent. commission for settling it, no reason is shown to have him removed. But, as he led the father and mother to believe that he would have nothing in the way of compensation, and procured their written request to the county court to appoint him, he should not be allowed commissions for his services, but should only be allowed his expenses as administrator. Hilton v. Hilton's Adm'r. 276
- EXECUTORY CONTRACT—See Lands, 7.
- EVIDENCE—See Criminal Law.
- FIRE INSURANCE—
- Actions for Loss—Surrender of Policy—Direction for Peremptory Instruction—In this action, involving the liability of the appellant on a policy of fire insurance, evidence examined and held that the policy was surrendered by the insured with the intention that it should be cancelled by the company and was accepted by the company with the belief and understanding that it was cancelled, and the peremptory instruction asked by appellant should have been granted. Aetna Ins. Co. v. Robards Tob. Co.'s Trustee 257
- GAMING—See Criminal Law.
- HIRING CONVICTS—See Contracts, 1, 2, 3.
- HOMICIDE—See Criminal Law.
- HUSBAND AND WIFE—
1. Infancy of Husband—Deed for Sale of Land—Disaffirmance by Husband—Where a husband, while an infant, joined his wife in a deed of trust on her land, and after becoming of age joined her in a mortgage on the same land for another purpose, the mortgage operated as a disaffirmance of his deed. Phillips v. Hoskins, &c. 378

HUSBAND AND WIFE—Continued—	Page.
2. Same—Under Kentucky Statutes 1903, section 2129, providing that the husband must join in a deed conveying his wife's land, the wife is not bound by a deed made by her husband while he was an infant which deed he disaffirmed after becoming of age. Idem	378
3. Divorce and Allmony—Agreed Order—Title to Real Estate—Divesting Husband of Title—Validity of Order—Parties to Action—Under Kentucky Statutes, section 2123, providing for the making of orders for the care and custody of the children in a divorce proceeding between the parents, it was error in the court to enter an order purporting to be an agreed order, by which the husband was divested of the fee-simple title to a house and lot for the benefit of infant children who were not parties to the action. Bittler, &c. v. Myers' Gd'n	380
IDIOCY—See Criminal Law, 9, 10.
INDICTMENTS—See Criminal Law.
JUDGMENTS IN REM—See Life Insurance, 3.
LANDS—
1. Division of—Evidence—The evidence here is not sufficient to justify the conclusion that any fraud was practiced upon Mrs. Baker in the division of the land, or that there was a conspiracy to defraud her. C. made an advantageous trade in the division, but this fact alone is not sufficient to authorize the setting aside of the deeds. In brief, it appears that Mrs. Baker simply made a bad trade in the division and is seeking to be released therefrom. Her petition was properly dismissed by the court below. Baker v. Cooper, &c.	263
2. Instructions—Error to Submit Law and Facts—The instruction complained of is erroneous in that it submits both the law and facts to the jury. Idem	263
3. Rule of Caveat Emptor—An officer selling land under execution does not act as agent of the plaintiff. The sale is made by law, and the rule of caveat emptor applies to such sales. Burt & Brabb Lumber Co. v. Hurst, &c.	270
4. Quieting Title—Section 11, of the Kentucky Statutes, authorizes the institution and maintenance of an action to quiet title by one who owns the title and is in the actual possession of the land. As appellant did not have the actual possession of the land at the time he instituted the action, his petition was properly dismissed. Dupoyster v. Turk	320
5. Liens—Levy of Execution—A. recovered judgment against appellee, execution issued, which he levied on its land, which was sold and bought by A. for his debt. The facts bring the case clearly within the provisions of section 1691, Kentucky Statutes, and the lower court properly held that A. was entitled to a lien on the land for his debt by reason of his execution. Attay v. Knox Gem Coal Co., &c.	327
6. Contracts—Instructions—Evidence—Appellant resisted a claim for commissions for the sale of his land, setting up in a paragraph of his answer that the contract relied on was not the one he made, and that his signature to it was obtained by the fraud of appellee. It was error for the court not to allow him to introduce proof to sustain this plea, and the court erred to his prejudice in an instruction which directed the jury to find for appellees if they believed that they procured a purchaser for the land, when the answer set out that while they brought a pur-

LANDS—Continued —	Page.
chaser they stated that the contract was at an end and that it was done for an accommodation. Stewart v. Roberts, &c.	332
7. Sale of—Encumbrance—Price of Land Covered by Right of Way—Executory Contract—Refusal of Purchaser to Accept Deed—Although the rule in this State, as announced in certain cases is, that when a purchaser accepts a conveyance, with knowledge of the existence of a highway or railroad thereon, he can not obtain an abatement of the purchase price or a cancellation of the contract an account of the incumbrance, this principle will not be applied to railway rights of way against a purchaser under an executory contract, in the absence of evidence showing that it was the intention of the purchaser to pay for the land enclosed in the right of way, where he objects in a reasonable time to accept a conveyance of the property that would require him to pay for the right of way. Jones v. Prewitt	358
LIFE INSURANCE—
1. Life of Husband—Wife Beneficiary—Assignment—Plea of Duress by Wife—Knowledge of Assignee—In an action on an insurance policy on the life of a husband, payable to his wife, on which a third party claimed a lien by assignment by the husband and his wife before the husband's death, in which the wife claims that she made the assignment under threats and duress of her husband, such duress, if shown, would not affect the validity of the assignment to the third party in the absence of proof that he had knowledge of it. Ely v. Hartford Life Ins. Co., &c.	272
2. Same — Duress — Avoidance of Contract — Knowledge of Third Party—Duress, in order to avoid a contract, must be the act of the other party himself or his agent, or must be imposed with his knowledge or taken advantage of by him for the purpose of obtaining the agreement. Duress by a third person will not avoid a contract made with a party who was not cognizant of it. Idem	272
3. Non-resident Defendants — Judgments in Rem — Constructive Service—Validity—While it is the law that a judgment in personam against a non-resident defendant, not served with process in the jurisdiction of the court, is void, it is equally true that a judgment in rem against a non-resident defendant, though only before the court on constructive service, is not only good against him, but against all other persons claiming interest in, or title to, the property proceeded against, having notice of proceedings. Idem	272
4. Contract for Extended Insurance — Default — Failure to Apply for Extension—Recovery Denied—A policy of life insurance by a husband for his wife for $2,000 provided that, upon his failure to pay the fourth premium, he was entitled to paid-up insurance of $300, cash surrender value of $102 or extended insurance, if applied for, of five years and six months. He made three payments and defaulted on the fourth, and died without applying for extended insurance. Held—That, having failed to exercise the option of applying for the extended insurance, the other provisions, with reference to paid-up insurance, automatically went into effect, and there could be no recovery on the contract for extended insurance. Balthaser v. Ill. Life Ins. Co.	283

LIFE INSURANCE—Continued—

Page.

5. Insurance Companies — Taxation — Liability — Premiums on Face of Policy—Under Kentucky Statutes, section 4226, every life insurance company, other than fraternal assessment companies, not organized under the laws of this State, but doing business therein, are required to pay a tax on premiums receipted for on the face of the policy for original insurance, without regard to whether it was paid in cash or otherwise, or not paid at all, but as to renewal premiums the tax is assessed only upon the amount the company receives in cash or by note or in some manner other than cash. Mut. Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Commonwealth, &c 338
6. Same—Premiums Not Collected—Set Apart for Emergency —Designated as Dividends—Where, however, an insurance company stipulated in its policy for a premium larger than was necessary to carry its risks, but which might be needed in certain conditions, and set aside so much of the first premium as a guarantee against misfortune, and for the succeeding years did not collect the whole amount first stipulated, but designated it as a dividend, the company was not liable to taxation on the premiums stipulated, but only for the amount actually collected. Idem 338

LIMITATION—See Deeds, 3.

MASTER AND SERVANT—

1. Death of Servant—Falling of Roof of Mine—Action for damages—Allegation of Petition—Sufficiency—In an Action of an administrator of a deceased miner, against the owners of the mine for damages for negligently causing his death by the falling of the roof of the mine, an allegation in the petition "that it was not the duty of the servant to prop the mine, but that it was the duty of the owners to keep the roof in a reasonably safe condition, and to have a competent mine boss to inspect the mine, but they negligently failed to prop the mine or to have such mine boss," states a good cause of action and a demurrer thereto was improperly sustained. Jackson's Adm'x v. Richardson Coal Co., &c. 289
2. Services Rendered—Action for—Part Performance—Compensation Recoverable—One who is employed by another to render two kinds of service, is entitled to a reasonable compensation for the service he rendered, although he may not have accomplished both the things he undertook to perform. Weikel v. Clarke 290
3. Same—In an action for service rendered in the absence of any agreement for the price to be paid therefor, it is a question for the jury to fix a reasonable sum for the service shown by the proof to have been performed. Idem. 290
4. Duty of Master to Instruct Servant—The duty of instructing an inexperienced servant in the dangers of his employment is one that rests primarily upon the master, and where such a servant is exposed to dangers that are unknown to him, the servant is not required to show gross negligence on the part of his superior. Owensboro Stave & Barrel Co. v. Daugherty, By, &c 328
5. Same—A servant who is acting under the direction of his superior may properly obey his orders, unless the danger is so obvious and imminent that a servant of ordinary prudence would not take the risk, and the jury could not have been misled by an instruction having in view this principle. Idem 328

MASTER AND SERVANT—Continued—

Page.

6. Mining—Injury to Servant—Negligence of Master—Explosion of Fire Damp—Evidence—Evidence considered and held to show gross negligence in the owner of a coal mine in suffering fire damp to accumulate therein and in not providing proper ventilation, thereby rendering it a dangerous place in which to work, and by the explosion of which the plaintiff was injured. Black Diamond Coal and Mining Co. v. Price 334
7. Evidence—Reports of Mine Inspector—Competency—In an action for damages by an employe against a coal mining company for damages for injury received by the explosion of fire damp negligently permitted to accumulate in the mine, evidence of two reports of the mine inspector made shortly before the explosion, was admissible, showing the existence of conditions calculated to produce fire damp. Idem 334
8. Duty of Master—Safe Place to Work—Obvious Danger—It is the duty of a mine owner to have his mine in a reasonably safe condition for the performance of the duties of the employes therein, and a failure to do so renders the owner liable for an injury caused thereby "unless a danger incident to the employment is known to the servant, or is an obvious danger, he may rely upon the implied assurance and superior knowledge of his employer that the premises are reasonably safe for the purpose for which they are being used." Idem 334
9. Evidence—Similar Explosions—Subsequent to Injury—Admissibility—Reversible Error—On the trial of an action for damages to an employe in a mine by the explosion of fire damp, it was a reversible error in the court to allow evidence to be introduced showing that other like explosions had occurred in the same mine after the one by which the plaintiff was injured. Evidence of previous similar accidents were admissible, but subsequent ones are not competent for any purpose. Idem 334

MINING—See Master and Servant, 3. 7, 8, 9.

MISCONDUCT OF COUNSEL—See Criminal Law, 8.

NEW TRIALS—See Criminal Law, 12.

MUNICIPALITIES—

1. City Ordinances—Building Permits—Reasonable Regulations—Avoiding Fires—The courts recognize the right of cities, under the police power, to make rules and regulations necessary to protect the health and morals of the city, and such as may be necessary to prevent the spreading of fires; the only restriction being that in passing such ordinances is that they shall be reasonable. The use of one's property, under the law, means such use and enjoyment as will not unnecessarily endanger or destroy the property of others. O'Bryan, &c. v. Highland Apartment Co. 349
2. Same—Property Owner—Injunction—A property owner may sue and enjoin the erection of a building in violation of the reasonable building regulations of the city required by its ordinances. Idem 350
3. Same—Reasonable Regulations—An ordinance of a city denying the right to erect a frame building therein, without a written permit from the building inspector, and within the fire limits of the city, held to be a reasonable regulation. Idem 350

MUNICIPALITIES—Continued—	Page.
4. Building Permits—Revocation by Inspector—A permit to erect a building, given by the building inspector under a misstatement or misconception of the facts may be withdrawn or revoked by the inspector. Idem	350
5. Building Inspector—Control of Board of Safety—Right to Cancel Permits—Under Kentucky Statutes 1903, section 2861, the building inspector of a city is subject to the order of the Board of Public Safety, and where complaint is made to such board, it may decide that the inspector had no right to issue such certificate because in violation of the building ordinances, and such board may cancel the certificate, though the work on the building may have commenced. Idem	350
PERSONAL INJURIES—
1. Actions—Injury by Vicious Cow—In this action for an injury by a vicious cow, it was error to peremptorily instruct the jury to find for the defendant where the evidence showed that plaintiff was asked to milk defendant's cow while he was away from home, the latter assuring him that the cow was perfectly gentle. The plaintiff knew nothing about the cow and relied upon the representations as to her gentleness. Thornton v. Layle	382
2. Res Gestae—The rule that excludes the declarations of witnesses after the happening of an event because not a part of the res gestae, has no application to the acts of unreasoning animals. Idem	382
PLEADINGS—See Deeds, 3; Debtor and Creditor, 1, 2, 3—
Action to Enforce Lien—Infants—The material allegations of the petition were controverted by answer. To entitle the plaintiff to a judgment enforcing his lien, his allegations should have been supported by evidence, but, aside from this, under section 126, Civil Code, although no answer had been filed by the infants, it was necessary to prove the material allegations of the petition. In addition to these errors, no recovery could be had until the required affidavit was filed. (Section 3872, Kentucky Statutes.) Isom, &c. v. Holcomb	307
PRISON COMMISSIONERS—See Contracts, 1, 2, 3.
RAILROADS—
1. Action for Damages Against—Trespassers—Evidence—In this action against appellant for the death of decedent, who was a trespasser upon its track at the time he was killed, its liability depends entirely upon whether or not those in charge of the engine, after they discovered the peril of the deceased, could, by the use of ordinary care, have stopped the train in time to prevent its striking him. The evidence examined, and Held—That a peremptory instruction should have been given, directing the jury to find for appellee. N., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Bean's Ex'or	303
2. Spark Arresters—Injury to Eye—Statutes—In this action by the appellee for the recovery of damages for an injury which resulted to his eye by the emission of a cinder from its chimney, there should have been a peremptory instruction to find for appellant, for the reason that the evidence is such as to warrant the belief that the cinder would have escaped through a spark arrester of the most approved pattern, so small was it. Moreover, the language of the statute (section 782), shows that it was enacted to prevent injuries from sparks of fire, and was not

RAILROADS—Continued—

Page.

- intended to apply to cinders small enough to enter the human eye. C., N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Baxter 305
3. Injury to Trespasser—Drunk or Unconscious—Lookout—Appellant had no right upon the track of appellee at the place he was injured, and, therefore, the company owed him no lookout duty whatever. The question whether he was drunk or unconscious from sickness was immaterial. Starett v. C. & O. Ry. Co., &c 309
4. Instructions—Expert Testimony—Physical Facts—An instruction that expert testimony must give way to physical facts, was erroneous. It invaded the province of the jury, telling them what weight to give to evidence. It was also error to instruct the jury that, after seeing appellant, the engineer was not required to stop the train, that the presumption was that he would heed the warning and leave the track in time to prevent the injury. Had the man been standing on the track, it might be different, but a man sitting on a cross-tie of a railroad track asleep or unconscious presents an unusual spectacle, and it was the province of the jury to determine whether or not an engineer of ordinary prudence, seeing a man in such situation, ought not to commence to check his train in time to prevent the injury, should it transpire that he was unconscious or asleep. Idem 309
5. Mortgages—Trustee—Authority—Action—Re-imbursement—Persons Liable—Where an unfinished railroad executed to another road a lease upon its road and also a mortgage, in order to obtain funds to complete the road, and the lessee executed a mortgage on its earnings to the trustee for the bondholders, the three writings which were executed simultaneously, must be considered as one contract, though the mortgage of the earnings considered alone, created merely a dry, naked trust, where by the other mortgage, the trustee was authorized to take possession of the road, which, under the law then in force, he could not do, his only remedy was to bring a suit in equity as trustee against the lessee road for the benefit of his trust, and was entitled to be reimbursed by the bondholders for the expenditure he was required, in the prosecution of such suit, for which the lessee road, as one of the bondholders, was liable for its proportional share, although the suit was against its wishes and not for its benefit. L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Schmidt, &c 346

ROAD SUPERVISORS—

- Appointment—Salary—Taxation—Maintenance of Roads and Bridges—Where a sum as large as $7,000 per annum is actually collected from the taxpayers of a county and expended for road and bridge purposes by the fiscal court, it is a sufficient maintenance by taxation to authorize the employment of the road supervisor at a reasonable salary, under Kentucky Statutes 1903, section 4314, authorizing the appointment of a road supervisor when the roads are worked by taxation. Poole, &c. v. Slayton, For, &c 373

SALARIES—See County Attorney; Road Commissioner.

STREET IMPROVEMENT—

1. Municipalities—Street Improvement—Discretion of City—Review—Absence of Negligence—A city authorized to establish, grade and regrade the streets thereof, assumes a certain public duty with respect thereto, and its judgment or discretion as to the time when and the manner in which they shall be improved, is beyond review unless in making and maintaining the improvements it acts with culpable negligence. City of Owensboro v. Hope	375

STREET IMPROVEMENT—Continued—	Page.
2. Same—Dedicating Land for Street—Compensation to Owner—Award by Jury—Presumption—When a strip of land is dedicated for a street, it is implied that it may be graded so far as may be necessary to fit it for such purpose, and it will be presumed that the jury, in awarding compensation under the writ of ad quad damnum have estimated the inconvenience of the owner and injury to his remaining property likely to ensue from the necessary grading of the surface. And until the city has once exercised its right to grade the street, the adjacent lot owners have notice that its surface is subject to such change as the city may order in its discretion when it sees proper to improve the highway. Idem	375
3. Original Construction—Consequential Damages—For such consequential damages as result to an adjacent lot because of the original construction of the grade of a street, when not done negligently, the lot owner is not entitled to recover from the city; the street having been previously dedicated, or acquired by the city for that purpose. Idem	375
4. Right to Grade Street—Passage of Ordinance—Subsequent Acts of Lot Owner—Damages Therefor—The right of a city to have a street graded attaches at the time the ordinance authorizing it passed, and a lot owner can not abridge this right by erecting a house or fences or setting out trees along the property line. In so improving his property he took the chances of sustaining a loss by the proper construction of the street when that event happened. Idem	375

TAXATION—

1. Payment Out of Purchase Money—Statutes—It was error to compel the payment of the taxes in question out of the purchase money, as provided by section 989, Kentucky Statutes, for the reason that the taxes were assessed and became due while appellees were the owners of the property, and it was their duty to pay them at the time prescribed by law. They inherited the property from their father and owned it in fee subject to the appellant's lien. Caine v. Rich, &c. 261
2. Construction of Statutes—Sections 989, 4024 and 4032 should be construed together and when this is done, section 989 will not authorize purchasers at judicial sales, who owe the taxes themselves, to have their own obligations discharged out of the purchase money, as against a lien holder who is only secondarily liable. Idem 261
3. Revenue and Taxation—Agency for Selling Sewing Machines—Selling Without License—Liability—Under section 1, sub-division 4, article 12, Act of 1906, Kentucky Legislature, a license is required "on each agency for selling sewing machines," and, by section 12, sub-division 1, a fine is imposed for a violation thereof; a firm engaged in selling sewing machines which employed an agent to drive about over the country from house to house to sell sewing machines, furnishing a wagon for that purpose, requiring him to carry machines with him for immediate delivery when sold, is guilty of maintaining an agency in the meaning of the statute, and liable to a fine unless having a license therefor. Morgan, Oates & Co. v. Commonwealth.	281

TAXATION—Continued—	Page.
4. Municipalities—Taxes—Action to Recover—Defense—Burden of Proof— In an action by a city against a taxpayer, to recover taxes due the city, the burden is on the taxpayer; if he desires to resist payment, not only to point out in his answer the particular grounds relied on, but he must establish their existence by proof. City Frankfort v. Morgan, &c	297
5. Same—Validity of Levy—Presumption— Under section 157, of the Constitution, authorizing cities of various classes to levy taxes, the presumption is that the council or authority levying the tax has not exceeded its power, and the taxpayer, in attacking the validity of a tax upon the ground that it exceeds the constitutional limit, must point out in his pleading the grounds he relies on, and sustain his contention by evidence. Idem	297
6. Water Works System— A water works company, owned and operated by a city for the purpose of promoting the comfort, health and happiness of the inhabitants of the city, is of a governmental and public nature and for that reason exempt from taxation. City of Covington v. Dist. Highlands.	323
7. Res Judicata— This court has repeatedly held that a judgment in behalf of the State, municipality or district, does not prevent the owner thereof from contesting the right of the State, municipality or district to collect taxes on the same property for other subsequent years. Idem ...	323
ULTRA VIRES— See Contracts, 2.
WAIVER— See Debtor and Creditor, 3.

The
Frankfort Printing Co.
Incorporated

Printers of Anything

Lawyers' Printing a Specialty

Briefs Issued on Short Notice

*We Do Any Kind of Special
Ruling or Binding*

Let Us Quote You Prices

The Frankfort Printing Company
Incorporated

227-229 Main Street

Frankfort, Ky.

THE KENTUCKY LAW REPORTER

EDITORS:

R. G. HIGDON

- - -

T. R. McBEATH

A Semi-Monthly Magazine Publishing in Full All Decisions of the Kentucky Court of Appeals.

The Only Law Magazine
Published in Kentucky

Patronize Home Industry

The Frankfort Printing Co.
Incorporated

Publishers

227-229 Main Street

- - -

Frankfort, Ky.

LAW DEPARTMENT

University of Louisville

In continuous and successful operation since the
year 1847.

Refers to its graduates all over the Union.

PROFESSORS EMMET FIELD, C. B. SEYMOUR
AND W. O. HARRIS.

For Catalogues, apply to

W. O. HARRIS, DEAN
LOUISVILLE, KY.

Jefferson School of Law

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

FACULTY.

HON. SHACKELFORD MILLER, DEAN.

(Judge Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch)

Professor of Equity, Constitutional Law and Corporations.

HON. THOS. R. GORDON,

(Judge Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas Branch.)

Professor of Torts, Evidence and Insurance.

BENJAMIN F. WASHER, LL. B.

Professor of Common Law, Code and Equity Pleading and Practice,
Elements of Law, Personal Relations, Wills and Administration.

NORTON L. GOLDSMITH, LL. B.

Professor of Criminal Law and Procedure, Bailments and Real Estate.

ELLIOTT K. PENNEBAKER, LL. B., SECRETARY,

Professor of Contracts, Sales and Partnership, Agency and Negotiable Instruments.

L. EDMUND HUBER, LIBRARIAN.

BOARD OF REGENTS.

Gov. J. C. W. Beckham.

Theodore Ahrens,
Young E. Allison,
Ex.-Gov. W. O. Bradley,
Charles J. Doherty,
Judge Alexander Dowling,
Reuben T. Durrett,
Rabbi H. G. Enelow,
Bruce Haldeman,
Thomas L. Jefferson,

Rev. Carter Helm Jones.
Charles B. Norton,
Judge Matt O'Doherty,
Rev. E. L. Powell,
Joshua D. Powers,
Judge J. E. Robbins.
Henry L. Stone,
Dr. T. Hunt Stucky,
Bennett H. Young.

Full course covering two years.

Classes conducted at night.

Record attendance last year.

Catalogues and detailed information to be had upon application.

JEFFERSON SCHOOL OF LAW,

Lecture Room,
First and Chestnut Streets.

Secretary's Office,
Kenyon Building.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Oct. 1-17.

Beginning in September, when the Court of Appeals reconvenes, the Magazine Edition of the Kentucky Law Reporter will be issued weekly instead of semi-monthly.
Aug. 15, 1908

VOL. 33

NO. 4

Pages 385-512

Magazine Edition

Kentucky Law Reporter

Frankfort, Ky.

RATES:

Subscription	$5 Per Year
Binding Each Volume	$1.00

A Semi-Monthly Magazine, Reporting in
Full All the Decisions of the Court of Appeals

The Frankfort Printing Co.

Incorporated

Publishers

1908

[Entered at Postoffice at Frankfort, Ky., as second-class mailable matter.]

Arrangements have been made whereby the Judges of the Court of Appeals will edit their several opinions,

We are sparing no means to make the Kentucky Law Reporter the best publication of its kind in existence, and we ask you to kindly compare the present publication with the previous ones.

Table of Cases.

	Page.		Page.
Adams v. Curran	498	Hazel Green Oil & Gas Co. v.
Ballard's Adm'r v. L. & N. R.		Collier, &c.	495
R. Co.	423	Ky. Journal Pub. Co. v. Gaines,	402
Barbee v. Stokes, &c.	439	Logan, &c. v. Vanarsdall, &c..	508
Bindell, &c. v. Kenton County		L. & N. R. R. Co. v. O'Nan's
Assessment Fire Ins Co....	385	Adm'r	462
Bland v. Cum. Tel. & Tel. Co.	399	Louisville Ry. Co. v. Boutellier,	484
Blocker v. City of Owensboro,		Maypothor v. Gast, &c.	395
&c.	478	Merchants Ice & Cold Storage
Butler v. Commonwealth	510	Co. v. Bargholt	488
Campbell v. Dreher, By Next		Middlesboro Town & Lands Co.
Friend	444	v. City of Middlesboro	469
City of Middlesboro v. Coal &		Miller Supply Co. v. Louisa
Iron Bank, &c.	469	Water Co.'s Ass'ee, &c.	388
City of Owensboro v. Hope...	426	N., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Rus-
City of Owensboro v. Lossle..	426	sell	447
Coleman v. Grimes, &c.	455	O'Bannion's Adm'r v. Southern
Cross, By, &c. v. Bd. of Trus.		Ry. Co. in Ky.	436
Walton Common School	472	Scott v. O'Brien	450
Cross v. I. C. R. R. Co	432	Skaggs v. Simpson	410
Davless County Bank & Trust		Smith v. Simmons	503
Co. v. Wright, &c.	457	Southern Ry. Co. in Ky. v. Com-
Ewell & Smith v. Jackson's		monwealth	430
Adm'r, &c.	481	Southern Ry. Co. in Ky. v. Mil-
Fairbanks, Morse & Co. v. Gull-		ler	505
foyle, &c.	408	Supreme Lodge K. of P. v.
Fitzpatrick v. Fitzpatrick's		Bradley	413
Adm'r	500	Third Nat. Bank of Louisville
Graham, &c. v. Rice, &c.	441	v. Tierney	418
Harrison, &c. v. Logan County,		Trumbo's Adm'r v. Gaines &
&c.	465	Co.	415
		Vallandigham, &c. v. Ray, &c..	392

The Triple Expansion Ledger.

"BEST ON EARTH."

BECAUSE of the following features of merit, the sales of the Triple Expansion Ledger are increasing rapidly, and our agents are unanimous in saying it deserves the name "Best on Earth."

It has an expansion of nearly 200 per cent. You know the value of this feature, the ease in inserting sheets, and the great increase in capacity for additional accounts, as the business demands.

It is the lightest ledger made to-day; weighing less than half as much as aluminum back ledgers. You know that excess weight is unnecessary, and that bookkeepers do not like to handle a ledger weighing four or five pounds.

It has no exposed metal parts to mar the desk, a feature appreciated by all users.

It has strong, positive, quick-acting mechanism.

It is made of absolutely the best materials obtainable, the highest grade of leather and corduroy, with the finest nickel-plated finish.

The price is right, enabling the dealer to meet competition.

THE FRANKFORT PRINTING CO.
(Incorporated.)

Frankfort, Ky.

Magazine Edition

Kentucky Law Reporter

Vol. 33

August 15, 1908

No. 4

COURT OF APPEALS OF KENTUCKY.

BINDELL, &c. v. KENTON COUNTY ASSESSMENT FIRE INSURANCE CO.

(Filed March 13, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Fire Insurance—Defense—Voluntary Act of Insured—Denial—Plea of Insanity—In an action to recover upon a policy of fire insurance the defense was that the property was destroyed by the voluntary act of the insured. The insured having died before the case came on for trial, his administrator, for reply, denied (1) that the fire was caused by the voluntary act of the deceased; (2) that if the fire was caused by deceased he was at the time temporarily insane and incapable of forming any wrongful or fraudulent design. Held—That the reply, while technically defective, was a good plea and a demurrer thereto was improperly sustained.

2. Insane Person—Wrongful Purpose—Incapacity to Design—An insane person acts without design, has no will of his own, and is influenced by no motive. So an insane person, being unable to form a wrongful or fraudulent design in destroying his own property, so far as the insurer is concerned, the insurers are liable although the insured himself burns the property when insane.

3. Provisions of Policy—Effect—The absence of a clause in an insurance policy providing that the company shall not be liable if the property is destroyed by the insured, would not render the company liable if the property was destroyed by the voluntary, fraudulent, corrupt or wrongful act of the insured.

4. Negligence of Insured—Absence of Fraud or Willful Misconduct—Although the negligence or carelessness of the insured may cause or result in the destruction of his property the company will be liable unless the negligence is of such a character as to amount to fraud or willful misconduct on his part.

Schmidt & Holmes for appellants.

Frank M. Tracy for appellee.

Appeal from Kenton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, reversing.

In this action to recover upon a policy of fire insurance the defense was that the property insured was destroyed by the voluntary act of the insured, who died before the case came on for trial. His personal representatives filed the following reply to this answer:

"1. They deny that the fire which destroyed said barn was started by said Charles Bindell, deceased, or the said barn was destroyed as a result of the voluntary act of the said decedent.

"2. They state that if the fire which destroyed said barn was started by said Bindell, or if said barn was destroyed as a result of any act of said decedent, he was at the time temporarily insane and incapable of forming any wrongful or fraudulent design. They state that one of said defenses is true, but that they do not know which of them is true."

The lower court sustained a demurrer to the second paragraph of this reply, and of this ruling appellants complain.

There is no clause in the policy of insurance providing that the company should not be liable if the property was destroyed by the insured. The absence, however, of such a stipulation, would not render the company liable if the destruction of the property was caused by the voluntary, fraudulent, corrupt or wrongful act of the insured. The paragraph of the reply in question is not aptly pleaded. It would have been more in accordance with the rules of good pleading if it had stated that Bindell, if he burned the barn, did not at the time, have mind enough to know the nature or quality of his act, and was laboring under such defect of reason as not to be responsible for his conduct, or that, as a result of mental unsoundness, he did not have sufficient will power to know right from wrong or govern his actions. But, although technically defective, we are not prepared to say that the pleading was not sufficient, and will, therefore, treat the paragraph as if it averred, in apt language, the insanity of the insured at the time he burned the barn.

We have not found any Kentucky case dealing with the question here presented, although it has been often considered in life insurance cases; and in such cases, where the policy exempted the company from liability if the assured should die by his own hand, it has been ruled that self-destruction did not avoid the policy when the insured, who took his own life, was at the time insane. In other words, to avoid the policy the act of self-destruction must have been voluntary. (St. Louis Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Graves, 6 Bush, 268; Manhattan Life Ins. Co. v. Beard, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1747.) A different rule has obtained where the policy contained a stipulation that if the insured should take his own life while insane, or, if his act be voluntary or involuntary while sane or insane. The cases construing these last-mentioned provisions may be found in Manhattan Life Ins. Co. v. Beard, supra, and it is not necessary to further mention them here.

If Bindell, while insane, destroyed the insured property, the company can not, under the conditions of this policy, escape liability for the loss upon this ground. Unless Bindell's act in destroying the property was fraudulent, voluntary or intentional, the company is bound. It is well settled that although the negligence or carelessness of the insured may cause or result in the destruction of his property, the company will be liable, unless the carelessness or negligence is of such a character as to amount to fraud, or willful misconduct on his part. (Ostrander on Insurance, page 192; Wood on Insurance, volume 1, page 274.) In Cyc., volume 19, page 831, the rule is thus stated: "In the absence of fraud or design on the part of the insured, or some stipulation in the policy, the insured is not relieved from liability by mere negligence or carelessness of the insured or his servants, although directly contributing to or causing the loss; but, on the other hand, even in the absence of stipulations in the policy, the failure of the insured to take reasonable care to avoid loss, or the doing of wrongful acts directly calculated to bring about the loss, may be such as to defeat a recovery under the policy."

The text is supported by numerous authorities, including Scottish Union Ins. Co. v. Strain, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 958, where this court said: "The law is well settled that insurance companies are responsible for losses caused by a risk insured against, notwithstanding such loss may be directly contributed to by the negligence or carelessness of the assured or its agent."

There is no conflict in the authorities upon this proposition. It will thus be seen that to relieve the insurer from liability the destruction of the property must have been caused or brought about by the fraudulent design, voluntary act or intentional misconduct of the insured. Accepting this doctrine as sound, it necessarily follows that if the insured did not, at the time, have mind enough to know the nature or quality of his act, and was laboring under such a defect of reason as not to be responsible for his conduct, or as a result of mental unsoundness he did not have sufficient will power to know right from wrong or govern his actions, that the destruction of the property by him would not relieve the company. Under the conditions stated, the act of the insured could not have been fraudulent because there can be no actual fraud in the absence of an intent to commit it. It could not be voluntary or intentional because he did not have sufficient mind and memory to do a voluntary or intentional act. The acts of an insane person are not voluntary or intentional in the sense that they impose responsibilities that ordinarily flow from the consequences of a voluntary or intentional act committed by a sane person. Or, to put it in another way, assuming that Bindell destroyed the property, and at the time he was insane within the definition heretofore given, he was not capable of forming any judgment as to the consequences of his act, and hence the wrongful intent necessary to constitute a fraudulent purpose, a voluntary or willful, or an intentional act, was lacking. An insane person acts without design, has no will of his own, and is influenced by no motive. So, an insane person can form no wrongful or fraudulent design in destroying his own property so far as the insurers are concerned, and the insurers are liable although the insured himself burns the property when insane. In Autremont v. Fire Ass'n, 65 Hun. (N. Y. Sup. Ct. Rep.), 475, in an action to recover on a fire insurance policy, the insured, while insane, set fire to the building, and upon this ground the company resisted a recovery; but the court said: "We are unable to see that an insane person can form a fraudulent or wrongful design in the destruction of his own property so as to defeat a policy or insurance thereon any more than he can form a criminal intent in the commission of crime. Mere negligence, however great the degree, is not sufficient to defeat a recovery, provided it does not reach the point of a wrongful or fraudulent purpose, or a wanton disregard of others. To the same effect is Karow v. Continental Ins. Co., 57 Wis., 56, 46 Am. St. Rep., 17.

It has been suggested that although an insane person is not criminally liable for his acts, and although a policy of fire insurance will not be avoided if the property is destroyed by the insured while insane, yet, that insane persons are responsible to the extent of compensatory damages for any injury done by them, and hence if Bindell damaged the insurance company by his own insane act, his estate should be required to compensate it for any loss sustained thereby. Generally speaking, a lunatic or insane person, is liable for the actual damage resulting from his wrongful acts. (Cooley on Torts, page 99; Williams v. Hays, 143 N. Y., 442, 26 L. R. A., 153.) In Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, volume 1, section 121, it is said the liability of lunatics to a civil action for the damages caused by their torts rests "not upon the usual principle of personal fault, for there may be none, but upon the broad ground that when one of two innocent persons must bear a loss, he must bear it whose act caused it."

This question was fully considered by the Wisconsin court in the Karow case, supra, and the conclusion reached that although if the insured while insane had burned the house of another person, he would be liable for the value thereof; yet, the fact that he burned his own house did not relieve the company from liability; and in support of this doctrine a number of cases are cited in the opinion. The reason for the distinction, which is not entirely satisfactory, is rested upon the ground that, as the company can not escape liability upon the policy of insurance for the insane act of the insured, it would be in effect enabling it to do so if it could, in an independent action, require his estate to compensate it for the loss, or could set it up as defense to defeat an action brought to recover the amount of the policy. In short, the doctrine seems to be that the company ought not to be allowed by this indirect means to defeat a recovery on the policy when it could not have succeeded solely upon the ground that the insured burned it, if in fact he was at the time insane. To permit the company to recover from the insured would be going through the idle ceremony or form of paying him the amount of the policy with one hand, and at the same time taking it away from him with the other. If insurance companies do not desire to be responsible in cases of this character, they should so stipulate in their policies.

For the error in sustaining the demurrer to the reply, the judgment must be reversed, with directions for a new trial not inconsistent with this opinion.

MILLER SUPPLY CO. v. LOUISA WATER CO.'S ASS'ES, &c.

(Filed March 13, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Mortgage Lien—Description of Property—Identification—Validity—A mortgage on property which was sold and used in building a water plant is void for uncertainty which does not locate the property as to State, county or town, and which contains no reference which would supply the omission. A mortgage covering so many feet of "spiral pipe" is void for uncertainty in description where there is nothing in the mortgage by which it could be identified and distinguished from other pipe of like kind.

2. Water Plant—Enforced Sale—Liens on Connected Parts—Distribution of Proceeds—Where parties sold property to a water company by a contract which was recorded in which they retained the title to the property sold until the purchase price was paid on the sale of the waterworks to pay its debts, under order of a court, where the property sold could not be attached without injuring the sale of the waterworks plant, the court should have ascertained the cost of each item that constituted the plant, and distributed the proceeds of the sale according to the cost of each of them on their respective claims, and if their whole claims are not then satisfied they should be permitted to present the balance as a general claim, to share with the other creditors pro rata, under section 74, Kentucky Statutes.

Thomas R. Brown for appellant.

O'Neal & Carter and E. E. Shannon for appellees.

Sullivan & Stewart for appellee, Fairbanks, Morse & Co.

Hager & Stewart for appellee, American Spiral Works.

Appeal from Lawrence Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn, reversing.

In the spring or summer of 1904, one W. B. Cox procured a franchise from the town of Louisa for the building and operating a waterworks and sewer system in that town. It appears that prior to September 2, of that year, Cox purchased considerable material in the way of water pipes, machinery, &c., and had laid the pipe, installed the machinery and done considerable work toward completing the system. He purchased pipe from appellant, Miller Supply Co., to the amount of about $2,500, and from appellee, American Spiral Pipe Works, to the amount of about $3,000, and it also appears that fourteen citizens of the town agreed to, and did furnish, Cox one hundred dollars each, to enable him to construct the waterworks, upon condition that each of them would be permitted to receive a supply of water from the works at the same rates that water was furnished to others in the town, until the one hundred dollars was repaid to each. And it was also stipulated that if the waterworks were not completed, or if for any cause the plant was sold or assigned, they should have a lien upon the whole plant to secure them in the amount so advanced. This contract was recorded in the early part of 1905. On September 2, 1904, the Louisa Water Co. was incorporated, directors and officers elected. The corporation, by an order entered in its books, assumed and agreed to pay the above named claims, and others not necessary to mention here. On the 10th day of March, 1906, the Louisa Waterworks became insolvent and made a general deed of assignment of all its property to G. W. Castle, who qualified as such assignee and at once entered upon the duties of his office. Soon thereafter the assignee instituted this action for the purpose of settling the estate, and having the priority of creditors adjudged, and for a settlement of all matters pertaining to the trust.

Appellee, Fairbanks, Morse & Co., filed its answer and cross-petition of the assignee and set up a contract entered into between it and the Louisa Water Co., of date August 31, 1905, for the price of a gasoline engine and a pump which was agreed to be $2,100, payable in installments. The contract provided, among other things, that the property sold should belong to it and that the title should remain in it until fully paid for, which contract was recorded in the office of the Lawrence County Court, and prayed that its lien be enforced.

A similar pleading was filed by A. J. Garred, assignee of Rumsey & Co., with reference to the pump which was purchased from Rumsey & Co. at the price of $600, and a lien asserted on it for $600.

Appellees, the fourteen citizens referred to, filed their pleading alleging the facts before stated, and asserted a lien for the balance due them on the contract. (Most of them had received something like one-half of their claims in water furnished by the company.)

Appellant, Miller Supply Co., and appellee, American Spiral Pipe Works, filed answers, both resisting the liens asserted by Fairbanks, Morse & Co., Garred, assignee of Rumsey & Co., and the claims of the fourteen citizens; and each set forth their respective claims and asserted liens on the pipe sold by each to the Louisa Water Co. The Miller Supply Co. by reason of a mortgage which it filed with its answer, and the American Spiral Pipe Works by reason of an execution levied on the property of the waterworks company. This execution lien was abandoned for the reason that it was not levied until after the date of assignment made by the company to G. W. Castle. The cause was referred to the master commissioner to take proof and to report all claims against the waterworks company, and to determine which claims were liens against its property. The master commissioner made his report and reported liens in favor of the fourteen citizens for the balance due them, and in favor of Garred, assignee of Rumsey & Co., a lien on the pump sold by it and in favor of Fairbanks, Morse & Co., allowing it a lien on the engine and pump sold by it to the waterworks company; but reported, from the proof, that this engine and pump and the pump furnished by Rumsey & Co. were attached to and were being used as a part of the waterworks system and could not be detached and sold separately without materially injuring the property as a whole, and it was in the interest of all the creditors that the property be sold together. Exceptions were filed to this report by the Miller Supply Co. because the commissioner failed to report its claim as secured by mortgage lien, and because it allowed the claims of the fourteen citizens and gave them a lien upon the property, and also because he reported that Fairbanks, Morse & Co. had a lien on the pump and engine. The court tried and overruled the exceptions, to which appellant, Miller Supply Co., objected and excepted. The court adjudged that the Miller Supply Co. had no lien upon the property, to secure its debt; that Fairbanks, Morse & Co., and Garred, as assignee of Rumsey & Co., had liens on the engine and pumps, and as they were being used as a part of the water system and could not be sold separately without greatly injuring the whole system, gave them a preferred lien on the whole property of the water plant; and also directed that the whole property be sold with the directions that the purchaser carry out the contract made by Cox and the water company with the fourteen citizens referred to, viz: Furnish them water at the same rate charged other citizens of the town until the balance of their claims were paid. To this judgment appellant excepted, and superseded so much of it as gave Fairbanks, Morse & Co. a prior lien upon the property and directed that its claim be paid first out of the proceeds of sale.

Appellant, Miller Supply Co., assigns, in its brief, the following reasons for reversal of the judgment:

1st. The court erred in refusing to adjudge it a lien upon the pipe which it sold and delivered to the water company.

2d. Because the court allowed the claims of the fourteen citizens and directed the property to be sold, with directions for the purchaser to carry out the contract made with them by the assignor, Louisa Water Co.

3d. The court erred in adjudging that Fairbanks, Morse & Co. had a lien on the engine and pump for the sum due it, and in allowing it and Garred, assignee of Rumsey & Co., a lien upon the whole property of the water company for the payment of their claims.

We will consider the reasons assigned in the order stated.

Appellant claims that it has a lien on the pipe sold by it to the waterworks company by reason of a mortgage, which was recorded in Lawrence county, Kentucky. That part of the mortgage necessary to elucidate the question to be determined is as follows: "This indenture made and entered into by and between W. B. Cox, of Pikeville, Ky., party to the first part and the Miller Supply Co., of Huntington, West Virginia, party of the second part."

After reciting the indebtedness, says: "Do hereby mortgage and give a lien on the following described personal property, to-wit: Fourteen hundred and thirty-eight feet of eight-inch spiral pipe; and forty-one hundred and twenty-three feet of four-inch pipe (spiral) and three thousand two hundred and twenty-five feet of six-inch spiral pipe, together with the couplings and the fittings and known as the material pipes, couplings and fittings purchased of the second party and shipped from Abendroth and Root Mfg. Co. And further, that the party of the second part has and holds a lien on ten shares of one hundred dollars each in the Crystal Waterworks Co. Certificate, No. 7, which shall be held as security on said debt."

It will be observed that the mortgage recites that W. B. Cox, the mortgagor, resided in Pikeville, Pike county, Kentucky, and, as stated, the mortgage was recorded in Louisa, Lawrence county, Kentucky:

and it is asserted by appellee's counsel that for this reason, among others, the mortgage did not create a lien upon the property of the waterworks company; that to have obtained a lien by it the mortgage should have been recorded in Pike county, the residence of the mortgagor. The rule is that ordinary personal property is held to have a situs at the residence of the owner, and that a mortgage thereon should be recorded in that county. The cases of Vaughn v. Bell 9 B. Mon., 447; Coppage v. Johnson, 21 Ky. Law Rep., 1357, and Day, &c. v. Mack, Strader & Co., 24 Ky. Law Rep., 640, were cases where in mortgages were executed upon property not permanently located in the counties where the mortgages were executed. In the first two cases the mortgages were executed upon horses, and in the last the mortgage was given upon a portable engine.

The property in this case was purchased for the construction of the water plant, and whether the mortgage should have been recorded in the place of the actual situs of the property, or in the county of the residence of the owner, we do not decide for the reason we have arrived at the conclusion that the mortgage did not create a lien upon the property for another reason. The mortgage is void for uncertainty, in that it does not locate the property as to State, county or town, and contains no reference which would supply this important omission; but the mortgage would indicate that the property was possibly in Pikeville. Again, the mortgage covered so many feet of "spiral pipe," and there is no other description given of it; there is nothing in the mortgage by which it could be identified and distinguished from the pipe of the American Spiral Pipe Works, or the pipe of any other company. (Amer. & Eng. Ency., 2 Ed., 957, and Pearce, &c. v. Hall, 12 Bush, 209.)

With reference to the second question, the claims of the fourteen citizens, we are unable to see how this question affects appellant, Miller Supply Co. It did not object to the sale of the property, and it did not supersede the judgment in that respect; and if this court should reverse the judgment upon this question it would only result to the benefit of the purchaser of the property. The purchaser took the property for a certain price with the obligations resting upon him to furnish these fourteen citizens with water at the rates it furnished water to other citizens, until their claims were paid; and if this court should adjudge that the lower court erred in this it would result alone in relieving the purchaser from that obligation, and would not benefit appellant, or the other creditors of the water company, they will get the benefit of the purchase price and no more. For these reasons we will not consider the action of the lower court with reference to this matter.

Fairbanks, Morse & Co. sold to the Water company the pump engine described, in September, 1905, and it took a contract from the water company, and had it recorded, by which it retained the title to the property until the purchase price was paid. It certainly had a lien upon the property for the payment of its debts, and the court did not err in refusing to allow it and the assignee of Rumsey & Co. to detach the engine and pumps and sell them separately and enforce their liens, but, in the interest of all the creditors, the court properly directed the sale of the whole plant; but erred in adjudging Fairbanks, Morse & Co. and the assignee of Rumsey & Co. a first lien on the proceeds of all the property. This was inequitable to the other creditors who had no liens. It may have been, and probably was true, that the pumps and engine would not have brought the full amount of their debts, and, again, the proceeds of the engine and pumps were all that they had a lien upon.

The court should have ascertained the cost of each item that constituted the water plant, and then ascertained what per cent. the cost of the pump sold by Rumsey & Co. and the cost of the engine and pump sold by Fairbanks, Morse & Co. is to the sum total of all the items that went into the water plant, and gave each of them, on their respective claims, that per cent. of the proceeds of the whole water plant, and if their whole claims are not then satisfied, they should be permitted to present the balance as a general claim and to share with the other creditors pro rata. (Section 74, Kentucky Statutes.)

For this reason the judgment of the lower court is reversed and remanded, for further proceedings consistent herewith.

VALLANDINGHAM, &c. v. RAY, &c.

(Filed March 19, 1908—To be reported.)

Replevin—Action Against Sureties on Replevin Bond—Failure to Show Breach—Recovery Denied—In an action against the sureties on a replevin bond, where it appears that no restitution of the property in controversy was directed in the replevin suit, and no damages were sought or awarded, the plaintiff's right of recovery against the sureties being dependent upon the breach of the bond they must fail in the absence of showing that there has been a breach of some of its provisions.

Jas. H. Settle for appellants.

Chas. Strother for appellees.

Appeal from Owen Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lassing, reversing.

In April, 1904, J. B. Gibson, filed suit against W. A. Ray and J. C. Frazier, in which he alleged that he was the owner of, and entitled to the immediate possession of, a certain lot of tobacco, amounting to about 5,500 pounds, which he claimed to have purchased from them. That the defendants were unlawfully detaining the tobacco from him to his damage in the sum of $385. He prayed for an order of delivery for the tobacco and for damages for withholding it from him. He executed the required bond; the order of delivery was issued, placed in the hands of the sheriff, and, under this order of delivery, the tobacco in question was taken and delivered to the plaintiff. When the case came on for trial the defendants, Ray and Frazier, filed a general demurrer to the petition. Upon hearing, the demurrer was sustained, with leave to plaintiff to amend. Plaintiff elected to stand on his petition, and, declining to amend, his suit was dismissed. From this judgment he prayed and prosecuted an appeal to this court, where, in due course of time, the judgment of the lower court was affirmed. Thereupon Ray and Frazier, the defendants in the replevin suit, brought suit upon the bond which had been executed in the replevin suit, wherein they sought to recover of J. B. Gibson and his sureties, the damages which they alleged that they had sustained by reason of the unlawful and wrongful seizure and conversion of their tobacco, together with the costs incurred by them in their defense of the replevin suit.

The defendant, J. B. Gibson, filed his separate answer, and, as the judgment herein rendered as to him is not before us on this appeal, it is unnecessary to consider the defense set up by him.

The sureties, T. T. Vallandingham, &c., filed a general demurrer to the petition, which was overruled. They, thereupon, answered, alleging that the covenants of the bond, which they signed as surety for J. B. Gibson, had been fully complied with and satisfied, in that J. B. Gibson had duly prosecuted the replevin suit to a final judgment, not only in the Owen Circuit Court, but in the Court of Appeals. That in the replevin suit no return of the property had been adjudged, nor had any sum of money been directed to be paid by J. B. Gibson to the defendants, Ray and Frazier, or either of them, and, that inasmuch as there had been no breach of any of the covenants of the bond, and they had fully performed and satisfied the judgment in the replevin suit by the payment of all of the costs therein, they were absolved from all liability on account of their suretyship on said bond. The material allegations of this answer of the sureties were traversed, and the case proceeded to a trial before a jury with the result that a judgment was rendered in favor of appellees, against J. B. Gibson and the sureties on his replevin bond. This judgment being for the amount which J. B. Gibson alleged he had agreed to pay for the tobacco, and a small sum, $35, as attorney's fees, he is satisfied therewith and is not complaining. The sureties, feeling that their liability should be strictly limited to the terms and conditions of the bond which they signed, filed a motion and grounds for a new trial, which was overruled, and they appeal.

The bond executed in the replevin suit is as follows:

"J. B. Gibson, Plaintiff,

v. } Bond.

"W. A. Ray, &c., Defendants.

"We undertake to the defendants, W. A. Ray, &c., that the plaintiff, J. B. Gibson, shall duly prosecute this action, and shall perform the judgment of the court therein returning the tobacco ordered to be delivered to the plaintiff, J. B. Gibson, if a return thereof be adjudged, and by paying to the defendants, W. A. Ray, &c., such sums of money as are adjudged in this action against plaintiff, not exceeding nineteen hundred dollars and the costs of this action. This 20th day of April, 1904.

"J. B. GIBSON,
 "S. G. GIBSON,
 "E. S. GIBSON,
 "T. T. VALLANDINGHAM,
 "S. F. GIBSON."

From the record before us it appears that the defendants in the replevin suit did not seek a return of the tobacco taken thereunder, nor did they seek to recover of plaintiff therein any sum of money for the seizure or detention of this tobacco, but, they chose rather to defeat plaintiff's right of recovery by non-suit, and, in this they were successful, for their demurrer to plaintiff's petition was sustained and his petition was dismissed with judgment for their costs.

The petition alleges that J. B. Gibson did not duly prosecute the replevin suit, but the record refutes this allegation and, on the contrary, shows that he not only prosecuted it duly, but did so with diligence, both in the circuit court and in this court. He did everything that was in his power to succeed in that suit and only surrendered his right to maintain it when a judgment had been entered in this court denying him that right. No return of the property was adjudged to the defendants in the replevin suit, nor any sum of money ordered to be paid to them, other than the costs of the suit. These costs, the sureties allege, have been paid, and this is not denied.

The only question left for determination is, may the defendants in the replevin suit, having failed to procure an order for the return of the property in that suit or a judgment for any sum of money as damages in that suit, now in an independent action proceed against the sureties on the bond?

In the case of the Kentucky Land and Immigration Co. v. Crabtree, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 283, a somewhat similar question was presented. In that case the appellant had filed its suit in replevin; executed a bond and caused an order of delivery to be issued for certain personal property. Under this order of delivery the property described therein was taken and delivered to appellant. Thereafter, at the next succeeding terms of the circuit court, wherein the action was pending appellant dismissed its suit without prejudice. The defendant thereupon brought suit against the plaintiff in the replevin suit; and the surety on his bond, to recover the value of the property taken and damages for withholding it. This court, in passing upon the question, held that the bondsmen were liable, inasmuch as the record showed that appellant had not duly prosecuted the replevin suit. Of course, when appellant dismissed its suit appellee had no opportunity to litigate the question of ownership or damage with it in that suit, and was compelled to seek a recovery in an independent action, and, this court permitted a recovery in that case upon the sole ground that there had been a breach of one of the covenants of the bond, to-wit: That appellant had not duly prosecuted the replevin suit. In that case it was inferentially held that, but for the breach in the covenant of the bond, no recovery could have been had.

In the more recent case of Mounts v. Murphy, decided by this court (October 24, 1907, and found in volume 31, page 1193, Ky. Law Rep., almost identically the question here involved was before this court. In that case a resident of Virginia instituted a suit in replevin in the Pike Circuit Court; executed the bond required by section 184, of the Code, procured an order of delivery for certain cattle and articles of personal property, and, under said order, was placed in possession of the property described therein. At the following term of court the defendant in the replevin suit moved that the plaintiff, being a non-resident, be required to execute a bond for costs. This motion was sustained, and the plaintiff, failing or refusing to give the bond for costs, his suit was dismissed, and it was adjudged in the order dismissing his suit that "The defendant is entitled to an order of restitution of said property, if to be had, and if not to be had, an execution to issue for the sum of $409, the value fixed by plaintiff of said property, and the clerk of this court will forthwith issue said order of restitution, and upon the return of same, if the said property has not been restored, then the said clerk will issue an execution against the plaintiff, * * *, for the sum of $409, the value of the cattle taken under said writ, and the costs of this action."

Thereafter the defendant in the replevin suit instituted suit against the surety on the non-resident's bond, seeking to recover of him twenty-five dollars costs expended in the replevin suit, eighteen dollars, the value of certain articles described in the order of delivery, which had not been returned under the order of the court directing a restitution; $400 damages for the detention of the cattle and other property; and, $300 damages for the difference between the value of the cattle when taken and the value of same when returned. The bondsman answered, alleging that all of the costs of the replevin suit had been paid; denied that any of the property directed to be returned had not been returned; denied damages either for the detention of the property described in the order of delivery, or damages to said property while in the possession of the plaintiff in the replevin suit, and pleaded affirmatively that, if there had been any damages due the defendant in the replevin suit, they should have been assessed in the final judgment in that suit. Upon a trial the jury found in favor of the bondsman as to the property which it was claimed had not been returned, and, found against him in the sum of $300 damages for the detention of the cattle, and, $90 damages for injury to them while so detained.

Upon review here this court held that the trial court erred in submitting to the jury the question of damages for the detention of the property, holding that this matter should have been presented and determined in the replevin suit, that, as appellee failed to present it and have the matter determined in that action, he is barred from recovering it from the surety on the bond. The surety on the bond was held liable for the damages which had resulted to the property itself while in the possession of the plaintiff in the replevin suit. This recovery was permitted upon the idea that it was the duty of the bondsman to see to it that the property, when restitution was directed, was restored to the defendant in as good condition as it was when it was taken from him. The jury found that the property had been damaged and depreciated in value while in the possession of plaintiff in the replevin suit. There had, therefore, been, to this extent, a failure on the part of the bondsman to comply with that provision of the bond which called for a restitution of the property, if directed by the judgment in the replevin suit, because there had not been a restitution of the property in the condition in which it was when taken, but in a damaged condition, and the property not having been in the custody of the court when the judgment was entered in the replevin suit, this matter could not have been determined in that litigation. Not so, however, with the case at bar. As above stated, no restitution was directed in the replevin suit in this case, and no damages sought or awarded, and appellee's entire right of recovery against the sureties being dependent upon a breach of the replevin bond, they must fail, in the absence of a showing, that there has been a breach of some one of the three provisions of the bond.

One of the provisions of the bond is that the plaintiff in the replevin suit will duly prosecute that action. As above stated, the record in this case shows that he did so. The other covenants in the bond are to the effect that the plaintiff shall return the property if a restitution is adjudged and that they will be answerable to the defendants in the replevin suit for such sums as may be adjudged them therein. In order to determine the liability of the bondsmen upon these two covenants of the bond, we must look alone to the judgment in the replevin suit, for the covenants expressly provide that their liability in these particulars is to be measured by that judgment. When so tested we find that there has been no breach of the bond whatever for which these bondsmen can be held liable.

For the reasons indicated, the judgment is reversed and remanded, with instructions to the lower court to set aside the judgment, so far as the sureties, Vallandingham, &c., are concerned, and enter a judgment dismissing the proceedings as to them, with judgment for their costs.

MAYPOTTER v. GAST, &c.

(Filed April 29, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Street Improvement—Apportionment Warrants—Sale—Right of Redemption—Prior Judgment—Effect Thereon—Under section 2834. Ky. Statutes, referring to apportionment warrants, a failure to provide in a judgment of sale thereunder, that the defendant in the warrant may redeem the land within two years from the report of the sale, does not affect a previous judgment in favor of parties to the action, where the defendant did not offer to redeem the land within the two years.

2. Same—Sale and Conveyance—Failure of Owner to Object—Legality of Sale—Under section 989, Ky. Statutes, providing that the court may summarily determine the amount due on the assessment and provide for its payment in the judgment, where property was sold under an apportionment warrant and was conveyed to the purchaser without objection by the owner, who failed to ask that he should have two years time in which to redeem it, he can not thereafter raise the question as to the legality of the sale and conveyance.

J. W. S. Clements for appellant.

William Furlong and Bennett H. Young for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, Second Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, affirming.

D. E. Maypothor and Ira S. Barnett owned a tract of land in Louisville, at the southwest corner of Floyd and G streets, fronting on Floyd street 694 7-12 feet and running back 265 feet. They held the land jointly, Barnett owning two-thirds interest in it and Maypothor one-third. On January 28, 1902, they mortgaged the land to the Columbia Finance & Trust Company to secure a debt of $5,000 due the Trust Company for borrowed money. On July 29, 1903, Barnett mortgaged his two-thirds of the property to the Southern National Bank to secure a debt of $7,500 due by him to the bank. On June 2, 1903, the General Council of the city of Louisville passed an ordinance for the improvement of this part of Floyd street. The contract was let to G. W. Gosnell, who did the work and after it was accepted, he received an apportionment warrant dated May 24, 1904, for the sum of $3,793.19 against 525 feet of the property along Floyd street, beginning at the corner of G street and running back 265 feet, and $878.82 against 265 feet of the property along G street and running back 250 feet. Gosnell assigned his claim to Jacob Gast, and the debt not having been paid, this suit was brought on November 30, 1904, by Gast and Gosnell against Barnett, Maypothor, the Trust Co. and the bank, setting up their lien and praying that it be enforced. They asked that the Trust Co. and the bank be required to assert their claims, alleging that the lien for the apportionment warrant was prior to the mortgages. Maypothor and Barnett filed an answer in which they assailed the validity of the apportionment warrant. The Trust Co. set up its mortgage and prayed that it be enforced; the bank set up its mortgage and asked its enforcement. No answer was filed by Maypothor and Barnett to the cross-petition of the Trust Co. Maypothor entered his appearance to the cross-petition of the bank and filed an answer stating that its allegations were true. Barnett filed a similar answer to the cross-petition of the bank. In this condition of the pleadings the case was submitted for judgment on June 28, 1905, without objection and it was adjudged by the court that Gosnell and Gast had the first lien on that part of the property referred to in the apportionment warrant; that the Trust Co., subject to the contractor's lien, had a first lien on all the property for its debt of $5,000, and this debt it was agreed was to be paid three-fifths by Barnett and two-fifths by Maypothor. It was also adjudged that the bank had a lien on Barnett's two-thirds interest in the whole property for its debt of $7,500, but that this was subject to the prior liens. The court also determined that the land was divisible into thirteen (13) lots, which were described in the judgment, and that each lot should be offered first for sale and then the whole property, and that bid should be accepted which brought the most. The land was ordered sold on the judgment in favor of the Trust Co. and the bank; and it was provided that out of the proceeds the apportionment warrant was first to be paid; then the debt to the Trust Co.; that one-third of the surplus should be paid to Maypothor and two-thirds of the surplus should be paid to the Southern National Bank, on its mortgage from Barnett. It was also ordered that $2,000 of the debt of the Trust Co. should be charged to Maypothor and $3,000 to Barnett. On July 31, Maypothor and Barnett were granted an appeal from the judgment on their motion and on the same day they executed a supersedeas bond which, as far as material, is in these words.

"Ira S. Barnett and D. E. Maypothor, appellants, vs.

Jacob Gast and Geo. W. Gosnell, appellees.

"Whereas, said appellants have taken an appeal from the judgment of this court, rendered on the 28th day of June, 1905, as amended on July 15, 1905, against Ira S. Barnett and D. E. Maypothor, in favor of appellees, Jacob Gast and George W. Gosnell, for so much of said judgment as adjudges a lien on a certain lot of land at Floyd and G streets, and a sale of said land, which judgment is in words and figures as follows, to-wit:

(Here follows judgment.)

"Now we, Ira S. Barnett and D. E. Maypothor, principal, and J. W. Gaulbert, surety, do hereby covenant to and with the appellees, Jacob Gast and George W. Gosnell, that the appellants will pay to the appellees all costs and damages that shall be adjudged against the appellants on the appeal; and also that they will satisfy and perform the said judgment in case it shall be affirmed, and any judgment or order which the Court of Appeals may render, or order to be rendered, by the inferior court, not exceeding in amount or value the judgment aforesaid, and also pay all rents, hire or damage which, during the pendency of the appeal, may accrue on any part of the property of which the appellees are kept out of possession by reason of the appeal."

On the same day the clerk issued a supersedeas which was executed on Gast and Gosnell. The supersedeas is in these words:

"Ira S. Barnett and D. E. Maypothor, appellants, vs.

Jacob Gast and Geo. W. Gosnell, appellees.

"I, W. L. Weller, Jr., Clerk of the Jefferson Circuit Court, do hereby certify that an appeal has been granted from a judgment rendered in favor of Jacob Gast and Geo. W. Gosnell, appellees, against Ira S. Barnett and D. E. Maypothor, appellants, from so much of said judgment as adjudges a lien on a certain lot of land at Floyd and G streets, and a sale of said land in the Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, Second Division, on the 28th day of June, 1905, and as amended July 15, 1905, and that a supersedeas bond has been executed after the appeal was granted. Therefore, the appellee and all others are commanded to stay proceedings on the judgment aforesaid."

Notwithstanding the supersedeas the Bank and Trust Co. proceeded with the sale. The property was appraised at $11,300, and brought $10,800. It was purchased by the Southern National Bank. The sale was reported to the court and, without objection, was confirmed. Maypothor and Barnett failed to prosecute their appeal and it was dismissed by this court, the supersedeas being discharged. The purchaser paid the price and, without objection, a deed was made to it. Out of the money arising from the sale, there was a balance of $159.28, coming to Maypothor from his one-third of the land; and this was paid to him and accepted by him on March 24, 1906. There was also a balance of $318.57 coming to the bank on its mortgage from Barnett, and it was paid to it. After all this, on June 1, 1907, the appeal before us was sued out by D. E. Maypotter before the clerk of this court.

It is insisted on the appeal that the sale was improperly made after the execution of the supersedeas bond and the issual of the supersedeas. But it will be observed that Gosnell and Gast were the only parties named in the supersedeas bond or in the supersedeas. The surety in the bond was not liable to any one but Gosnell and Gast, and only Gosnell and Gast were required to suspend proceedings on the judgment. It is insisted that the judgment of sale was an entirety and that if it was suspended as to one of the parties, it was suspended as to all. We cannot concur in this conclusion, for if that were the rule then in any case where a debtor's property is ordered sold to satisfy several liens, all he has to do is to supersede the judgment as to the smallest lien and this will prevent a sale of the property, without imposing upon him or his surety any liability to the larger lien holders for the loss they may sustain by reason of the supersedeas. This is not the meaning of the statute. Under such a construction, if Gast's debt had been only $10, a supersedeas as to him would have suspended the judgment. The sale was not ordered on the petition of Gast; it was ordered on the cross-petition of the Trust Co. and the bank. The defendants, by executing the bond and obtaining the supersedeas as to Gosnell and Gast, superseded the judgment as to them and the effect of this was that no money could have been paid to them under the judgment as long as the supersedeas was in force; but it had no other effect.

By section 2834, Ky. Statutes, which is a part of the act under which the apportionment warrant was issued, it is provided that the defendant in the apportionment warrant, or any one claiming under him, may redeem the land within two years from the date of the order confirming the report of the sale; and that this shall be so expressed in the order confirming the report of the sale. The order confirming the report of sale in this case did not so provide, but the failure to so provide in that order would have no effect on the previous judgment. The defendant did not offer to redeem the property within two years, and the time for redemption is now passed. By section 989, Ky. Statutes, which is a part of the act governing the Jefferson Circuit Court, it is provided that in actions for the sale of real property, the court may determine summarily the amount of the state, district or municipal taxes or any assessment upon the property to be sold, and shall provide in the judgment for the payment of the same out of the purchase money; and if the plaintiff fail to ask therefor, the purchaser shall be entitled, at any time before the payment of the purchase price, to a credit for the amount thereof. The purpose of the statute is to protect the purchaser of the property. The bank and Trust Co., when brought into court, had a right to foreclose their mortgages and to have the property sold under the law governing such foreclosures. The court did not abuse a sound discretion in ordering the property sold upon the cross-petition of the bank and Trust Co. The defendant was not prejudiced by the form of the judgment, for under section 989, the court might summarily determine the amount due on the assessment and provide for the payment of it in the judgment. Appellant did not object to the order directing the property to be conveyed to the purchaser, or ask the court then to provide that he should have two years to redeem the property. He cannot, after thus allowing the case to proceed as it did in the circuit court, raise the question here for the first time, after the deed has been made and after the time of redemption has expired.

It is also insisted for appellant that the court erred in selling all the property and that it should have ordered a sale of only so much of his one-third of the property as was necessary. It is a sufficient answer to this to say that the defendant, after the sale had been made and confirmed, without objection, accepted the money coming to him from the sale. After accepting the proceeds of the sale of the surplus property, he cannot complain that the court ordered more property sold than should have been sold. (Brown v. VanCleave, 86 Ky., 381.) The money represented the property. He has the money, and, while retaining it, he can not complain that he ought also to have the property.

Lastly, it is insisted that the apportionment warrant is invalid for the reason that Shipp street extended will run across the lot and that the apportionment should not have crossed Shipp street. We have examined with care the proof taken to show this, but conclude that the proof is not sufficient to establish the fact. The map shows that Shipp street runs out to the railroad right of way, but there is nothing in the record to show that it crosses the right of way or that the land on the opposite side of the right of way, where the lot in controversy lies, was ever dedicated in any way as a street. There is nothing in the record to show that Shipp street should be extended across this lot or that it probably ever will be. It not appearing that the land has been dedicated as a street or that there is any necessity for the extension of Shipp street across this land, the circuit court properly sustained the apportionment, which was made in accordance with the rule repeatedly sanctioned by this court.

Judgment affirmed.

BLAND v. CUMBERLAND TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH CO.

(Filed April 29, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Telephones—Contract Between Two Companies—Pleading—The parties to this action entered into a five year contract providing for an interchange of business, and a controversy arising as to appellant's right under the contract, appellee cut off all connection before the termination of the contract. In this action against appellee for damages for the breach of the contract, appellee, in an amended answer, alleged that appellant had not obtained a franchise from Sonora, the place of its central station, as required by sections 163-164, of the Constitution. In its reply appellant admitted such failure, but averred that many of his subscribers were reached by lines that did not go over or upon any street in Sonora, and that most of his rural subscribers were of this class. It was error to sustain a demurrer to the reply. The contract was severable. There was an agreement to use such lines as the parties might from time to time set up.

2. Rule as to Construction of Contracts—The rule is elementary that contracts, though partly in violation of a statute, severable into parts, may be enforced as to the part that is good.

L. A. Faurest and S. M. Payton for appellant.

H. L. James and Wm. L. Granberry for appellee.

Appeal from Hardin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice O'Rear, reversing.

Appellant owned and was operating a rural telephone plant, the central station of which was at Sonora, a town of the sixth class, in Hardin county. Appellee operated a more extensive plant, with "exchanges" in a great number of towns and cities, including some other towns in Hardin county. The two entered into a five-year contract by which the former was to rent and install in its service certain instruments from the latter, and to provide for connecting with the latter's lines, so as to afford an interchange of business between the two. All messages originating and ending in Hardin county were to be transmitted free on whatever lines it passed over, so far as charges between the contracting parties were concerned. But all messages originating on appellant's lines destined beyond Hardin county were designated long distance service, for which appellant was to receive 15 per cent. of the tolls charged by appellee for those messages. Appellant had a number of subscribers in Sonora, and a considerable number in the country, known as farmer lines; he also had, or thereafter installed, certain pay stations in the country, that is, in Harlan county, but not in any city or town. A controversy arose between the parties as to appellant's right, under the contract, to have messages of his patrons, originating at these pay-stations, transmitted under the contract, over appellee's lines. Appellee construed that appellant had not such right, and cut off all connection between the two systems, some eighteen months before the termination of the contract period. This suit was brought by appellant against appellee to recover the damages resulting from its breach of the contract. The pleadings finally came down to the point where appellee, in an amended answer, alleged that appellant had not obtained a franchise from Sonora to operate telephone lines on its streets and alleys, as required by sections 163-164, Constitution, and was doing so in violation of the Constitution; that its action for damages was based upon the failure of appellee to continue the arrangement by which it was thus violating the law. In the reply appellant admitted his failure to obtain the franchise in the manner required by the Constitution, but averred that many of his subscribers, using his instruments, were reached by lines that did not go upon or over any public street or alley of Sonora, and that most or all of his rural subscribers were of this class. A demurrer was sustained to the reply, and the amended answer held to present a complete bar to plaintiff's cause of action.

It was held by this court in East Tennessee Tel. Co. v. Russellville, 21 Ky. Law Rep., 307, that a telephone company, taking possession of the streets of a city for the purpose of erecting its poles, without the consent of its legislative bodies, is a trespasser, and the presence of its poles and wires upon the streets a public nuisance. In East Tenn. Tel. Co. v. Anderson Co. Tel. Co., 22 Ky. Law Rep., 418, an ordinance granting a franchise to a telephone company that was not passed in accordance with the statutes, was held void and as conferring no rights. In Nicholasville Water Co. v. Board of Councilmen, 18 Ky. Law Rep., 592, it was held that the attempted grant of a water franchise by a city council, without its being exposed to sale as required by the Constitution, was void. In Merchants Police & Dis. Tel. Co. v. Citizens Tel. Co., 93 S. W., 642, the same principle was again announced and applied to telephone franchises. In Rough River Tel. Co. v. Cumberland Tel. & Telg. Co., 84 S. W., 517, one telephone company sued another to prevent its interference with the plaintiff's wires in a city wherein the plaintiff had not acquired a franchise as required by the Constitution. The court said:

"A mere trespasser can not complain that he is prevented from continuing his wrongful act. No injury is claimed to the corporeal property of the appellee. The sole injury is the prevention of the full exercise of its invalid claim of a franchise in the streets of a city. It follows, therefore, under the authorities cited, that, as it has no such franchise, it can have received no injury of which equity will take cognizance."

To the same effect in the more recent case of Rural Home Telephone Company v. Ky. & Ind. Tel. Co., decided February 20th, 1908.

The court expressly adheres to the principles announced in those cases. It is believed the provision of the Constitution involved is one of great importance to the people of the municipalities, and in any event, ought to be enforced by denying all benefit to those who ignore or attempt to get around it, by denying to such the relief that would indirectly serve their ends.

But it should be born well in mind, just what the franchise is that is the subject of sale, as required by the Constitution. It is not, as sometimes seems to be thought, the right to operate a telephone exchange in a city. That right is not one to be granted or denied by the municipality any more than it could grant or refuse a franchise to conduct a dry-goods store within the city. The franchise under discussion, is the permission to do something which the city has the right of control over—that is, the occupancy of some part of the public streets. This is made plain by section 163, of the Constitution, which reads:

“No street railway, gas, water, steam heating, telephone, or electric light company, within a city or town, shall be permitted or authorized to construct its tracks, lay its pipes or mains, or erect its poles, posts or other apparatus, along, over, under or across streets, alleys or public grounds of a city or town, without the consent of the proper legislative bodies or boards of such city or town being first obtained; but when charters have been heretofore granted conferring such rights, and work has in good faith been begun thereunder, the provisions of this section shall not apply.”

Section 164, of the same instrument, provides for the sale of the franchise or privilege treated or in the preceding section, and reads:

“No county, city, town, taxing district or other municipality shall be authorized or permitted to grant any franchise or privilege, or make any contract in reference thereto, for a term exceeding twenty years. Before granting such franchise or privilege for a term of years, such municipality shall first, after due advertisement, receive bids therefor publicly, and award the same to the highest and best bidder; but it shall have the right to reject any or all bids. This section shall not apply to a trunk railway.”

If it be true then that appellant's telephone business, though its central station was in the corporate limits of Sonora, was conducted in large or considerable part, without its going upon or across the public streets of the town, its presence there was not illegal, and its business was, for that matter, legitimate. It will not lie in appellee's mouth to say that its contract could be violated with impunity because a part of it, if executed, would involve appellant's continuing a public nuisance, if nevertheless, the remainder ought to have been executed. It did have the right to refuse messages that came over lines being operated by appellant, if any, in the forbidden zone of the streets of the town, and so far as the alleged damages sued for arose out of such violation, there can be no recovery in this action. But if there was damage resulting from the breach as to the other business of appellant, we perceive no reason, legal or moral, that denies its recovery.

Appellee contends that the contract is an entirety; that it was entered into upon the faith of appellee's belief that appellant was authorized to occupy the streets of Sonora with his poles and wires; and that it was the aggregate business of appellant that was in contemplation of the parties. The contract and the nature of the business alike refute this contention. We think this contract is severable. There was not an agreement to use certain lines, but such lines as the parties might, from time to time, during the term set up.

The very nature of the business contemplated the abandonment of any of the lines as conditions might make expedient to be done. Neither party had the right, under the contract, to say to the other, you must continue your line now, being used by A., so long as this contract endures. Just the opposite was contemplated. Each message was separate, and if a toll message, was accounted for separately. If appellee's subscriber A., in Elizabethtown, had called for connection with appellant's subscriber B., in Sonora, appellant could have refused to make the connection either because B. was in arrears, or because the law forbade the use of the line for the time; or appellant could have cut out the line entirely without any reason, so far as appellee was concerned. And these rights between them were reciprocal. The nature of the business shows, as does the written contract itself, that the parties might change or abandon some of its lines at will, and substitute others, without liability to the other contracting party on that account. The rule is elementary that contracts, though partly in violation of a statute or Constitution, if severable into parts, may be enforced as to the part that is good. (15 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 990.)

The demurrer to the reply should have been overruled.

Judgment reversed and remanded, for proceedings consistent herewith.

KENTUCKY JOURNAL PUBLISHING CO. v. GAINES.

(Filed May 6th, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Affidavit for Special Judge—Bias of Regular Judge—Facts Showing Bias—In an action against a party for a libel in accusing the plaintiff of forging a letter purporting to have been written by defendant, where the defendant filed an affidavit asking for a special judge to try the case, alleging that "the regular judge will not afford him a fair trial, because he had a political bias and enmity towards him, and that he had openly asserted his belief in the genuineness of the signature of the defendant to the letter in question and that said judge had been in frequent communication with the plaintiff concerning the publication of said letter in a newspaper under the control of plaintiff," the affidavit thoroughly disqualified the regular judge from presiding at the trial.

2. Same—Explanation of Judge—Admissions—Canvassing Question to be Tried—No judge should preside over a trial where the evidence requires so elaborate an explanation of his relations to the subject-matter of the litigation as that given by the trial judge in this case which shows conferences with the plaintiff concerning the letter, the genuineness of which was involved in the litigation before him, and where he had to some extent at least, canvassed its value as a political asset in a heated campaign in which he was deeply interested.

3. Political Bias—Effect—Political bias, amounting to personal hostility, is an arch enemy to an impartial trial, and its presence undermines and weakens the foundations of the temple of justice, and it is no answer to say that the record, as a matter of fact, does not show, on the trial, any subsequently occurring error on the trial prejudicial to the party complaining.

Lewis McQuown and Jas. Andrew Scott for appellant.

John W. Ray and Geo. A. Williams for appellee.

Appeal from Anderson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker, reversing.

The appellee, Noel Gaines, instituted this action in the Anderson Circuit Court against appellant, Kentucky Journal Publishing Company, to recover damages for an alleged libelous publication concerning him, which, in part, is as follows:

"Gaines confesses he is a thief. Endeavor to bolster up defense of his forged letter sinks him deeper in mire. Produces another forgery while you wait.

"Under the headlines: 'Makes Manly Statement and Shows Honorable Possession of the Letter,' a local afternoon paper yesterday printed Noel Gaines' version of how he secured the letter which General Percy Haly has pronounced a base forgery, and taking his own statement it shows acts which are anything but honorable, and which are convincing that the man who would stoop so low as to secure a letter or paper in the way in which he acknowledged in his statement could be guilty of what the former Adjutant General charges.

"In the same publication in this afternoon paper, Gaines prints another letter which he says General Haly gave him, and which General Haly declares to be a second forgery. This second letter, which is printed for the purpose of bolstering up the Crusader in his false charges, is one of recommendation with a date line at its head giving a time at which the alleged writer can prove, if necessary, by a good many local men of standing, that he was hardly on speaking terms with Gaines because of what he considered attempts at blackmail to secure the appointment as Adjutant General of the State."

The defendant, before answering, made a motion that the regular judge vacate the bench and allow a special judge to preside, and, in support of this motion, filed the following affidavit:

"The affiant, the Kentucky Journal Publishing Company, by W. P. Walton, president of said company, says that the judge of this court can not properly preside in this action, because he will not afford said company a fair and impartial trial, as he verily believes, for the following reasons, to-wit:

"1st. The said judge of this court is politically antagonistic to this defendant, and has political bias and enmity towards said company, and because—

"2nd. The judge of this court has openly stated his belief in the genuineness of the signature of Percy Haly to the letter purporting to have been written by Haly to Judge Lassing, and referred to in the alleged libel herein.

"3rd. Because the judge of this court was in frequent communication and conference with the plaintiff, Noel Gaines, concerning the publication of said letter in the Crusader, a paper published by said plaintiff, out of which the alleged libelous publication herein grew.

"4th. This defendant says that the alleged libelous publication, and this suit, grew out of and were the direct result of the political campaign which has just ended between Gov. J. C. W. Beckham, upon the one side, and Senator J. B. McCreary, upon the other, for the United States Senatorship, and that said campaign was waged with great bitterness upon both sides, and to such an extent that the judge of this court felt called upon to go, and did go, on the stump and make speeches for said McCreary and against said Beckham, in which he attacked said Beckham personally, together with his administration of the State's affairs, and that in said campaign this defendant was the friend and partisan of said Beckham and his administration, and it therefore says that the judge of this court, by his action as aforesaid, has become so embittered against this defendant that in fairness to himself, he ought not to preside in this case, and can not do so in such an impartial manner as to afford this defendant a fair and impartial trial of this cause."

The court overruled the motion that he should vacate the bench, and presided at the trial, which resulted in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of two thousand dollars.

The only ground relied upon for reversal of the judgment based upon the verdict of the jury is the refusal of the regular judge to vacate the bench.

So much of section 968, of the Kentucky Statutes, as is applicable to the subject in hand, is as follows:

"When, from any cause, the judge of the circuit court fails to attend, or being in attendance can not properly preside in an action, proceeding or prosecution pending in said court, or if either party shall file with the clerk of the court his affidavit that the judge will not afford him a fair and impartial trial, or will not impartially decide an application for a change of venue, the parties, by agreement, may elect one of the attorneys of the court to preside on the trial or hear the application, or hold the court for the occasion."

* * *

The affidavit filed by the defendant in the court below, seems to us to fully measure up to the requirements of German Insurance Company v. Landram, 88 Ky., 433, which is the leading case upon the principle that, under the statute, it is necessary to state in the affidavit the facts from which the deduction is drawn, that the trial judge will not afford the litigant a fair and impartial trial. The affidavit not only states that the judge had a political bias and enmity toward the defendant, but that he had openly asserted his belief in the genuineness of the signature of Percy Haly to the letter, which was the crucial question in the libel suit; that the judge had been in frequent communication with the plaintiff concerning the publication of the letter in the Crusader, a newspaper under the control and management of the plaintiff. It further shows that the alleged libelous publication, and the suit concerning it, grew out of and was the direct result of a bitter political campaign which had just been waged between Governor Beckhan, on the one side, and Senator McCreary, on the other, for the office of United States Senator for Kentucky. We are of opinion that the statements in this affidavit thoroughly disqualified the regular judge from presiding in the trial of the case. We do not mean to say that, in our opinion, these statements are true; for their truth can not be inquired into in this action. All that the statute, as construed by this court in German Insurance Company v. Landram, supra, requires, is that the affidavit should allege such facts, which, if true, show that the trial judge will not, or may not, afford the litigant a fair and impartial trial of his case. Manifestly, if the trial judge had openly expressed an opinion of the genuineness of the letter, which was the real question in the litigation, and if he had been, as charged, in communication with the plaintiff concerning its publication in a newspaper, there can be no doubt that the judicial mind was not in that state of impartial equipoise between the litigants which is required to afford a fair and impartial trial.

It is no answer to say that the record, as a matter of fact, does not show any subsequently occurring error prejudicial to the interest of the party complaining. This may be because the litigant has chosen to rest his right to a reversal alone upon the error of the court in refusing to vacate the bench; or because counsel for the litigant may not have been as watchful over the interest of his client as he should have been, or that the prejudicial acts upon the part of the court were not detected by the vigilance of counsel. In answer to the same proposition—that the record showed no ground for complaint of the judge's rulings—this court, in the case of Masle v. Commonwealth, 93 Ky., 588, said:

"But that is not the question; for the accused has the right to be tried by a judge that is fair and impartial, and when he has good reason to believe, supported by facts, that he will not afford him such trial, he should not be compelled to take chances of a trial before that judge in order that the truth of the matter may be developed, which may never be developed, because there are many ways that a partial or prejudiced judge may knife a party that he is trying without it appearing from the record or without his being able to ascertain the fact. So, when the fact is made to appear, by proper affidavits, the judge should then vacate, and it is a reversible error if he does not."

In the case of Givens v. Crawshaw, 21 Ky. Law Rep., 1618, the affidavit was to the effect that the regular judge, M. J. Moss, was personally hostile to the litigant, because he had voted against the judge in his election, and had said that "all those parties who opposed him and kicked out of the harness in the election, that he would make them have a hard road to travel." This affidavit was held to be sufficient, under the statute, to require the regular judge to vacate the bench, and the judgment was reversed alone for this error.

In the opinion, it was said:

"It is part of the current history of the day that severe antagonisms often occur between bolters and regulars, and that, too, without any desire or intention upon the part of either to wrong the other. It seems to us, that under all circumstances, that the trial judge should have vacated the bench and permitted the selection of another judge. The final judgment rendered in this case is erroneous."

In the case of Powers v. Commonwealth, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 1007, it was held that an affidavit which showed political antagonism and bias on the part of the judge toward the litigant, was sufficient to require the judge to vacate the bench. The opinion reviews all of the adjudications of this court upon the subject in hand, and it was there said:

"With the wisdom of the enactment of such a statute, we have nothing to do; that is a question solely within the province of the law-making body of government. Nor can the fact that some litigants abuse this privilege of the statute and do so to the great injustice of the trial judges, and the adverse party, influence a fair interpretation of the law as it is. Many statutes are abused, but we never feel justified in declaring that they are inoperative because of that fact. The Legislature doubtless saw, and in the experience of the many years that this law had been upon the statute books of this Commonwealth may have been confirmed in the belief, that it was necessary to the just protection of the rights of litigants, and to an absolutely fair and impartial administration of justice through the courts, that such statute should be in existence, that such a right should be available to the litigant, where the facts justified its employment.

"From this statute, and the decisions quoted from, the law may be gathered to be, if a litigant files his affidavit, stating that the judge will not give him a fair and impartial trial, and states therein the basis of such belief, and if the facts so stated are such as would prevent an official of personal integrity from presiding in the case, or as would prevent him affording a fair and impartial trial, then the truth of the statement of the facts as set out in the affidavit must be assumed, for it can not be traversed or tried."

There is nothing in the opinion in Hargis, &c. v. Marcum, &c., 31 Ky. Law Rep., 795, which militates against the principle contained in the above cited cases. After analyzing the affidavit, and showing that it did not state facts which entitled the litigant to require the judge to vacate the bench, it is said:

"If the affidavit had disclosed facts showing hostility on the part of the judge to Hargis as to the matter on trial, or expressions by the judge of opinion as to the merits of the case, or conduct negating impartiality on his part, or tending to do so, a different question would be presented."

During the progress of the trial, the evidence was such that the judge thought it due him to make an explanation of his connection with Noel Gaines and the subject-matter of the alleged libelous articles involved in the litigation, and by consent of counsel he made a statement, which, in justice to him, we incorporate in full. It is as follows:

"Gentlemen of the jury, since my name has been connected with this affair, I think it is due myself, and due the position that I occupy, and by the consent of counsel, to state to the jury my connection with that matter.

"I wouldn't attempt to give the dates at all. It was sometime between the first of July and the first of September, I am only able to fix that from the fact that it was during the summer vacation of the courts in this district, which occurred between these dates, I was over in Eminence, on Saturday afternoon, at a gathering of the farmers where they were organizing the American Society of Equity, I went there for the purpose of addressing them, and while at the Fair Ground, the Old Eminence Fair Ground, where the meeting was held, I was called to the long distance telephone, and Colonel Gaines was at Frankfort and talked to me over the phone, and wanted to make an engagement with me to meet me concerning a matter as he thought of considerable political importance, saying that he had had some interview with Senator McCreary in respect thereto, and that probably he had been referred to me. We made no definite engagement at all. I said to him that I might be at home the following Monday and might not. On the following Monday, however, I was in the office of Mr. Holland, the official stenographer of this district, in whose office I stay a great deal, and really call it my office, but it is his office, and Mr. Gaines came in when there was no one there but myself. We shook hands and he opened up the conversation concerning the letter and telegrams which has been referred to. I said nothing to him at all except probably a short answer or a question or two, and probably he talked for some ten or fifteen minutes, when Mr. Holland came in, Mr. Holland, the official stenographer. I introduced them and told Mr. Gaines to go on, and further told him Mr. Holland's position, and after some further talk on the part of Mr. Gaines, probably some questions on my part, he produced what I now recognize to have been a copy of the letter that was introduced as the Haly-Lassing letter, and also produced what I now recognize to be a copy of the telegram sent by Colonel Gaines to Governor Beckham, as introduced in evidence here. I said to him then, 'I really don't care to talk to you Colonel Gaines, about this matter. I have very grave doubts about my propriety of discussing the matter with you. I have no authority from Senator McCreary, or General Hays, to represent them in their campaign, and while I am a very strong supporter of each, I am not representing them, but if you are here this evening, I have two or three friends of mine I would like for you to talk to, talk to them in my presence.' It was arranged for three of half after three that afternoon at the office. I went out to my dinner, and telephoned to Charlie Lewis to come around, and concluded to telephone to Mr. Holland to bring Colonel Gaines out to my house. There, in the presence of Mr. Holland, Mr. C. M. Lewis, and Mr. Will Scott, I don't now recall whether any one else was present or not, Colonel Gaines talked about the matter at some length, and questions were asked by each one present concerning it, and we each advised, each one of us, that it was a matter of very serious importance, that if the letter was not genuine it was calculated to cause a great deal of trouble to him, and if it was genuine it might cause some trouble in the State, and we were not representatives of either of the candidates for leading offices in the primary, and that we couldn't handle the matter, and then again that we did not have the original of what purported to be the letter. I asked Colonel Gaines, myself, probably I used the slang phrase, what's your game, or something of that kind, and he said his purpose was to write an article and publish these matters in his paper, called the Crusader, and that if he did he thought it would be very valuable campaign matter, and he wanted an order for, I think, 25,000 copies of the September issue, and 25,000 of the October issue, and I don't now recall the price, but think it was $2,000 maybe more, I don't remember, and we again informed him that we had no authority in the matter from either of them, and that we couldn't take it up, and we told him we had not seen the original, and we were not fully advised, and he said he could show the original any time at Frankfort, and I think I made the remark, that I would be in Louisville the following day, or Wednesday, that being Monday, and if he was there and had the original, I would look at it. I went to Louisville on the day in question, and met Colonel Gaines at the Old Inn, at Sixth and Main, and shook hands with him, and there was no one there just at that time that I recognized, and I made an arrangement to meet him at Senator Carroll's office some hour later in the day, and I met him there and asked him concerning the original, and he said he didn't have it with him, and I said 'Very well, I don't care to handle it,' and I said 'That ends the matter,' and that is, in substance, the entire transaction."

No judge should preside over a trial where the evidence requires so elaborate an explanation of his relations to the subject matter of the litigation as that given by the trial judge in this case. This explanation shows conferences with the plaintiff concerning the letter, the genuineness of which was involved in the litigation before him, and the fact that he had, to some extent at least, canvassed its value as a political asset in a heated campaign in which he was deeply interested. It is but the utterance of a legal platitude to say that it is of the utmost importance that every man should have a fair and impartial trial of his case, and that to secure this great boon, two things are absolutely essential—an impartial jury and an unbiased judge. But we go further, and say that it is also important that every man should know that he has had a fair and impartial trial; or, at least, that he should have no just ground for the suspicion that he has not had such a trial. Political bias (amounting to personal hostility) is an arch enemy to an impartial trial, and its presence undermines and weakens the foundations of the temple of justice. When this insidious evil holds absolute dominion, a judicial investigation instead of being a fountain in which justice sees only its own fair reflection, sinks into a mere mockery of justice, "a cistern for foul toads to knot and gender in." Amid the bitter spume of an excited political campaign, the cause of the litigation about to be tried was engendered, and the judge was too closely identified with the opposing side of that conflict to be competent, under the statute, to sit in judgment on the legal rights of the defendant. We are not to be understood as reflecting on the integrity or character of the learned judge whose ruling we are reviewing. We think he was led into an error of judgment none the less hurtful because it was unconsciously committed.

The judgment is reversed for a new trial.

Whole court sitting, except Judge Lassing.

FAIRBANKS, MORSE & CO. v. GUILFOYLE, &c.

(Filed April 30, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Contracts—Construction of—Evidence—This action grows out of the sale of an interest in a patent to appellant, appellees insisting that the contract guarantees a minimum of royalties, but an examination of the contract shows that while it was contemplated that the business should yield a royalty of $200 a year, that amount was not agreed upon at all hazards. Therefore, it was error to instruct the jury peremptorily to find for appellees the balance necessary to make up that amount. Neither was the contract so ambiguous as to admit of extraneous evidence to explain it.

Thatcher, Clifford & Steinfeld for appellants.

Sidney Smith and Helm Bruce for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas Branch, Third Division.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice O'Rear, reversing.

Appellee Finn was the patentee of a track-leveler, a device for leveling railroad tracks. He assigned a half interest in the patent to appellee Guilfoyle. They contracted with appellant to manufacture and sell the patented article upon a royalty. This suit involves the construction of the contract. It arises upon an alleged breach of the contract by appellant. Appellees' contention is, that the contract guarantees a minimum of royalties of $200 a year, whilst appellant insists that it agreed to pay as royalties only $1 a set for the instruments actually sold (except that it was to pay 50 cents per set for those sold the Illinois Central R. R. Co.), but that appellees had the right, under the contract, to terminate it at any time upon notice if the annual royalties were not as much as $200, unless appellant thereupon paid enough in addition to the actual royalties due to make $200 a year for each year the contract had run. The contract is in these words:

"This memorandum of agreement made this sixteenth day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and four, between John Finn and Edward A. Guilfoyle, parties of the first part, and Fairbanks, Morse & Co., a corporation, party of the second part,

"Witnesseth: In consideration of the payment of the royalties herein provided for, the parties of the first part assign, transfer, and give to the party of the second part, the exclusive right to manufacture and sell track levelers in the United States, covered by Letters Patent No. 750,353, dated January 26, 1904, including any improvements or new devices which said second party shall make or suggest pertaining to said track levelers, during the life of the patent aforesaid, and during any renewal, extension or continuation thereof, so long as this agreement shall remain in force, not, however, to extend beyond the life of said original patent. Parties of the first part guarantee that they are the sole and exclusive owners of said patent and have the right to make this license. That said patent is a valid one, and that they will defend the party of the second part, its agents, attorneys and employes and purchasers, from all infringements thereon, when notified so to do, and that they will, at their own expense, defend and protect party of the second part from all suit or suits, damages, attorneys' fees, court costs, and other expenses which it may incur or become liable for in the defense of any suit or suits brought against it, or its agents or vendees, on account of any alleged infringement of any other patent, by the use of the patent aforesaid, or any improvement or addition thereto, made or authorized by parties of the first part.

"Party of the second part agrees, in consideration of the above license and guarantee, to pay to parties of the first part or their assigns, a royalty of one dollar ($1) a set on each set of track levelers, manufactured under the said patent aforesaid, sold and paid for, one-half of such amount to be paid to John Finn and the remaining one-half to Edward A. Guilfoyle, the payment to be made quarterly, on the first day of June, October, January and April of each year, for track levelers sold during the previous quarter: Provided, however, That it is agreed between the parties that fifty per cent. (50) per cent.) only of the above royalties shall be charged on track levelers sold to the Illinois Central Railroad Co., and that party of the second part will, in addition to the reduction on account of royalty, make a corresponding reduction in price on track levelers sold to the Illinois Central Railroad Co., of at least ten per cent. (10 per cent.) better than the price made to any other railroad company.

"It is agreed between the parties hereto that the annual royalties to be paid to the parties of the first part under this license should average two hundred ($200), and if the royalties for any year, together with the royalties paid on previous years, shall not equal two hundred dollars ($200) a year from the time this contract has run, that then, and in that case, the parties of the first part shall have the right within sixty (60) days from the expiration of any year when the total royalties paid per annum shall not average two hundred dollars ($200) a year to terminate this contract unless the party of the second part shall, within said sixty (60) days, pay the said parties of the first part a sufficient sum to make the amount of royalties paid average two hundred dollars ($200) per year for the time the contract has been in existence, meaning and intending that if, for illustration, during the first two years of existence of this contract parties of the second part should pay as royalties four hundred dollars ($400) a year, that the contract would continue, for two additional years without any additional payment, or if, at the end of the first year, parties of the second part had only paid one hundred dollars ($100) royalty, then they must either pay enough additional to make the annual royalty two hundred dollars ($200) or submit to a cancellation of this contract at the option of parties of the first part; but nothing herein shall limit the amount of royalty of one dollar ($1) per set on the amount actually sold as hereinbefore provided; and, in the event of cancellation of this contract for any cause, the party of the second part shall always be liable for royalties on track levelers actually sold and paid for preceding the annulment of this contract. And party of the second part agrees that it will push the sale of said track levelers in the usual manner.

"It is also agreed between the parties that if the party of the second part shall undertake to manufacture and sell any other track levelers, to the detriment of the track leveler covered by said letters patent, that parties of the first part shall have the right to cancel this contract by giving sixty (60) days' notice of its intention so to do.

"It is agreed that this contract shall be a substitute and shall stand in the place of all contracts heretofore made or claimed to have been made by the parties hereto.

"Witness," &c.

There is no serious controversy arising upon the contract except as to the construction of that paragraph relating to the $200 of royalties to be paid annually. Nowhere in the instrument does appellant agree to pay $200 or other specific sum as the minimum of annual royalties. They contemplated that the business "should" realize $200 a year to appellee; but appellant did not agree to pay that amount at all hazards. It was stipulated though, that, in event the minimum of annual royalties should not realize $200, that appellees had the option to recede from the agreement, unless appellant should thereupon make up the sum of $200 as royalties for the year. And this is the sum of the agreement as we construe it. There was evidence introduced as to negotiations preceding the contract; but the court is of opinion that its terms were not so ambiguous as to admit of extraneous evidence to explain it. Nor was it attacked by either party as failing to be a true memorial of their agreement. In that aspect of the case, as the pleadings stand, we think the evidence mentioned was not relevant.

Appellant did assert a counterclaim based upon alleged fraud of appellee in the procurement of the contract—but not in its execution. The evidence wholly failed to sustain this claim. The representations complained of were mere puffing talk of the seller, mainly expressions of opinion in the nature of predictions as to what could be done in the market with the appliance. The court properly instructed the jury to find for appellees in that behalf. But it was error to instruct the jury peremptorily to find for appellees the balance necessary to make up the annual royalty for the year in suit to $200.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, for a new trial.

SKAGGS v. SIMPSON.

(Filed May 6, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Contracts—Not to Engage in Business—Construction of Such Contracts—Contracts in partial restraint of trade have been frequently upheld by this court; and a contract not to engage in business, for three years is a valid and enforceable contract.

2. Same—The delivery of the check and the execution of the writing were a part of the same transaction, and while, by the terms of the writing, S. only obligated himself not to engage in business in the city of Murray, yet from the circumstances it is manifest that it was the intention of both parties that S. should not engage in business in Murray or its vicinity, and his attempt to establish an opposition business just outside of the city limits was a violation of the spirit of the contract, and an injunction will properly lie to restrain him from so doing.

Jos. R. Grogan and A. D. Thompson for appellant.

J. H. Coleman and Rainey T. Wells for appellee.

Appeal from Calloway Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, reversing.

Skaggs and Simpson were each engaged in the marble and tombstone business in Murray, a city with a population of about three thousand. Skaggs desired to buy out the business of Simpson and negotiations looking to this end were conducted with Simpson by Boyce, acting on behalf of Skaggs. In the event the trade was consummated, Skaggs desired to obligate Simpson not to engage in business in opposition to him. After the negotiations had been pending some days, it was finally agreed that Simpson would sell for $1,425, and on February 14, 1906, he was paid this amount in cash by Skaggs. The weight of the evidence is that the stock of goods purchased by and delivered to Skaggs was not worth exceeding $800, and that the consideration for the remainder of the purchase price was the good will of Simpson, and the understanding and agreement that he would not again enter into business in competition with, or opposition to Skaggs. At the time the trade was closed, no person was present except Boyce and Simpson. Concerning what took place, Boyce testified that, while the negotiations were pending, it was understood between them that if Skaggs paid the price demanded, Simpson was not to engage in business in opposition to him; and that when he handed Simpson the check, he said to him, "here's the check; now let me have that writing that you won't go into business against us, according to our agreement;" Simpson replied: "I won't sign anything; I won't sign my rights away;" that he then reached for and got the check, telling Simpson that if he did not enter into the contract the trade would not be closed. That Simpson then said to him "I will sign it, as I don't intend to open up again; if I did, I wouldn't sell out; write what you want me to sign." That he told him he could not write it, and asked him, Simpson, to do it; that Simpson then asked for what length of time he wanted to bind him not to engage in business, and he said "five years," but Simpson would not agree to make it over three years, and then wrote, signed and delivered to Boyce the following contract: "This is to certify that I will not open up a marble shop in the city of Murray in three years."

Boyce further testified that "there was nothing said in particular about the place, but it was understood that he was not to open up again in opposition to us here at Murray; nothing was ever said about Murray, except what Simpson wrote in the statement I have mentioned; we never talked about the city of Murray, or city limits; nor was anything said about Simpson's right to open a shop about the city of Murray or outside the city limits;" and that he thought the writing contained the agreement. Simpson does not deny that he signed the writing, but testified, in substance, that nothing was said during the negotiations about his not re-entering the marble business in opposition to Skaggs, but that after the trade was made, and the check delivered, Boyce asked him to give him a contract that he would not again enter the marble business, and he gave him the writing; but it was not a part of the trade, or mentioned until the trade was closed, and that the property he delivered to Skaggs was worth the purchase price. Forrest, a witness for Simpson, said that he heard Simpson say that "he did agree, as a part of the trade, not to open a marble shop in opposition to Skaggs, but could do it, and was going to do so, as there had been so much said and done about it; that he (Simpson) had the $1,425, and Skaggs had his old stuff, and he (Simpson) was going to put in a new stock and continue in the business."

Other witnesses testified in substance that Boyce said he made a mistake in not having the contract specify that Simpson was not to open up in opposition to Skaggs, and that he did not ask Simpson to give him the written contract until after the trade was closed and the check delivered.

The delivery of the check, and the execution of the writing were a part of the same transaction, both acts being done at the same time and place, and although a few moments may have intervened between them, it is clear that the writing, as well as the check, was a part of the contract, and they must be so treated. It is admitted that in May, 1906, Simpson established a marble yard and tombstone business about 150 feet outside of the city limits, and was conducting it in opposition to Skaggs when this action was brought by Skaggs to enjoin Simpson from engaging in business in opposition to him, and to recover damages for his breach of the contract. The lower court refused to grant an injunction, and submitted the question of damages to a jury, who returned a verdict in favor of Simpson, thereupon the petition of Skaggs was dismissed, and he appeals.

Contracts in partial restraint of trade have been frequently upheld by this court; and a contract not to engage in a business, such as the one under consideration, for three years, is a valid and enforceable contract. (Pike v. Thomas, 4 Bibb., 486; Sutton v. Head, 86 Ky., 156; Grundy v. Edwards, 7 J. J. Mar., 368; Turner v. Johnson, 7 Dana, 435; Western District Warehouse Co. v. Hobson, 16 Ky. Law Rep., 869; Davis v. Brown, 17 Ky. Law Rep., 1428; Clemons v. Meadows, 29 Ky. Law Rep., 610.) The only serious question in this case is, whether or not the rights of the parties are to be determined and fixed by the strict letter of the writing. By its terms Simpson only obligated himself not to engage in business in the city of Murray; that he violated the spirit and intention of the writing when he went outside the city limits 150 feet and set up in business, is not open to doubt. He insists, however, that his rights must be adjudged by the very words of the contract, and that Skaggs must be left without redress because he had not violated the letter of the writing. In this view of the transaction we can not concur. In the construction of contracts, although the evidence may not be sufficient to show fraud or mistake, it is well settled that they must be read and construed in the light of the intention of the parties at the time the contract is entered into, if this can be done without doing violence to the writing. And to arrive at the intention of the parties it is competent to look to the conduct, conversation, situation and circumstances surrounding the parties. (Page on Contracts, section 1123; Crane v. Williamson, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 689; Thompson v. Thompson, 2 B. Mon., 161; Montgomery v. Firemen's Ins. Co., 16 T. B. Mon., 427; Marshall v. Piles, 3 Bush, 249; Railroad Co. v. Ormsby, 7 Dana, 276; Hildrith v. Forrest, 4 J. J. Mar., 217.) Considering this contract from this standpoint, it is manifest that it was the intention of both the parties to it, and an essential part of the consideration for the purchase, that Simpson should not engage in business in Murray or its vicinity, or in territory where he would come directly into competition with Skaggs for the term of three years. This does not mean that Simpson may not, at other places, establish himself in business, but only that he must not do so in the territory in which it may be presumed he would come into direct opposition with Skaggs, or in the territory in which he had been doing the business that he sold.

We, therefore, conclude that Skaggs was entitled to an injunction restraining Simpson from conducting his establishment.

The question of damages the court may submit to the jury; and as the execution of the writing is admitted, and we have determined, as a matter of law, that it was a part of the contract, the only question to be considered by the jury is the amount of damages to which Skaggs is entitled.

Wherefore, the judgment of the lower court is reversed, with directions for a new trial in conformity with this opinion.

SUPREME LODGE KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS v. BRADLEY.

Filed May 7, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Thornton & Kerr for appellant.

Pendleton, Bush & Bush and C. F. Spencer for appellee.

Appeal from Powell Circuit Court.

Response by Judge Settle modifying and extending opinion.

Appellee has filed a petition for a re-hearing in this case in which he asks that the opinion herein, reversing the judgment of the circuit court, be withdrawn and another written affirming the judgment in question. The appellant has also filed a petition asking a modification of the opinion.

In the petition for re-hearing appellee complains that the opinion rests the reversal of the judgment of the circuit court upon error in the instructions given by that court, when in fact appellant did not object to the instructions or enter of record exceptions thereto. A re-examination of the record convinces us that this complaint is well founded; for it fails to show that appellant interposed any objection to the instructions, or that it excepted to the action of the court in giving them. We do not recall that our attention was directed by the briefs of counsel to the silence of the record in this particular, and in the first reading of the record it was inadvertently overlooked. The custom of counsel to object and except on the record to the giving of instructions, though often a matter of mere form, being well known to the court, doubtless occasioned the assumption that the usual course had been followed in this case. Be this as it may, in view of the failure of the record to show the necessary exceptions, it is manifest that the judgment appealed from should not have been reversed on account of error in the instructions, although they were defective and prejudicial to appellant, as stated in the opinion.

But while the reversal can not be made to rest upon error in the instructions, a second reading of the record has led us to the conclusion that it should stand upon the ground urged by appellant in its petition for a modification of the opinion, viz: Error of the trial court in excluding from the consideration of the jury the written application of the insured for the insurance granted upon his life by appellant, and the proofs of his death furnished the latter by appellee; both of which were offered in evidence by appellant on the trial. The application, which bears date April 12, 1905, contains the following provisions: "It is agreed by myself, and binding upon all parties who may hereafter become interested, that if any statement in this application, or to the medical examiner, or in any certificate of health that may be hereafter given, or in the proofs of loss or death, by which any certificate of membership issued hereon matures, is untrue, or if there shall be any failure or neglect to pay any assessments, monthly payments or dues as prescribed by the rank or order, or severing in any manner my membership or connection with the order or the endowment rank, said certificate shall be null and void, and all right, title and interest in and to the same, as well as the rights of my heirs and beneficiaries and privileges accruing to members in good standing of this risk, shall be forfeited; and I hereby, for myself, my heirs, assigns, representatives and beneficiaries, expressly waive any and all provisions of law, now or hereafter in force, prohibiting or excusing any physician heretofore or hereafter attending me, professionally or otherwise, from disclosing or testifying to any information acquired thereby, or making such physician incompetent as a witness; and hereby consent that any such physician may testify to and disclose any information so derived or received in any suit or proceeding wherein the same may be material."

As in part said in the opinion, the insured, Kinney Bradley, stated and represented in this application when it was made that he was then in good health, and had not consulted a physician within five years next before the date of the application; that none of his sisters had ever had consumption; that he himself had never been afflicted with that disease, or with any disease of the heart, throat or lungs, or with any disease of the genital or urinary organs.

It must be assumed that appellant, in granting the insurance to Bradley, relied upon the statements and representations contained in the application. It is also evident that appellant received and accepted the application, for a copy of it was attached to and remained a part of the certificate of insurance issued and delivered to the insured, and appellee, the beneficiary named in the certificate, filed that instrument and attached application with the petition, and made them parts thereof.

After the death of the insured, which occurred December 24, 1905, appellee, as required by the application and certificate in question, furnished appellant with the proofs of his death. These proofs were made up of the certificate of Dr. J. W. Williams, the attending physician, as to the fact and cause of the insured's death, and of that of the officiating undertaker; both being signed and sworn to.

The certificate of Dr. Williams contradicted many of the material representations contained in the insured's application for insurance, as it showed that Williams had been the medical adviser of the insured for eighteen months prior to his death; that he had treated him for cystitis in May, 1904, nearly a year before the representations contained in the application for insurance were made, which treatment continued until September, 1904; that tuberculosis caused his death, of which disease he had suffered for at least a year before his death; that insured, before his last illness, had been treated by Dr. Brown, of Winchester, and during his last illness was attended by Drs. Littlepage and Smith, of Clay City; that a sister of insured had died with tuberculosis. Under a proper ruling of the court below the appellant assumed the burden of proof and when, during the trial, it offered to introduce in evidence the proofs of death and original application, a copy of which attached to the certificate of insurance appellee had already filed as an exhibit with his petition, the court refused to allow either the proofs of loss or application to be read to the jury. The purpose of their introduction was to establish the alleged false and fraudulent character of the representations made in the application for insurance. It is true, other evidence of like import was furnished on the trial by the testimony of Dr. Brown and others, and that there was only slight testimony to support appellee's right to recover, but the additional evidence that appellant would have secured from the application and proofs of death, would perhaps have had such preponderating effect upon the minds of the jury as to remove all doubts, and influence them to return a verdict for appellant.

The application and proofs of loss were clearly competent as evidence. In Hunziker v. Supreme Lodge, Knights of Pythias, 117 Ky., 418; Golden Cross v. Hughes, 114 Ky., 175, and Mooney v. A. O. U. W., 114 Ky., 950, it was held that section 679, Kentucky Statutes, requiring application for insurance to be attached to the certificate or policy to make it competent as evidence applies to a certificate like the one under consideration, and though by an act of March 24, 1906, so much of section 679 as applies to companies like appellant was repealed, still at the time the application in this case was made by the insured the section in question did apply to appellant; however, in this case the provision of the statute was complied with, for a copy of the application was attached to the certificate of insurance and delivered to the insured.

The competency of the proofs of loss was also free from doubt. In Bacon's Benefit Societies and Life Insurance, 2 volume, section 47, it is said: "The modern rule probably is that the proofs of loss furnished by the assured are not only evidence that the condition of the policy requiring them had been complied with, but are also to be regarded as admissions and prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated." (3 Elliott on Evidence, sections 2387, 2389; 2 Wigmore on Evidence, section 1073; Conn. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Siegel, 9 Bush, 451.)

In Prudential Insurance Co. of America v. Breustle's Adm'r, 19 Ky. Law Rep., 305, the administrator of the insured furnished the insurer proofs of death, as required by the policy, and these showed that the deceased had come to his death by his own hand and act. By the express terms of the policy such act precluded a recovery. On the trial the insurance company read in evidence to the jury the proofs of death and rested. The court said in its opinion: "On the trial the court put the burden on the defendant, and the only proof offered by it was the written proof of death, furnished the company by the administrator, which consisted of the certificate of the brother, accompanied by the coroner's verdict, and which showed that the death of the insured had been caused by his own hand and act. The court then instructed the jury to find for the plaintiff the amount sued for. This was error. The company had the right to refuse payment of the policy on the proof of death furnished it without inquiry as to whether the deceased in fact came to his death by his own hand or not, if the proof so furnished showed such cause of death; and no recovery could be had in the face of such proof without some satisfactory explanation of it, or until such proof and accompanying exhibits were withdrawn."

In Buffalo Loan Co. v. Aid Ass'n, 126 N. Y., 450, we find this statement of the law: "Where a physician's certificate of death of the insured, in which a cause of death is stated, which would, if true, vitiate the policy, is furnished to the insurer as part of the proof of death, although no cause of death was required to be stated, such certificate, though not admissible as original evidence of the cause of death, is admissible as an admission of the plaintiff of an action against the insurer to recover on the policy, and its reception in evidence does not violate a statutory provision prohibiting a physician from disclosing any necessary information acquired by him in a professional capacity."

So much of the opinion as reversed the judgment of the lower court for error in the instructions is withdrawn, and this extension of opinion is given in lieu thereof. Upon retrial of the case, if appellant objects to the instructions as given on the first trial, the trial judge should so frame them as to make them conform to the view of the law as expressed in the opinion.

Wherefore, the opinion is modified and extended as herein indicated.

TRUMBO'S ADM'X v. GAINES & CO.

(Filed May 8, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Master and Servant—Action for Negligent Death of Servant—Verdict for Defendant—Affirmed on the Evidence—This is an action for damages for causing the death of an employe in the operation of an elevator in a distillery building in which the jury found for the defendant and is affirmed on the evidence, the court holding that the appellant's whole contention was fairly submitted to the jury whose province was to determine the disputed facts.

J. H. Hazelrigg, Jas. Andrew Scott and W. C. Marshall for appellant.

B. G. Williams and D. W. Lindsey for appellee.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker, affirming.

Andrew Trumbo was in the employ of the appellee, W. A. Gaines & Company, in the capacity of general utility machinist in the elevator building of the Old Crow Distillery, near Frankfort, Kentucky. On the 5th day of May, 1905, while working about an upright shaft, which came up through a raised platform in one of the warerooms of the building, his foot was caught in the rapidly revolving machinery, inflicting such injuries as caused his death on the 1st day of July, 1905. Afterwards, his mother, Margaret Trumbo, qualified as administratrix of his estate, and instituted this action to recover damages for his death. Her petition, as amended, alleges, that her son's death was caused by the negligence of appellee in failing to furnish him a reasonably safe place in which to work, and (2) that it had negligently failed to employ sufficient men to operate the machinery, thereby causing the injury to her son. There was no evidence to support this latter allegation of negligence, and we mention it only to explain its appearing in the instructions given by the court, which we shall hereafter set forth. The real cause of action, which appellant undertook to establish in the evidence, was the alleged failure of the appellee to furnish the decedent with a reasonably safe place in which to do the work for which he was employed. The answer placed in issue all of the affirmative allegations of the petition, and pleaded the contributory negligence of the decedent. A trial resulted in a judgment in favor of the defendant; and appellant's motion for a new trial having been overruled, she has prosecuted an appeal to this court.

The testimony shows that Andrew Trumbo was experienced in the management of the machinery which was operated in the Old Crow Distillery warehouse, and that he was thoroughly familiar with the management of the particular machinery by which he was hurt. For some time before the day of the accident involved here, the appellee had in its employ one James Edwards, a colored man, who operated the same machinery by which the decedent was injured. Edwards was discharged, or quit the employment of appellee, on the day before the accident. Trumbo was assigned, by the superintendent, to take his place, and to operate the machinery, temporarily. The upright shaft which inflicted the injury, came up, as said before, through the floor of the wareroom and through an elevator platform. Just underneath the platform and fastened to the shaft, was a fly-wheel, thirty-five inches in diameter, which turned a belt and furnished power to operate other machinery in the building. About two feet above the platform there was fastened to the shaft, another fly-wheel of the same diameter, which turned another belt operating other parts of the machinery. In the floor of the platform and just underneath the top fly-wheel there was a hole ten inches wide and eighteen inches long, which was used as a means of oiling the machinery below the platform. When not in use, this hole could be entirely covered up by a cap made for the purpose, which fitted the aperture, and when in place, excluded all possibility of any one stepping into it while working about the shaft. This cap had a ring in the top, which was used for the purpose of taking it off when necessary to oil the machinery underneath.

About noon of the day of the accident, the decedent was heard to scream, and, when other employes rushed to his assistance, he was found sitting upon the floor, holding his leg in his hands, and suffering excruciating pain. He explained his injury by saying that he had stepped into the open hole underneath the top fly-wheel, and his foot had been caught by the fly-wheel below the floor of the platform, and ground in pieces. Amputation was found necessary, and from the effects of his injury, he afterwards died.

The cap, which was provided to be used in covering the hole, was afterwards found leaning against the wall of the wareroom, about four or five feet from the shaft. There was also another piece of plank found either across or near the hole; but it was not made clear whether this plank was a temporary make-shift used by Trumbo to stop the hole in the platform, or whether it had been used by him in throwing off or putting on the belt. There is evidence that such a plank had been used by Edwards, the day before, for the purpose of putting on and taking off the belt.

Several witnesses deposed for the defendant, that, while Trumbo was being hauled from the distillery to his home in Frankfort, for treatment, he made statements that his injury was the result of an accident, and that no one was to blame for it but himself. For the plaintiff, it was shown that, after his injury, Trumbo was given large quantities of whisky to drink in order to enable him to endure the pain he was suffering, until medical assistance was obtained; and it is argued that whatever statements he made on the subject of his injury he was not responsible for, on account of his intoxication.

It is insisted for the appellee that it was entitled to a peremptory instruction, because the evidence showed that Trumbo was familiar with the hole and had in his possession the cap, which, if he had placed upon it, would have made it entirely safe for him to be about the shaft; but its motion for a peremptory instruction was overruled by the court, and we do not find it necessary to discuss this phase of the case further.

In appellant's behalf, it was shown that there had been piled a large number of sacks of grain in the near vicinity of the revolving shaft, and these sacks tended to exclude the light from the windows of the wareroom, and to make the place, where Trumbo worked, so dark that the danger of stepping into the hole was thereby increased. This was sought to be rebutted by appellee by showing that there were ten large windows in the wareroom, and that as the weather was warm the door near the platform was open, and there was sufficient light around the shaft to enable any one to see the open hole into which the decedent stepped.

This, substantially, states the effect of all the evidence in the case.

The court instructed the jury as follows:

"No. 1. The court instructs the jury that it was the primary duty of the defendant, W. A. Gaines & Company, to furnish the plaintiff's intestate, where he was engaged at work, a reasonably safe place and premises fit and suitable for the purposes for which they were being used, viewed from the nature of his employment, and to keep the same reasonably safe, and it was its further duty to furnish him reasonably safe machinery and appliances with which and about which he was required to work, and to keep the same in reasonable repair, and it was its further duty to employ and provide a sufficient number of competent hands to carry on the work in hand and at which said decedent was engaged and for which he was employed, with reasonable safety; and said intestate had the right to rely upon the performance of these duties by said defendant while engaged in the line of his employment, and if the jury shall believe from the evidence that said defendant failed to furnish said intestate a reasonably safe place to work, and premises fit and suitable as named above, or to keep same reasonably safe, or failed to furnish him reasonably safe machinery and appliances with which and about which he was required to work, or failed to employ and provide a sufficient number of competent hands to carry on the work in hand, and at which he was engaged and for which he was employed, with reasonable safety, and that, by reason of its failure, if any, to perform either of its said duties as above described, said intestate, Trumbo, was caused to be thrown against or caught in a rapidly revolving wheel or pulley, whereby he was injured, and from which he died, the law is for the plaintiff, and the jury will so find.

"No. 2. The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the defendant furnished plaintiff's intestate a reasonably safe place and premises fit and suitable for the purpose for which they were being used, viewed from the nature of his employment, and kept the same reasonably safe, and that the defendant furnished him reasonably safe machinery and appliances with which and about which Trumbo was required to work, and that they kept same in reasonable repair, and that defendant employed a sufficient number of competent hands to carry on the work in hand, at which deceased, Trumbo, was engaged and for which he was employed, the law is for the defendant, and the jury should so find.

"No. 3. Although the jury may believe from the evidence that the place, machinery and appliances were unreasonably unsafe and dangerous, on the occasion when Trumbo was hurt, and that defendant knew it, or could have known it by the exercise of ordinary care, in time to have avoided Trumbo's injury; still, if Trumbo, by his own negligence or carelessness, caused or contributed to the accident in a manner, but that for his own negligence or carelessness the accident would not have occurred, the jury must find for the defendant."

There were four other instructions, defining ordinary care and negligence, and establishing the measure of damages, which are not complained of, and are not, therefore, reproduced here. The foregoing instructions, given by the court, fully set forth the principles of law controlling the case, and left appellant with no room for complaint on that score. No substantial error is pointed out in the matter or manner of introducing the testimony, and it fully sustains the verdict of the jury. Appellant's whole contention was fairly submitted to the jury, whose province it was to determine the disputed facts, and they found that the evidence did not support her contention. This being true, we have no alternative but to affirm the judgment; and it is so ordered.

THIRD NAT. BANK OF LOUISVILLE v. TIERNEY.

(Filed May 6, 1908—To be reported.)

Husband and Wife—Liability of Wife for Husband's Debts—Under Kentucky Statutes, section 2127, known as the husband and wife property statute, providing that "no part of a married woman's estate shall be subjected to the payment of any liability upon a contract made after marriage to answer for the debt, default or misdoing of another, including her husband" when the wife executes her note to take up the debt of her husband, or borrows money from the husband's creditor on her own obligation, and hands it to him to pay her husband's debt, she is, in the meaning of the statute, assuming the debt of another, the same as if her name was signed as to a writing promising to pay the debt. The form of the transaction will not be allowed to defeat the statute when the substance is an evident attempt to evade it.

McDermott & Ray for appellant.

Lieber & Lincoln for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, Second Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, affirming.

The only question involved in this record is whether or not the appellee is liable upon a promissory note executed and delivered by her to the appellant bank, on January 22, 1903, whereby she promised to pay to it the sum of $3,400. It appears that Thomas J. Tierney, the husband of appellee, borrowed from the appellant bank in 1900, $4,000 for the purpose of paying part of the purchase price of eighty shares of stock subscribed for by him in the Tierney-Silbery Company. For this sum he gave his two individual notes, signed by him alone, for $2,000 each, secured by the stock which he pledged as collateral. These two notes were renewed by him from time to time until February, 1902, when $500 was paid—thus reducing the debt to $3,500. Under the terms of the last renewal, one of these notes was made to fall due on March 4, 1902, and the other on June 10, 1902. Sometime after the execution of the last mentioned notes, the bank notified Tierney that when they fell due in March and June, respectively, they must be paid or additional security given. After this, and before the notes became due, Tierney notified the bank that it was not convenient for him to get security, and he suggested that his wife, the appellee, was solvent and proposed that the bank lend her $3,500, on her individual note, and that he would pledge the eighty shares of stock to secure her note, and with this money Mrs. Tierney would pay off his indebtedness of $3,500. This proposition was accepted by the bank, and on February 14, 1902, Tierney brought to the bank a note signed by his wife for $3,500 and also checks drawn by her upon the bank for the proceeds of the note, when it should be placed to her credit. The note and checks were delivered to the bank, the note discounted and the proceeds, less the discount, placed to the credit of Mrs. Tierney on the books of the bank. Thereupon, the checks she had drawn on her account, payable to the bank, were applied to the payment of the notes of Tierney, and they were delivered to him. At this time the two notes executed by Tierney had not matured and the evidence shows that Tierney was then solvent and remained so until after the maturity of the notes. It also appears that the eighty shares of stock pledged to secure the note were worth more than the amount of it, although soon after this the stock decreased in value and was sold for $1,475, and Tierney became insolvent, and further that the note executed by Mrs. Tierney was several times renewed by her and that she paid $100 on it.

In the consideration of this case it must be kept in mind: first, that the note sued on was executed by Mrs. Tierney to the bank to take up and discharge the notes executed by her husband and held by the bank; second, that she received no part of the proceeds of the notes executed by her husband, or the note executed by herself; third, that no part of her estate was set apart as provided in section 2127, of the Kentucky Statutes, to secure the payment of the indebtedness of her husband to the bank; fourth, that the bank knew that appellee was the wife of T. J. Tierney, and that her note was to be used to take up and discharge his indebtedness to the bank; fifth, that the eighty shares of stock pledged to secure his notes were also pledged as collateral to the note of Mrs. Tierney.

There is little, if any, conflict in the evidence, so that the question narrows down to the single proposition whether or not Mrs. Tierney, under the facts stated, is personally liable upon this note.

It is argued for appellant that, under the statute, a married woman has the right to borrow money from a bank by discounting her own note and may do as she pleases with the money thus borrowed, and may borrow money to pay her husband's debts, and the fact that she borrows money for that purpose, does not invalidate the contract or note upon which she obtains the money, and further, that the lender is not chargeable with notice of the purpose to which the wife may put the money or required to look to an investment of it for her use and benefit. In the correctness of these propositions, as general statements of the law, we agree, but, they are subject to important exceptions that will be later noticed. The statute was not designed to prevent a married woman from borrowing money or to deny her the right to discharge her husband's debts or to do with her money as she pleases. Nor are the rights of the lender affected or prejudiced by the disposition made by the wife of the money borrowed upon her note, provided the transaction is not a subterfuge or device to evade the statute or a scheme to procure the obligation of the wife as surety for her husband or another. A married woman, under the statute, may make contracts, sell and dispose of her personal property, sue and be sued as a single woman, and is liable for her debts, except, that under section 2127, "No part of a married woman's estate shall be subjected to the payment or satisfaction of any liability upon a contract made after marriage to answer for the debt, default or misdoing of another, including her husband, unless such estate shall have been set apart for that purpose by deed of mortgage or other conveyance."

In all respects, with the exceptions pointed out in the statute, a married woman, in so far as her property rights are concerned, stands in the same position as if she were a single woman. The limitations imposed upon her by the statute are intended to protect her interest and to prevent her from becoming involved as the surety of her husband, or any other person, unless the obligation is assumed in the manner pointed out in the statute by which married women may pledge their property, and bind it as security for the payment of debts assumed as surety. In no other way than the one provided by statute, can a married woman's estate be subjected to the payment of debts contracted as surety.

This statute has been before this court in a number of cases, and in all of them we have endeavored to give it such a construction as would effectuate the legislative intent which was to preserve the estates of married women from being wasted or impaired by the assumption of debts created for the use and benefit of other persons, and from which they might derive no benefit. On more than one occasion, ingenious efforts have been made to evade the statute, but they have failed of their purpose. And whenever it has appeared that an effort was being made to subject the estate of a married woman to the payment of another's debt, unless her estate was set apart for that purpose in the manner provided in the statute, we have uniformly held that it could not be done. The question of the honesty of the transaction, or the object for which the debt was made, or the hardship the creditor must suffer, has never been permitted to alter our decision nor to impair the efficiency of the statute, or permitted inroads to be made upon its useful purpose. The fact that the husband is released by the note of the wife taken in satisfaction of his debt, or the fact that the husband was solvent when the novation took place and the lender might have collected from him his debt although afterwards, and when the wife interposes the statutory plea to relieve her, he may be insolvent, will not be allowed to defeat the intention of the law. Nor will the court be misled by the superficial appearance of the transaction. It will look beneath the surface to ascertain the real purpose of the parties.

The controlling feature in this case, and the one by which it must be adjudged, is that Mrs. Tierney, by executing her note to the bank, took up and discharged a note it held against her husband alone, and when the bank knew that the liability she assumed was her husband's debt. No question of estoppel or release or fraud or agency or insolvency or other thing, can destroy the efficiency of this dominating fact, to relieve her from liability in this case. Indeed, no fraud is shown nor is there evidence of agency or estoppel that will bind her.

Cases sufficiently like the one under consideration to control its adjudication, have been before us more than once. Thus:

In Russell v. Rice, 19 Ky. Law Rep., 1613, a married woman, who was co-surety with another for her husband, executed to the co-surety her note for half the amount he had paid in consideration of his releasing her husband, but it was held that the note was not binding upon her, although by reason of it her husband had been discharged from liability.

In Crumbaugh v. Postell, 20 Ky. Law Rep., 1366, Postell held the notes of the husband with one Williams as surety—the latter desiring to be released, the husband proposed to Postell to give him his wife's note in lieu of the ones upon which Williams was surety, and upon Postell consenting to this arrangement, the husband obtained his wife's notes and delivered them to him—whereupon he surrendered the old notes to the husband. It appeared that Postell had no conference or communication with the wife, and she made no representations to him. Under these facts, the court held that the wife was not liable, as the notes were executed to discharge her husband's debts.

In Deposit Bank of Carlisle v. Stitt, 21 Ky. Law Rep., 671, Mrs. Stitt desired to borrow from the bank, for the use of her husband, $150. The bank held an unpaid note of her husband for $125, and in consideration of her assumption of this debt, by the execution of her note in lieu thereof, the bank advanced to her the $150. In opposition to her defense, in a suit to recover the $125, the bank insisted that the release of the husband was a sufficient consideration to uphold her promise to the bank, as it had delivered to her, the note against her husband; and that her engagement to pay the debt was an original undertaking of her own and not a contract to answer for the debt, default or misdoing of another. But the court held she was not liable.

In Milburn v. Jackson, 21 Ky. Law Rep., 700, under a state of facts similar to those in the Stitt case, the court reached the same conclusion.

As further illustrating the views of this court upon the construction of this statute, we may call attention to the cases of the Planters Bank & Trust Co. v. Major, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 702; Hines v. Hays, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 967; Hall v. Hall, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 553; Black v. McCarley, 31 Ky. Law Rep., 1198, and Hart v. Bank of Russellville, 32 Ky. Law Rep., 338.

An attempt is made to bring this case within the rule announced in Thompkins v. Triplett, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 305, and Dearing v. Veal, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1809; but it is easily distinguishable from both of those cases. In the Triplett case, the husband of Mrs. Triplett applied to Thompkins to loan him money, which he refused to do, but told him he would lend it to his wife—thereupon Triplett procured his wife's signature to the note and delivered it to Thompkins, and the court held that Mrs. Triplett had constituted her husband as agent to deliver the note and receive the money, and that she was bound by the representations he made as her agent. The wife did not in any sense become the surety of her husband, nor was her note or the proceeds thereof used to take up any note that Thompkins held against her husband. The lending of the money to Mrs. Triplett was an original transaction. It was treated by the court as if she had herself applied to Thompkins for the loan and executed to him her note and obtained the money thereon. In the Dearing case, under facts very similar to the Triplett case, the court followed it.

There is no conflict whatever between the principles herein announced and those laid down in the Triplett and Dearing cases. There could not well be any, because the essential facts that are decisive points in the cases are radically different. If the appellant bank, as an original transaction, had loaned to Mrs. Tierney $3,500, upon her application therefor, in person or by agent duly authorized, she could not, as against the bank, interpose the defense that the money had been applied to the payment of her husband's debts due to other persons, or the defense that her husband had taken the money from her and appropriated it to his own use, or the defense that she did not receive the use or benefit of the money. But, this is not the state of facts we are dealing with. Here, the money obtained by the wife, on her note from the creditor of the husband was applied by the creditor to discharge the husband's debt. So far as the legal effect of the transaction upon the wife is concerned, it was precisely the same as if she had signed her name as surety for her husband upon a note executed by him to the bank. If the bank could hold her liable upon her note, accepted by it for the purpose of discharging a debt due it by her husband, we are unable to perceive why it could not hold her liable if she had signed her husband's note as surety for the same debt. If the statute can, in this way be evaded; it might as well not have been enacted, as it is plain that it would not accomplish the purpose for which it was intended. If the argument made by counsel for appellant were sound, then the creditor of the insolvent husband could secure his debt by taking in its place the obligation of the wife, and thereby bind her estate, although if the husband executed, with his wife as surety, his obligation to pay the debt or demand, she would not be liable thereon. When the creditor of the husband takes, in satisfaction of his debt, the obligation of the wife, the wife is in effect becoming the surety of the husband, and the creditor accepts her note with the intention of looking to her for its payment. The fact that it is the creditor of the husband that advances the money to the wife to pay to him her husband's debt, or that he accepts the obligation of the wife in discharge of the debt of her husband, or takes her as surety for her husband to better secure a loan made to him, is the essential thing that places his relation to the transaction in a different attitude from that of the person who as an original business proposition, lends the wife money to do with as she pleases, and who derives no benefit or advantage except such as grows out of the interest or profit he may secure from the loan of the money. When the wife executes her note to take up the debt of her husband or borrows from the creditor of the husband on her own obligation the money, and hands it to him to pay her husband's debt, she is, in the meaning of the statute, assuming the debt of another, the same as if her name was signed as surety to a writing promising to pay the debt. The form of the transaction will not be allowed to defeat the statute, when the substance is an evident attempt to evade it. This rule will not impair or interfere with the power of a married woman to borrow money or contract indebtedness in the ordinary course of business, or charge the person from whom she obtains it with notice of the use to which it is put, unless he be the husband's creditor and the money is borrowed from him to pay the husband's debt.

Wherefore, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

BALLARD'S ADM'X v. L. & N. R. R. CO.

(Filed May 7, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Master and Servant—Injury to Servant—Prank of Fellow-Servant—Liability of Master—While two fellow-servants were at work at a machine shop, one of them, as a prank, turned compressed air on the other from a hose used therein, which entered his bowels through his rectum, causing his death, for which suit was brought against the master by the administratrix of the deceased servant. Held—That the master is responsible only for the acts of the servant in the scope of his employment.

2. Same—The master in selecting his servants is not required to take into consideration the pranks they may play on their fellow-servants outside the scope of their duties, unless they use an instrument that is dangerous, and the master, with the knowledge of its deadly character, has failed to exercise such care as a man of ordinary prudence would do in keeping it so that it would not do any injury.

3. Same—The master must exercise ordinary care in the selection of his servants, and if he fails to exercise such care and one of the servants is injured by the incapacity of another servant, the master is liable, but such incapacity must relate to the duties required by the master of the servant.

4. Same—If a fellow-servant is entirely competent to discharge the duties assigned him by his master, and he should, without authority from the master, undertake to do things beyond the scope of his employment, the master would not be responsible for his negligence in these matters, on the ground that he was not a suitable person for that service.

L. B. Herrington and Smith & Smith for appellant.

Benjamin D. Warfield and John T. Shelby for appellee.

Appeal from Madison Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, affirming.

Appellant, as administratrix of John Ballard, instituted this action to recover against the L. & N. Railroad Company for the death of her intestate. The circuit court sustained a demurrer to the petition and she appeals.

The facts set up in the petition are these: John Ballard was an apprentice in the defendant's machine shop at Corbin, Kentucky. He was an infant and had been in the shop only three days. There was another apprentice in the shop whose name was Hodge. While Ballard was engaged in his duties, Hodge slipped up behind him with a compressed air hose and turned the high pressure of air from the hose into Ballard's rectum, the air entering his bowels and rupturing them in such a way that he died shortly afterwards. Hodge had been serving his apprenticeship in the shop for about two years. He turned the air hose on Ballard as a prank. The superintendent of the shop, under whom both Hodge and Ballard worked, had knowingly permitted Hodge and the other apprentice boys in the shop to use this hose in a dangerous manner. The defendant knew that the hose was a dangerous appliance. Hodge had been using the compressed air hose in a playful manner while on duty with the defendant for sometime prior to Ballard's death. The defendant knew this and permitted it without warning, restraining or discharging Hodge. Hodge was a careless, reckless and stupid boy, and utterly unfit to be working around or handling this dangerous air hose, or dangerous compressed air. The defendant knew this or could have known it by the exercise of ordinary care. The defendant, knowing of the careless, reckless and dangerous disposition of Hodge, and knowing of his conduct in connection with the use of the dangerous compressed air, negligently retained him in its employ, and negligently failed to exercise proper and reasonable supervision over his acts and conduct while in defendant's service, and negligently exposed John Ballard to the dangers and hazards of working with this reckless, unsafe and unfit servant, dangers which were unknown to Ballard and from which he lost his life.

In Sullivan v. L. & N. R. R. Company, 115 Ky., 447, the foreman of a switching crew, as a prank, put a torpedo on the track in front of the engine, to alarm one of the hands working with him. The torpedo went off and a piece of it struck the hand in the leg; he sued the railroad to recover damages. It was held that, as the foreman was discharging no duty to the master in placing the torpedo on the track, but was merely playing a prank on one of the men working with him, the master was not responsible for the acts of the servant not done in his service.

In L. & N. R. R. Company v. Routt, 25 Rep., 887, the fireman in a locomotive intentionally threw a lump of coal at the plaintiff, who was standing on the side of the track, intending to hit him with the coal; in thus throwing the coal he was discharging no duty which he owed to the master, and it was held that the railroad company was not answerable.

In Railroad Company v. Cooper, 88 Tex., 607, the engineer and fireman intended to play a practical joke on Cooper by injecting water into his pockets through a hose, and, by mistake turned on hot water and steam, he was badly burned and brought suit against the railroad to recover for his injuries. It was held that he could not recover.

In Galveston, &c., Railroad v. Currie, 96 S. W., 1073, the Supreme Court of Texas had before it a case very similar to this. In that case the foreman of the shop, who had a crew of men under him, as a prank, turned the air hose on one of the men, and when he jumped, turned it on another. No bad effect was seen at the time, but subsequently the man died from the air having entered the rectum and ruptured the bowels. In that case the only physician who was examined as a witness, testified that he had not believed such a thing could be possible, and that it was the most remarkable accident of which he had ever heard. It was there held that the master was not responsible for the servant's prank.

It is earnestly insisted, however, that this case differs from all of those cited in this, that it is alleged here that Hodge was a careless, reckless and stupid boy, utterly unfit to handle the air hose, and that the defendant knew of his incapacity and knew that he was in the habit of using the hose in a playful, improper and reckless manner. Ballard and Hodge were fellow-servants. The master is responsible only for the acts of the servant within the scope of his employment. The master must exercise ordinary care in the selection of his servants and if he fails to exercise such care, and one of the servants is injured by the incapacity of another servant, the master is liable, but the incapacity of the fellow-servant must relate to the duties required of him by the master. If the fellow-servant is entirely competent to discharge the duties assigned him by the master and he should, without authority from the master, undertake to do things beyond the scope of his employment, the master would not be liable for his negligence in these matters on the ground that he was not a suitable person for that service. Boys are employed as apprentices in all shops and yet there are in all shops many duties that may not safely be entrusted to these boys, and, if a boy should voluntarily leave the scope of the duty assigned him by the master without authority, the master would not be liable to a fellow-servant who was injured by reason of his incapacity to do the work which he had thus wrongfully assumed.

It is not shown in the petition that the use of the air hose was part of Hodge's duty. The fair inference from the petition is that Hodge only used the air hose to play pranks. If he had used the water hose, supposing that he was turning on cold water, and had, in fact, turned on hot water, thus burning Ballard, manifestly the railroad would not be answerable, simply because the hot water was a dangerous agency, and it had retained Hodge in its employment, knowing that he was in the habit of turning the hose on the other boys, as a prank. Compressed air is used in all shops to blow away the filings or cuttings, so that the progress made by the tools may be seen. It is ordinarily entirely harmless; if turned on a person at any other point than near the rectum, it simply stings a little: and that the air, when striking near the rectum, would go through the clothes and into the rectum to such an extent as to rupture the bowels, would, perhaps, never occur to any one who had not heard of the possibility of such an accident. Compressed air is no more dangerous than the tools ordinarily furnished to the men to work with in shops; one apprentice might hurt another with his hammer, or with a piece of iron, in playing a prank on him. No shop can be conducted without agencies that are more or less dangerous when improperly used, and the master is not responsible if an apprentice gets hold of some tool not committed to him and uses it in a way to hurt another in playing a prank on him; unless the danger was so imminent that a person of ordinary prudence would have guarded against it. Dangerous instrumentalities like nitroglycerine or dynamite must be carefully kept and should not be put where ignorant or reckless persons may injure others with them, but a compressed air hose is not a deadly thing, and the same rule that would apply to a dynamite cartridge or package of nitroglycerine can not be applied to it. An air hose is as common a tool in a shop as a lathe or furnace, and there are, in nearly all shops, apprentices; nor is it uncommon that apprentices play pranks on one another.

The sum of all the facts alleged is about this; that Hodge, in using an air hose, as a prank, on Ballard, caused his death, when there was nothing in the appearance of the thing to suggest danger to him, or to Ballard, and when, in so doing, he was discharging no duty to the defendant. When the master has selected fellow servants competent to discharge the duties assigned to them, he is not responsible for an injury which they may do in a prank, outside of their duties; unless they use an instrument that was dangerous, and the master, with knowledge of the deadly character of the thing, has failed to exercise such care as a man of ordinary prudence would exercise in keeping it so that it would not do injury. The master, in selecting his servants, is not required to take into consideration the pranks one servant may play on his fellows, outside of the scope of his duties. The master has no right to control his servant outside of his service, as to the pranks he may play on his fellows. As to these, the master is under no greater responsibility to the fellow-servants than to a stranger. If Ballard had not been in the service of the railroad company, it would hardly be maintained that the company would be responsible to him on the facts alleged. Dangerous agencies must not be entrusted to unfit hands, and proper care must be exercised to protect others from them. But the duty to guard a dangerous agency, in the sense in which the terms are used in the rule referred to, does not extend to such a thing as an air hose, on the facts shown.

An air hose is an instrument so familiar and usually so harmless that we do not see how this principle can be applied to it.

Judgment affirmed.

Whole court sitting.

Judge Nunn dissenting.

CITY OF OWENSBORO v. HOPE.

CITY OF OWENSBORO v. LOSSIE.

(Filed May 8, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Municipalities—Public Common Nuisance—Omitting Legal Duty Required for Common Good—A common or public nuisance is one that affects the people at large, and is a violation of a public right, either by a direct encroachment upon public property, or by doing some act which tends to the common injury, or by omitting to do, in the discharge of a legal duty, that which the common good requires.

2. Street Improvement—Property Owners—Common Law Liability—Statutory Requirements—There is no common law liability on the part of abutting property owners to pay for street improvements. The only liability is that imposed by statute. The general rule is, that when a power is conferred upon a municipal corporation, and the manner in which it is to be exercised is prescribed, such mode must be pursued.

3. Same—Abatement—Jurisdiction of Courts—In addition to the ordinary remedies by indictment and abatement, a court of equity will often take jurisdiction of a public nuisance, such as the unlawful obstructing of a public highway, and restrain or enjoin acts prejudicial to the interests of the community. The jurisdiction of the court, in such cases, is founded upon the greater promptitude and efficiency of the remedy, as well as the desirability of preventing irreparable mischief and vexatious litigation.

4. Same—Abating Nuisance—Mandatory Injunction—Under section 3290, sub-section 7, Kentucky Statutes, relating to cities of the third class, authorizing the common council "to open, alter, abolish, widen, extend, establish, grade, pave, or otherwise improve and keep in repair, streets and sidewalks, or have the same done," the only liability created by these sections and by sections 3449 to 3452, inclusive, is the liability on the part of the abutting property owner to pay for the improvements, after they have been made, and a mandatory injunction will not lie to compel a property owner, in such city, to construct a sidewalk and abate a nuisance suffered by his failure to do so.

George W. Jolly for appellant.

Wilfred Carico for appellees.

Appeals No. 2 and No. 3 from Davless Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Wm. Rogers Clay, Commissioner, affirming.

These two appeals involve the same questions, and will be considered together. The suits were brought by the city of Owensboro against appellees, to compel them, by mandatory injunction, to remedy nuisances suffered by them to exist in front of their respective lots, by failing and refusing to excavate the dirt projecting above the level of the walks, and put down cement walks in front of their property, as required by ordinances of the city, in conformity with a new grade established by the common council.

Appellee Lossie's property lies on the east side of Mulberry street, between Second and Third streets, about midway of the square. Mulberry street was macadamized by the city in the year 1901. The ordinance required the property-holders on both sides of Mulberry street, from Second street southward to Fifth street, to build cement sidewalks. All the abutters on the east side of Mulberry street, between Second and Third streets, north and south of Lossie's lot, complied with the ordinances requiring the construction of such walks on the new grade. This left the old sidewalk, in front of her property, about two feet, at the north line of her lot, and eighteen inches, at the south line, above the cement walk; the lot having a frontage of eighty-three and a half feet. It is charged that this left the street in a condition not only inconvenient to public travel, but actually dangerous to pedestrians.

Hope's lot lies on the east side of Clay street, between Fifth and Seventh streets, and has a frontage of forty-three feet. A macadam street, with curbs and gutters, was constructed in front of his property in 1901. The ordinance required the construction of a six-foot cement walk in front of all property, on both sides of Clay street, from second to Seventh street. All property-holders lying north and south of Hope's lot, on the east side of Clay street, complied, and built their walks. This left the old sidewalk, in front of Hope's lot, two feet higher than the walk north and south of said lot; thus making an abrupt offset of two feet at the north and south sides of his lot, which is alleged to be dangerous to public travel on the street.

The ordinances of the city, after prescribing the streets and the specifications for the sidewalks, contain the following provision:

"That the pavements required to be constructed under the provisions of said ordinance finally passed May 20th, 1901, and the amendments thereto, and under the provisions of this ordinance shall all be constructed as soon as practicable, and before the first day of October, A. D., 1902. But the failure or neglect of any person to comply with the provisions of this ordinance as to the construction of said pavement before said dates, shall not have the effect to exonerate such person from a full compliance herewith."

The ordinances further have a provision to the effect that the concrete or cement walks required to be constructed "shall be immediately constructed at the cost and expense of the owners of the lots and parcels of ground abutting on said improvements; and the cost and expense of such construction of said concrete or cement pavements * * * shall be apportioned against each lot or parcel of ground so abutting thereon, according to the number of feet each person may own, abutting or in front of said improvement. And a lien shall exist on said ground so fronting on said improvement for the cost and expense thereof in front of such lot or parcel of ground."

The ordinances further provide that it shall be the duty of the mayor to enter into contracts, upon the best and most advantageous terms, for the construction of said work; that the work contracted to be done shall be performed under the supervision of the mayor and the city engineer, and subject to the acceptance of the common council; that it shall be the duty of the city engineer to make out and report to the common council complete and accurate estimates and apportionments of the cost of said work and improvement against the owners of the property liable to pay the same, designating therein each one's respective liability.

The foregoing facts appear from the petitions, each of which concludes with a prayer asking that the defendants therein be required to construct a sidewalk in front of his property, as provided by the ordinances. The trial court sustained a demurrer in each instance, and dismissed the petitions of the city; from which judgments it appeals.

For appellant it is insisted that the common council is given plenary power over the streets of the city; that it may require the streets and sidewalks to be constructed, re-constructed, &c., by the property owners abutting on the streets, and may also assess the cost of the improvement by the frontage, &c.; that it is the duty of the city, aside from these charter provisions, to see to it that the streets are kept in a reasonably safe condition for public use; that if it fails, it is liable to indictment and civil suits for any injury sustained by any individual caused by its negligent failure to maintain the streets in a reasonably safe condition; that this control of the streets, together with its duty to keep them in a reasonably safe condition, and its liability for a failure so to do, invest the city with such an interest in the streets as will enable it to maintain a suit in equity to compel one who, in violation of a local law, obstructs, or suffers the street to be obstructed, or refuses to remove the obstruction, by performing a duty which the law enjoins.

It may be conceded that, in addition to the ordinary remedies by indictment and abatement, a court of equity will often take jurisdiction of a public nuisance, such as the unlawful obstruction of a highway, and restrain or enjoin acts prejudicial to the interests of the community. The jurisdiction of a court of equity in such cases is founded upon the greater promptitude and efficacy of the remedy, as well as the desirability of preventing irreparable mischief and vexatious litigation. And the liability of a town or city to pay damages for injuries caused by the obstruction is a sufficient interest to entitle the town or city to maintain a suit in equity to enjoin an obstruction which constitutes a nuisance, although it does not own the fee. (Elliott on Roads and Streets, section 664; Watertown v. Cowen, 4 Paige Ch., 510; Burlington v. Schwartzman, 52 Conn., 181; Railway Co. v. Chicago, 96 Ill., 620; San Francisco v. Buckman, 111 Cal., 25; Dillon on Mun. Corps., sections 659, 660; Smith on Mod. Mun. Corps., section 1094.)

A common or public nuisance is one that affects the people at large, and is a violation of a public right, either by a direct encroachment upon public property or by doing some act which tends to the common injury, or by omitting to do, in the discharge of a legal duty, that which the common good requires. (Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 2d edition, volume 21, page 683.)

Thus it will be seen that a nuisance may be created by a positive act on the part of the offender, or by neglecting to perform a duty imposed by law. In these cases it is not contended that appellees created a nuisance by any positive act on their part. They did not place a dangerous obstruction in the streets. The only theory, then, upon which the chancellor could act, would be that they created a nuisance by failing to comply with a legal duty. It is even doubtful if the common council, by the ordinances involved herein, has itself imposed upon the property owners the duty of constructing the sidewalks in question. It seems to us that the ordinances should be construed in the light of the power and authority given to the common council; and if that be done, it is certain that the purpose of the ordinances was to follow the manner and form provided by the statute.

But even conceding that the ordinances themselves imposed upon the property owners the duty of constructing the sidewalks, did the common council have the power to impose this duty? By section 3449, Kentucky Statutes, it is provided that the common council "shall have power to pass ordinances to require the improvement of streets and alleys, subject to the mode and manner herein designated." This section further provides that the work shall be done at the cost of the owner or owners of the ground fronting such improvement; and a lien is created on said ground for the cost thereof. Section 3450 makes it the duty of the mayor to enter into a contract with any person or persons offering or agreeing to do the work required to be done by the ordinance, upon the best and most advantageous terms. Section 3451 requires that the work shall be done under the supervision of the mayor and engineer, and subject to the acceptance of the common council. This section also makes it the duty of the engineer to make out and report to the common council complete and accurate estimates and apportionments of the cost of said work and improvements against the owners of property liable to pay the same, designating each one's respective liability. Section 3452 provides that when the common council shall have passed an ordinance requiring the improvement to be made, and when a contract, in pursuance to such ordinance, shall be executed and ratified as aforesaid, and the common council shall have received the report of the engineer estimating and apportioning the cost of the work, and, by order or resolution, shall have received said work as done, then the liability of the owners of the property chargeable with the cost of said work shall be fixed, and there shall be a lien on the property for same.

The sections above referred to provide for the construction of sidewalks, the manner in which the work shall be done, how completed, received and approved by the common council, and for the creation of a lien upon abutting property. In these sections is embraced the whole statutory law imposing liability upon property owners. While section 3449 does provide that the common council shall have power to pass ordinances requiring the improvement of streets and alleys, it further provides that the power so to require is subject to the mode and manner therein designated. That section and those which follow show conclusively that the only manner and mode therein contemplated was that the mayor should enter into a contract for the work, and that the cost thereof should be assessed against, and be a lien on, the property abutting the improvement.

The doctrine is well settled that there is no common law liability on the part of abutting property owners to pay for street improvement. The only liability is that imposed by statute. The general rule is, that when a power is conferred upon a municipal corporation, and the manner in which it is to be exercised is prescribed, such mode must be pursued. (Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 2d edition, volume 20, page 1142.)

It is true, the common council of the city of Owensboro is given power and control over the streets of the city, and may require the streets and sidewalks to be constructed, re-constructed, &c. This authority is contained in section 3290, Kentucky Statutes, which is as follows:

"The common council of each of said cities shall, within the limitations of the Constitution of the State and this act, have power by ordinance:

"Sub-section 7. To open, alter, abolish, widen, extend, establish, grade, pave or otherwise improve, clean, sprinkle and keep in repair, streets, alleys, lanes, avenues and sidewalks, or to have the same done." * * *

From the above, it will be seen that the common council is given the power, within the limitations of the Constitution and acts relating to cities of the third class, to improve streets. The limitations referred to are found in sections 3449 to 3452, inclusive, of the Kentucky Statutes. As before stated, the only liability created by those sections is the liability on the part of the abutting property owners to pay for the improvements after they have been made. This liability is not even a personal liability; it is imposed only on the property of the abutting owners, and is secured by lien thereon. Assuming, then, that the ordinances in question imposed upon appellees the duty of constructing sidewalks in front of their premises (a proposition which is doubtful in the extreme), the common council did not have the authority so to provide, for such power is not given by the charter of cities of the third class. That being the case, the nuisance complained of did not result from the negligence of the appellees in failing to perform a duty imposed by law. The law did not impose upon them the duty of constructing the sidewalks in question; it went no further than to provide a lien against their property for the cost thereof, after the work had been done under contract made by the mayor. The nuisance, therefore, did not result from any positive acts or neglect of duty on the part of appellees. It follows that a mandatory injunction will not lie to compel appellees to construct the sidewalks and abate the nuisance complained of.

For the reasons given, the judgment is affirmed.

SOUTHERN RY. CO. IN KY. v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed May 12, 1908—To be reported.)

Railroads—Freight Trains—Carrying Passengers on Caboose—Separate Caboose for White and Colored Passengers—Under Kentucky Statutes, sections 772a and 801, the carrying of passengers by a railroad in a caboose attached to a freight train, does not change the freight train into a passenger train, and though a railroad company may allow both white and colored passengers to ride in such caboose, it is not subject to indictment under Kentucky Statutes, section 795, for failing to provide separate coaches on said trains for white and colored passengers.

Humphrey & Humphrey and E. H. Gaither for appellant.

James Breathitt and Tom B. McGregor for appellee.

Appeal from Mercer Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Wm. Rogers Clay, Commissioner, reversing.

Appellant, Southern Railway in Kentucky, was indicted by the grand jury of Mercer county for a violation of section 795, of the Kentucky Statutes, requiring railway companies operating in this State to furnish separate coaches or cars for the travel or transportation of white and colored passengers. An agreed statement of facts was filed, and upon this agreed statement the trial was had, without the intervention of a jury. Appellant was adjudged guilty, and its fine fixed at $500.00. From a judgment overruling its motion and grounds for a new trial, the railway company prosecutes this appeal.

The following is the agreed statement of facts:

"1st. That the defendant is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Kentucky, and operating a railroad in Mercer county, Kentucky, one branch of which runs from Harrodsburg to Burgin, Kentucky.

"2d. That at the date charged in the indictment, the defendant was operating a freight train between Harrodsburg and Burgin, to which was attached a caboose.

"3d. The defendant's agents at Burgin and Harrodsburg sold first-class passenger tickets to such passengers as applied for tickets, colored and white, for said freight train to which said caboose was attached.

"4th. That the only train run upon said day, and on other days, and the only car upon which passengers could ride, was said caboose car; said car was used regularly for all passengers buying first-class passenger tickets at the depot in Burgin for Harrodsburg, and from Harrodsburg to Burgin, and there was no other car attached to said train, or any other train for passengers, between said points, at said times and days.

"5th. That said caboose was not divided into separate compartments, and there was no sign upon said caboose car to indicate which car or compartment was intended for white or colored passengers.

"6th. That the said colored and white people mentioned in the indictment herein were passengers upon said caboose car; that they held first-class passenger tickets, sold by the agent at the passenger depot, and that there was no other car upon which they could ride upon the said tickets on the said days."

Section 801, of the Kentucky Statutes, is as follows:

"The provisions of this act shall not apply to employees of railroads, or persons employed as nurses, or officers in charge of prisoners [nor shall the same apply to the transportation of passengers in any caboose car attached to a freight train]." (Words in brackets added by amendment of March 15, 1894.)

It will be observed, from the foregoing section, that the provisions of the act in question do not apply to the transportation of passengers in any caboose car attached to a freight train.

Section 772a, of the Kentucky Statutes, is as follows:

"That all corporations, companies, persons or associations owning and operating a railroad line in this Commonwealth, or any branch of any railroad in this Commonwealth, the length of which exceeds five miles, shall be required, and they are hereby directed, to run at least one passenger train each way on every day of the year, Sundays excepted, over said line: Provided, however, That the operation of a train known as a mixed train, on lines carrying passengers and freight for hire, on which both passengers and freight are carried, if operated in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be deemed a compliance therewith: Provided, further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to mere coal switches, or any switch or branch, which is chartered and used by any corporation, company or person, merely for the purpose of carrying freight or coals to their main line or track."

It appears, from the agreed facts, that the only train run on the day upon which it is alleged the offense was committed, and other days, and the only car upon which passengers could ride, was said caboose car; that said car was used regularly for all passengers buying first-class tickets at the depot in Burgin for Harrodsburg, and from Harrodsburg to Burgin, and that there was no other car attached to said train for passengers, "between said points, at said times and days." It is the contention of the Commonwealth that it was the duty of appellant to comply with the provisions of section 772a, by providing trains for carrying passengers as therein required; that, as appellant provided no other train for the carrying of passengers, except a freight train with the caboose attached, and regularly sold tickets to passengers to be carried on this train, it was, as a matter of fact, carrying on a passenger traffic with the train in question, and that this, in effect, made it a passenger train; that the evident purpose of the enactment of the law was to compel railroad corporations doing a passenger traffic, or regularly engaged in hauling passengers, to separate the races by providing separate coaches or compartments; it matters not whether the passengers were regularly hauled upon a regular passenger train or a regular freight train; that railroads can not evade the Separate Coach Law by equipping their trains with caboose cars and hauling passengers in them. We do not think, however, that appellant's failure to comply with section 772a, of the Kentucky Statutes, or the fact that it actually carries passengers in a caboose attached to a freight train, and provides no other train for the carrying of passengers, can alter the character of the train in question. In other words, the carrying of passengers in a caboose attached to a freight train does not change the freight train into a passenger train. The expressions "passenger train" and "freight train" have a well-defined meaning. Section 801 recognizes the right of a railroad company, under certain conditions, to transport passengers in a caboose car attached to a freight train. The exemption from liability where passengers are carried in a caboose attached to a freight train was placed in the statute by an amendment of March 15th, 1894. The language is plain and certain. The record does not show that any other car in which passengers were carried was attached to the train. The train was simply a freight train, with a caboose attached. This, then, brings appellant within the exemption.

Whether or not appellant has been guilty of a violation of section 772a, is a question not now before us. It is true, the agreed facts show that no passenger train was operated on the branch road between Harrodsburg and Burgin upon the date mentioned in the indictment; but this is not an indictment for a failure to run a passenger train each way upon appellant's road, under section 772a. Even if it were, the agreed facts fail to show that the branch road in question exceeded five miles in length, or that it was not one of the branches or switches which are exempted from the provisions of that act. Furthermore, if the agreed facts showed that appellant was guilty of violating section 772a, the proper way to proceed would be by indictment under that section. The failure to run a passenger train each way on appellant's road is not included in, or in any way a part of, the offense mentioned in section 795, known as the Separate Coach Law. Appellant could not be convicted under section 795 for an offense prohibited by section 772a.

Whether wisely or not, the Legislature provided the exemption contained in section 801. The agreed facts show that the train in question was a freight train, and passengers were carried in a caboose attached thereto. Clearly, then, appellant comes within the exemption, and we are, therefore, of opinion that it was not guilty of the offense charged in the indictment.

For the reasons given, the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to dismiss the indictment.

CROSS v. ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R. CO.

(Filed May 12, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Railroad Crossings—Gates—Flagman—Signal—Invitation to Cross—Assumption of Traveler—A traveler, in approaching a railroad crossing that is protected by a flagman or safety gates, has the right to depend upon the invitation extended to cross the track by the open gates, or the signals of the flagman. When the safety gates are open, or the flagman signals the traveler that he may cross, it is an invitation to do so, and the traveler has the right to assume that he can pass in safety.

2. Same—Implied Invitation—Care Required of Traveler—But the fact that the gates are open, or the flagman gives the signal to cross, does not relieve the traveler from exercising ordinary care for his own safety, as if, notwithstanding the invitation implied by the open gates, or the flagman's signal, the traveler, by the exercise of ordinary care, could know that a train was approaching, the invitation would not be an absolute protection against his negligence.

3. Same—Duty of Trainman—Giving Statutory Signals—The fact that the crossings are protected by gates, or a flagman, does not relieve those in charge of a train of the duty to exercise ordinary care, in approaching the crossings, to prevent accident to the persons at the crossings, or of the duty of giving statutory signals, or other warning, where the statutory signals are not required.

4. Same—Instructions of Court—While the travelers may not rely, to the exclusion of exercising ordinary care for his own safety, on the open gate, or the flagman's signal, it is not proper in the trial court to instruct the jury that the traveler has no right to rely entirely on the flagman, or the open gates, as the case may be, thus diminishing the weight and importance that the traveler has the right to attach to the invitation to cross, by the open gates or the flagman's signal.

W. J. Webb for appellant.

Robbins & Thomas, J. M. Dickinson and Trabue, Doolan & Cox for appellee.

Appeal from Graves Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, reversing.

The appellant, while riding in a vehicle, collided with one of the trains of appellee railroad company at a street crossing, within the corporate limits of the city of Mayfield. To recover damages for the injury sustained to his horse, wagon and himself, he brought this action. The jury who heard the case returned a verdict in favor of appellee, and to reverse the judgment thereon this appeal is prosecuted.

The appellee company employs a flagman at the crossing where appellant was injured, to warn travelers of the approach of trains. The evidence introduced on behalf of appellant tends to show that when he had approached within a short distance of the crossing, he stopped, in obedience to a signal of the flagman, who, in a short time, motioned that he might cross. He testifies that when he stopped, he took out his account book to make a note of a sale of milk he had made, and when he looked again towards the track, the flagman was making motions to indicate that the way was clear, and, in obedience to this invitation of the flagman, he made the attempt, with the result stated. On the other hand, the flagman and a number of witnesses introduced in behalf of the railroad company, said that appellant attempted to drive across the track in the face of warnings from the flagman that he must stop, and that the flagman did not give him any signal that the way was clear, or that he might cross in safety.

With the evidence in this condition, no instruction on the subject of gross negligence was requested, but the court in connection with other instructions, gave instruction number three, reading as follows:

"The court instructs the jury that the plaintiff was bound in law to exercise ordinary care in approaching Broadway crossing, for his own safety, and had no right to rely entirely on the flagman, and should the jury believe that he failed to exercise ordinary care in approaching said crossing, and that he relied entirely on the flagman, and further believe that if he had exercised ordinary care in making said approach, the collision would not have occurred, notwithstanding that he might have thought the flagman signalled him to cross, then the law is for the defendant, and the jury should so find."

The objection pointed out by counsel for appellant, to this instruction, is that it tells the jury in so many words that appellant had no right to rely entirely on the flagman. This criticism is well founded. A traveler, in approaching a crossing that is protected by a flagman or safety gates, has the right to depend upon the invitation extended to cross the tracks, by the open gates or the signals of the flagman. When the safety gates are open, or the flagman signals the traveler that he may cross, it is an invitation to do so, and the traveler has the right to assume that he can pass in safety. We do not mean to hold that the fact that the gates are open or the flagman gives a signal to cross, relieves the traveler from exercising ordinary care for his own safety, as if, notwithstanding the invitation implied by the open gates, or the flagman's signal, the traveler, by the exercise of ordinary care, could know that a train was approaching, the invitation would not be an absolute protection against his negligence. It may also, with propriety, be said that persons in charge of trains reasonably assume the flagman or gates will protect the track from travelers, and their establishment at crossings has a tendency to lessen the vigilance which, under other circumstances, might be expected from those in charge of a train. The fact, however, that crossings are protected by gates or a flagman, does not relieve those in charge of the train of the duty to exercise ordinary care in approaching crossings to prevent accident to persons at the crossings, or the duty of giving statutory signals, where they are required to be given under the statute, or other warning where the statutory signals are not required. But, where a crossing is protected by gates or a flagman, the primary duty rests upon the company to afford protection by giving timely and reasonably sufficient warning as the effect of gates or a flagman is to make the traveler less cautious and careful than he would be if the crossing was not so protected. And, while he may not rely, to the exclusion of exercising ordinary care for his own safety, on the open gates or the signal of the flagman, it is not proper to instruct the jury that the traveler has no right to rely entirely on the flagman or the open gates, as the case may be, thus diminishing the weight and importance that the traveler has the right to attach to the invitation extended to cross by the open gates or the signal of the flagman.

In Louisville Bridge Co. v. Moroney, 32 Ky. Law Rep., 705, it was said: "The fact that the railroad corporation maintained the watchman and gates at the intersection of the streets where the accident occurred, was an invitation to the public to cross, and an assurance to them that they would be safe in so doing, when the gates were open or raised." To the same effect is Sights v. L. & N. R. Co., 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1548; Dick v. L. & N. R. Co., 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1068; L. & N. R. Co. v. Wilson, 30 Ky. Law Rep., 1048.

In lieu of the instructions given, the court should, on a re-trial of the case, instruct the jury as follows:

"1. The court instructs the jury that it was the duty of defendant's agents and servants in charge of its train to use ordinary care to prevent collisions with, and injury to, persons traveling the street where it crosses the railroad track, at the place appellant was struck, by keeping a lookout in approaching said crossing, and in giving reasonably sufficient signals, by ringing the engine bell, to warn travelers of the approach of the train, and by running at such rate of speed as was reasonably consistent with the safety of persons traveling the street. And if the jury believe, from the evidence, that, on the occasion in controversy, the defendant's agents and servants in charge of its train failed in the performance of all or any of these duties, and by reason of such failure the collision occurred, then the jury will find for the plaintiff; unless they believe, from the evidence, that plaintiff failed to exercise ordinary care for his own safety.

"2. The court instructs the jury that it was the duty of the flagman at the intersection of the railroad track with Broadway street to give persons approaching said crossing warning of the approach of trains, so as to give them a reasonable opportunity to avoid being injured in crossing the track; and if the jury believe, from the evidence, that, at the time and place complained of by plaintiff, the defendant company, through its flagman, failed to discharge this duty, and by reason thereof the plaintiff, while exercising ordinary care for his own safety, was injured in his person or property in attempting to cross the track, the jury should find for the plaintiff.

"3. They are further instructed that if they believe, from the evidence, that the flagman signalled the plaintiff to cross the track, then this circumstance was an invitation on the part of the defendant to plaintiff and the public to cross, and an assurance that the track could be crossed in safety; and the plaintiff was not guilty of negligence in attempting to cross, unless the jury believe, from the evidence, that he failed to use ordinary care for his own safety and protection. And if the jury believe that the defendant's flagman did signal plaintiff to cross, yet if they further believe that plaintiff failed to exercise ordinary care for his own safety, then the law is for the defendant, and the jury should so find.

"4. If the jury find for the plaintiff, they will award him such damages as they may believe, from the evidence, he has sustained, including the reasonable value of the horse, wagon and contents, and clothing injured or destroyed, not exceeding $225.00 for the horse, $95.00 for the wagon and contents, and $15.00 for clothing; for the amount expended, if any, for doctor's bills and medicine, in effecting, or attempting to effect a cure, and for loss of time directly caused by his injuries, not exceeding $150.00; and for the mental and physical pain, if any, that he has suffered, or may suffer, as the direct cause of the injuries sustained, and for any permanent impairment of his power to earn money, if any, not exceeding in all the sum of $10,000.00.

"5. The court instructs the jury that if they believe, from the evidence, that, at the time and place plaintiff claims to have been injured, he failed to exercise ordinary care in crossing the railroad track, and but for such failure upon his part, the injury would not have occurred, then the law is for the defendant, and you should so find, although you may believe, from the evidence, that the persons in charge of the train, as well as the flagman, were, each or both, guilty of negligence.

"6. Ordinary care, as used in these instructions, is that degree of care that ordinarily prudent persons would usually exercise if surrounded by the same or similar circumstances to those proven in this case.

"7. Negligence is the failure to exercise ordinary care."

The judgment is reversed, with directions for a new trial, in conformity with this opinion.

O'BANNION'S ADM'R v. SOUTHERN RY. CO. IN KY.

(Filed May 12, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Railroads—Trespassers on Track of—Infants—The deceased was a trespasser on appellee's track, and the fact that it was an infant, two years old, added no duty or responsibility on the railroad's employes to anticipate its presence on the track, or to keep a lookout in advance of actually seeing its peril.

2. Same—Instructions—There was no evidence to show that the child was killed by the negligent acts of those in charge of the train, and the peremptory instruction to find for appellee was properly given.

Edwards & Godson for appellant.

Wallace & Harris and Edward Colston for appellee.

Appeal from Woodford Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker, affirming.

On the 31st day of March, 1905, the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway Company was prevented from running trains over its track between Lexington and Georgetown, on account of a derailment or wreck between those cities, which, for a while, effectually blocked transportation. In order to transport passengers and freight with as much dispatch, and with as little inconvenience to its patrons as was possible under the then existing circumstances, that company detoured its trains over the track of appellee, from Lexington, through Versailles and Midway, to Georgetown, and then ran them from the last named city to their destination, over its own track. One of these detouring trains was a very heavy, through passenger train from the south, consisting of a locomotive, tender and eight or nine coaches. This train passed through Midway on the morning of the 31st of March, 1905, going in the direction of Georgetown. While going down a heavy grade, at a point about two miles from Midway, and about one hundred feet from a private farm crossing, it ran over and killed appellant's intestate, a little girl slightly over two years of age. The appellant, the father of the child, qualified as administrator of her estate in the Woodford County Court, and then instituted this action against appellee, charging negligence and carelessness. The issues were made and a trial had. At the conclusion of the testimony introduced by appellant, the trial court, on motion of appellee, peremptorily instructed the jury to find a verdict for it, and, on the return of that verdict by the jury, it entered a judgment thereon, in accord therewith, and this cause is now before this court, on an appeal from that judgment.

The appellee railroad corporation, having licensed the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway Company to run its cars over its line, it is as responsible for whatever accident took place in the operation of the train as if it had been one of its own; and, therefore, so far as the responsibility of the appellee for the injury involved here is concerned, we will treat the case as if the accident was occasioned by one of its own trains. (McCabe's Adm'x v. Maysville & B. S. R. Co., &c., 112 Ky., 861; Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Breeden's Adm'x, 111 Ky., 729.)

The little child killed by the accident above detailed was a trespasser upon the track of appellee, and, therefore, its employes in charge of the train which caused the injury owed her no duty except to use reasonable diligence, after her peril was discovered, to prevent the accident. (Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co. v. Nipp's Adm'x, 100

S. W., 246; Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co. v. Barbour's Adm'r, 93 S. W., 24; Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company v. Redmon's Adm'r, 91 S. W., 722; Hulsey's Adm'r v. L., H. & St. L. Ry. Co., 87 S. W., 302; Davis, Adm'r v. Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co., &c., 75 S. W., 275; Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. Vltitoe's Adm'r, 41 S. W., 260; Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. Logsdon's Adm'r, 81 S. W., 655; Freel's Adm'r v. L., H. & St. L. Ry. Co., 89 S. W., 143; Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railroad Co. v. Bean's Ex'or, decided May 8th, 1908.) And the fact that the decedent was an infant only two years old added no duty or responsibility on the railroad's employees to anticipate her presence on the track, or to keep a lookout for her in advance of actually seeing her peril. (Freel's Adm'r v. L., H. & St. L. Ry. Co., supra; Dorsey's Adm'r v. Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., 80 S. W., 1131; Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. Logsdon's Adm'r, 81 S. W., 655.)

It only remains, then, to ascertain whether or not the employees in charge of the train saw the child's peril in time, by the exercise of ordinary care, to prevent her injury.

It was proved, for the plaintiff, that the track, from where the train rounded a curve to the point where the child was struck by the engine, a distance of five hundred and forty-nine feet, was perfectly straight, and that those in the cab of the engine could have seen her for the whole time the train was traversing this distance, if she was actually on the track; that from a point five hundred and forty-nine feet from where the child was killed, the engineer and fireman were both observed looking out of the window of the cab, straight down the track, in the direction where the little girl was killed. It was further shown that when the engine reached a point within one hundred and four feet of the child, the engineer sounded the alarm whistle and applied the brakes, showing that, at that point at least, he had observed her peril. The O'Bannion home was about one hundred feet from the railroad track, and there was a little path leading from a corner of the yard to it. Just where this path reached the track, the child's bonnet was found lying between the rails. She was killed seventy-five feet from this point.

The record fails to disclose at what time the child went on the track, or at what point. No one saw her, so far as the evidence shows, except at the place where she was killed. So far as the evidence shows to the contrary, she may have gone on the track at the point where she was killed, and after the train was in so short a distance of her as to preclude the possibility of her being saved after her peril was discovered.

It is not contended that the train could have been stopped and the injury prevented between the point where the alarm whistle was sounded and where the tragedy occurred, a distance of one hundred and four feet. Of course, if the child had been on the track when the train came around the curve, five hundred and forty-nine feet away, there was nothing to prevent the engineer and fireman from seeing her from that point on; and as the evidence showed they were looking down the track from that point on, it could well be assumed that they saw her; and to see her at all upon the track, considering her age, was to realize her peril. But we have no right to assume, in the absence of evidence, that the child was on the track all the time while the train was running the distance of five hundred and forty-nine feet, to where she was struck. She might have gone on the track and off of it again several times while the train was traversing that distance; certainly, if she had been on the side of the railroad track, she could have walked on it and imperiled her life long after the train reached a point of proximity to her, which would have precluded the possibility of saving her life after her peril was discovered.

But it is said that, because her bonnet was found on the railroad track seventy-five feet from where she was killed, it must be presumed that she had dropped it at point where it was found, and walked the distance of seventy-five feet to the point of the accident; and that this would show she had been on the railroad track during the whole time the train was coming the five hundred and forty-nine feet from the curve in the road. We do not think this is a legitimate deduction. There is no evidence as to how long the child had been playing on the track, or in the neighborhood of it. We do not know whether her bonnet was dropped by her at the point where it was found, or whether it was blown there by the winds, or what cause, or force or circumstance brought it there. If we assume that the child dropped it there when she got upon the track, it does not follow that she remained on the track and walked down to the point seventy-five feet away, where she was finally killed. For aught that appears to the contrary, she may have been on and off the track several times after she dropped her bonnet at the point where it was found, before she finally reached the place where she was killed. We can not assume the existence of any unproved fact necessary to establish the plaintiff's cause of action. The burden was upon him to prove every such material fact; and if he failed so to do, then he can not recover.

The facts in the case of Freel's Adm'r v. L., H. & St. L. Ry. Co., before cited, were very similar to those in the case at bar. There an infant seventeen months old wandered upon the railroad track, and it was shown that she could have been seen by those in charge of the train for at least three hundred yards from where the accident occurred; and it was insisted that this was evidence sufficient to take the case to the jury. On that subject, it was said:

"There was no evidence introduced to show that the child was on the track when the train reached the point where it is claimed it could have been seen by those in charge of the train. There is nothing in the record to show that the child may not have gotten on the track just at the time those in charge of the train discovered its peril, and endeavored to prevent the accident. It is true, one witness testified that, some time before the accident, she had seen the child on the track; but the train was not then in sight, nor did the witness know that it was then approaching. Therefore, the evidence failed to show that the child remained on the track from the time it was seen by this witness until it was killed. It may have walked on and off the track two or three times after the witness saw it upon the track before it was killed. We do not think that there was any evidence from which the jury could have inferred that the child was killed by the negligent act of those in charge of the train."

Applying the reasoning of the foregoing opinion to the case in hand, there was no evidence to show that the little girl was upon the track when the engine rounded the curve and reached a point from where those in charge of it would have seen her had she then been upon the track; or that she did not get on the track just before the train reached her, and when no effort would have saved her life. It necessarily follows that the plaintiff failed to make out his case, in the absence of evidence establishing these very material facts; and this being so, the peremptory instruction was properly given. Sympathy for the little sufferer can not be substituted for the lacking evidence necessary to establish the plaintiff's cause of action.

Judgment affirmed.

Whole court sitting.

Judge Nunn dissenting.

BARBEE v. STOKES, &c.

(Filed May 12, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Deeds—Action to set aside on the Ground of Fraud—Evidence— This action to set aside a deed on the ground of fraud and undue influence can not be sustained for want of proof. The deed was made four years before the grantor's death, and was at once put to record. Appellees knew about it from the time it was made, and waited until the death of the grantor to institute the action. The facts and circumstances show that the grantor was the grandmother of appellant. She raised him from infancy and he remained with her during her old age and helpless condition, and her action in conveying him the property is what any grandmother would have done under the circumstances.

J. J. Osborne for appellant.

McMillan & Talbott, Robert Buckler and John P. McCartney for appellees.

Appeal from Robertson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker, reversing.

This is an appeal from the judgment of the Robertson Circuit Court, in the action of Annie E. Stokes and others against Luther Barbee and his mother, Sarah Barbee. The action was instituted by the appellees for the purpose of having a deed, made by Elizabeth Prather, deceased, to Luther Barbee, set aside and held for naught and declared a fraud upon the rights of the plaintiffs; and that the appellees and Sarah Barbee should be adjudged the owners of the land in the proportion set out in the petition. The deed attacked was made on the 21st day of June, 1902, by Elizabeth Prather, the decedent, to Luther Barbee, appellant, for the recited consideration of the love and affection of a grandmother to a grandchild, and the further consideration that Luther Barbee was to maintain and care for the grantor during her natural life, and to furnish to her that care and attention that a son should furnish to a parent until her death. That in consideration thereof, Elizabeth Prather sold and conveyed to the appellant, Luther Barbee, the property in controversy herein, consisting of sixty-nine acres, three roods and eighteen poles of land lying in Robertson county, Kentucky.

The appellees state in their petition that, at the time the deed was made, to-wit: on the 21st day of June, 1902, Elizabeth Prather, the grantor, was over eighty years of age, feeble in mind and body and incompetent to enter into a contract or to make a deed. Further, that the appellant, Luther Barbee, lived with Elizabeth Prather, on the land conveyed to him, and exercised undue influence over her; that he took advantage of her feebleness of body and mind and overreached her by persuasion, threats and importunities, and by influence unduly and improperly exerted obtained the conveyance of the land to himself. They further say that, while Elizabeth Prather was under the influence of Luther Barbee, and at a time when, by reason of her feeble condition of mind and body, she was unable to resist his importunities, she made the conveyance, and that it was a fraud on the rights of plaintiff, and that there was no valuable consideration for it; and that, in fact, Luther Barbee received more from the farm than his services to her were worth.

The appellees in this case, in conjunction with Sarah Barbee, who was joined as defendant in the action in the circuit court, are the sole heirs' at law of Elizabeth Prather, deceased. Issue was joined on the facts set out in the petition, and proof taken, and on final submission of the cause the court adjudged the deed invalid because obtained by improper influence, and as being a fraud on the rights of appellees, and set it aside; and in addition adjudged that appellees recover of Luther Barbee rent for the use of the land from the death of Elizabeth Prather, the grantor in the deed. From this ruling he prosecutes this appeal.

The question before us is one wholly of fact, and, as we have often said, this court is loath to differ from the trial judge upon his conclusion as to the facts submitted to him for adjudication; but in the case before us we feel constrained, by our conception of the value of the evidence adduced, to reach a conclusion different from his.

In support of the allegations of the petition, the appellees introduced evidence of declarations on the part of the grantor, Elizabeth Prather, to the effect that she was forced to make the deed, or that she made it against her will; and such other like statements, which, if true, would show that she was dissatisfied with what she had done. In addition to this, appellees undertook to show that Luther Barbee was lazy and trifling, and that he was really supported by his grandmother, rather than that he took care of her by working on the farm. Much of this evidence was from the appellees themselves, or those of near kin to them by blood or marriage. Waiving all questions of the competency of most of this evidence, we think it is more than met and rebutted by the evidence in behalf of the appellant. In his behalf, the neighbors and friends of Elizabeth Prather showed that he was industrious in his habits and faithful to his grandmother, and that she had the utmost affection for him. This was especially shown by the declarations of the old lady, that Luther had stood by her and taken care of her in her old age, when her other children and grandchildren were out in the world looking after their own interests.

If the evidence in favor of the appellant is to be believed, Luther Barbee more than paid the full market value of the property he received from his grandmother, by services rendered her. He was about thirty-five years of age at the time the deed was made, and had lived with his grandmother all his life. After the death of her second husband, she had, for many years, lived with Luther, alone upon the farm. He had stayed with her and never married, devoting his whole time to looking after her property and her interests. That the grantor should have conceived an affection for him much greater than that she bore her other children and grandchildren, under these circumstances, is entirely consonant with nature. The deed was made about four years before the death of the grantor. It was at once placed upon record, and the evidence adduced in behalf of appellees shows that they knew all about it from the time it was made. If it was true, as they undertook to show, that Luther Barbee was mistreating his grandmother, and defrauding her—that he kept her in fear and used her fear of him to induce her to convey to him all of her property—it seems to us that it was the duty of her children and other grandchildren to have gone to her rescue and made an effort, within the four years intervening from the execution of the deed to the death of the old lady, to alleviate her miserable situation. If she was so old and feeble of intellect that she could not resist the sinister and undue influence of the appellant, they might have had a committee appointed for her, and the deed set aside, when her condition was plainly visible, and when there could be no doubt as to whether she was able to manage her property or convey it, according to a will of her own. But, on the contrary, well knowing (if their evidence be true) that the grantor had made the deed, they allowed it to stand, without a word of protest, or without doing anything to aid her in her helpless condition, for four years, and then, after her death, this action was immediately instituted.

It seems to us that, taking all the facts and circumstances of this case into consideration, Mrs. Prather, in conveying her property, which was not worth over three thousand or four thousand dollars, at the outside, to the appellant, whom she had raised from an infant, and who had remained with her faithfully during her old age and helpless condition, did no more for him than he deserved; that her action in the premises was just what any grandmother would have done for such a grandson, under the same circumstances.

For these reasons, the judgment is reversed, with directions that the petition of the appellees be dismissed.

GRAHAM, &c. v. RICE, &c.

(Filed May 12, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Injunction Bond—Action On—Damages Recoverable—Relief Sought—Liability of Bondsmen—In an action between two sets of claimants to be the officers of an electric light and power company, in which one set procured an injunction restraining the other set from acting as such officers, which injunction was dismissed, Held—In a suit on the injunction bond, that the injunction was not sought to aid the plaintiffs in their efforts to show the legality of their election, but it was the means they employed to secure possession and control of the property of the corporation, in order that they might reap the benefits of its business, and, therefore, under the relief sought, the bondsmen are not liable for the expenses incurred in defeating same.

W. J. Webb, T. N. Smith and Robbins & Thomas for appellants.

Lee & Hester for appellees.

Appeal from Fulton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lassing, affirming.

In 1906, appellants and appellees were each claiming to be the officers of the Fulton Electric Light & Power Company. Appellants were in possession of the plant and property of said company, and refused to recognize the validity of appellees' claims to the offices. Thereupon, appellees brought suit against appellants and prayed for an injunction against them, enjoining and restraining them from further interfering with the rights of appellees in managing, controlling and operating the said electric light and power company, and requiring them to surrender said property up to appellees. On February 9th, 1906, the relief asked for was granted by the circuit judge of the district, after he had required the plaintiffs to execute a bond to the defendants in the sum of $5,000.00.

The defendants thereupon gave notice that they would, on the 26th day of February following, make a motion before Hon. Ed. C. O'Rear, one of the judges of this court, to have the injunction dissolved. This motion was made, and on the 28th of February was sustained by said judge, and the injunction dissolved. Thereupon, at the next succeeding term of the Fulton Circuit Court, the plaintiffs dismissed their petition. Thereafter the defendants in the injunction suit brought suit on the injunction bond, wherein they sought to recover of the sureties on said bond the costs and expenses to which they had been put in defending the injunction suit, amounting to $479.55; and also for the sum of $55.00, to which they alleged they were entitled as fees which would have accrued to them during the fifteen days which they were prevented from managing the affairs of the company, and for the further sum of $50.00, estimated value of time lost in attending the trial, making a total of $584.55, which they sought to recover of the bondsmen.

On motion of the bondsmen, the plaintiffs were required to elect whether they would prosecute their claim for value of time and salary, and if so, in whose name and against whom, or for the expenses, attorneys' fees, &c., incurred in defending the injunction suit. The plaintiffs elected to prosecute the suit for expenses, attorneys' fees, &c., and the claim for lost time and salary was dismissed without prejudice. The answer denied all liability, on the ground that the sole object and purpose of the suit in which the bond was executed was a mandatory injunction, by which means the plaintiffs in that suit sought to get possession of the electric light and power company. That this was the only relief sought in said suit. The record of the injunction suit was made a part of the answer.

Upon final hearing, the trial judge, to whom the case was submitted without the intervention of a jury, found that the plaintiff had expended, in attorneys' fees and costs, the sum of $477.30, and that these sums so expended were reasonable and necessary in the defense of said suit. The court further found that the main purpose and object of the suit in which the bond was executed was to secure an injunction, and that, therefore, the plaintiffs, defendants in that suit, were not entitled to recover the money which they expended for attorneys' fees and necessary costs in their efforts to defeat the application for an injunction, and dismissed the petition, and denied to plaintiffs the right to recover any sum whatever on the injunction bond.

Two questions are presented for our consideration on this appeal. First, was there a mis-joinder of actions; and, second, did the trial court err in denying to plaintiffs the right to recover on the bond?

Appellants urge that, inasmuch as the bond was a joint undertaking, and the parties were officers and named in the bond, and interested in who should manage and receive the fees of the corporation, that they are jointly liable for any damage or any loss which accrued to the defendants by reason of the execution of the bond. This contention, however, is not sound. There was no obligation whatever, on the part of the sureties on the bond, to be answerable to the defendants for any loss of salary, or for loss of time which they might sustain by reason of their being deprived of the offices. If such an action existed in favor of any of the defendants, it was an independent action in favor of each officer individually against the company, and no one officer had any interest in the salary that might be due any other officer, nor did any officer have any interest in any claim which any other officer might have due him for time lost. Clearly these claims, if they existed at all, could not be prosecuted in one and the same suit, and the court did not err in requiring plaintiffs to elect.

On the second ground urged for reversal, it is necessary to determine whether or not the injunction was the object sought by plaintiffs in the prosecution of their suit. If it was, then, under a long line of decisions of this court, there could be no recovery on the bond, but, if the injunction was merely asked in order to aid plaintiffs to preserve their rights until they had obtained the desired relief, or to prevent the commission of a wrong before they could prosecute their suit to a judgment, then a recovery could be had on the bond for such reasonable fees and expenses as were incurred in the efforts expended by defendants in procuring the discharge of the injunction.

In the case of Chicago, St. Louis & New Orleans R. R. Company v. Sullivan, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 46, in discussing a similar question, this court said:

"The only question involved in the proceedings was whether the railroad company was entitled to the possession of the condemned right of way after having deposited the amount assessed in favor of appellee by the ad quod damnum jury, with the county clerk. If the injunction in that case had been sustained, it covered all the relief sought, and the judgment, therefore, dissolving the injunction, does not authorize the recovery of attorneys' fees."

And, in the case of the New National Turnpike Company v. Dulaney, &c., 86 Ky., 518, it was held:

"That when the attachment or injunction is merely ancillary or in aid of the relief sought, or is relied on to secure the relief, when obtained, or to prevent the commission of a wrongful or tortious act, that would result in irreparable injury before the termination of the prime cause of action, then a recovery may be had on the bond for the payment of reasonable counsel fees, when the defendant has succeeded in discharging the attachment or dissolving the injunction; but, on the contrary, when the injunction is the relief sought, and, in fact, gives the relief, if sustained, no recovery for counsel fees can be had."

To the same effect are Burgen v. Sharer, 53 Ky., 399; Bennett v. Lambert, 100 Ky., 731; Tyler & Apperson v. Hamilton, 108 Ky., 120; Simpkins v. Well, 22 Ky. Law Rep., 542.

In the injunction suit under consideration, the defendants were enjoined from interfering with the plaintiffs in said case in the management, operation and control of the corporation, and the defendants were all ordered and commanded to surrender and deliver to the plaintiffs in said case, the possession and control of the property and effects of the corporation. This injunction was granted in strict conformity with the prayer of the petition, and it gave to plaintiffs the full and complete relief sought. The prayer of the petition asked for no other remedy or right, and, as the best evidence that the plaintiffs in the injunction suit sought no other relief, upon the dissolution of the injunction by the judge of this court, they dismissed their suit, and did not seek to have any other rights tried out or determined.

Appellants insist that the titles to the offices in question were involved in the injunction suit, and that, therefore, the injunction proceedings were merely steps taken in aid of their efforts to secure possession of the offices. The relief sought must be determined by the prayer of their petition, and that prayer was for a mandatory injunction requiring the defendants to surrender the offices and property of the corporation to the plaintiffs, and enjoining them from further interfering with the plaintiffs in the possession thereof. In order that this might properly be done, plaintiffs asked that they be declared the duly elected officers, &c. To secure the injunction at all, it was necessary for the plaintiffs to show themselves entitled to the offices. This was a condition prerequisite to their right to the injunction. It was the possession and control of the property which they sought to secure through the injunction, and the granting or refusal of the injunction necessarily determined the case, for, in order to show themselves entitled to it, it was necessary to establish the legality of their election. Plaintiffs' right to the offices might have been determined in a suit wherein no injunction was sought, but such a suit, if prosecuted to a successful termination, would not have brought to the plaintiffs the desired result, and this, as above stated, is the real test of their right to recover herein.

Being of opinion that the injunction herein was not sought to aid plaintiffs in their efforts to show the legality of their election, but, on the contrary, that it was the means which they employed to secure possession and control of the property of the corporation, in order that they might reap the benefits which would accrue to them from the conduct of its business, and was, therefore, the relief sought, the bondsmen are not liable for the expenses incurred in defeating same, and the trial court did not err in so holding.

Judgment affirmed.

CAMPBELL v. DREHER, BY NEXT FRIEND.

(Filed May 12, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Action by Infant, by Next Friend—Failure to File Affidavit—Motion to Dismiss Action—Tender of Affidavit Pending Motions—In an action by an infant, by next friend, for damages for injuries received by being run over by an automobile, under sections 35 and 37, of the Civil Code, it was not error in the trial court to refuse to dismiss the action because of the failure of the plaintiff to file with his action the affidavit required by section 37, showing his right to sue as next friend, where the plaintiff tendered such affidavit when the motion to dismiss was made.

2. Motion for Continuance—Absent Witness—Diligence Used—Cumulative Evidence—It was not error in the trial court to refuse a motion for continuance of a case, where it was not shown that any diligence was used by the party in securing the attendance of his witnesses at the trial, and where the evidence of the absent witness was merely cumulative.

3. Evidence—Extent of Injury—Excessive Verdict—In an action by a sixteen year old boy for damages for being negligently run over by an automobile, where the evidence was conflicting on the question of negligence and the extent of the injury, a verdict for $500.00 in damages can not be held to be excessive, under the evidence.

4. Automobiles—Prejudice Against—Consideration—The fact that there may be a prejudice against automobiles will not be considered in a case where a sixteen year old boy, riding on a bicycle, was run over and seriously injured by an automobile, where it is shown by the proof that the owner of the automobile, after the accident, immediately ran away with his automobile, without offering any aid to the boy, or to learn the extent of his injury.

Carruth, Chatterson & Blitz for appellant.

Harry W. Robinson and Isaac Sherman for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas Branch, Second Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lassing, affirming.

In a collision between appellee, a sixteen year old boy, on a bicycle, and appellant's automobile, appellee was injured. Conceiving that his injuries were the direct result of appellant's negligence in operating his machine, appellee, through his father, as next friend, instituted suit to recover damages. Appellant denied liability, and pleaded that the injuries, if any, to the boy, were the result of his own carelessness and negligence. Upon the issues thus joined, a trial was had, which resulted in a verdict in favor of appellee for $500. To reverse this judgment, this appeal is prosecuted, and appellant relies upon four grounds: First, that the trial court erred in overruling his motion to dismiss appellee's petition because he failed to file with his petition the affidavit of his next friend, as provided for by section 37, of the Code of Practice; second, because the trial court erred in refusing him a continuance on his showing, made at the time of the trial, that the witness, Dr. Geo. W. Leachman, was absent from the State, and that his testimony could not be procured at that time; third, because the verdict was against the evidence; and, fourth, because it was excessive. These objections are taken, and will be considered in chronological order.

Sub-section three, of section 35, of the Code, provides that:

"The action of an infant, or of a person of unsound mind, who resides in this State, and who has no guardian, curator, or committee residing herein, or whose guardian, curator or committee refuses to sue, or his action against his guardian, curator or committee, may be brought by his next friend."

And section 37 provides:

"No person shall sue, as next friend, unless he reside in this State, and be free from disability, nor unless he file his own affidavit, showing his right to sue as next friend, according to the provisions of this chapter."

Upon being served with process, appellant at once filed a motion to dismiss the petition, because it was not accompanied by the proper affidavit, showing the right of appellee's father to sue as next friend. While this motion was under submission, the affidavit, conforming to the provisions of section 37, of the Code, was tendered and permitted to be filed. Appellant insists that it came too late. That the provisions of section 37 are mandatory, and that, upon motion being made to dismiss, the trial court should not have permitted the affidavit to be filed.

Appellant relies upon the cases of Staton v. Bryant, 5 Ky. Law Rep., 426, and Hall v. Snipes, 10 Ky. Law Rep., 435, to support this contention. We are of opinion, however, that the court's ruling in neither of these cases will bear the construction placed upon it by appellant, for, in the former case, the court distinctly held that the affidavit, which was tendered when the motion to dismiss was made, should have been filed, and, in the latter case, which was reversed upon other grounds, in dealing with the question of the failure of the next friend to file the required affidavit, it said:

"On the failure of appellant (if appellee requires it) to show, by his affidavit, his capacity to sue, the action should be dismissed without prejudice. The affidavit being made, the action should be heard on its merits."

In the more recent case of Spicer v. Holbrook, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1812, the question was again before this court, and it was there held that the motion to dismiss the petition because the required affidavit was not filed should have prevailed. The case was reversed and remanded, with instructions to the trial court to require the plaintiff to comply with the provisions of the Code, as to affidavit, &c. In each of these cases, practically the same question was before this court as is here presented, and, while the court, in each case, recognized the provisions of section 37 as mandatory, it was held that a compliance with its terms might be waived by the defendant, but that, if not waived, and a motion was made for a rule to show cause why the petition should not be dismissed for non-compliance with this provision of the Code, then, if the affidavit was not made, the motion should be sustained and the petition dismissed. We are of opinion that the trial judge did not err in permitting the affidavit to be filed.

Appellant's second ground for reversal is not well taken, for two reasons. First, it is not shown that he used any diligence whatever to secure the presence of this witness at his trial. The record shows that his answer was filed on the 15th day of December, 1906; the reply was filed on the 22d day of December, 1906, completing the issues; the case was called for trial the 26th of March, 1907, or more than ninety days after the issues were made up. During all of this time, save about two weeks prior to the date of the trial, as shown by the affidavit, the witness, Dr. Geo. W. Leachman, was within the jurisdiction of the court, and could have been subpoenaed, and his attendance procured. This was not done, and the fact that appellant did not know he was going to leave offers no excuse for his failure to have a subpoena issued for this witness at a time when he knew he was within the jurisdiction of the court, and could have been served.

The court did not err in refusing to continue the case because of the absence of this witness for the further reason that it is shown that his evidence would have been merely cumulative. He was in the automobile with the witness, John Straus, and the facts to which he would have testified, if present, as disclosed by the affidavit, were testified to by the witness, John Straus. The ruling of the trial judge, in permitting this affidavit for continuance to be read, as the deposition of the absent witness, was certainly as favorable to appellant as he could ask.

We come next to consider the verdict of the jury. Was it against the weight of the evidence and excessive?

Appellee testifies plainly and clearly that the accident was caused solely by the negligent act of appellant and his son, who was in charge of the automobile, in attempting to pass from the south side of the street across to the north side, directly in front of him, and when so close to him that he could not avoid a collision. His testimony is corroborated, in part, by three other witnesses, and, while they do not agree with him in his statement that the machine ran over him, they do agree that it ran into him and knocked him down upon the street, and the witness Hepler says that, although he did not notice them until just as the collision occurred, still he saw the automobile run right into the bicycle.

As opposed to this testimony, appellant says that the accident was caused by the negligence and carelessness of the boy, who ran his bicycle into the automobile in spite of all his son, the chauffeur in charge, could do to prevent him from so doing, and this version as to the manner in which the accident occurred is supported, in the main, by the witness John Straus. It was for the jury to say, under the proof before them, who was in fault. On appellant's motion, they were shown the automobile, and were given an opportunity to see the imprint or dent which appellant alleges the bicycle made in the fender of the machine when it struck it. They were also permitted to hear the explanation which appellant offered of his conduct after the collision, and his reason for not stopping his machine after the accident occurred, that he might learn the extent of appellee's injuries, if any, and, with these witnesses and facts before them, they decided in favor of appellee. We are not prepared to say that they were not warranted in so doing.

The automobile in question is shown to have been a large machine, some ten feet or more in length, with a seating capacity for four passengers. The witness Straus testifies that it was traveling at the rate of six or eight miles an hour, which is the speed limit on Broadway. Appellee testifies that it ran over him, after knocking him down; other witnesses who saw the accident say that it did not, but that it knocked him down and whirled over him, and Mr.

Straus testifies that when he came back, the boy appeared excited and was crying. Whether the machine ran over him or not is immaterial; it ran into him and knocked him down, and the doctor who waited on him testifies that he was severely bruised in the side and about the legs, and had a knot upon his side about the size of a goose egg, and suffered from shock, and the pain was very severe; and he was confined to his bed for some days. The boy testifies that he was in bed for three weeks, and could not work for a month, and suffered severe pain in his side and legs. In our opinion, a verdict for $500 is not excessive, in a case where one is injured to the extent that appellee in this case is shown to have been injured.

It is urged, by counsel for appellant, that the verdict in this case is entirely the result of the prejudice existing in the mind of the average jurymen against automobiles and their owners. It may be said, in response to this argument, that if such a prejudice exists, it is no doubt due largely to the fact that the owners of automobiles, when accidents occur, too frequently, as was done by appellant in this case, instead of stopping to learn the extent of the injury inflicted, if any, put on more steam and speed away, leaving the victim to care for himself as best he can. Appellant testifies that the reason why he did not stop his machine or make an effort to learn the extent of the damage done, was because he had with him in the machine a sister-in-law, who was in delicate health, and who could not stand excitement, and he feared that if he stopped it would be very injurious to her health.

The reason offered would have justified him in not bringing her back, but he had his son with him, an experienced chauffeur, who was in charge of and managing and driving the machine, and we see no reason offered in the record before us why he did not stop the machine, when he had passed beyond the point where the accident occurred, and get out and go back, and at least learn the extent of the injury, if any, which had been inflicted upon the boy. Had he done this, and offered such assistance as he could to relieve his suffering, it would have tended, at least in a degree, to remove the prejudice of which his counsel so bitterly complains. The instructions given by the court admirably presented the law of the case, as warranted by the facts.

Perceiving no error in the conduct of the trial prejudicial to the rights of appellant, the judgment is affirmed.

— — —

N., C. & ST. L. RY. CO. v. RUSSELL.

(Filed May 8, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Railroads—Cattle Guards—Reasonable Construction—Sufficiency—Under Kentucky Statutes, section 1793, requiring "all corporations and persons owning or controlling and operating railroads, to erect and maintain cattle guards at all terminal points of fences constructed along their lines," if a cattle guard is not reasonably sufficient to prevent cattle from going across it, then it is not such a guard as the statute contemplates, although it may be in general use by all railroads.

2. Same—Care Required of Railroads—Question for Jury—This does not mean that a cattle guard must be so constructed as that, under no condition, cattle can pass over it, or that it must afford absolute or perfect protection against trespassing or wandering stock, but railroad companies should at least exercise ordinary care to provide and maintain guards reasonably sufficient for the purpose intended, and no better test can be applied to determine the statutory sufficiency of a guard than to submit, under competent evidence, the question of its reasonable sufficiency to a jury.

Wheeler, Hughes & Berry for appellant.

Oliver, Oliver & McGregor for appellee.

Appeal from Marshall Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, affirming.

The principal questions in this case are, whether or not the appellant company erected and maintained at a public road crossing on its line of railway, at a point near Hardin, in Marshall county, Kentucky, a sufficient cattle guard within the meaning of the statute, to entitle it to a verdict under direction of the court, and whether or not the trial court properly instructed the jury.

The action was brought to recover damages for the value of stock killed by one of appellant's trains, and, upon a trial, there was a verdict and judgment for appellee. The stock killed had passed over a cattle guard, and were on the right of way at a point where they could not escape, and it is not contended that the trainmen were guilty of any negligence. So that, the entire case turns upon the proposition whether or not the cattle guard was erected and maintained in the manner required by the statute, and reasonably sufficient to prevent stock from going from the public road onto the right of way, where they were killed. The cattle guard in question was eight feet square, made of iron plates attached together and placed on the ties, and on the surface of the iron, at spaces of a few inches apart, there were sharp, pointed projections, also made of iron, intended to be so arranged that an animal walking across would necessarily step on the pointed iron, thereby hurting or injuring its feet. This particular cattle guard is known as "Cook's Standard," and is in general use on the line of appellant's railroad, and is used by other railroad companies, and was shown by the evidence of witnesses for appellant to be one of the best and most approved styles of cattle guards in general use. There was evidence for appellee tending to show that a number of the sharp projecting points had been bent, and that the ties upon which the iron plate was laid were embedded in the ground, so that the iron was almost-level with the top of the earth, and that cattle and horses habitually passed over it. As all of the evidence introduced on the trial was to the effect that the cattle guard was a practical one, of approved pattern and in general use, appellant insists that it fully complied with the statute, although cattle may have walked across it—the argument being that when a cattle guard, the utility of which has been tested and approved by railroads, is erected and maintained, the company has discharged the full measure of its duty and can not be held liable, although it may not be sufficient to prevent stock from passing over it.

It is not necessary, nor, indeed, proper, that we should express an opinion as to the kind of cattle guard that should be erected and maintained. But the fact that the cattle guard was the same as that in general use on the line of appellant's railroad, and also on other roads, is not conclusive evidence that it was a sufficient cattle guard within the meaning of section 1793, of the Kentucky Statutes, which reads, in part, as follows: "All corporations and persons owning or controlling and operating railroads as aforesaid, shall erect and maintain cattle guards at all terminal points of fences constructed along their lines." This statute does not undertake to prescribe the character of cattle guards that shall be used, but manifestly the intention was that it should be such a one as is reasonably sufficient to prevent cattle from crossing it, otherwise it would be of little or no service. Nor does the erection of cattle guards, however sufficient they may be, meet the demands of the statute, which declares that they shall not only be erected, but maintained. It is, therefore, as much the duty to maintain them in proper condition, for the purpose intended, as it is to erect them. Whether or not a cattle guard comes up to this requirement, is a question of fact that can not be conclusively determined by either the opinion of railroad experts or farmers who own land adjoining the railroad, although it is admissible for the railroad company to prove that the cattle guard is one in general use by well-managed railroads, and that it is of the most approved make and construction, and, on the other hand, it is equally competent for the person who is attacking its sufficiency to show that cattle have passed over it, for the purpose of illustrating that it does not answer the purpose for which it was intended. Each case must be adjudged by the particular facts disclosed by the evidence, and under the facts shown by this record, the trial court properly refused the request of appellant for a peremptory instruction in its behalf. (Chicago R. Co. v. Bryant, 29 Ill. App., 17; St. Louis R. Co. v. Busick, 74 Ark., 589; Elliott on Railroads, section 1198; Smead v. Lake Shore R. Co., 58 Mich., 200; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Newly, 164 Ind., 109.)

In Louisville, H. & St. L. R. Co. v. Beauchamp, 21 Ky. Law Rep., 1476, this court said:

"The term 'cattle guard,' as employed in section 1793, of the Kentucky Statutes, means such an appliance as will prevent animals from escaping from enclosures, in which they are confined, over the railroad track, and going upon land of others adjoining the right of way; and any neglect or failure on the part of the railroad to keep them in such a condition as will effect this purpose, renders it liable for any injuries that may result therefrom. No particular form of appliance is prescribed by the statute, but it certainly can not be contended that they should be so constructed that cattle could pass over them with safety.

"This would defeat the very purpose of their requirement."

If a cattle guard is not reasonably sufficient to prevent cattle from going across it, then it is not such a guard as the statute contemplates, although it may be in general use by railroads. This does not mean that a cattle guard must be so constructed as that, under no condition, cattle can pass over it, or that it must afford absolute or perfect protection against trespassing or wandering stock. It would not be reasonable to demand of railroad companies this high measure of care, but they should at least exercise ordinary care to provide and maintain guards reasonably sufficient for the purpose intended. And we do not know a better test that can be applied to determine the statutory sufficiency of a guard, than to submit, under competent evidence, the question of its reasonable sufficiency to a jury, and this the court did, in the following instructions:

"1. It was the duty of the defendant, at the time and place complained of by the plaintiff, to exercise ordinary care to keep and maintain its cattle guards in reasonably safe condition to keep stock from straying from the public road over the same onto its enclosed right of way, and if you shall believe, from the evidence in this case, that defendant failed to exercise such care, and that said cattle guard was insufficient to prevent stock from straying over same, and on its enclosed right of way, and that, by reason thereof, plaintiff's horses did stray from the public highway over same, and onto the enclosed right of way of defendant, and were there struck by one of defendant's engines and trains, then the law, in this case, is for the plaintiff, and you will find for him damages for killing the horse sued for, not exceeding $175.00, and damages for the mare sued for, not exceeding $135.00, and damages for the mule sued for, not exceeding $60.00, and, in all, not exceeding $370.00. But, unless you shall so believe, from the evidence in this case, then the law is for the defendant, and you will so find.

"2. The term 'ordinary care,' as used in instruction No. 1, herein, means such care as ordinarily careful and prudent persons are accustomed to use in their own affairs, and when engaged in a like business, and under like or similar circumstances of this case, and 'negligence' means the failure to exercise such care."

The point is further made that the court erred in discharging two of the jurors, on motion of the plaintiff below, after the jury had been accepted, and while counsel for defendant was stating the case. The record does not disclose why the trial judge took this action, nor does it appear that the rights of appellant were in any wise prejudiced by it. In the absence of any showing to the contrary, we must assume that the trial judge had sufficient reasons for his ruling. At any rate, there is nothing in the record to indicate that appellant was prejudiced by the ruling, and we are not disposed to assume that it was.

Wherefore, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

SCOTT v. O'BRIEN.

(Filed May 12, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Husband and Wife—Alienating the Affections of a Husband—Abandonment by Husband—Proof of Enticement—To support an action for alienating a husband's or wife's affections, it must be established that the defendant is the enticer. Mere proof of abandonment, and that the husband or wife maintains improper relations with the defendant, is not sufficient.

2. Action by Wife—Proof Required—Intentional Conduct of Defendant—Rebuttal Evidence—In an action by a wife against another woman, for alienating the affections of her husband, it is necessary for the plaintiff not only to show alienation of her husband's affections, but that such alienation was due to the intentional conduct of the defendant, and the defendant could introduce any evidence that would tend to rebut either of these facts.

3. Same—General Denial—Evidence Admissible—On the trial of an action for the alienation of a husband's affections, it was competent for the defendant to prove that the husband sought her, and made love to her, and that she endeavored to get rid of him and have him return to his wife, and that he really sought her for the purpose of getting her money, and not because of any affection for her, and his letters to, and conversations with, her, as well as her financial condition, and the money she had given him by reason of his threats, and all this evidence was admissible under a general denial by the defendant.

Sims, DuBose & Rodes, for appellant.

Proctor & Herdman, Watkins & Birkhead and L. P. Tanner for appellee.

Appeal from Warren Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Wm. Rogers Clay, Commissioner, reversing.

Appellee, Virgin O'Brien, instituted this action against Florence Scott, to recover damages for the alienation by the latter of her husband's affections, and for the loss of his society and support, resulting therefrom. The petition charges that the defendant, by various "acts, devices, blandishments and seductions, alienated the love and affections of plaintiff's husband, and destroyed the happiness of her home." Appellant's defense was a general denial. Upon trial of the case, the jury awarded appellee damages in the sum of $5,500.00. Defendant's motion and grounds for a new trial were overruled, and she appeals.

The principal grounds relied upon for reversal are, (1) the exclusion of relevant and competent testimony offered by appellant, and, (2) errors in giving and refusing instructions.

From the evidence in the case, it appears that the appellant's husband, Brownie Scott, died in September, 1905. At that time she had two little girls, four and nine years of age, respectively. Scott left to appellant and his two children insurance amounting to about $4,000.00. With this money she paid some $500.00 of his indebtedness, and bought the home where she lived at the time of the trial, paying therefor the sum of $1,400.00. At the time of Brownie Scott's death, he lived adjoining his tobacco factory, in Bowling Green, Kentucky. Appellee's husband was then in his employ. Some little time after Scott's death, O'Brien, the husband of appellee, began to pay attentions to the appellant. She was frequently seen at the factory where he was still employed, although she claims that she went there for the purpose of getting mail, which she had been accustomed to do prior to her husband's death. Appellant was also frequently seen out riding with O'Brien, and she wrote at least one letter to O'Brien, which is couched in endearing terms.

The theory of appellant's defense was, that appellee's husband voluntarily left his wife, and sought appellant, without any intentional or wrongful acts on her part; that his real purpose in seeking her society was to obtain the insurance money which her husband had left her; that she protested against his attentions and advised him to return to his wife; that he resorted to all sorts of threats and attempts to over-awe her; that he carried a pistol upon his person, and would make violent protestations of love for her, and threaten to kill himself and her. With the view of presenting this defense, appellant offered to introduce letters which she received from O'Brien, and to testify to his acts, conduct and conversations with her, as well as her conversations with him, upon occasions prior to the time he abandoned his wife. She also offered to testify to the amount of money she had, and to the amount which she, by reason of O'Brien's threats and persuasions, had given to him. The trial court excluded all such testimony, and proper avowals were made by appellant. Counsel for appellant contend that this testimony was properly admissible, under a general denial, or, if not admissible under the pleadings in that form, the trial court should have permitted appellant to file the amendment which was offered immediately after the ruling of the court excluding the testimony.

For the purpose of determining the question involved, we shall consider (1) whether such evidence is admissible or not, under the circumstances, and, (2) whether it is admissible under a general denial.

The ruling of the trial court seems to have been based upon the case of Hart v. Knapp, 76 Conn., 135. That was an action for criminal conversation, and not an action for alienation of affections. In an action for criminal conversation, adultery must be shown. In that case, the court held that it was no defense that the husband was the active and aggressive party, and that the defendant listened to his persuasions, and lived in adulterous intercourse with him. It is manifest that that case is somewhat different from the one under consideration. Here no adultery is shown. There the action was based on adultery, and the court held that it was no defense to show that the husband was a seducer. The mere fact that the defendant lived in adultery with plaintiff's husband showed, to some extent, at least, wrongful and intentional conduct on her part. But, whatever may have been the reason for reaching the conclusion at which the court arrived in that case, we are of opinion that the view therein expressed is contrary to the weight of authority. The general rule is, that there is no ground for an action where a spouse voluntarily gives his or her affections to another, the latter doing nothing wrongfully to win such affections. To support an action for alienating a husband's or wife's affections, it must be established that the defendant is the enticer. Mere proof of abandonment, and that the husband or wife maintains improper relations with the defendant, is not sufficient. (21 Cyc., 1621; Buchanan v. Foster, 23 N. Y., App. Div., 542; Churchill v. Lewis, 17 Abb. N. Cas., N. Y., 226; Warner v. Miller, Id., 221.) In the Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, volume 15, page 865, the rule is thus stated:

"In order to sustain an action for the alienation of the husband's affections, it must appear, in addition to the fact that alienation or the fact of the husband's infatuation for the defendant, that there had been a direct interference on the defendant's part, sufficient to satisfy the jury that the alienation was caused by the defendant, and the burden of proof is on the plaintiff, to show such interference."

Again, on page 866, it is said:

"But to maintain this action, it must be established that the husband was induced to abandon the wife by some active interference on the part of the defendant."

In the third volume of Elliott on Evidence, section 1643, it is said:

"To entitle the plaintiff to recover, in an action for alienating affections, the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff, and the plaintiff must show that there was a direct interference upon the part of the defendant, that not only was there infatuation of the husband or wife for the defendant, but that the defendant, by wrongful act, was the cause of it."

In the case of Waldron v. Waldron, 45 Federal Reporter, 315, the court, in an elaborate discussion of the question, said:

"Defendant should not be held to answer on damages because plaintiff's husband left her, though without good cause, and afterwards fell in love with, and finally married, defendant. If the husband alienated his own affections from his wife, or, if alienated by the plaintiff's own conduct, or both, without the interference of defendant, or if they were alienated by any other cause, known or unknown, over which defendant had no control, or exercised no intentional direction or influence, then the plaintiff, howsoever unfortunate or wronged, can not recover damages from the defendant."

We, therefore, conclude that, by the weight of authority, it was proper for appellant to show that the alienation of O'Brien's affections from appellee was a voluntary act of O'Brien's, and was not due to any wrongful or intentional act on the part of appellant.

The next question is, whether or not such evidence is admissible under a general denial. Manifestly, appellant was confined to two defenses; either to deny the allegations of the petition, or to set forth new matter, avoiding the facts therein contained; but the latter is, in effect, simply a confession and avoidance. We do not think appellant should be compelled to confess the fact that appellee's husband had transferred his affections to her, and seek to avoid the effect of such confession by showing that the alienation was due to his voluntary act. We think she should be entitled to place in issue both the fact of alienation and the cause thereof. For appellee to recover, it was necessary not only to show alienation of her husband's affections, but that such alienation was due to the intentional conduct of appellant. These were, then, the two facts in issue. Appellant could introduce any evidence that would tend to rebut either one of these facts, and such evidence would be relevant to the issue. We, therefore, conclude that the evidence of appellant's defense was properly admissible under a general denial.

It appears that the court excluded evidence of conversations between appellant and appellee's husband, prior to the time of the abandonment, wherein appellant sought to show that appellee's husband first sought her, and made love to her, and was, himself, a seducer; that she endeavored to get him to leave her alone and return to his wife and children; and that he really sought her for the purpose of getting her money, and not because of any affection for her. All this evidence was excluded by the court, upon the idea that it consisted of self-serving declarations, and occurred at a time when appellee was not present. In the case of Bailey v. Bailey, decided by the Supreme Court of Iowa, and reported in 63 N. W., 341, the very question before us was under discussion. In that case, the wife had brought an action against the parent of her husband for alienation of her husband's affections. The defendant offered to show that, instead of alienating the affections of her husband, he had tried to get him to live with his wife, and had offered him inducements to do so; that he had offered to give the husband a farm if he would take his wife there and live with her, and that the husband responded that he did not love her, and would not live with her on the farm, or anywhere else. The court said:

"The court sustained objections to the proffered testimony, on the ground that it called for self-serving declarations, made at a time when plaintiff was not present. He did admit testimony as to what was done by defendant towards providing a home for plaintiff and her husband, but held that offers of the use of a farm made to the husband by defendant, and the husband's reply thereto, giving the reason why he would not accept them, were not admissible. In this, we think he was in error. The fact that the statements were not made in the presence of plaintiff was wholly immaterial, for they were not offered as bearing upon her knowledge of defendant's treatment of his son. The purpose of the testimony was to show that defendant had, as a matter of fact, tried to induce his son to do the very thing the plaintiff was insisting upon, and to show the condition of her husband's mind and the state of his affections towards her. Such testimony would have a tendency to negative the idea that defendant was trying to induce his son to abandon the plaintiff. It was substantive testimony of verbal acts tending to show that he was trying to induce his son to live with plaintiff, and that the son's refusal to do so was not brought about by his conduct. The expression of the son, made long before the commencement of the suit, that he would not live with the plaintiff on the land offered by defendant, or anywhere else, was certainly competent as bearing upon his feelings towards her. The court permitted defendant to show what he did to induce his son to live with plaintiff. What he said to accomplish the same purpose was a part of the res gestae, and was, it seems to us, equally admissible."

We think the evidence offered by appellant was within the rule above laid down; it was a part of the res gestae. The question was: Did the appellant, by her intentional conduct, alienate the affection of appellee's husband, or did the husband voluntarily leave his wife, or transfer his affections to appellant, or seek appellant, not because he loved her, but for the purpose of obtaining her money? The real facts in issue can only be determined from the acts and conduct of appellant and appellee's husband, and from the conversations and communications which passed between them. The only way the jury could properly determine the issue involved was to have all these facts properly before them. It is true, the admission of such testimony may give opportunity for perjury; but the fact that a witness might lie in reference to matters about which he has a right to testify, is not a good reason for excluding such testimony. The jury, who are the judge of the weight to be given the testimony, will consider such alleged conversations in the light of appellant's conduct, as shown by other witnesses, and in the light of all the circumstances of the case, and they will be able to determine what credit should be given to such evidence.

For the reasons given, we also think that the testimony to the effect that appellee's husband remarked, shortly after the death of appellant's husband, "that the little widow with her money would be a good catch," as well as his conversations and letters showing constant demands on his part for money, were admissible. Such evidence tends to show his motive and purpose in seeking the companionship of appellant, and goes to rebut the idea that she was the enticer.

We further think it was competent for appellant to prove, in this case, her financial condition; not, however, for the purpose of increasing or diminishing the amount of damages, but for the sole purpose of showing the motive of appellee's husband in seeking appellant's society. In admitting such testimony, the court will admonish the jury accordingly.

It will be unnecessary to set out in full the instructions given by the court. Suffice it to say, that they do not properly present appellant's defense. Upon the next trial, the court will instruct the jury as follows:

"No. 1. If you believe, from the evidence, that the defendant, Florence Scott, by her acts, wiles or blandishments, intentionally alienated or took away from plaintiff her husband's affections, you will find for plaintiff, and award her such damages as you believe will fairly compensate her for the injury, if any, resulting to her feelings, for the loss of her husband's comfort and society, if there was such loss, and for loss of her husband's support, if there was such loss, except to the extent that he has contributed, or may, by law, be compelled to contribute, to her support, not exceeding the sum of $10,000.00, the amount asked for. Unless you so believe, you will find for the defendant.

"No. 2. If you believe that the defendant alienated from plaintiff her husband's affections, in the manner set forth in instruction No. 1, and further believe that defendant's conduct in causing such alienation was wanton and malicious towards, and with the design to humiliate plaintiff, then, in addition to compensatory damages, you may, in your discretion, award plaintiff punitive damages, not exceeding, in all, however, the sum of $10,000.00.

"No. 3. Although you may believe, from the evidence, that plaintiff's husband transferred his affections from plaintiff to defendant, yet, if you further believe plaintiff's husband alienated his own affections from plaintiff, without any intentional misconduct on the part of defendant, or that such alienation was occasioned by some other cause, over which defendant had no control, or exercised no intentional direction or influence, then you will find for the defendant."

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with directions for a new trial, consistent with this opinion.

COLEMAN v. GRIMES, &c.

(Filed May 12, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Wills—Devise of Fund to a Daughter—As a Home for Herself and Family—Sale for Re-investment—Restrictions—Construction—A testator, by his will, devised to his daughter a house and lot of the estimated value of $4,000, "as a home for herself and family, as long as she lives, free from the control of her husband, to have no power to encumber or sell same, except for re-investment, and, if sold, the proceeds to be re-invested in other property, suitable for a home for herself and family, and to be used for that purpose." She exchanged this home for a farm, which she subsequently sold for $6,250, which the purchaser declined to pay, on the ground that she could not convey him a good title thereto. Held—That the word "family," in this will, includes children, and that the testator, in using the word "family," intended it to embrace not only his daughter, but her children, as well as her husband, and that the fund, when invested in a home, should be preserved in a home as long as his daughter lived.

2. Same—Exchange for Farm—Sale of Farm—Increased Price—Separation from Principal—Fund in Court—It does not follow, from the fact that, as only $4,000 was set apart by the will for a home, that any increase in this fund might be used for other purposes. The increase can not be separated from the principal, and the entire fund, $6,250, should be paid into the court by the purchaser of the farm, and retained until the devisee selects a home in which to invest it, subject to the approval of the chancellor.

E. H. Gaither for appellant.

J. F. Vanarsdall for guardian ad litem.

Appeal from Mercer Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, reversing.

The fourth clause in the will of J. W. Taylor reads as follows:

"I direct that the house and lot, on which I now reside, at the corner of Second and Main streets, in Shelbyville, Kentucky, in the division of my property, be allotted to my daughter, Mattie L. Harbeson; same to be appraised by three disinterested persons, to be selected by my two daughters, and allotted and charged to my said daughter, at the amount fixed by said appraisers, but, in no event, to be appraised at more than $4,000.00; nor is she to be charged with more than $4,000.00 for same. She is to have and to hold same as her separate estate, free from the debts and control of her husband, or any husband she may have. She is to have no power to encumber same, nor to sell same, except she might sell same for the purpose of re-investment; and, if sold, the proceeds shall be re-invested in other property, suitable for a home for herself and family, and to be used for that purpose—my purpose being to provide a home for my daughter and family as long as she lives.

"I direct that a sum equal to the amount at which said house and lot is appraised, not exceeding $4,000.00, be invested by my executor in a home for my daughter, Carrie D. Coleman, to be held in the same manner, and for the same purpose, and under the same terms and limitations, as provided about the house and lot devised to my daughter, Mattie L. Harbeson.

"My executor is to permit Mrs. Coleman to select the property she desires to be purchased, and is to make said investment and pay for same as soon as he can, without a sacrifice of my estate."

The money received by Mrs. Coleman, under this will, was invested in a house and lot in Harrodsburg, Kentucky; and, in 1897, she exchanged this property for a tract of land containing fifty acres, situated in Mercer county, Ky. Desiring to sell the land to a purchaser who was willing to pay for it $6,250.00, provided he could be invested with a good title—the real purpose of this suit is to obtain a construction of the clause in the will mentioned, to ascertain whether or not Mrs. Coleman can sell the property, and herself invest the proceeds, without the purchaser being required to look to a re-investment, or without the sanction of the court, as to the property in which the re-investment shall be made.

To the petition her three infant children were made parties, and, by their guardian ad litem, filed an answer, in which he asked, on behalf of the children, that the proceeds of the property, to the extent of $4,000.00, be invested under order of court, consenting, in so far as he could, that the excess over $4,000 be paid to Mrs. Coleman, to do with as she pleased. The theory of the guardian ad litem being that it was only contemplated by the testator that $4,000.00 be kept invested in a home, and that anything in excess of this sum that might be realized from the investment, became the absolute estate of Mrs. Coleman, to dispose of as she pleased.

Upon the pleadings and exhibits, the court adjudged that $4,000 of the purchase price of the farm be re-invested in a home for Mrs. Coleman and her children, but that the remainder of the fund arising from the sale should be paid to her as her individual property, to do with as she pleased.

The purchaser was further directed to pay into court the sum of $4,000.00, to be held for re-investment. To so much of this judgment as directed the re-investment of the $4,000.00, Mrs. Coleman excepted, and prosecutes this appeal.

It will be observed that the $4,000.00 given to Mrs. Coleman by the testator was to be "held in the same manner, and for the same purpose, and under the same terms and limitations, as provided about the house and lot devised to my daughter, Mattie L. Harbeson." That is to say, she was "to have and hold the same as her separate estate, free from the debts of her husband, or any husband she might have. She is to have no power to encumber same, nor to sell same, except she might sell same for the purpose of re-investment; and, if sold, the proceeds shall be re-invested in other property, suitable for a home for herself and family, and to be used for that purpose—my purpose being to provide a home for my daughter and her family as long as she lives."

The will does not provide, in terms, the manner or by whom the re-investment is to be made; nor direct that any other person than Mrs. Coleman is to have anything to do with the re-investment of the proceeds. Although the testator directed that the proceeds should be invested in other property, suitable for a home for herself and family, it seems that he intended to leave to her discretion and good judgment the character of the real property in which the investment should be made. The children of Mrs. Coleman are not expressly mentioned in the will, although she had at least one child living at the time the will was made, and when the testator died. And it was manifestly the purpose of the testator that the bequest under consideration should be invested in a home for her and her children. The word "family," in this will, includes children—it is a word of comprehensive and varied signification, depending upon the intention with which it is used. And, when it is considered that Mrs. Coleman, at the time the will was written, had children, it is clear that, in using the word "family," the testator intended it to embrace not only Mrs. Coleman, but her children, as well as her husband, and that the fund, when invested in a home, should be preserved in a home as long as Mrs. Coleman lived. (Norwegian Old People's Home vs. Wilson, 176 Ill., 94; Crosgrove v. Crosgrove, 69 Conn., 416; Whelan v. Reilley, 3 W. Va., 597.) Her children have an interest in this fund, to the extent that with it they were, and are, to be provided with a home, so long as they are members of the family. In our opinion, Mrs. Coleman is not authorized to take this fund, or any material part of it, and apply it to any other purpose than the one mentioned in the will, under which it was received, and that the court should control its investment, or, if the proceeds are paid to Mrs. Coleman, she should execute in court a bond, with sufficient surety to secure the investment of this fund in a home.

This construction of the will is supported by the provisions of the fifth clause, in which the testator directs that "the remainder of my estate, real and personal, after providing for the devisees before mentioned, shall be equally divided between my two daughters, Mattie L. Harbeson and Carrie D. Coleman." Whatever they received, under this clause, was not charged with any trust, or encumbered by any restrictions. They have the right to do with it as they please. Thus further illustrating the fact that the testator had it in his mind that, after his daughters and their children were provided with a home, they might do as they pleased with the remainder that he gave them.

Nor do we concur in the view that the testator only intended to secure for investment in a home the sum of $4,000.00. We do not find in the will any expression to support this conclusion. It does not follow, from the fact that, as only $4,000.00 was set apart for a home, that any increase in this fund might be used for other purposes. The increase can not be separated from the principal of the fund. If, by judicious investment, the property in which the fund is invested enhances in value, the increase attaches to and becomes a part of the principal fund, subject to the trust under which it is held. (First National Bank of Carlisle v. Lee, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1897.)

If Mrs. Coleman desires to execute a bond, she may retain possession of the money derived from the sale of this land until such time as she finds a home suitable in which to invest it. If she does not execute the bond, then the entire purchase price should be paid into court, and retained until Mrs. Coleman selects a home in which to invest it. It may be that Mrs. Coleman can not find property in which to invest the exact sum received from the sale of the farm, but the property should represent, as nearly as practicable, the full amount of the sum received by her from the sale of the property in which this trust fund is now invested. And this action should be either kept on the docket, or filed away, with leave to re-docket at any time, so that the chancellor may approve the investment made by Mrs. Coleman, whether the money is paid to her upon the execution of a bond, or retained by the court.

Wherefore, the judgment of the lower court is reversed, with directions to proceed in conformity with this opinion.

DAVIESS COUNTY BANK & TRUST COMPANY v. WRIGHT, &c.

(Filed May 12, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Principal and Surety—Release of Surety on Note—Contract Between Principal and Creditor—In order that a surety on a note be released, there must be an enforceable contract between the principal and the creditor, by which the creditor would be prevented from suing on the note when due, and, for that reason, the surety be prevented from paying off the debt that day, and thereupon subrogated to the creditors' rights, by suing or taking other steps to save himself from loss.

2. Same—Indulgence by Principal—Assent of Creditor—Ignorance of Surety—Mere indulgence of the principal in a note by his creditor does not operate to discharge the surety thereon, even though it be expressly assented to by the creditor, at the instance of the principal of which the surety is ignorant, even if the principal has, during such indulgence, become a bankrupt.

3. Same—Novation—Making New Contract—Definite Extension of Time to Principal—Consideration—A novation is the making of a new contract. Its elements are essentially the same as in the first contract, which are (1) parties, (2) a meeting of their minds, and, (3) a consideration. Hence, the further indulgence by a principal in a note of the creditor, if the surety is to be released thereby, must be upon an agreement for an extension for a definite time, and this agreement must be based upon a new consideration.

4. Same—Acts of Personal Representative—Authority of Court—It is not competent for a personal representative of an estate, without the authority of a court of competent jurisdiction, to enter into a contract with a debtor to the estate, by which the jurisdiction of the court may be ousted, or the statutory rights of other litigants or claimants be changed or postponed.

Hayes & Johnson for appellant.

Geo. W. Jolly for W. S. Hawes.

LeVega Clements for Mrs. Wright.

Wilfred Carrico for Hawes & Thompson.

Appeal from Daviess Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice O'Rear, reversing.

Malcolm Thompson borrowed $2,500 from the appellant bank on February 12, 1903, on which date he executed to it a note signed by appellee, Mary C. Wright, as surety, in which she pledged, as collateral, a certain real estate note belonging to her. The note was due twelve months after date, but was not then paid, the principal having died September, 1903, without having paid it.

About a month after the execution of the above named note, appellees, Hawes & Thompson, to indemnify Mrs. Wright in her suretyship for Malcolm Thompson, executed to her this obligation:

"Owensboro, Ky., 12 Feb., 1903.

"Mrs. Mary C. Wright has this day signed a note with Malcolm Thompson to the Daviess County Bank & Trust Company, for $2,500; due 12 months after date, and as collateral to said note, she has placed with said bank 10 real estate notes for $500 each, and one note for $300, given by G. W. Bell and L. G. Bell, bearing 6 per cent. interest, payable annually, being the unpaid deferred payments for land sold said G. W. Bell and L. G. Bell by Mrs. Mary C. Wright. Part of the money received on the note to Daviess County Bank and Trust Company ($2,000) was paid on account of purchase of land by Malcolm Thompson for Jeff Howard, the deed to said land being made to Malcolm Thompson, and the balance of said note, except the discount retained by the bank, Malcolm Thompson keeps for use in improvements, &c., on said land. We hereby agree to hold Mrs. Mary C. Wright harmless for signing said $2,500 note for Malcolm Thompson, and also to pay the $2,500 indebtedness, with all interest and costs, and return the said 11 land notes to her at the maturity of the note.

(Signed) "MALCOLM THOMPSON,

"W. S. HAWES.

"J. L. THOMPSON."

In January, 1894, the administrator of Malcolm Thompson's estate brought this suit in equity in the Daviess Circuit Court, to settle the estate of his intestate, procuring an injunction against creditors' suing the estate in any other action, and an order requiring them to produce and file their claims against his intestate's estate in that action. Malcolm Thompson's estate was apparently not equal to its indebtedness, and there was paid on the note first named only $1,448.13, in the distribution of the assets.

While the suit to settle the estate was pending, and on September 30, 1904, the administrator of Malcolm Thompson paid to appellant bank, at the latter's solicitation, $150. It is claimed by appellees that this payment was for one year's interest on the note, from February 12, 1904, and operated by law to extend the time of payment of the principal till February 12, 1905; and that, therefore, Mrs. Wright and her collateral pledged to secure the note were released from further liability to the bank.

Upon the facts and the law of the case, the circuit court sustained Mrs. Wright's contention, and adjudged that she was not liable, and that her collateral was released from liability to the bank.

Mrs. Wright was a married woman when she executed the note. She was not, therefore, personally bound upon it. She brought this suit to have her collateral adjudged released from its obligation. She pleaded and relied on her coverture in bar of her personal liability. But she did not aver that the notes pledged as collateral were her general estate, or not her separate estate. She did say she was the owner of the notes, which had been executed to her as part consideration for the conveyance to their obligor of a tract of land which she had owned. Construing her petition as it must be, most strongly against her (as she would presumably have pleaded the existence of any other facts concerning the nature of her estate in the matter that would have released her collateral, could she have truthfully done so), we assume either that the notes were her separate property, and, therefore, within her sole power to pledge to secure the debt of another, notwithstanding her coverture (Bullock v. Commonwealth, 96 Ky., 537), or, if her general estate, that her husband assented to their being so pledged. In the latter event, as we apprehend that, at common law, the so-called protection of the feme covert from liability on her executory contracts so as to relieve her general estate, pledged to secure their execution, was, in reality, out of consideration of the husband's marital rights, he assenting to the pledge, she will not be heard to complain, as he would have had the right, without her consent, to have reduced it to his possession and so applied it. Hence, we conclude that the question of the liability of the collateral is to be determined without reference to Mrs. Wright's coverture, but as any other collateral, put up to secure the debt by any other person as surety. For we think that, as the collateral is to be treated as security, it will be released under the same circumstances that a surety personally bound would have been released. (Brandt on Suretyship, 2d edition, section 34; Price v. Dime Savings Bank, 124 Ill., 317; 7 Am. St. Rep., 367; Wirgman v. Miller, 98 Ky., 620; N. Y. Life Ins. Co. v. Miller, 27 Ky. Law Rep., 230.) It will be conceded that, ordinarily, any extension of time by the obligee, based upon a consideration, will operate to discharge a surety not assenting thereto, and, by a parity of reasoning, will release collateral of a surety or of a third person pledged to secure the debt.

But, in order that a surety may be released, there must be an enforceable contract between the principal and the creditor, by which the latter would be prevented from suing on the debt when due, and for that reason, the surety be prevented from paying off the debt that day, and thereupon subrogated to the creditor's right to sue or take other steps to save himself from loss. The whole doctrine is necessarily based upon the idea that the surety has been prejudiced in some substantial right which he had, as otherwise there would be no sense in releasing him because of such an act. It is true, the law will presume that he has been prejudiced by such extension, and will conclusively presume the fact, if the surety could, but for such extension, have paid off (that is, had the right to pay off) the principal obligation, and have sued and recovered judgment against the principal debtor upon it. In no case does mere indulgence of the principal by the creditor operate to discharge the surety, even though it be expressly assented to by the creditor, at the instance of the principal, of which the surety is ignorant. Nor even if the principal has, during such indulgence, become bankrupt. Much less does the simple agreement of the debtor to indulge the principal, even for a definite time, work a release of the surety. Though it is sometimes stated that the payment of interest in advance to the creditor by the principal operates to discharge the surety, we apprehend that, even in such cases, the rule is really rested upon the contract, implied, if not expressed, that the principal shall have a definite further time within which to pay the debt. The whole question always comes back to this: Was there a valid contract of extension? If there was, then the creditor could not, in violation of it, take any action to sue to collect the debt before the expiration of the time fixed in the last contract; and, as he could not do so, the surety could not derive such right from him by paying off the debt. The right of the surety to pay off the debt when it is due, thereby lessening it by the amount of interest that a further extension would entail, is an incident of his contract of suretyship. If it is changed without his assent, there is a novation, so to speak; and if he should be held in spite of his not agreeing to be so bound, it would end that he had a contract made for him, which he did not make, and probably would not have made. A novation is the making of a new contract. Its elements are essentially the same as in the first contract; which are, (1) parties, (2) a meeting of the minds, and, (3) a consideration. Hence, the further indulgence of the principal, if the surety is to be released thereby, must be upon an agreement for such extension for a definite time (as if it were not definite, then the creditor might immediately enforce payment of the debt, and if he might, the surety could pay and be as fully protected as if the agreement had not been made); and this agreement must be based upon a new consideration, as, without a consideration, the agreement would be unenforceable as against the creditor. (Robinson v. Miller, 2 Bush, 179.) This much has been said that a proper application of the particular facts of this case, bearing upon the payment of $150 as interest, may be made.

In September, 1904, the note was past due—what the bank termed suspended paper. The bank was anxious that it be made to appear at least that it was not overdue, in order that it might not be required to charge it off to profit and loss by action of the public authorities charged with periodical examinations of the bank. The administrator was applied to, and the situation explained to him. He agreed to pay, and did pay, $150 upon the note. There was nothing said between the administrator and the bank official conducting the transaction, as to any definite time when the remainder was to be paid. They each knew that the principal was dead, and that no other action could be taken before February 12, 1905, by either the bank or the surety, to collect the note from the estate of the principal. It was discussed that the estate would, as soon as it could, pay off the balance, or as much as it might be able to pay. The bank official, however, in crediting the $150, using a rubber stencil, and filling out with pen and ink, made this endorsement on the note:

"Extended 360 days, to Feb. 6, 1905.

"Interest $150, paid Sept. 30, 1904."

It is argued for appellee that this is conclusive that interest was collected in advance from the principal, in consideration of which further indulgence was granted to him for a definite time, without the consent of the surety. Were this endorsement all the evidence on this point, we would have no hesitation in holding that the fact was as claimed. But this endorsement stands no higher as evidence than any other written memorial. It is impeached as being the result of mistake. Certainly there is no evidence (other than the endorsement) that the contracting parties had so agreed; and they, in their testimony, concur that such was not the agreement, nor is it sound that the mere payment of $150, as interest, on September 30th, 1904, operated ipso facto to discharge accrued interest at 6 per cent., from February 12, 1904 (the day the note was due) and the remainder of the $150 then operated to extend the time of payment for such additional period as, at 6 per cent. per annum interest, it would buy. If the payment of $150 interest only were shown, it would still be open to explanation whether it was a usurious rate for the past indulged, but such inference is a matter of evidence, and not a presumption of law. We think the fact was established that there was no agreement to extend for a definite time; that the endorsement was by the mistake of the bank official, whose real aim was not to extend the time, but to create an appearance contrary to the actual transaction, and for a purpose wholly beside this case. Without pausing to reflect upon the nature of his motive, it is sufficient, we think, that it had no bearing upon the alleged agreement, and as the question is, was there a meeting of the minds of the parties as indicated by the endorsement, we must find that there was not.

But we deem the more important and controlling question in the case to be, had the administrator power to bind the estate by an agreement for extension? Obviously if there was no such agreement, the question could not arise. While we are strongly inclined, as argued above, to hold that there was not an agreement, we are not quite willing to rest there.

Administrators, and executors, too, for that matter, are officers of the court, appointed to settle decedents' estates. In this State administrators have not the authority to enter into contracts on its behalf, in the absence of an order of a court of competent jurisdiction, or, where they act under a will, or something in that instrument empowering them to do so, except by statute in certain rare instances not here involved.

Schouler in his article on Executors and Administrators, 18 Cyc., 881, thus states the prevailing rule:

"Contracts of executors and administrators, although made in the interest and for the benefit of the estate they represent, if made upon a new and independent consideration moving between their promisee and themselves, are their personal contracts, which do not bind the estate, and they must be sued on these contracts in their individual and not in their representative capacity."

This court has, in line with the rule of law just quoted, held that an administrator had not the power to bind his intestate's estate by charging and receiving usurious interest on its behalf against its creditor (Heasley v. Dunn, 5 B. Mon., 145); not to discharge a debtor of the estate by compromise, except as allowed expressly by statute (Pullins' Administrator v. Smith, 103 Ky., 418; 50 S. W., 833; 20 Ky. Law Rep., 1992); nor to release the surety upon a note owing the estate, even upon a consideration that might have supported such an agreement as between others competent to contract about the matter. (Bitteler v. Bitteler's Administrator, 13 Ky. Law Rep., 368.) And in Rice v. Strange, 72 S. W., 756, it was held that an executor had not the power to borrow money on behalf of the estate (there being nothing in the will authorizing it), even though the estate may have been benefited thereby. An agreement to extend the time of payment of a debt owing by the estate is in a sense incurring additional liability against it. The statutes allow a suit at any time by the personal representative or any creditor or heir at law to settle the estate, and to distribute its assets. Upon the filing of such a suit, the chancellor directs the administration henceforward. It is not competent, then, for the personal representative, unauthorized by the court to enter into contracts by which its jurisdiction and control in the matter might be ousted, and the statutory rights of other litigants or claimants be changed or postponed. As the administrator was without power in this case to enter into the alleged contract extending the maturity of the note, the agreement would have been void. Hence the surety, notwithstanding it was entered into as claimed, might have disregarded it and paid off the debt at any moment.

There is a further question whether in any event the surety was prejudiced by the so-called agreement, had it been a valid one, but it is not now necessary to pass upon that point.

The indemnitors, Hawes and Thompson, were never bound upon their contract, if it was not executed coincidentally with the principal obligation, as it is not claimed that there was other consideration for it. For, if Mrs. Wright had already become bound (or her notes pledged, which is the same in principle) upon Malcolm Thompson's debt to the bank, when the agreement of indemnity was entered into, then she undertook nothing additional, parted with nothing, being moved thereto by the understanding of Hawes and Thompson. Their agreement must have a consideration of its own to support it. There is none in this case, unless it was contemporaneous with Mrs. Wright's pledging her notes, and her agreement to do so was based in part at least, upon that fact. Whether it was executed when or after Mrs. Wright become bound was not decided by the circuit court. That question will be for decision upon the return of the case. The whole purport of that agreement of indemnity was to indemnify Mrs. Wright, not to otherwise pay the debt.

For the reasons indicated, the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, for proceedings consistent herewith.

L. & N. R. R. CO., &c. v. ONAN'S ADM'R.

(Filed May 13, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Railroads—Crossings—Instructions—In this action to recover of appellant for the death of appellee's intestate which occurred at a crossing, so much of an instruction based on the idea that the crossing was unusually dangerous should not have been given. This instruction would have been proper, had the crossing been exceptionally dangerous, but it was only an ordinary country crossing.

2. Same—An instruction was also erroneous which told the jury that it was the duty of the railroad company to keep its crossings and approaches in "good repair" so as not to unreasonably interfere with travelers, &c., when the instruction should have directed that the crossing be kept in such repair as is reasonably safe for public travel.

3. Same—The proof showing that deceased was not seen until he came on the track about 100 yards ahead of the train, at which time it could not be stopped before it reached him, it was error to instruct the jury to find for plaintiff if the servants in charge of the train saw deceased, or could have seen him by the use of ordinary care in time to avoid injuring him.

Ira Julian and Shelby & Shelby for appellants.

J. H. Polsgrove and B. G. Williams for appellee.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, reversing.

About six miles west of Frankfort, and some distance east of Hatton station, the track of the L. & N. Railroad Co. crosses a turnpike road. On Sept. 16, 1906, about ten o'clock in the morning, as the eastbound C. & O. train was approaching this crossing, O'Bannon Onan drove upon the crossing in a top buggy. For some reason, the horse stopped or backed upon the crossing and the train ran into the vehicle, killing Onan. This suit was filed against the two railroad companies, by his administrator, to recover for his death, on the ground that proper notice was not given of the approach of the train and that, by negligence of the railroad company, the crossing was out of order, and that this caused the balking of the horse and brought about the accident. The jury found for the plaintiff in the sum of $5,000, and the defendants appeal.

The plaintiff introduced proof, showing that no signal was given of the approach of the train until the alarm whistle was blown just before it struck the vehicle. The train was a heavy passenger train, pulled by two engines, running rapidly down grade. Onan approached the crossing from the north side. The front wheels of the buggy were on the track when struck by the train. The horse was knocked to the south side of the track and the buggy to the north side. The railroad crosses the turnpike at an acute angle, and as Onan approached the track, he was facing the direction in which the train came. There was proof by the plaintiff to the effect that some bushes obstructed his view more or less; also that it was obstructed by the fence at the cattle guard, and by some telegraph poles along the line of the railroad track. There was also proof showing that the crossing was in a rough condition; that the turnpike crosses the railroad on a considerable grade, and that the road was rough, and on the south side of the track and a short distance from it, there was a bank across the road from six to twelve inches high. The proof for the defendant was to the effect that the statutory signals of the approach of the train were given; that the crossing was in a fair condition; that as Onan approached the crossing when he was fifty feet from the track and until he reached it, he had a clear view of the approaching train for 1,150 feet down the track. The defendant also showed that the bank referred to was a row made to turn the water off the pike, and was no more than was common on such pikes for that purpose. Onan was not killed instantly by the collision. The defendant showed by four witnesses, that Onan was asked if he saw the train coming, and that he answered that he saw the train and thought he could get across; that he, in fact, did get across, but his horse stopped and backed him on the track; that he heard the train coming, and heard the whistle before he got on the track, and that he would not have been hurt but for his horse stopping. On the other hand, the plaintiff proved by other witnesses that Onan was suffering greatly when they got to him, and these witnesses gave a different version of what he said.

By the first instruction, which the court gave the jury, he told them among other things, that if the crossing was unusually dangerous, it was the duty of the defendant to use such means to prevent injury to travelers at the crossing, as in the exercise of a reasonable judgment by an ordinarily prudent person, operating a railroad, might be considered necessary, and if this was not done, they should find for the plaintiff. So much of the instruction as was based on the idea that the crossing was unusually dangerous should not have been given. This instruction has been held proper where crossings are exceptionally dangerous, but this was only an ordinary country crossing. It was no more dangerous than nine out of ten of such crossings are in the country. Every railroad crossing is dangerous, but the instruction referred to, should not be given unless the crossing is exceptionally dangerous. At usual crossings if the statutory signals are given of the approach of the train, the defendant is not responsible. On another trial, the part of the instruction referred to will be omitted.

By the fifth instruction, the court told the jury that it was the duty of the defendant to use ordinary care to maintain its crossing and any approaches thereto in good "repair and condition so as not to unreasonably interfere with or obstruct the progress of travelers attempting to use the same." In lieu of the words "in good repair and condition so as not to unreasonably interfere with or obstruct the progress of travelers attempting to use the same," the court, on another trial, will use the words "in such repair as is reasonably safe for public travel;" and instructions 1 and 5 will be united in one instruction.

By the fourth instruction the court told the jury that if the defendant's servants in charge of the train, saw Onan, or could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have seen him in time to avoid injuring him, they should find for the plaintiff. This instruction should not have been given. The uncontradicted proof on the trial was to the effect that Onan was not seen until he came on the track about 100 yards ahead of the train and manifestly after this, the train could not have been stopped before it reached him. There was some proof that Onan, by looking across the curve, could see the train for 1150 feet, as he approached the track and, if he could see the train, the men on the train could see him. But the men on the train are required to watch the track; they are not required to look across the curves for persons approaching the track. The court gave no instruction based on the evidence that Onan heard the signal of the approaching train and drove on the track, knowing of its approach, or on the evidence that the stopping and backing of the house caused the injury.

Instruction 3, which the court gave, defining the duty of Onan in approaching the track, does not conform to the rule laid down by this court in Louisville Railroad Co. v. Winchester, 105 S. W., 167. In lieu of the third instruction on another trial the court will tell the jury that it was the duty of the intestate, in approaching the crossing, to use such care as may be usually expected of an ordinarily prudent person, to learn of the approach of the train and keep out of its way; and that, if he failed to exercise such care, and but for this would not have been injured; or if he heard the signals of the approaching train or knew of its approach before he drove upon the track, and, with this knowledge, undertook to pass over the crossing ahead of the train; or if the proximate cause of the accident was the backing of the horse, and not a failure of the defendant to give notice of the approach of the train, or a failure on its part to keep the crossings in reasonable repair, as defined in instruction 1, then in any one of these events, the jury should find for the defendant.

The instructions of the court with the modifications we have indicated, present the whole law of the case. The defendant had a right to run its train at that point at any speed it saw proper, and on another trial the court will so admonish the jury, and will exclude all evidence tending to show that the train was running faster than usual. The court did not err on the whole evidence in submitting the case to the jury; but for the reasons given a new trial should be granted. The defendants may prove what Onan said as to how the accident occurred. The plaintiff may, in rebuttal, prove by any other witnesses, who were present and heard the statements made by Onan, that he did not say the things testified to by the defendants' witnesses, and they may show what he then and there did say; but the plaintiff can not give in evidence what Onan said on a different occasion, or in a different conversation for this would be to allow him to make testimony himself.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, for a new trial and further proceedings consistent herewith.

HARRISON, &c. v. LOGAN COUNTY, &c.

(Filed May 13, 1908—To be reported.)

1. County Treasurers—Paying Out Money—Orders of Fiscal Court—Liabilities of Sureties—Under Kentucky Statutes, sec. 931, providing that all moneys received by the county treasurer shall be held by him subject to the order of the fiscal court of the county, where a county treasurer pays out money under the orders of the fiscal court of the county, he and his sureties are not liable therefor, though the court had no right to make such orders.

2. Same—The county treasurer is a ministerial officer or agent of the county, and may be removed at any time by the fiscal court for a failure to obey its orders, and there is no principle of law making an agent liable for its principal for money paid out in accordance to the orders of the principal, though the principal may afterwards discover that the money was paid to the person not entitled to it.

3. Same—Where a county treasurer pays out money in his hands on an irregular order, he should be allowed a credit therefor in his settlement with the court, if it appears that they were just claims against the county, and there is no doubt about his good faith in the payment of them.

Browder & Browder, S. R. Crewdson and T. B. Harrison, Jr., for appellants.

Selden Y. Trimble, R. W. Davis and John S. Rhea for appellees.

Appeal from Logan Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn, affirming.

In the month of April, 1905, the fiscal court of Logan county elected appellant, C. Henry Harrison, to the position of county treasurer. He qualified as such and executed bond with The United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company of Baltimore as surety. Harrison held the office for eleven months, settled his accounts in full with a committee appointed by the fiscal court, and resigned his office on March 8, 1906. This settlement was reported to the fiscal court by the committee and it was approved and ordered to be recorded by that court in the month of April, 1906.

In May, 1906, appellees, Logan county, and John W. Milliken, its then treasurer, brought this action against appellants, seeking a judgment against them for $5,095.06. It was alleged in the petition that during Harrison's term of office there was paid to him, from various sources, different sums of public money, amounting in the aggregate to $58,934.29; and that during his term of office he only paid out the sum of $42,612.97, and in addition to that sum he paid over to his successor, John W. Milliken, $11,226.26, thereby leaving in the hands of Harrison, the former treasurer, $5,095.06, for which appellees prayed judgment.

After the case progressed for a time, it was ascertained that appellees sought to surcharge the settlement made by Harrison, and to show that about thirty of the vouchers filed with the settlement showed improper disbursements of some of the county's funds, and that appellant, Harrison, should not have been credited with these sums. The court, on the trial of the case, sustained appellee's contention to the extent of nineteen of the vouchers, and rendered judgment against him and his surety for the amount of them, which is about $3,200.00; but decided in favor of appellants as to the other eleven vouchers. From this judgment Harrison and his surety appealed and appellees filed a cross-appeal.

Counsel for each party have filed able and exhaustive briefs, but after considering them and the record in the case, we deem it unnecessary to consider and discuss all the points presented.

Section 931 of the Kentucky Statutes is, in part, as follows:

"It shall be the duty of said treasurer to receive and receipt for all moneys due, or to become due, to said county from the several collecting officers thereof, or from any other person or persons whose duty it is to pay money into the county treasury; all moneys so received by him to be held subject to the order of the fiscal court of the county."

Thus it will be seen that the treasurer is purely a ministerial officer, and is the custodian of the funds belonging to the county, and must pay them out under the orders of the fiscal court. It is not charged that Harrison paid out this money without orders of the fiscal court, but the claim is, that he paid it out, as directed by that court, on orders which the court had no right to make. The majority of the claims which the lower court charged appellants with having wrongfully paid, were claims allowed the county judge and the several justices of the peace for their services as courthouse commissioners, county farm commissioners, road and bridge commissioners and payments made to persons for work on the roads of the county. It appears that the fiscal court appointed the county judge and three or four of the justices as commissioners to superintend the building of county courthouse, and the fiscal court allowed each of them pay for their services; and the same rule was adopted with reference to the management of the county farm, for the poor. Several of the justices were also appointed as commissioners to look after and manage the work on the roads in their respective districts. The fiscal court made allowances to each of them for their services, and the county clerk issued what is called a "warrant" upon the treasurer, with which he complied, for the payment of these allowances. It is claimed that these orders were void, the fiscal court having no right to pay these persons for such services and, therefore, the treasurer should not have been credited therewith in his settlement; and they cite many cases which they claim support their view of the matter. The first of these cases is Morgantown Deposit Bank v. Johnson, 22 Ky. Law Rep., 210. The matter in litigation in that case was a claim allowed the county court clerk for recording a school census report. The clerk assigned his claim to the bank and it instituted an action against the sheriff and the county for the recovery of the amount of the claim. The lower court refused the bank a judgment for the claim, and this court affirmed it upon the ground that the fiscal court had no jurisdiction to appropriate county funds, except as it is authorized by law to do, and there was no provision in the statutes which authorized it to pay the county clerk for his services in recording the list of children's names filed in his office by the trustees of the school.

The second case is Davless County, &c. v. Goodwin, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1081. In that case the fiscal court appointed the county judge as supervisor of the public roads and bridges of the county, and fixed his salary as supervisor at $900 per year, and his salary as judge of the county at $1,000 per year. Appellee, William Goodwin, a citizen and taxpayer of the county, filed that suit to enjoin the treasurer from paying Haskins, the county judge, the $900 per year as supervisor. The circuit court granted the relief prayed for, and the county judge appealed. This court affirmed the judgment upon the ground that, as the statutes then stood, the county judge could not be made supervisor of the roads, and that he had no right to receive a salary from the county, other than the one fixed for him as county judge.

The third case is Pulaski County v. Sears, 117 Ky., 249. In that case the fiscal court of Pulaski county appointed a justice of the peace in each magisterial district with the power to assist the county judge in keeping the roads in repair in that county, in their respective districts, and were subsequently allowed, by an order of the fiscal court, a sum in payment for their services, and the county refused to settle. Sears, one of the magistrates, brought the action to recover the money allowed him. The lower court sustained his claim, but upon appeal to this court the judgment was reversed upon the ground that the fiscal court had no power to appoint the magistrates to that position or make themselves allowances for their services.

The fourth case is Vaughn v. Hulett, 27 Ky. Law Rep., 35. In that case the fiscal court allowed the overseers of the roads in the county a salary, not exceeding $50 per annum. This court decided that the fiscal court was without power to make such an allowance, as the statute fixed the compensation for overseers, and the fiscal court had no right to change the statutes in this manner. The action was brought by a taxpayer.

The fifth case is Boyd County v. Arthur, &c., 118 Ky., 932. In that case the fiscal court made appropriations to work the roads in each of the magisterial districts, and then appointed the justices of the peace to work in their respective districts in constructing and maintaining the county roads, and allowed each of them $3 a day. The county judge ordered an appeal from the order and appointed an attorney to take and prosecute the appeal. This court decided that the order was improperly made; that the fiscal court had no right to appoint the members thereof to the position named, and they had no right to hold dual positions, and could only receive as pay or fees such compensation as was allowed by law to justices of the peace.

The sixth case is Mitchell v. Henry County, 30 Ky. Law Rep., 1051. In that case the fiscal court made an annual allowance to the jailer of the county in lieu of all fees allowed him by statute. This court decided that the order was void because the fiscal court had no power to change the statute and make an allowance not authorized by it.

These cases have no direct application to the one under consideration. In all of them the parties in interest were owners of claims, improperly allowed, endeavoring to collect them, or by the county or some taxpayer therein who sought to prevent the payment of claims improperly allowed. In the case at bar, the action was brought by Logan county and its treasurer against its former treasurer and his surety, to compel them to pay to it claims which it improperly allowed and directed him to pay, with which orders he complied. In our opinion it would be unjust to require him to refund this money to the county. He held the money as the statute provides, subject to the orders of the fiscal court. He was not a member of that court; he was not the legal adviser, in any sense, of the county, nor did he have any supervisory power whatever over the fiscal court. He was merely a ministerial officer, or agent, of the county. He was subject to be removed at any time by the fiscal court for failure to obey its orders. We know of no principal of law that will make an agent liable to his principal for money paid out in accordance to the orders and directions of the principal, even though it turns out that the principal afterwards discovers that the money was paid to a person not entitled to it. Such is the case at bar. If it had been charged and shown in evidence, that Harrison had been in collusion with any person or persons who obtained improper allowances against the county, and realized some benefit to himself thereby, the case would be different. But it is shown in the record that appellant conducted his office with fidelity. There is not an intimation that his conduct was otherwise. If the county has paid out money through its treasurer to persons not entitled to it, its remedy is against those persons to whom it was paid, and not against its agent, whom it directed to pay the money out.

It is also claimed that the warrants issued by the clerk and the orders of the overseers upon the treasurer were without authority of law. The form of the warrants issued by the clerk is as follows:

"No. 346. State of Kentucky, Fiscal Court of Logan County.

"October Term, 1904.

"It is ordered by the court that J. W. Clark be, and he is hereby, allowed the sum of Five Hundred Dollars, payable out of levy, 1905.

"For Court House Comm'r.

Attest: "M. B. MORTON, Clerk F. C. L. C."

Appellees' counsel claim that there is no law authorizing the clerk to issue such a warrant; that his duty was to copy the whole of the order of the fiscal court. The statute is silent as to the duty of the clerk in this regard. We know that this manner of issuing warrants has been in vogue by the county clerks of the State for a great many years. An order of the fiscal court, in allowing claims against the county, often covers several pages of an order book, the form, however, is about as follows: It is ordered by the fiscal court, naming the county, that the following claims be and they are hereby allowed, and then continues giving the names of the persons and the amounts allowed each of them, and a short statement of the services rendered for which the money was appropriated. It would be unnecessary and a great hardship to require the clerk to copy for each person named in the order, the whole of it. In our opinion it was no violation of the law for the clerk to issue the warrant referred to. Appellees also contend that the orders with reference to payments made for labor on the roads were made without authority of law. By section 4311, of the Kentucky Statutes, the overseers of roads are required to work them in the manner directed by the fiscal court. The statute does not give the details as to how the fiscal court should conduct this duty, therefore, the court could exercise its discretion with reference thereto. It is presumed that it will comply with its duty and devote its best efforts to the interest of the county. In this case the court had adopted, in substance, the following method: If set apart a sum of money for that purpose, and placed it in the hands of the treasurer, and called it the road and bridge fund; and it was ordered that, so long as the roads of Logan county were worked by taxation, the money should be spent in various road districts of the county.

under the supervision of the road overseers. And it was further ordered that the clerk of the fiscal court should issue vouchers against the road fund in the hands of the treasurer of the county, and to be issued upon the written certificate of the various overseers of the county as work was done, the same to be approved by the county judge. This method was followed, except in a few instances where the person signing the certificate, or order failed to add to his signature the word "overseer." This error should not have the effect to make the treasurer responsible for the payment of them. He had the right to presume that it was the overseer of the road who signed the order, and furthermore they were attested by the clerk and approved by the judge of the county, and the presumption is that the county judge, knew who the overseers of the county were. What we have said with reference to the claims charged to appellant by the judgment of the lower court, will also apply to the claims which the treasurer paid and with which the lower court refused to charge him, and which are involved on the cross-appeal.

Appellees' counsel also claims that there was no evidence introduced showing that appellant, Harrison, had paid these claims. It appears that the case was prepared in the lower court upon the idea that there was no contest with reference to the fact that he had actually paid the claims on the orders referred to. As stated, appellant made a settlement with the committee appointed by the fiscal court in the month of March, 1906, which was a final settlement, and under section 933, of the Kentucky Statutes, this settlement was approved by the fiscal court, and ordered to be recorded by the county clerk. This settlement so made and approved, made out for appellants a prima facie case, and the burden was on appellees to show mistakes therein. (Green County v. Howard, 32 Ky. Law Rep., 243.)

Appellant, Harrison, paid some small claims, amounting in all to about $100, upon orders which were irregular; but it appears they were proper and just claims against the county. Appellant, Harrison, should not be required to pay these claims for they were just claims against the county, and there is no doubt about his good faith in the payment of them. This principle was expressly enunciated in the case of Sweeney v. Commonwealth, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 877.

For these reasons the judgment of the lower court is affirmed on the cross-appeal, and reversed on the original appeal and remanded, for further proceedings consistent herewith.

Whole court sitting.

CITY OF MIDDLESBOROUGH v. COAL & IRON BANK, &c.
MIDDLESBOROUGH TOWN & LAND CO. v. CITY OF MIDDLESBOROUGH.

(Filed May 13, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Taxes—Lien of City Therefor—Negligence of Officials—Effect on Lien Notes—Whatever might be the rule between individuals, it can not be held that a city shall lose its right to collect its public dues by reason of the failure of its officers to present its claim in a suit of which they have no knowledge, the city not being a party to the suit.

2. Same—Execution Sale—Purchasers—Conveyance to Wife—Effect—Where in a proceeding to sell a lot in a city, under execution, and on which the city had a lien for taxes, and of which lien the purchaser had notice, the fact that the purchaser had the deed to the lot made to his wife did not make her a bona fide purchaser without notice—she being a lis pendens purchaser took the property subject to the lien of the city which it had asserted in the action.

470 CITY OF MIDDLESBOROUGH V. COAL & IRON BANK, &C.

T. G. Anderson for appellant and appellee, City and Henry Steele, Receiver.

N. B. Hays, J. R. Sampson for appellant, Middlesborough Town & Land Co.

Appeals from Bell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, affirming.

On December 1, 1893, the Secretary of State, under section 616, Ky. Statutes, caused proceedings to be instituted against the Coal and Iron Bank, of Middlesboro, upon the ground that the bank was insolvent. A receiver was appointed to close up and settle its affairs in insolvency. In that action by the Commonwealth it appeared that the bank was hopelessly insolvent, and at the July term of the circuit court a judgment was rendered directing a sale of all the property of the bank. The sale was made and confirmed, the city of Middlesborough not being a party to the proceedings. The purchaser of the property of the bank, at the sale, transferred his bid to the Bell County Investment Company, and the Middlesborough Town and Lands Company. In December, 1897, the city of Middlesborough filed this petition against them, setting up taxes against the bank for the amount of $2,829.40, which it alleged were a lien upon the property they held under the judicial sale made in the Commonwealth action. The defendants demurred to the petition. Their demurrer was sustained, and the petition was dismissed. On appeal to this court the judgment was reversed. It was held by this court that the city had a lien on all the property of the bank for its taxes and that the city, not being a party to the suit in which the property of the bank had been sold, was not affected by the judgment in that case. (City of Middlesborough v. Coal and Iron Bank, 108 Ky. 680.) On the return of the case to the circuit court, the defendant's demurrer having been overruled, they filed an answer. During the progress of the case the Bell County Investment Company had conveyed some of the lots it bought to L. C. Saulsberry. On final hearing the circuit court adjudged the city a lien on all the property except that conveyed to Mrs. Saulsberry, and as to that property the petition of the city was dismissed. From this judgment the appeals now before us are prosecuted.

The opinion on the former appeal is the law of the case, and settles substantially a majority of the questions now raised. The city having a lien upon the property had a right to bring its action against the person then owning the property. It was unnecessary for it to bring before the court the former owners of the property for its proceeding was in rem and only the persons then interested in the property were necessary parties to the proceeding. The rule of caveat emptor applies to judicial sales. It was unnecessary for the city to assert its lien in the Commonwealth suit to wind up the defunct bank. It is true it might have done so but the purchasers of the property might also in that suit have brought the city before the court and had its tax lien adjudicated before paying for the property or before the money was distributed. The holder of a lien on property can not be defeated of his rights by the proceedings in an action to which he is not a party. These questions were considered on the former appeal and were determined in the opinion then rendered. It is said that the city knew of the suit that was pending to settle the affairs of the bank, but it is equally true that the purchasers of the property knew that the city was asserting a lien on its property for the taxes, and it was as incumbent on them as on it to have the matter adjudicated. Whatever might be the rule between individuals it can not be held that a city shall lose its right to collect its public dues by reason of the failure of its officers to present its claim in a suit of which they have knowledge, the city not being made a party to the suit. The city government cannot be maintained without the payment of its public dues, and the knowledge of its officers that a suit was pending will not estop the city from afterwards asserting its claim where, as here, the persons affected also knew all the facts and were as much required to take action as the officers of the city were. (Seibert v. Louisville, 101 S. W., 325.)

The city, not being a party to the action brought by the Commonwealth to wind up the affairs of the bank, and that action having proceeded to a final order discharging the receiver, a subsequent motion of the city to set aside that order being overruled, did not have the effect of concluding the city by anything that had been done in that action. The only effect of the order of the court overruling the motion of the city was a refusal on the part of the court, at that stage of the proceeding, to allow the city to enter into that case. If the court had sustained the motion no good could have come of it, as the property had all been sold and the proceeds distributed.

No statute of limitation is applicable as the action was brought by the city in 1897, and within less than five years after its cause of action accrued. The Common Council, after the reversal of the case in this court, undertook to settle the matter by the defendants paying it $200 each. The Council had no authority to compromise the city's claim for taxes. (Louisville v. Louisville R. R. Co., 111 Ky., 1.) It is insisted that in that case the taxpayers were released, but here there was a compromise with a third person and not with the taxpayer. This distinction cannot be maintained. The taxes are a lien upon the property. The property is released by a compromise, not the taxpayer. To say that the property may be released by a compromise is to say that the taxes may be released for the lien is the security for the payment of the taxes. To release the property is to release the taxes; and whether the original owner has the property or it has passed into the hands of another can make no difference as to the power of the Common Council to release taxes.

We, therefore, conclude that the judgment in favor of the city on the appeal of the Middlesboro Town and Lands Company, is correct.

As to Mrs. L. S. Saulsberry a different question is presented. The record shows that she now owns Block 511, sec. S. E. On Nov. 15, 1893, the sheriff of Bell county levied an execution upon this block as the property of the Coal and Iron Bank. This was after the lien of the city for taxes had accrued. The lot was sold and purchased by Ed Saulsberry, who assigned his bid to the Bell County Investment Company, of which G. W. Saulsberry was president. The company was indebted to Saulsberry and he agreed to take the lot on what it owed him. He then had the deed made to his wife, L. S. Saulsberry, on June 2, 1900, or three years after this suit had been brought by the City of Middlesboro against the Bell County Investment Company to assert its lien on the land. Mrs. Saulsberry relies on the fact that no notice had been filed in the county court clerk's office of the pending action as provided by section 2358a, Kentucky Statutes. But the notice provided for in that section is only necessary as to a subsequent purchaser for value and without notice. G. W. Saulsberry had full notice of the lien of the city. He paid the consideration; he was the real purchaser. The deed was simply made to his wife by his direction and for his convenience. She is not a bona fide purchaser without notice, but takes the property subject to the lien of the city which it had asserted in the action. (Thomas v. Southard, 2 Dana, 480; Wickliffe v. Breckinridge, 1 Bush, 442; Taylor v. U. S. Building Association, 110 Ky., 84; Hall v. Manns, 100 S. W., 222.)

472 CROSS, BY, &C. V. B'D OF TRUST. WALTON COM. SCHOOL.

As the title to the property was in the Bell County Investment Company at the time that the suit was filed, the action was properly brought against it; and when it conveyed the property, pending the action, to L. S. Saulsberry, she was a lis pendens purchaser; and not being a purchaser for value and without notice, took the property subject to the result of the litigation. The order placing the property in the hands of the receiver was not, therefore, void as to her, although she was not a party to the action. When it was finally determined that the city of Middlesboro had no lien on one of the pieces of property, its petition was properly dismissed as to this property, but the order placing it in the hands of the receiver was not for this reason void. The city had asserted a lien upon the property, but had failed to establish a lien by its proof. Mrs. Saulsberry is entitled to the rents collected from this piece of property, but the receiver is entitled to credit for his services and reasonable expenses about the property. The order discharging the receiver and directing him to pay over, to Mrs. Saulsberry all the money in his hands, and giving him no credit for his services or expenses was erroneous.

On the appeal of the city against Mrs. Saulsberry, the judgment is reversed as to block 511, sec. S. E. As to the lien asserted on the other property conveyed to her, the judgment is affirmed. The judgment discharging the receiver and ordering him to pay over to Mrs. Saulsberry all the money in his hands, derived from both pieces of property conveyed to her, is reversed, and the cause is remanded, for a judgment and further proceedings consistent herewith.

On the appeal of the Middlesborough Town & Lands Company the judgment is affirmed.

CROSS, BY, &c. v. BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF WALTON COMMON SCHOOL.

(Filed May 13, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Graded Common Schools—Pupils—Disobedience to Authority of Teacher—Suspension by Teacher—Under Kentucky Statutes, sec. 4367, providing that "all pupils admitted to common schools shall comply with the regulations for the government of such schools. Willful disobedience of the authority of the teachers * * * shall constitute good cause for the suspension or expulsion from school," where a pupil in a graded common school was assigned by his teacher the task to take part in a dialogue in the commencement exercises thereof, which the pupil refused to accept, such refusal was an act of disobedience to the authority of the teacher for which he had the right to suspend the pupil from the school for the remainder of the term.

2. Same—Report of Teacher to Trustees—Approval of Trustees—Where a teacher in a graded common school suspended a pupil for a willful disobedience of his assignment to a part in a dialogue in the commencement exercises thereof, and reported such suspension to the board of trustees, who offered to allow the pupil to return to school if he would take a different character in the dialogue from the one assigned him by the teacher, the refusal of the pupil to accept the terms offered by the trustees, rendered him not only guilty of disobedience, but also of insubordination, and their approval of the suspension of the pupil for the remainder of the term was final and conclusive, and can not be questioned by the courts.

S. W. Tolin, John S. Gaunt and Greene & VanWinkle for appellants.

Frank E. Curley for appellee.

Appeal from Boone Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle, affirming.

This is the second appeal prosecuted by appellants in this case. On the first appeal (Cross, By. &c. v. Board of Trustees Walton Graded Common School, 28 Ky. Law Rep., 449,) the judgment of the circuit court was reversed because of error committed by that court in sustaining a general demurrer to the petition; it being the opinion of this court that the facts alleged in the petition stated a good cause of action. The present appeal is from the judgment rendered by the circuit court on a trial of the case upon the merits, which dismissed the action at appellant's cost.

Briefly stated, the cause of action alleged is that appellant Waite Cross, who was a student of the Walton Graded Common School, was by the act of W. P. Dickey, principal of the school, with the approval of appellees, the trustees, maliciously, arbitrarily and without cause, expelled from the school "without condition or limitation," and that the latter have refused to permit him to re-enter the school, threaten to persist in such refusal, and will continue to exclude him therefrom, unless compelled by judgment, and process of the court, to permit his return. The petition closed with a prayer for a mandatory injunction requiring the trustees to allow the appellant, Waite Cross, to re-enter the school, and resume his studies therein. The action was instituted against the trustees alone; the board being composed of the appellees, A. N. Jones, T. F. Courley, G. B. Powers, A. M. Rouse, Richard Jones and Wm. Ransler.

The answer of the trustees denied that the appellant, Waite Cross, was maliciously, arbitrarily or without cause, expelled by the principal, or that such alleged expulsion was without condition or limitation or approved by the Board of Trustees, or that he was expelled at all. It, however, contained the admission that appellant was, on April 4th, 1904, suspended from further attendance at school during the remainder of the term, which closed April 29th, 1904, for disobedience of an order of the principal, the rules and regulations of the school, and for insubordination as a student. That the suspension was ordered by the principal, and later approved by the Board of Trustees, after numerous meetings attended by Waite Cross, a full hearing of the charge, and sufficient proof of his guilt thereof; and that the suspension was necessary for his good and the discipline of the school.

The action of the Board of Trustees with respect to the suspension of the appellant, Waite Cross, is shown by the following resolution or order, entered upon the record book kept by the board, at the time of its adoption:

"The principal's report, suspending Waite Cross, a pupil in junior grade, for disobedience, was read and the board having previously heard the statement of the principal and also that of the student, Waite Cross, and the board being fully advised in the matter, it is moved and unanimously carried that the action of the principal be sustained and that the pupil, Waite Cross, be and is hereby, suspended from further attendance at school during the remainder of the present term, for disobedience and insubordination."

474 CROSS, BY, &C. V. B'D OF TRUST. WALTON COM. SCHOOL.

Section 4473, Kentucky Statutes, provides that such action as was taken by the trustees in this instance shall be entered in the journal kept by them, "which shall be open at all times to the inspection of any citizen of the graded common school district in which he or she may reside."

The language of the foregoing resolution plainly shows that the student, Waite Cross, was not expelled from the Walton Graded Common School, as alleged, but was merely suspended from attendance thereat, during the remainder of the term, viz: From April 4th to April 29, 1904, a period of only twenty-five days.

It appears from the record that the decision of the trustees approving his suspension by the principal of the school was announced to Waite Cross and his father when made, April 4th, and whether then made or not they could have ascertained, at any time, by an inspection of the trustees' journal, that suspension and not expulsion, was the penalty for his offense; yet notwithstanding such knowledge on their part, or means of information at hand, they delayed bringing this action until July 28th, 1904, nearly three months after the period of Waite Cross' suspension had expired and when there was no obstacle in the way of his attending the school at the next succeeding session, which had not then commenced. In other words, when the action was instituted there was no necessity for appellant's applying to the court for such relief as was thereby sought; for the way of appellant, Waite Cross', return to the school was open and unobstructed, because the term of his suspension had previously expired. It would do appellants no injustice if we should hold that the affirmance of the judgment appealed from might be rested on this ground alone. In making this suggestion we do not overlook appellants' claim that the trustees' journal has, in some mysterious way, been changed since their decision was rendered, to make it appear that Waite Cross was suspended, instead of expelled from the school; but there is no testimony save that of appellants, father and son, to support this claim, and theirs amounts to only an inference arising from what they contend was declared by the trustees to be their decision at the meeting of April 4th, 1904. On the other hand the testimony introduced by appellees is of such convincing weight and character as to leave no doubt that the only penalty imposed by the principal and approved or announced by the trustees of the Walton Graded Common School for the breach of discipline charged against the appellant, Waite Cross, was that of suspension during the remainder of the school term then nearing an end. The same testimony is equally convincing of the further fact that the decision as thus made by the principal and trustees was immediately entered upon the journal of the Board of Trustees in the precise form in which it now appears.

All of appellants' testimony introduced for the purpose of showing that the resolution in question does not truthfully express the decision of the trustees, or their approval of the act of the principal of the school with respect to the suspension of the appellant, Waite Cross, or that it was not entered in the trustees journal as adopted, was and is incompetent, as neither the petition nor reply attacks it upon any of these grounds, or alleged fraud or mistake in its form or language. However, as none of this incompetent evidence was excepted to by appellees, we do not hold that the court should have excluded it.

An important question presented by the record for our consideration is, was the refusal of the appellant, Waite Cross, to accept and prepare for the part in the approaching commencement exercises of the school, assigned him by the principal, such an act of disobedience as amounted to a violation of a reasonable rule or regulation, adopted by the board of trustees, for the proper discipline of the school?

The Walton School is a graded school, maintained, like all other common schools of the State, by taxation; therefore, all white youths or children, residing in the Walton Graded Common school district, who are within the school age, may attend the school in question, upon such conditions as the statute with respect to common schools may prescribe. Section 4367, Kentucky Statutes, provides:

"All pupils who may be admitted to common schools shall comply with the regulations established in pursuance of law for the government of such schools. Willful disobedience or defiance of the authority of the teachers, habitual profanity or vulgarity, or any other gross violation of proprietary law, shall constitute a good cause for suspension or expulsion from school."

Section 4473 provides:

"Said trustees may adopt such by-laws and rules for the government of themselves and their appointees, and for the control, government and management of graded common schools in their respective districts, as they may deem necessary, not in conflict with law, and shall keep a journal of their proceedings, which shall be open at all times to the inspection of any citizen of the graded common school district in which he or she may reside."

We find in the record, as a part of the evidence, a catalogue of the Walton Graded Common School for the school year beginning in the fall of 1903, and ending in the spring of 1904, containing a number of rules and regulations adopted by the board of trustees for the government of the school. Many of these apply to the principal and teachers, others to the pupils. Among the former, we note the following:

"1 It shall be the duty of the principal to exercise general supervision over the conduct of all pupils.

"2. He (i. e. principal) shall have the power to suspend any pupil for cause, but he must report such suspension on the same day to the president or secretary of the board of trustees."

Among the rules applicable to pupils we quote the following:

"3. It shall be the duty of all the pupils to treat all the teachers with respect and courtesy, and to obey whatever is commanded by any teacher, whether of his department or not."

W. P. Dickey was a teacher in, as well as principal of, the Walton school.

The catalogue also contains an announcement of the annual commencement exercises to be held at the close of the school, April 29th, and the evidence showed that from the date of its establishment the Walton Graded Common School had closed its school years with such commencement exercises, and that on such occasions it was the universal custom of the school to have, in addition to essays or addresses from its graduates, declamations, dialogues and other similar exercises, conducted by such of the pupils as the principal or teachers might select and appoint for the purpose. As the appellant, Waite Cross, according to the evidence, attended the school from its beginning and had frequently taken part in commencement exercises, he was familiar with the rules, regulations and customs of the school, and must have known that when directed by the principal of the school to take part in a dialogue at the approaching commencement, it was his duty to obey. He had the right to ask to be excused from taking the part assigned him and to give his reasons for wishing to be relieved by the principal. But if the latter, upon hearing his grounds of excuse, regarded them insufficient, and nevertheless thought appellant a suitable person to take the part, in his capacity of principal and teacher, or either, he had authority to command him to do so, and it was the duty of appellant to obey the command.

We observe that the curriculum of the Walton Graded Common School embraced many of the higher studies, both in English and Latin, history and literature, as well as advanced mathematics, economics and other important sciences; also that it requires pupils to write compositions and practice declamation. The latter exercises, together with the study of literature, necessarily include the study of elocution, and no better plan for improving the voice, acquiring ease of manner and power of expression, can be devised for the training of the average common school pupil, than declamation and dialogue. Moreover, such exercises occurring at intervals, or at the school commencement, give the patrons of the school, witnessing them, some information as to the progress made by the children, and tend to inspire them with confidence in those in charge of the school and also in the methods of teaching employed.

So, in assigning the appellant, Waite Cross, a character to personate, or part to perform, in dialogue or play, at the commencement, the principal acted in accordance with a long established custom of the Walton school and in pursuance of a reasonable regulation of the board of trustees, of which appellant as a student had full knowledge. While the appellant, Waite Cross' version of his suspension by the principal of the school, differed in some details of statement from that of the latter, when they appeared before the board of trustees, it was patent from the statements of both, that though the former sought to be relieved of taking the part of the Irish character assigned him in the dialogue upon the ground that he was unequal to the task of personating it, when the principal advised him that he underrated his capacity and insisted that he take the part, the young man refused to do so, and then and there so notified the principal. For this act of disobedience, the principal suspended him for the remainder of the term and ordered him to get his books and go home, which he at once did.

The discipline of the school required that some sort of punishment should have been meted out for this willful act of disobedience on the part of the pupil. Obviously, the infliction of corporal punishment would have been unwise, for young Cross, being then 18 years of age, and a member of the Freshman class, was too large to be subjected to a whipping. In view of the situation confronting the principal, we are not prepared to say he transcended his authority in suspending the culprit or that the penalty inflicted, though amply sufficient, was more severe than it should have been. The evidence fails to show that the principal, in suspending young Cross, acted arbitrarily, from malice, or other improper motive. There had been no previous collision between them, and Cross himself admitted, that the principal's treatment of him had always been kind and helpful.

The principal immediately gave the board of trustees written notice of appellant, Waite Cross' suspension, and of the cause thereof, and the board had a meeting on the evening of the same day for the purpose of determining whether the act of the principal in suspending him should be approved. The principal of the school and Waite Cross both attended that meeting; each giving, at the request of the trustees, his version of the suspension and the cause thereof. As already indicated there was, substantially, no disagreement between them as to what took place when the suspension was declared. Notwithstanding this, the trustees seemed anxious to adjust the matter without approving the suspension of the young man. For this reason, no action was taken at the first meeting. During that meeting, however, appellant, Waite Cross, was, in substance, advised by the trustees that if he would agree to take a character or part in a play or dialogue other than that assigned him by the principal, they would cause the latter to remove the sentence of suspension and permit him to return to the school; but this offer was rejected by him. Following the first meeting of the trustees, several, if not all of them, visited Waite Cross and his parents at their home, and again proposed that the former re-enter the school upon the condition proposed at the first meeting; but the proposal was, as in the first instance, rejected. One of the trustees then proposed to the family that he be allowed to send Professor Dickey, the principal of the school, to the Cross home to talk the matter over with the family; but the appellant James Cross, father of Waite, objected to a visit from the principal and said his son should not return to the school unless the former was removed as principal. Three meetings of the trustees were held in investigating the matter of young Cross' suspension, at least two of which he attended, and one of which was attended by his father; at these meetings and between them, every effort that could reasonably be demanded was made by the trustees to procure the return of Waite Cross to the school; and not until they became satisfied that he would not return without action upon their part condemning the principal for suspending him, did they, in their official capacity, adopt the resolution approving the act of the principal in ordering and enforcing his suspension. The resolution in question was adopted by unanimous vote of the trustees at the third and last meeting held by them in investigating the suspension of the appellant, Waite Cross. Their action in approving his suspension was final and conclusive, and can not be questioned by the courts, unless they acted arbitrarily or maliciously. (Board of Education v. Booth, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 288; Cross v. Board of Trustees, 28 Ky. Law Rep., 440.)

A careful examination of the record convinces us that it contains no reliable evidence conducing to show that the trustees, in approving the order of the principal suspending Waite Cross from further attending the Walton Graded Common School during the remainder of the term, which ended April 29th, 1904, acted arbitrarily, maliciously or without legal cause.

The fact that the resolution of the board of trustees declares the appellant, Waite Cross, suspended for insubordination as well as disobedience does not affect the case. He was disobedient to the principal because he refused to accept the part assigned him by the latter for the school commencement, and by continuing in such disobedience, and also rejecting the repeated offers permitting his return to the school, upon taking another part than that assigned him in the first instance, he became insubordinate as well as disobedient, either of which was an offense justifying suspension. As well said by this court in the opinion on the former appeal, "Nothing can be more important to the upholding and maintenance of the common school system, in its integrity, than the enforcement of wholesome and reasonable discipline among the students. This high duty is cast upon the trustees, and the court will never interfere with them while acting within their legal province." * * *

For the reasons given the judgment is affirmed.

The whole court sitting, except Judge Lassing.

BLOCKER v. CITY OF OWENSBORO, &c.

(Filed May 14, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Obstruction in Street—Injury to Pedestrian—Joint Liability of City and Person Placing Obstruction—Liability as Between Wrongdoers—Although a person injured by an obstruction in a street may sue the city alone, or both the city and the person who placed the obstruction in the street, and recover damages against both and look to either for satisfaction of the judgment, yet as between the wrongdoers the city may, if it is required to satisfy the judgment, recover the amount thereof from the person who placed the obstruction in the street.

2. Same—Judgment Against City—Negligence of Another—Assignment of Judgment—Purchase by One Jointly Liable—Enforcement of Judgment—In an action by D. against Mr. B. and the city of O. for damages for an injury in falling over some bricks negligently allowed to be in the street of the city in the building of a house on a lot owned by B., the plaintiff recovered a judgment for $500 and costs. The wife of B. paid the judgment and took an assignment thereof and proceeded by mandamus to collect same from the city. It was shown by the evidence that the house was built and owned by Mrs. B. who, though not a party to the record, was the real party in interest. It also appeared that Mr. B. owned property subject to execution. Held—That the court has the right to look beneath the surface to ascertain the truth and to adjudge the case as appears right, and it was properly adjudged that the purchase of the judgment was not made in good faith by Mrs. B. but was done by agreement with her husband who was the real purchaser and that no action could be maintained by her against the city.

Little & Slack for appellant.

J. A. Dean and Geo. W. Jolly for appellees.

Appeal from Daviess Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, affirming.

In 1906, Augusta Dieco, in an action brought by her against the City of Owensboro and J. J. Blocker, the husband of appellant, Clara Blocker, to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by obstructions on the sidewalk in the city, over which she stumbled and fell, obtained a judgment for $500, and costs.

The defendants in that action prosecuted an appeal to this court, where the judgment was affirmed. In 1907 Mrs. Dieco, in consideration of the sum of $672 paid her by Clara Blocker, assigned to her the judgment without recourse. Thereupon the appellant, Clara Blocker, brought this suit against the city of Owensboro, setting up the purchase and assignment of the judgment and the fact that she had demanded payment thereof from the city, which was refused, and the further fact that the city had no property subject to execution, but did have in its treasury a sum sufficient to pay the judgment. She asked for a mandamus against the city and the mayor and board of councilmen, who were made parties defendant, requiring them to satisfy the judgment, and if necessary that they be compelled to levy a tax to pay the same.

In its answer, the city set up in substance that J. J. Blocker, the husband of Clara Blocker, was the owner of a lot in the city, and that he and his wife re-constructed the building, making additions and improvements thereto, and that while so engaged in the erection of the building, they permitted bricks to be placed or fall on the sidewalk, and that Mrs. Dieco stumbled and fell over said bricks, causing the injuries for which she recovered judgment, and that the injuries sustained by her were due to the carelessness and negligence of Blocker and his wife, the appellant. That Clara Blocker had notice of the institution and prosecution of the suit of Mrs. Dieco against the city and Blocker, and, although not a party of record to the action, she was the real party in interest, and voluntarily paid the judgment, and afterwards procured the assignment which was a mere pretense and not made in good faith. That the judgment was satisfied and extinguished by the payment, which was made at the request of her husband J. J. Blocker, and because she had the house in which the brick were used over which Mrs. Dieco fell re-constructed and built, and was in fact the owner thereof. And furthermore, that J. J. Blocker owned ample property out of which an execution upon the judgment could have been collected at any time.

In a reply, it was denied that appellant and her husband re-constructed or made the improvements on the lot referred to, or were engaged in re-constructing the building or that the improvements were made for her, except that the building as erected by him at her instance, and she voluntarily furnished the money to pay for same. She denied the other material averments of the answer, and that she paid the judgment at the request of J. J. Blocker, or that the assignment of the judgment was not in good faith, and that the city, as between it and J. J. Blocker, was primarily liable for the damages.

No other pleading was filed, and on motion of plaintiff, now appellant, the action was submitted to the court upon the pleadings and the exhibit filed with and as a part of the answer. This exhibit consisted of a complete transcript of the record in the action of Mrs. Dieco against Blocker and the city. The court separated its conclusions of law and fact, and found the following facts: 1. That an action was instituted by Mrs. Dieco against the city and Blocker to recover damages. That a trial resulted in a judgment against both defendants, which judgment was affirmed by the Court of Appeals. 2. That Mrs. Blocker, wife of J. J. Blocker, paid the amount of the judgment to Mrs. Dieco, and took an assignment thereof, and afterwards brought this suit. That the house was being erected by appellant and in the course of the work, bricks were negligently placed in a position where they fell, and encumbered the sidewalk, and the injuries to Mrs. Dieco were sustained in consequence of this negligence on the part of appellant and her agents, and that she had notice of the suit by Mrs. Dieco, and is chargeable with notice of the result and bound by the judgment.

From these facts the court concluded, as a matter of law, that appellant was concluded by the proceedings had in the case of Dieco against Blocker and the city as fully as if she was a party to the record. That if the city had paid the judgment, it might have recovered the amount from the appellant, on the principle that when one is compelled by the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, to respond in damages for the wrongful act or negligence of another, a cause of action arises in favor of the party who pays the judgment against the actual wrong-doer or party whose act of negligence produced the injury. That, being primarily liable to Mrs. Dieco, if the city paid or satisfied the judgment, it could proceed against her and recover the amount thereof, and consequently her purchase of the judgment and the assignment thereof did not give her any right of action against the city.

The first question we need consider is whether or not the findings of fact by the trial court, are supported by the record. If they are, his conclusion of law is correct. It is well settled that although a person injured by an obstruction in the street may sue the city alone, or both the city and the person who placed the obstruction in the street, and recover damages against both, and look to either or both for satisfaction of the judgment, yet, as between the wrong-doers, the city may, if it is required to satisfy the judgment, recover the amount thereof from the person who placed the obstruction in the street. (Dillon on Municipal Corporations, sec. 1035.)

As Blocker, one of the judgment defendants, was solvent, Mrs. Dieco, the judgment creditor, might have collected her judgment from him by execution, or have attempted to collect the same from the city; and if it failed to pay, have proceeded by mandamus to require it either to pay the judgment from funds on hand or levy a tax to pay the same. Indeed, no question is made by counsel for appellee that mandamus is not the proper remedy. (Palmer v. Stacy, 44 Iowa, 340; Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, page 800.) But, back of this, there is an issue, the settlement of which is decisive of the case. The bricks over which Mrs. Dieco fell were not placed in or upon or about the street by the city. They were placed there by the persons constructing the building, or at any rate those persons were responsible for injuries caused by the obstruction. The city had nothing to do with the construction of the building, and it had the right to recover from the original wrong-doers, the amount it might have been required to pay to Mrs. Dieco. And if Mrs. Blocker was jointly liable with her husband, or if the house was being erected for her, then the city, if required to pay the judgment, might have instituted an action against Blocker and his wife to recover the money so paid, or if the purchase of the judgment was in truth made by Blocker, acting through his wife, as a willing agent, then neither of them can recover the amount so paid from the city. If Blocker had himself satisfied the judgment, it is clear that he could not have succeeded in an action brought against the city to recover the money paid in settlement of the judgment—because, as between himself and the city, it was his duty to have paid it; and the city, if it satisfied it, might have recovered the amount from him. And so, if Mrs. Blocker was liable to the city or if she satisfied the judgment for her husband by an arrangement between them, in which she was acting for him, the judgment of the lower court was correct.

In the consideration of these questions, we can not overlook the fact that the appellant is the wife of J. J. Blocker, who was undoubtedly liable to the city for the amount of the judgment, and the inference is very persuasive that Blocker furnished the money to his wife to satisfy the judgment, or prevailed on her, for and in his behalf and to protect his property from levy and seizure to satisfy it. It is difficult in this transaction to separate Blocker and his wife. If a stranger had bought the judgment, he could have prosecuted an action against the city to recover it, and in turn the city could have proceeded against Blocker. The transaction has every appearance of being an effort upon the part of Blocker, aided and assisted by his wife, to evade the payment of the judgment.

In cases of this character, we are not necessarily confined to what appears on the face of the record. We have the right to look beneath the surface to ascertain the truth of the matter being investigated, and to adjudge the case as appears right from an understanding of its substance. Under the facts of this record our conclusion is that the purchase of the judgment was not made in good faith by Mrs. Blocker, that it was done under an arrangement or agreement with her husband and he was the real purchaser.

Upon the trial in the lower court, a transcript of the record in the case of Dieco against the City of Owensboro and Blocker was considered as evidence by the court. This transcript was filed and made a part of the answer of appellee, but was not filed with the answer, nor until the appellant obtained a rule against the appellee to file it. No objection or exception was made or taken to the competency or sufficiency of the transcript as filed. After the judgment was rendered, the clerk taxed the fee for the transcript as a part of the costs against appellant, who thereupon moved the court to correct the taxation of costs, and strike from it this item. This motion was overruled, and we are now asked to review the ruling of the lower court in this particular. Section 904, of the Kentucky Statutes, provides in part that "one copy of any of the pleadings or exhibits obtained shall be taxed as costs, and the cost of any copies made exhibits." And in section 128 of the Civil Code, it is provided that, "in addition to the writings which a party is required by section 120 to file as the foundation of his action or defense, he may file as an exhibit with his pleadings, or with leave of court, at any time pending the action, any writing upon which he may intend to rely as evidence." The defense of appellee was rested upon the evidence and proceedings taken and had in the case of Dieco against Blocker and the city, and we are of the opinion that the city in this case had the right to file as a part of its answer, a copy of this record, and therefore, it was proper to tax it as costs under the provisions of the statute supra. The point is made that the transcript filed was an uncertified copy, and for this reason it was not competent as evidence. And further that it was a copy of the transcript filed in the clerk's office of the Court of Appeals, made from the original record on file in the Daviess Circuit Court, and therefore, it was a copy of a copy, and not a copy of an original record, and hence incompetent. It is also said that as the original record was in the Daviess Circuit Court at the time this action was tried, the plaintiff should have produced it, as it has a right to do, to be read as evidence, thereby saving appellant the unnecessary cost of a copy. In answer to the objection that the copy was not certified, and that it was a copy of a copy of the record, and for these reasons not competent, it is sufficient to say that it was read and considered by the court without exception or objection and it is now too late to raise any question as to its competency. In respect to the point that appellee might have used the original record in the Daviess Circuit Court, we are of the opinion that it is permissible for the parties to a suit to introduce on the trial of the case any original record in the clerk's office of the court in which the case is being tried, without subjecting them to the expense of procuring a copy, and that the court trying the case may direct that this be done. But, appellant did not ask this or make any question about the matter until after the case had been heard and disposed of: and as the transcript was filed upon motion of appellant, and read without exception or objection, we do not feel at liberty to disturb the ruling of the circuit court.

Upon a consideration of the entire case, the judgment is affirmed.

EWELL & SMITH v. JACKSON'S ADM'R., &c.

(Filed May 14, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Second Appeal—Action of Lower Court—Compliance with Opinion—On a former appeal of this case (28 Ky. Law Rep., page 9) the trial court was directed to determine two questions: 1st. Were the 350 acres in controversy embraced in the 687-acre tract? 2d. Had appellants previously bought and paid for the 350 acres? Held —That the lower court having found that the 350 acres were not embraced in the 687-acre tract, or in any other survey with which appellants were charged in the former judgment, therefore appellants were, properly chargeable with the 350 acre tract in controversy.

R. L. Ewell and Sam C. Hardin for appellants.

Henry C. Hazelwood for appellees.

Appeal from Laurel Circuit Court,

Opinion of the court by Wm. Rogers Clay, Commissioner, affirming.

This is the second appeal of this case. The opinion on the former appeal may be found in 28 Ky. Law Rep., 9.

Jarvis Jackson was the owner of large bodies of land in Laurel county, Kentucky, and, prior to his death, which occurred in 1883, he sold to appellants several surveys and executed to them bond for title. Some of these lands he sold for fifty cents per acre, and some for seventy-five cents per acre. It was agreed that the purchase price was to be paid when the number of acres in each tract was ascertained and deeds executed therefor. Jarvis Jackson died leaving one son, J. C. Jackson, who inherited all his property, and he executed to the appellants a bond for title, agreeing to convey to them a tract of land supposed to contain 1,500 or 1,800 acres, at the price of one dollar per acre. Soon after this, J. C. Jackson died, leaving surviving him his widow and two children, as his only heirs at law. In the month of March, 1899, the appellants filed a petition in the Laurel Circuit Court against J. C. Jackson's widow and his two children, who were then infants under the age of fourteen years, by which they sought to have the lands surveyed for the purpose of ascertaining the number of acres in the several tracts, and to obtain a conveyance therefor. This case remained on the docket undisposed of until the month of December, 1903, when the court rendered a judgment fixing the amount due from the appellants for the respective surveys of land purchased by them, and from that judgment they appealed to this court. On that appeal, this court held that the trial court erred to the prejudice of appellants in that two of the surveys—one of 100 acres and the other of 30 acres—were to be sold for fifty cents per acre, and another survey, containing 300 acres, was to sell for seventy-five cents per acre, while the court, by its judgment, made appellants pay one dollar per acre for each and all of them. The court also held that the 30-acre piece should be eliminated for the reason that it was included in the calculation of the larger boundary. After pointing out the above errors, the opinion of this court concluded as follows:

"It appears that the court in its judgment fixed the number of acres in the tract known as the Helton survey at 687 acres, and charged appellants therefor at the price named. It appears, however, but not very satisfactorily, that Jarvis Jackson, in his lifetime sold and conveyed 350 acres of this survey to the appellant, R. L. Ewell. If this be true it would be wrong to make them pay for it again.

"For the errors hereinbefore stated the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, and if it should be made to appear that the appellant, R. L. Ewell, had previously bought and paid for the 350 acres referred to, then the appellant should not be charged therewith."

Upon the return of the case, appellees moved the court to require appellants to make their second amended petition more specific and certain by setting out therein a description of the boundary of land claimed. To this motion there was no objection, and appellants, for compliance therewith, set forth that the 350 acres were conveyed to them by Jarvis Jackson on the 20th day of January, 1872, by deed recorded on the 20th day of April, 1872, in deed-book "F." at page 553, in the Laurel county court clerk's office. The description contained in the deed is as follows: "Also one tract supposed to contain one hundred and fifty acres boundary unknown, but being all the unsold land between the lines of Sol Barton, and the old Hardin Guinn place, the land of R. L. Ewell and old man Sutton, and the place on which Wilburn Turner lives." Appellees filed an answer, denying that any of the aforesaid boundary of land was contained in the 687-acre tract, or in any tract for which appellants were charged. Upon this issue proof was taken and judgment entered in favor of appellees. From this judgment, Ewell and Smith prosecute this appeal.

The proof shows that the boundary described in the above deed was a well-known body of land. It is bounded by four tracts of land that were well known at the time the deed was made to Ewell. The fifth tract bounding upon it was occupied at the time by Siguel Turner, a brother to Wilburn Turner. The latter lived nearby, on another tract of land owned by Jarvis Jackson. It further appears, from the plats, which we have carefully examined, and from the testimony of the surveyors with reference thereto, that the tract of land claimed by appellants to contain 350 acres, embraces only about 148 acres, and its nearest point to the 687-acre tract is 84 rods distant. Furthermore, it is several miles from the 1,500-acre tract with which appellants were charged in the judgment. Without detailing the evidence at length, we are of opinion that no part of the tract in question is embraced either in the 687-acre survey or in any other survey with which appellants were charged in the judgment.

Appellants contend, however, that the only question, upon the return of the case, to be determined by the lower court, was, whether or not the 350 acres had previously been bought and paid for by appellants. Manifestly, this was not the meaning of our former opinion. Whether or not appellants were to be charged with the full 687 acres, depended on whether they had previously bought and paid for the 350 acres which were embraced in that tract. They could not be charged a second time for the 350 acres, unless the latter tract was embraced in the 687 acres. Upon the return of the case, the trial court was directed to determine two questions: First, were the 350 acres embraced in the 687 acres? Second, had the appellants previously bought and paid for the 350 acres? In fixing the price due from appellants for the 687 acres, there would be no reason for crediting them with the 350 acres merely because they had previously bought and paid for the 350 acres, unless it also appeared that the 350 acres were actually embraced in the 687-acre tract. The lower court did precisely what the former opinion of this court directed. Its judgment was also proper in holding that the 350 acres were not embraced in the 687-acre tract, or in any other tract with which appellants were charged.

Several other errors are assigned upon this appeal, but, as they were all considered and determined on the former appeal, they cannot again be inquired into, as the former judgment is conclusive.

For the reasons given, the judgment is affirmed.

LOUISVILLE RY. CO. v. BOUTELLIER.

(Filed May 14, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Street Cars—Collision With Wagon—Injury to Driver—Care Required—The only duty required by travelers or persons using streets that are occupied by street car tracks and cars thereon, is to exercise ordinary care for their own safety, and, in the exercise of such care, they have the right to change their course in any way they please, and to use any part of the street necessary for their purpose. While this is the rule, as applied to the individual, it is proper to define, with more particularity, the duty resting upon persons in charge of engines or cars, because of their dangerous character.

2. Same—Relative Care—Lookout Duty of Motorman—The duty of lookout and warning is included in the ordinary care required of persons operating engines or cars, and it is the duty of the motorman of street cars to keep a lookout for persons and vehicles on the track, and to give timely warning of the approach of the car, when he discovers, or, in the exercise of ordinary care by keeping a lookout, should have discovered, the presence of persons or vehicles on the track, in apparent peril, and to exercise ordinary care to avoid a collision.

Fairleigh, Strauss & Fairleigh, Forcht & Field, Kohn, Baird, Sloss & Kohn and Greene & VanWinkle for appellant.

Edwards & Ogden for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas Branch, Third Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Carroll, affirming.

The appellee was driving a wagon on Market street, going west, when his vehicle was collided with by one of appellant's street cars, going east. As a result of the collision, appellee was thrown to the ground and severely injured. Upon a trial before a jury, he recovered $500, and we are asked to reverse the judgment awarding him this sum, first, because the trial court failed to direct the jury to return a verdict in favor of appellant; and, second, for error in instructing the jury.

At the place where appellee was injured, there are two street car tracks. Cars going west run on the north track, and eastbound cars on the south track. Appellee, in his vehicle, was driving down the north track, following close behind a covered wagon, that obstructed his view of the cars and tracks in the direction he was going. Desiring to cross the south track, to go to a point on the south side of the street, where he wished to stop, he turned the mule he was driving, for the purpose of crossing the street, and when his vehicle reached the south track, he saw a car, going east, rapidly approaching, and he attempted to get out of its way, and, although he succeeded in getting his mule off the track, the car struck the wagon, with the result stated.

Appellee testified as follows:

"I was driving west on Market street, and I started to pull out from behind the covered wagon, to stop on the south side, and, as soon as I pulled out, I noticed the car, which was 75 feet from me; the motorman was not looking in front of the car, and there was somebody on the front with him, and I tried to pull back to where I came from."

Q. "Which direction was the motorman looking?"

A. "On the south side of the street, and there was no alarm given, and I tried to get back in there the best I could; he just caught the shaft of my wagon."

Q. "Did your mule get clear from the track—the south track?"

A. "Yes, sir; he didn't hit the mule—just hit the wagon."

Q. "How far was that car from you when the motorman made the first effort to avoid the collision?"

A. "I don't think over 10 or 12 feet."

Q. "From the distance of 75 or 80 feet, until he got within 10 or 12 feet of you, tell the court what the motorman did in the way of stopping the car?"

A. "He was looking to the south side of the street, and did nothing at all until he was within 10 or 15 feet from me."

Q. "Was there any change in the speed of the car?"

A. "Not until he started to set the brakes."

Dr. Whittenburg, who was seated on the north side of the car, as a passenger, testified as follows:

Q. "I will ask you to state if you noticed when Mr. Boutellier pulled upon the track?"

A. "The first I saw was—it seems that he was on the track the time I first noticed it; when the accident came, he was seemingly trying to pull off the track."

Q. "You didn't see him when he first drove on the track?"

A. "No, when I first saw it, it looked like he was trying to get back on the north side of the track."

Q. "When he was trying to get back on the north side of the track, off of the rail, how was the car running, and what was the motorman doing?"

By the Court: "How far was the car from him at the time?"

A. "That is pretty hard to state; it seemed to be a distance from here to the south wall here—about that distance."

Q. "Was he trying to pull off?"

A. "Yes—something near about that."

Q. "What was the motorman doing when you first observed it?"

A. "It didn't seem like he was doing anything; it seemed like he must not have seen him, or noticed him at the time—that is, when I first saw him; but he tried to stop the car after a while."

Q. "How far was the car from Mr. Boutellier before you noticed the motorman attempting to do anything?"

A. "It must have been a little short of that distance; immediately after that, I saw this, and saw the accident was going to occur, he took hold of the brake, or turned the brake; he might have had his hand on the brake at the time."

Q. "State to the jury whether there was any change in the speed of the car up until the time that you saw the plaintiff pulling off of the track?"

A. "No, there was no change then that I detected."

Q. "Could you say, in feet, or by indicating by some objects in the court room, how far that car was from Mr. Boutellier or the mule when the car began to lessen its speed?"

A. "That would be pretty hard to state; it seemed like it must have run a short distance; it seemed like he didn't commence exactly to stop the car at the time I saw the accident was going to occur; I was impressed very forcibly of that. I don't know exactly how soon afterwards; it must have been pretty soon afterwards, though."

Q. "Had you heard any signal given?"

A. "I never noticed any signal; if it was given, I didn't notice it."

Q. "Have you any recollection of hearing one?"

A. "I don't recollect of hearing the signal."

On cross-examination, he said:

Q. "What was the first thing that attracted your attention to the calamity—with the collision between the car and the wagon?"

A. "That is the first thing I saw; I saw there was going to be an accident."

Q. "And you knew there was going to be an accident, and you brightened up and became excited?"

A. "I knew the rate the car was going, and no checking of the speed."

Q. "You knew there was going to be an accident when you saw this man on the track?"

A. "Yes, sir."

The motorman testified that when appellee pulled his mule on the track, the car was about 60 feet from him, and that he at once commenced ringing the gong, but Boutellier did not seem to realize anything until the car was within about 10 feet from him, when he looked up and saw the car, and then pulled his mule out to the side a little, and the car struck the side of the mule's head and knocked it out of the way, and struck the shaft of the wagon. Asked what he did as soon as Boutellier left the north track, to cross the south track, he answered:

"I cut off the current; I began to stop the car as quick as I could; I did all in my power to stop the car, to keep from hitting the man."

Other witnesses, who were in the car, said that as soon as they observed Boutellier about to get on the track ahead of the car, the motorman commenced sounding his gong, and trying to check the speed of the car.

Although the weight of the evidence tends to show that the motorman was keeping a lookout, and exercising ordinary care to prevent colliding with appellee's wagon, yet there was sufficient evidence to take the case to the jury, and we are not disposed to say that the verdict was flagrantly against the evidence. If the evidence introduced for appellant was true, and the jury had the right to so receive and accept it, the motorman did not exercise ordinary care to prevent the collision. In the exercise of ordinary care, he should have discovered the peril in which appellee was placed, in time to have avoided striking his wagon. It was the duty of the motorman to keep a lookout, and, as soon as he discovered appellee on the track, in a position of apparent danger, it was his duty to sound the gong, and to endeavor, by the exercise of ordinary care, to prevent injury to him.

The instructions given by the lower court, which are as follows, set out, in apt and appropriate language, the duty imposed by law upon the appellee, and were not prejudicial to appellant:

"The law made it the duty of the defendant's agent, the motorman in charge of the eastbound street car in the evidence referred to, to exercise ordinary care in its control and operation to avoid colliding with persons or vehicles in the use of the highway; and, if you shall believe, from the evidence, that the defendant's agent, the motorman in charge of the eastbound street car, failed, on the occasion in the evidence referred to, to exercise ordinary care in its control and operation, and that, by reason of such failure on his part, he caused the car to collide with the plaintiff's wagon, and the plaintiff was thereby injured, the law is for the plaintiff, and the jury should so find. But, unless you shall believe, from the evidence, that the defendant's agent, the motorman in charge of the eastbound street car, failed, on the occasion in the evidence referred to, to exercise ordinary care in its control and operation for the safety of others in the use of the highway, and that, by reason of such failure on his part, he caused the car to collide with the wagon of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff was thereby injured, the law is for the defendant, and the jury should so find.

"2. If you should believe that the defendant's agent was negligent in the operation of the car, nevertheless, if you shall also believe that the plaintiff himself failed to exercise ordinary care in the control and operation of his wagon, and that, by such failure upon his part, he either caused the collision between his wagon and the car, or so far contributed to bring about the collision that, but for such negligence upon his part, if there was any, the collision would not have occurred, and he would not have been injured, the law is for the defendant, and the jury should so find. -

"3. The law made it the duty of the defendant's agent, in charge of the car, after he saw, or, by the exercise of ordinary care, could have discovered the presence of plaintiff's wagon in peril of collision, to exercise ordinary care to prevent the collision, and if you should believe, from the evidence, that the defendant's agent, the motorman, saw the plaintiff's peril, or, by the exercise of ordinary care, could have discovered it, although brought about by his negligence (that is, the plaintiff's negligence), in time to have enabled the motorman, by the exercise of ordinary care, to prevent the collision, and he failed to do so, the law is for the plaintiff, and the jury should so find.

"3½. The court instructs the jury that the defendant's motorman was not bound, in the exercise of ordinary care, to anticipate that the plaintiff would change the course of his wagon at the time he appeared, from the evidence, to have done so, and defendant's said motorman was not, in the exercise of ordinary care, required to check the speed of his car, with a view of averting a collision with plaintiff's wagon, until he saw, or, by the exercise of ordinary care, could have discovered, plaintiff's peril.

"4. If the jury shall find for the plaintiff, they should award him such a sum in damages as they shall believe, from the evidence, will fairly and reasonably compensate him for any pain and suffering, mental and physical, directly resulting from his injury, and for any impairment of his power to earn money caused thereby, and for any doctor's bills necessarily incurred by him by reason of his injury, not exceeding the sum of $190 on that account, the whole award not to exceed the sum of $10,000, which is the amount claimed in the petition. If the jury find for the defendant, they will say so by their verdict, and no more.

"5. By the term 'ordinary care' as I have used it in the instructions given you, as applied to the motorman, is meant the degree of care which men of average prudence and skill engaged in operating street cars by electric power in a city like Louisville, and on a street like Market street, between Eleventh and Chapel, usually exercise under similar circumstances. As applied to the plaintiff, it means the degree of care which a man of average prudence, driving a wagon in such a city, and along such a street, usually exercises under such circumstances, for his own safety. 'Negligence' means the failure to exercise ordinary care."

Appellant asked the court to give the following instruction, which was, in our opinion, properly refused:

"It was the duty of the plaintiff, in driving westwardly on Market street, to use ordinary care for his own safety, and to exercise all of his senses, as persons of ordinary prudence usually do, under the same or similar circumstances, to ascertain whether or not a car was approaching, and it was his duty not to change his course and turn across the track without exercising ordinary care to discover whether or not he was in danger of colliding with street cars, or other vehicles on the street, and, if the jury believe, from the evidence, that the plaintiff did not exercise ordinary care in these regards, and thereby caused, or helped to bring about, his injuries, then the law is for the defendant, and the jury shall so find their verdict for the defendant, notwithstanding that the jury may also believe that the defendant's motorman, at the same time, was guilty of negligence or violating any or all of the duties charged upon him under these instructions."

The only duty imposed upon travelers or persons using streets that are occupied and used by street car tracks and cars thereon, is to exercise ordinary care for their own safety, and the appellee, if exercising such care, had the right to change his course in any way he pleased, and to use any part of the street necessary for his purposes. It has been frequently held improper to point out, in an instruction, the particular things concerning which it is the duty of the traveler to exercise ordinary care. He is required to exercise this degree of care generally, and with reference to one situation as well as another. Whilst this is the rule applied to the individual, it has also been considered proper to point out and define, with more particularity, the duty resting upon persons in charge of engines or cars. This distinction is made because of the dangerous character of the machines they are operating; and it has become firmly fixed, as frequently held by this court, that the duty of lookout and warning is included in the ordinary care required of persons operating engines or cars. These well-established principles we are not disposed to depart from, and the court would have been well within the settled rule in this State. If, in the instructions given, he had pointed out that it was the duty of the motorman to keep a lookout for persons and vehicles on the track, and to give timely warning of the approach of the car when he discovered, or, in the exercise of ordinary care, by keeping a lookout, should have discovered, the presence of appellee on the track, in a place of apparent peril, and to exercise ordinary care to prevent a collision. (South Covington & Cincinnati St. Ry. Co. v. McHugh, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1112; Thiel v. South Covington & Cincinnati St. Ry. Co., 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1590; Green v. Louisville Ry. Co., 27 Ky. Law Rep., 316; South Covington & Cincinnati St. Ry. Co. v. Cleveland, 30 Ky. Law Rep., 1076.)

The judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

MERCHANTS ICE & COLD STORAGE CO. v. BARGHOLT.

(Filed May 14, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Excessive Verdict—Motion to Set Aside Verdict—Absence of Prejudice or Passion—Courts are always slow to disturb the finding of a jury on the ground that it is excessive, in the absence of some evidence tending to show that it was the result of prejudice or passion.

2. Negligence—Relative Term—Depending on Circumstances—Question for Jury—Negligence is a relative term, depending upon the circumstances in each individual case. Facts which would show negligence in one case would not be construed to be such in another, hence it is peculiarly the province of the jury to determine, from the facts in each particular case, whether or not one is guilty of negligence.

3. Peremptory Instructions—When Allowable—Absence of Doubt—The courts will only instruct the jury to find for the defendant when the facts admitted or proven leave no room for doubt that he failed to exercise that degree of care which an ordinarily prudent person would have exercised under like or similar circumstances for his own safety.

4. Sidewalks—Use by Pedestrians—Presumption of Safety—Injury by Obstruction—Negligence—Question for Jury—A pedestrian on a sidewalk in a city has a right to the free use of any portion thereof which is open for public use, and he has a right to assume that it is free from obstruction and in a reasonably safe condition for travel, and if, while passing over and upon a sidewalk of a street, his attention is distracted, so that he fails to observe an obstruction placed thereon, where he has no right to expect it, and is injured by falling over it, the question as to whether or not he was proceeding with due care for his own safety is properly a question for the jury.

Gibson, Marshall & Gibson for appellant.

Walter S. Lapp and Louis F. Steuerle for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas Branch, First Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Lassing, affirming.

This suit was instituted by appellee against appellant and the Trustees of the Norton estate to recover damages for the negligent placing of a block of ice on the sidewalk in front of the Norton building, and suffering and permitting it to remain there, in such a manner as to render the sidewalk dangerous to passing pedestrians. That, while passing along the street, appellee, unaware of the dangerous condition of the street at that point, or that the ice had been left there, fell over and upon said ice, and sustained serious injury.

A demurrer was sustained to the petition, on behalf of the trustees of the Norton estate, and the petition was dismissed as to them. Appellant denied liability, and pleaded contributory negligence. On these issues the case was tried, and resulted in a verdict in favor of appellee, to reverse which this appeal is prosecuted.

Appellant insists that it was entitled to a peremptory instruction, at the close of appellee's testimony, and, if not then, certainly at the close of all the testimony, and that the court erred in refusing to give same. That the verdict is not sustained by the evidence, or is flagrantly against the evidence, and is excessive. We will not consider these grounds for reversal in the order in which they naturally occur, for the reason that, in our judgment, the only point which appellant seriously urges is, that the jury should have been peremptorily instructed to return a verdict in its favor.

There can be no question but what the ice over which appellee fell was placed upon the sidewalk by appellant company; whether near the curbing, as its employe testifies was his custom and habit to do, or whether it was left at the point at which appellee fell over it, was properly left for the determination of the jury. Appellant did offer evidence tending to show that the ice over which appellant fell was delivered to the Johnson & Morgan Company, tenants to the east, but the janitor of the later company testifies that on the morning in question the ice for his company was delivered in the doorway, and the witness Ben Pillow, while somewhat shaken in his testimony as to the exact location of the delivery of the ice by the appellant company, states that the ice over which appellant stumbled and fell was taken into the Norton building. It is clear, from this testimony, and is not seriously denied, that it was the ice delivered by appellant over which appellee fell. The question as to what point on the pavement it was placed was the only real question in dispute; the servant of appellant testified that it was placed near the curbing; at the time when appellee fell over it, it was near the center of the pavement. About this there is no dispute. As to how it got there, the record is silent; no one saw it moved, four witnesses testify that it was near the center of the pavement when appellee fell over it, and it was the province of the jury to say whether or not its presence at that point was due to the negligence of appellant company.

The evidence on this point was certainly sufficient to warrant the submission of the matter to the jury, and they found, as, in our opinion, they must have found, that the ice was placed there by appellant's agent. Whether he carried it and deposited it at that point, or whether he "skated" it across the pavement and it rebounded to that point, when it struck the building, is not clear. The incontrovertible fact remains it was there, and appellant was, under the proof, responsible for its presence.

The contention that the verdict is excessive, is not borne out by the facts. That appellee was painfully and seriously injured there can be no doubt. The physician who treated him has since died, but, from the undisputed testimony of appellee himself, it is shown that two ribs on his right side were broken; that it was necessary for him to remain five weeks with his body in straps; that during this time he suffered intensely; that he spit blood, and that the pain in his right side continued for more than a year; that he had lost flesh and his health had become seriously impaired; that, before the injury, he was a strong, active and robust man; that, since the injury, he has lost strength, his health is seriously impaired, and it is with difficulty that he can labor. It seems that he fell with his right side across and upon this lump of ice, and it was in this way that he was injured, and his ribs broken. For the injury which he sustained, and the pain and suffering which he endured, we are of opinion that the verdict of $1,000 returned by the jury is not unreasonable.

This court, in a number of cases, has upheld larger verdicts for injuries less serious. In the case of the City of Richmond v. Martin, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1516, a lady fell into a hole, sprained her leg and bruised her body so that she was confined to her bed for from three to five weeks, though no bones were broken, she recovered a verdict of $1,500.00, and this court was asked to set it aside on the ground that it was excessive; although it was not clear that she was injured to the extent which she claimed, yet this court refused to set it aside, on the ground that it was excessive. And, in the case of Louisville Gas Company v. Page, 27 Ky. Law Rep., 885, a woman sixty years old stumbled and fell over a defectively constructed gas box, and injured her elbow, for which she recovered a verdict of $2,000. On review here, this court refused to set this aside on the ground that it was excessive, it being shown that she had suffered considerably from it from the time of the injury down to the time of the trial, about a year, and, in denying appellant's right to a reversal, this court said:

"In a case like this, where there has been a severe injury and much physical pain and suffering, and there being some evidence from which the jury might conclude that the injury may be permanent, it is difficult, if not impossible, for a jury or a court to determine, with exactness, the proper compensation. The mere fact that the court would not have fixed the compensation as high as the jury had done, is no reason for setting the verdict aside, and granting a new trial."

And, in numerous other cases, this court has held that a verdict seemingly large would not be disturbed on the ground that it was excessive, where there was evidence tending to show that the injury was serious, and the pain and suffering which accompanied it were severe, and were extended through a considerable period of time. Courts are always slow to disturb the finding of a jury on the ground that it is excessive, in the absence of some evidence tending to show that it was the result of prejudice or passion. In the case at bar, there is nothing that warrants such a conclusion.

This brings us to a consideration of the question as to whether or not appellant was entitled to a peremptory instruction, for which he asked at the conclusion of appellee's testimony, and at the conclusion of all the testimony. The undisputed evidence shows that the accident which resulted in the injury of appellee occurred between 6:30 and 7 o'clock in the morning. As appellee approached the block of ice, he could have seen it, as there was nothing in his way to prevent, had he been looking at it, but he admits that his attention was attracted to the Paul Jones building, which was being erected on the opposite side of the street, and that, with a friend, he was discussing the wonderful growth of the city during the last few years, and they were commenting upon the appearance of the Paul Jones building, and how it could have been improved had its owner acquired the adjacent vacant lot and made it extend over said lot, and that, while his arm was extended in the direction of the Paul Jones building, about which they were talking, his foot struck the cake of ice in question, over which he fell and was injured.

For appellant it is urged that this is conclusive evidence of such negligence on his part that he should be denied a right to recover. This is the question in the case. Was it negligence for him to fail to see the cake of ice on the sidewalk, when he could have seen it if he had been looking in that direction, or might he, while walking along the sidewalk, at a point other than a public crossing, presume that the walk was clear, and the way safe, and take notice of objects across the street, or passing, or overhead, and not be guilty of such contributory negligence as would deny him a right to recover? Negligence is a relative term, depending upon the circumstances of each individual case. Facts which would undoubtedly show negligence in one case, would not be construed to be such in another, hence, it is peculiarly the province of the jury to determine, from the facts in each particular case, whether or not one is guilty of negligence, and so, in the case at bar, it was the duty of the jury, taking into consideration all of the facts, the time of day, the place where the accident occurred and the surroundings, to say whether or not appellee was exercising ordinary care for his own safety in walking along the sidewalk while he was looking at the Paul Jones building, across the street. Might he walk down the sidewalk without keeping his eye upon the ground in front of him in order to observe any obstruction that might be there, and not be guilty of negligence? Was he negligent in failing to see the block of ice, almost transparent, lying upon a white, or, at least, light stone pavement; if, as a matter of law, he was, then a peremptory instruction should have been given. If not, or if, as above indicated, it was the province of the jury to determine this question, then the court did not err in permitting them to do so, and in refusing a peremptory instruction.

Appellant insists most earnestly that it was entitled to have this instruction given, and cites, as supporting its contention, in part, the opinion of Lord Ellenborough, in the case of Butterfield v. Forrester, 11 East, 60, wherein he said:

"A party is not to cast himself upon an obstruction which has been made by the fault of another, and avail himself of it, if he do not himself use common and ordinary caution to be in the right. In cases of persons riding upon what is considered to be the wrong side of the road, that would not authorize another purposely to ride up against them. One person being in fault will not dispense with another's using ordinary care for himself. Two things must concur to support this action: An obstruction in the road by the fault of the defendant, and no want of ordinary care to avoid it on the part of the plaintiff."

The doctrine announced by the learned judge in this opinion is recognized as the correct rule, and has been followed in any number of cases, not only in this, but in other courts in this country. But, it will be observed, in this citation from the opinion, the question at last presents itself as to what is ordinary care, or what amounts to a want of ordinary care on the part of the plaintiff to avoid the injury? This, we say, and our courts have held, is to be determined in each case by the facts and circumstances surrounding it, and has been invariably held to be a question for the jury.

Appellant also cites the case of Creamer v. West End Street Railway Company, 156 Mass., 320, as supporting his contention, but an examination of that case shows that, while the court recognized the rule, that the question of ordinary care is, in most instances, a question of fact, and hence, properly to be left to the jury; still, cases would be found where, from the undisputed facts, the court could see that the plaintiff was not in the exercise of ordinary care, and, in such cases, the court could properly instruct the jury to find for the defendant, and the court cited, with approval, in that case, the case of Chaffee v. Boston, 104 Mass., 108, in which we find the following sentence:

"The question of ordinary care is, in most cases, even where the facts are undisputed, a question of fact, which it is peculiarly the province of the jury to settle."

It is only in that class of cases where the whole evidence introduced by the plaintiff has no tendency to show care on his part, or, on the contrary, shows a want of care, that the duty of the court is to direct a verdict for the defendant. Undoubtedly, if appellee saw the cake of ice, and, seeing it, walked against it, or fell over it, it would have been the duty of the court to have instructed the jury to find for the defendant, and, likewise, if the evidence had shown that appellee's attention had not been distracted at the time, and he had not been looking at the building across the street, or at some other object, which took his attention and vision from the sidewalk, then a case might have been made out which would have warranted the court in instructing the jury to find for the defendant, though, upon this point, the decisions are not uniform. In other words, the court will only instruct the jury to find for the defendant when the facts admitted or proven leave no room for doubt that he failed to exercise that degree of care which an ordinarily prudent person would have exercised under like or similar circumstances for his own safety, and this is all that the case of the Ashland Coal & Iron Company v. Wallace, 101 Ky., 637, decided.

Many cases involving questions similar to the case at bar have been passed upon by our court, and, in those cases, it has been held, with a degree of uniformity, that the correct rule is, that when the court is in doubt as to whether certain acts proven show a failure to use that degree of care which an ordinarily prudent person would have used under similar or like circumstances, for his own safety, it is proper to submit the case to the jury.

In the case of West Kentucky Telephone Company v. Pharis, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1839, appellee was passing over a street at an early hour in the morning, on a cloudy day, when the ground was covered with snow, which was still falling, when she tripped and fell over a telephone wire, and sustained serious injury. On the trial she admitted that she knew of the presence of the wire at that point, but stated that she had her mind distracted at the time by reason of the serious sickness of a sister. That she was thinking about her sister at the time, and forgot about the wire, and, failing to notice it, fell over it. This court held that the mere knowledge on the part of appellee of the presence of the wire upon the street was not, by itself, sufficient to show contributory negligence, though this was a fact for the jury to consider, along with the other facts proven as to whether or not she was guilty of negligence. And, in the case of the City of Maysville v. Guilfoyle, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 43, appellee was injured by falling into a low place in the street, while going to her brother-in-law's, where his child was sick. It developed, during the progress of the trial, that appellee knew of the defect in the street. She stated that, on account of having the sickness of her brother-in-law's child uppermost in her mind, she momentarily forgot about the low place in the street, and failed to notice it. A peremptory instruction was asked for and refused, and this court held, upon review here, that the court did not err in so ruling, but that it was properly left a question for the jury to determine, from all the facts and circumstances, whether or not she was guilty of contributory negligence.

In each of the cases above cited, the plaintiff knew of the existence of the defect or obstruction in the street, but momentarily forgot its presence there because her mind was distracted by reason of the sickness of a member of the family, and the court held, in each case, that the fact that her mind was so distracted was a circumstance which authorized the submission of the case to the jury; and it was for the jury to determine whether or not, under such circumstances, she was exercising that degree of care for her own safety which an ordinarily prudent person would have exercised under like or similar circumstances.

The case at bar presents a much stronger reason why the peremptory should have been denied, for the evidence clearly shows that the plaintiff did not discover the presence of the cake of ice on the sidewalk for the reason that his attention was attracted to the structural work of the Paul Jones building, then being erected.

It is urged, for appellant, that there was ample room to have walked on either side of the cake of ice, and that the slightest care on his part would have enabled him to avoid the injury, but, as said in the case of the City of Lexington v. Auger, 4 Ky. Law Rep., 23, where the appellee had fallen into a hole, and the city attempted to justify on the ground that there was ample room for appellee to have passed along the street without falling into the hole, had he exercised ordinary care for his own safety, this court, upon review here, said that, while this was true, and, as a matter of fact, appellee had to go somewhat out of his way to fall into the hole, yet he had a right, even though drunk, if he was, to presume that no such danger existed in one of the great thoroughfares of the city, and he was not confined to the use of any particular part of the street, but that he had a right to walk upon any part of it. To the same effect is the City of Louisville v. Keher, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 2003.

And, in the case of the Brush Electric Lighting Company v. Kelley, 10 L. R. A., 250, where a lady walking along Main street, in the city of Lafayette, in the day-time, had fallen over a wire and sustained an injury, in passing upon the question, the Supreme Court of Indiana said:

"We do not think that it necessarily follows that the appellee was prima facie guilty of negligence in not observing the obstruction. She had the right to presume that the sidewalk was free from obstruction until her attention was, in some way, called thereto, and to act upon such presumption. * * * A small wire lying along a sidewalk might very reasonably be overlooked by a passer-by, who has no notice thereof, and the fact that it is overlooked does not necessarily indicate negligence. We can not hold, as a question of law, that a person may not pass along a sidewalk cautiously and fail to observe a small wire along or across it; and then, we can imagine many circumstances whereby the attention of the pedestrian might be attracted from the sidewalk, which would be sufficient to divert the attention of a reasonably prudent person."

In the case of the City of Chicago v. McLean, 8 L. R. A., 765, in passing upon a similar question, the court said:

"The plaintiff in this case was bound to make a reasonable use of her faculties when walking along the sidewalk, in order to avoid danger; but what was such reasonable use was a question of fact, to be determined by the jury, under all the circumstances disclosed by the evidence. * * * What particular facts amounted to an exercise of ordinary care, or what particular facts amounted to a want of ordinary care, it was for the jury, and not for the court to determine."

And, in the case of Berry v. Terkilsden, 72 Cal., 254, in passing upon a similar question, the court said:

"A sidewalk of a street in a city, not near a crossing, may be taken by one passing over it to be safe, and not a dangerous place. In this case, the respondent had the right to presume that the sidewalk was in the same condition in which she had always found it; and the fact that her attention was momentarily attracted in another direction—a thing of most common occurrence to travelers along the street—falls far short of that contributory negligence which, in law, defeats an action for damages."

And, in the case of McGuire v. Spence, 91 N. Y., 303, where the plaintiff was injured by falling into an uncovered hole in the sidewalk of the street, in the city of Brooklyn, fronting upon premises owned by the defendant, the court said:

"Negligence is a relative term and depends upon the degree of care necessary in a given case. He who approaches a railroad crossing, approaches a place of danger, and he must look and listen. for he is bound to anticipate a possible harm. But one who passes along a sidewalk has a right to presume it to be safe. He is not called upon to anticipate danger, and is not negligent for not being on his guard."

And, in the case of the City of Chicago v. Babcock, 143 Ill., 358, the court said:

"A person passing along a sidewalk in a city is required to use ordinary and reasonable care and diligence to avoid danger, but what is such ordinary and reasonable care and diligence depends upon the circumstances of each particular case, and is a question of fact for the jury. A pedestrian upon such sidewalk may ordinarily assume that the sidewalk is in a reasonably safe condition for travel. To hold that such person is absolutely bound to keep his or her eyes constantly fixed on the sidewalk in search for possible holes or other defects, would be to establish a manifestly unreasonable and wholly impracticable rule."

In the case of Le Beau v. Telephone & Telegraph Construction Company, 109 Mich., 302, the plaintiff had fallen over a barrel placed over a hole in the middle of the sidewalk, in the day-time, on a May morning. As he approached the sidewalk, his attention was attracted to workmen who were doing construction work on the street, and, while his attention was so attracted, he fell into the barrel in the hole and was injured. In passing upon his right to recover, the Supreme Court said:

"Whether one who, in passing along a sidewalk, and while absorbed in watching the workmen in an excavation being made from the street into an area under the sidewalk, walks into a manhole, left open for the purpose of hoisting through it material excavated from the area, without seeing a barrel which had been placed beside the manhole as a means of guarding it, is guilty of contributory negligence, preventing a recovery for the resulting injuries, is a question for the jury."

And, in the case of West v. City of Eau Claire, 89 Wis., 36, the Supreme Court of Wisconsin said:

"The momentary diversion of the plaintiff's attention could not be contributory negligence, as a matter of law."

And, in the case of Jennings v. Van Schaick, 108 N. Y., 530, the plaintiff fell into an unguarded hole in the street. and in reviewing the case, on appeal, the court said:

"She had a right to assume the safety of the sidewalk, and so was not called upon to give attention to her steps until in some manner warned of danger. Undoubtedly, she knew that vaults and coal-chutes were common under and adjacent to sidewalks, and that they were the ordinary openings through which coal was deposited in the vaults. But she had a right to assume that they were securely covered, or, if left open, were guarded by some one to give warning, or by the crib or box prescribed by said ordinance, neither protection was provided in the present case. * * * In a crowded street it might not be observed in time to avoid a fall, but she swears no such sign of possible peril was present, and, though contradicted, we must take the verdict of the jury as settling the fact in her favor."

To the same effect are the cases of McGrain v. Kalamazoo, 94 Mich., 52; Russell v. Monroe, 116 N. C., 720; and David v. Austin, 54 S. W. (Texas), 927.

Courts generally hold, and our court has recognized it to be the correct rule, that a pedestrian has a right to the free use of any portion of the sidewalk which is open for public use, and he has a right to assume that it is free from obstruction, and in a reasonably safe condition for travel, and if, while passing over and upon a sidewalk in a street, his attention is distracted, so that he fails to observe an obstruction placed upon the sidewalk where he has no right to expect it, and falls over same and is injured, the question as to whether or not he was proceeding with due care for his own safety, is properly a question for the jury.

It is likewise held that if, while passing along the pavement, the attention of the pedestrian is attracted across the street, or overhead and away from the pavement, and, while so attracted, he comes upon and falls over an obstruction in the street, at a point where he has no right to reasonably expect it to be, and is injured, it is the province of the jury to say whether or not, under all of the circumstances, he is guilty of such contributory negligence as to deny him the right to recover. We are aware that, in some jurisdictions, a contrary rule is held, notably in Pennsylvania, and a distinction is there made between subjective cases and cases external or objective, but no such distinction is made in this State, and the same rule applies, whether the detracting cause is some external object, or the concentration of the plaintiff's mind and thought upon some absorbing topic or question.

We are of opinion that, in denying the appellant's motion for a peremptory instruction, the trial judge did not err, and the judgment is, therefore, affirmed.

HAZEL GREEN OIL AND GAS CO. v. COLLIER, &c.

(Filed May 15, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Oil and Gas Wells—Contract for Boring—Construction of Lease—Expiration of Lease—A gas company leased a farm on which to bore for oil and gas in February, 1903, for three years, and "as much longer as oil and gas are found, provided wells are completed during said term, and if gas is found in sufficient quantities to market it," and, if piped away, to pay $100 a year for each well as long as the gas is marketed, and to sink a test well within one year. Held—That to entitle the lessee to a longer term than three years it was incumbent on it that other wells beside the test well should be completed during three years from the date of the lease, and failing to do so, the lease expired at the end of the three years.

McGuire & McGuire and Hazelrigg, Chenault & Hazelrigg for appellant.

Eli H. Brown, Jr. and Finley E. Fogg for appellees.

Appeal from Morgan Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, affirming.

On February 23, 1903, Holly Wilson made a lease to the Hazel Green Oil and Gas Co. It put down no wells upon the property during the first year of the lease, but paid Wilson a royalty as provided therein. In the second year of the lease it did put down a well that struck gas about July 1, 1904. The well flowed about 200,000 cubic feet of gas a day. It did not market the gas, or make any use of it, but simply capped the well in. It had struck, before that, gas on a neighboring farm in a well that flowed over 700,000 cubic feet of gas a day. This well it had turned into its mains, and supplied all of its customers. Wilson then complained that they were not using his gas, and it was agreed between him and the directors, that the company would furnish him, at cost, the piping and some other articles so that he could run the gas to his house and use it for heating and lighting purposes, if he would release the company from paying any royalty while he was thus using the gas. He agreed to this, and did run the gas to his house and use it from that time on. Before this was done, the company had torn down its derrick and moved it to another place, and was doing no further work on the land.

Nothing further was done until the summer of 1906, when Wilson made another lease to S. R. Collier. The latter entered upon the land and was preparing to bore for gas when the Hazel Green Oil and Gas Co. entered and hauled off his lumber and other things, preventing him from going to work. Thereupon this suit was brought by him and Wilson against The Hazel Green Oil and Gas Co. to recover for trespass. Upon the trial in the circuit court the plaintiffs recovered a judgment for $100, and the defendant appeals.

The only question we deem it necessary to consider on this appeal is, whether the lease to the Hazel Green Oil and Gas Co. was in force at the time the lease of Collier's was made, for if its lease had terminated, the lease to Collier was valid, and it had no right to interfere with Collier in his work upon the land. The lease made to the Hazel Green Oil and Gas Co., so far as material, is in these words:

"Memorandum of agreement made and entered into this 23d day of February, A. D., 1903, by and between Holly Wilson and Angeline Wilson, his wife, of the county of Morgan and State of Kentucky, of the first part—witnesseth.

"That said party of the first part, for the consideration of one dollar, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, and the covenants and agreements, rents and royalties hereinafter mentioned, has granted, demised and let, unto the party of the second part, their heirs and assigns, for the purpose and for the exclusive right of drilling and operating for petroleum, oil and gas, to have and to hold for and during the term of three years from date hereof, and as much longer as oil and gas is found, provided wells are completed during said term, as hereinafter provided, with rights necessary to do those things and the right to assign and sub-divide a certain tract or parcel of land (here follows description).

"The said parties of the second part in consideration hereof, agree to give to the party of the first part one-eighth of all the petroleum oil obtained or produced on the premises herein leased, to deliver same in tanks or pipe lines to the credit of the party of the first part. It is further agreed that if gas is found in sufficient quantities to market same, and be piped away from the premises to such market, the consideration in full to the party of the first part shall be $100 per annum for each well as long as the gas from said well is marketed.

"The said parties agree to sink a test well on the above described land within one year, and also agrees to commence operations in the county inside of six months.

"This lease to become void if well is not completed within said time, unless said parties shall pay as rentals for said premises at the rate of ten cents per acre, per year, during the time drilling is delayed. The second parties may, at their option, pay any rentals monthly.

"And it is further agreed that the first party, in consideration of the agreement of the second party herein contained, agrees that the second party, his heirs, successors or assigns, may at any time after the payment of said rentals due, surrender up this lease by delivering the same back to the first party, his heirs, or assigns, endorsed with the surrender thereof and signed by the said second party, and be thereby forever discharged and released from all moneys due, or to become due, and from all obligations accrued, or that may accrue, under this lease, and thereupon this lease shall remain null and void and of no further value, and whatever moneys shall have been received by the first party herein shall be retained by him as full and stipulated damages for the non-fulfillment of the conditions of this lease.

"Which is agreed by the parties hereto as the consideration moving from said second parties to their rights under this lease for the first (party) named herein."

As the lease was made on February 23, 1903, if it was only a lease for three years, it expired on February 23, 1906. It will be observed that the lease is for "the term of three years from date hereof, and as much longer as oil and gas is found, provided wells are completed during said term, as hereinafter provided." It will also be observed that the lease provides that if gas is found in sufficient quantities to market the same, and be piped away from the premises to such market, the consideration in full to Wilson shall be $100 a year, "for each well as long as the gas from said well is marketed." It is also provided in the lease, that the gas company is to sink a test well on the land within one year. Reading these provisions of the lease together, we think it manifest that the writing draws a distinction between the test well, which it provides for, and other wells. In other words, the expression "provided wells are completed during said term." means that other wells are to be completed during the term, besides the test well, and that the mere sinking of a test well during the term, without marketing the gas found in it, does not entitle the lessee to an extension of the term beyond the three years. Wilson was to have a royalty of $100 a year on each well. The more wells were sunk the greater would be his royalty. And this clause also shows that the parties contemplated the sinking of other wells than the test well. The test well was to be sunk in one year or the lessee was to pay the lessor yearly a rental of ten cents an acre. It was also to pay him a royalty of $100 a year for each well as long as gas from the well was marketed, and the lease was for a term of three years, and as much longer as gas was found provided wells were "completed during said term."

What occurred between Wilson and the directors would excuse the company from the payment to Wilson of any royalty on the test well, but it did not excuse it from its obligation to put down other wells. The gas was struck in July, 1904. After striking the gas it pulled down its derrick and moved off, and for two full years did nothing on the land. It did not market any of the gas from the well which it had bored, and had made no effort to put down other wells, or to market any gas from the land. The words, "as much longer as oil and gas is found," are to be read with the words, "provided wells are completed during said term." The term is the three years from the date of the lease just above provided for, and so to entitle the lessee to any longer term than three years, it was incumbent upon it that wells should be completed during that term. No well, however, but the test well was put down. It, therefore, failed to comply with the conditions of the lease, and its term ended with the expiration of the three years. To give the contract any other construction would be to make it binding upon Wilson indefinitely, when it imposed no substantial obligation upon the lessee. It could put down no wells after the test well was sunk, and escape all payment of royalty except on the gas from that well.

Under the facts the lease to the Hazel Green Oil and Gas Co. had expired. The circuit court, in effect, so instructed the jury, and in this there was no error.

Judgment affirmed.

ADAMS v. CURRAN.

(Filed May 15, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Industrial Mutual Deposit Companies—Selling Coupons—Loaning Money—Building Houses—Mortgages—Enforcement—Legality—A contracted with the Industrial Mutual Deposit Co., to build him a house on his lot at a cost of $650, to be paid for by buying coupons in the company and out of the money arising from the maturity of the coupons, he could pay for the building, and executed a mortgage on the lot to C, who was an officer of the company for the $650. The house was built and accepted by A and the company failed and became insolvent. A had paid $138 and received $148.31, which had gone as a credit on his house. In an action by C on the mortgage. Held—That the scheme, though impractical, was not illegal, and the lower court properly enforced the mortgage.

A. M. Baker for appellant.

Forman & Forman for appellee.

Appeal from Fayette Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, affirming.

In the year 1900 J. J. Adams owned a vacant lot in the city of Lexington. J. H. Baker was the general manager of the Industrial Mutual Deposit Co., and William Curran was one of the officers of the company. Baker suggested to Adams that he could have a house built on his lot by buying coupons in the company, and out of the money arising from the maturity of the coupons, he could pay for the building of the house; that he could execute a mortgage on the lot and arrange with Mr. Curran to build the house in this way. After some negotiation Adams executed a mortgage on the lot to the Industrial Mutual Deposit Co. for $650. The mortgage contained this clause: "First parties are to let all the money herein loaned remain in the hands of the Industrial Mutual Deposit Co. and are to take out eight hundred coupons in said company and all of said money is to be applied upon the dues of said coupons, the profits on maturities of said coupons are to be paid to William Curran, until he is paid the price of erecting a building upon said property, then the maturities are to be applied to the liquidation of the six hundred and fifty dollars loaned herein, and first party binds himself to keep (800) eight hundred coupons in force in said company, or so many as said company may require, until the debts herein are discharged, and to pay on said coupons each week the amount determined by said company to keep said coupons in full force, and said coupons are to be in lien and as fully covered by this mortgage to secure the payment of said debt as the real estate herein, and if said first parties fail to comply with any provision of this mortgage, then the whole debt shall become due."

At the same time Adams made a written contract with Curran, which was in these words:

"These presents witnesseth:

"That on the 28th day of September, 1900, the following contract was made and entered into between Wm. Curran, party of the first part, and J. J. Adams, party of the second part, both of Lexington, Ky., to-wit:

"That for and in consideration of one dollar in hand paid by the first party, and the further consideration hereinafter named, the party of the second part borrows from the Industrial Mutual Deposit Co., of Lexington, Ky., $650 with which he takes out 800 coupons and allows all of said $650, except the cost of securing said loan, go as advanced dues on said coupons, to be placed in the hands of the party of the first part, all the profits arising each week out of maturing coupons, to be collected by the first party, and to be applied as a credit on a note given for the building of a house in Arlington Heights, and said second party agrees each and every month to pay into said company $8 to be applied in the payment of dues on the said coupons or renewals of the same, until enough coupons have matured to pay said Curran $686.

"Now in consideration of the above agreement and promises the party of the first part agrees to build a one-story cottage in Arlington Heights, according to specifications and plans set forth in a contract for said building of even date herewith."

Curran built the house and Adams accepted it; but the maturities on the coupons were not sufficient to pay Curran; on the contrary the company failed and became insolvent. Adams had paid in $138. He had received $148.31, which had gone to Curran as a credit on the cost of the house. In this action Curran sought to enforce a lien on the house for the balance due him. The circuit court adjudged him the relief prayed, and Adams appeals.

It is insisted for Adams that the business of the Industrial Mutual Deposit Co. was in effect the running of a lottery; that the contract for the building of the house was in furtherance of the lottery business and that the court should leave the parties where it finds them. We do not find in the record any evidence that Curran had any other purpose in the arrangement than to build a house for Adams, for which Adams was to pay him $686. Adams has the house and if he is not now required to pay Curran for it, he will get Curran's money for nothing and keep the house which Curran has built without paying for it. If Adams had lost anything in the Industrial Mutual Deposit Co. a different question might be presented, but he lost nothing by that company as he got out $10 more than he paid in. The business of the Industrial Mutual Deposit Co. was, in effect, the same as that described in Taylor v. Commonwealth, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 374; O'Day v. Bennett, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 702; Ebelhar v. German American Security, 28 Ky. Law Rep., 1144. The scheme upon which the business of the company was conducted was utterly impractical. The company was insolvent from the time it began business. It is astonishing that persons of ordinary intelligence, upon reading the schemes of the company, would have put their money into it; but there was no concealment. The officers of the company, and the investors, both seemed deluded with the notion that in some mysterious way, by reason of the lapsing of certificates, the scheme could work out. Nobody imposed upon Adams. The scheme was not illegal in the sense that it would render illegal the collateral contract to build the house. The fact is, the building of the house was not collateral to the business of the company. The building of the house was the main thing that Adams wanted to accomplish, and the buying of the certificates in the company was collateral to this or a means to secure the money to pay for the house. In the Ebelhar case we held that, as the investors in the company had the same knowledge as the directors, the directors must pay back the money they had received in so-called dividends, but that they were under no further responsibility. The chancellor properly settled this case on the same basis. By the judgment no injustice has been done Adams. He has the house; the only thing that he has not, is the profit he expected from his certificates; and in this expected profit he and Curran were both disappointed; and he had then as much facility for judging of the matter as he now has.

The business of these Mutual Deposit Companies has not been treated by this court as so far illegal that no action could be brought on contracts made by them. The court has not applied to them the rule that it will leave the parties where they placed themselves on the ground that the business was unlawful. On the contrary, it has applied the principle that the parties entered upon an impractical business by mistake or by reason of false representations and should be placed in statu quo. The judgment appealed from proceeds on this basis, and is correct.

The motion to transfer to the ordinary docket came too late as it was not made until the case had been prepared for trial. (Chenault v. Eastern Ry., &c., Co. 119 Ky., 170.)

Judgment affirmed.

FITZPATRICK v. FITZPATRICK'S ADM'R.

(Filed May 15, 1908—Not to be reported.)

This action having previously been tried in the lower court and appealed (30 Ky. Law Rep., 1011), and reversed and returned with specific directions as to future disposition of the case, which directions were fully carried out by the lower court, is now affirmed.

John W. Ray and William Lindsay for appellant.

Hazelrigg, Chenault & Hazelrigg for appellee.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle, affirming.

This is the second appeal in this case. On the first appeal S. M. Noel was the appellant and the present appellant, Eva Fitzpatrick, the appellee. (Noel v. Fitzpatrick, 30 Ky. Law Rep., 1011.)

On the first appeal the principal question was as to the ownership of a 260-acre tract of land under a decree of the Franklin Circuit Court; it being contended by Eva Fitzpatrick, plaintiff in the action, who is a daughter of Thos. Y. Fitzpatrick and Narcissa Fitzpatrick, deceased, that her mother, then and until her death, the wife of Thomas Y. Fitzpatrick, was the purchaser of the land at decretal sale, and that it was paid for with her money, for which reason the land, it was claimed, should have been conveyed to the wife instead of the husband. The answer of Thomas Y. Fitzpatrick admitted that the land in question was purchased at the decretal sale in the name of his wife, he doing the bidding for her, but averred that he was the real purchaser of the land, and that the method adopted of acquiring it was for convenience and in order that he might become her surety on the sale bond, and thereby avoid the necessity of calling upon some one outside of the family to become his surety. The answer also denied that Mrs. Fitzpatrick paid any part of the sale bond, and alleged that he (Thomas Y. Fitzpatrick) paid the whole of it out of his own means, and that his wife, knowing this to be true, upon the confirmation by the circuit court of the sale to her of the land, executed to him, in writing, an assignment of her bid, and in the same writing, requested the court to order a conveyance of the land, through the commissioner, to him.

After the institution by Eva Fitzpatrick of the action against her father, the latter sold the land in question to S. M. Noel at the price of $8,000; of which amount $3,000 was paid in cash by Noel, and the balance of $5,000 he was to pay at the termination of the litigation between Thomas Y. Fitzpatrick and his daughter over the land, provided the daughter did not recover the land. By an amended petition, Eva Fitzpatrick attacked the sale to Noel made by her father. Noel, by petition to be made a party, set up his purchase of the land and the payment of $3,000 of the consideration, and asked, in the event he failed to get the land under such purchase, to be subrogated to the rights of Thomas Y. Fitzpatrick and given a lien on the land for whatever sums of money, not exceeding $3,000, the latter paid on the land by virtue of his purchase at the decretal sale. By adopting the answer of Thomas Y. Fitzpatrick he relied upon the defense interposed by him. His petition was taken as an answer, and cross-petition against Eva Fitzpatrick. Thomas Y. Fitzpatrick died, intestate, during the pendency of the action, and before there was a trial or decision of the case, J. K. P. South, who had previously been appointed and qualified as administrator of his estate, was, by an agreed order, made a party to the action and the same revived as to him. Following the order of revivor, Noel filed an amendment reiterating the averments of his petition, answers and cross-petition, and making it, as amended, a cross-petition against the administrator of Thomas Y. Fitzpatrick.

Upon the trial in the circuit court judgment was rendered holding invalid the assignment of Narcissa Fitzpatrick's bid at the decretal sale to Thomas Y. Fitzpatrick, also the sale of the land made by the latter to S. M. Noel, and directed the commissioner to convey the land to Eva Fitzpatrick. As before stated, S. M. Noel prosecuted an appeal from this judgment, which resulted in its reversal; this court being of the opinion that the assignment from Mrs. Fitzpatrick to Thomas Y. Fitzpatrick passed to him whatever title or interest she acquired in or to the land by virtue of her purchase at the decretal sale; and this being true that the contract whereby Thomas Y. Fitzpatrick later sold the land to Noel, was valid and entitled Noel to a conveyance thereof upon the payment by him of the $5,000.00 yet due from him on the land. This court, in substance, further held that $4,281.31 of Mrs. Fitzpatrick's money was used by Thomas Y. Fitzpatrick in paying the sale bond executed by himself and wife to the commissioner at the decretal sale, and, as this sum had not been re-paid by him to her estate or heirs at law, one-half of it should be paid out of the $5,000.00, balance of purchase money owing by S. M. Noel on the land to Thomas Y. Fitzpatrick's estate, but that the latter estate should not be made to account for the other half of the $4,281.31, for the reason that he, having survived his wife, was entitled, under the statute, to such half, as well as a half of all other personal estate left by her.

The opinion contains the following specific directions as to the steps to be taken upon the return of the case to the circuit court:

"Upon a return of this case to the trial court S. M. Noel will pay to the master commissioner of the Franklin Circuit Court the remainder of the purchase money due upon said land, according to the terms of his purchase, and upon receipt thereof the master commissioner of the Franklin circuit court will execute a proper release of the lien upon the record for the remainder of the purchase money. Out of the money so paid into court by Noel, one-half of the claim of Narcissa Fitzpatrick, to-wit: one-half of $4,381.31, with interest from March 1, 1897, will be paid to appellee, and the remainder of funds in court, less the costs, will be paid to the personal representative of Thomas Y. Fitzpatrick. The trial court will set aside the order cancelling the deed from the master commissioner to Thomas Y. Fitzpatrick, and also the order directing the master commissioner to convey the property described in this suit to Narcissa Fitzpatrick, and all other orders made by him in signing and approving the deed from the master commissioner to Narcissa Fitzpatrick, and he will enter an order cancelling and holding for naught the deed from the master commissioner to Narcissa Fitzpatrick, and he will adjudge S. M. Noel the owner of the land in question under his purchase from Thomas Y. Fitzpatrick."

Upon the return of the case to the court below a judgment was entered in precise conformity to the opinion, supra, yet its reversal is asked upon the following grounds: 1. That this court was without power, on the former appeal, to direct the judgment of the circuit court, because Thomas Y. Fitzpatrick's administrator was not a party to that appeal. 2. That there was neither pleading nor proof upon which to base the judgment rendered by the court, or which authorized this court to direct the entering of such a judgment.

As to the first ground of complaint it may be said the controversy in this case was as to the title of a tract of land. It was claimed both by appellant, Eva Fitzpatrick, and by appellee, Noel. Appellant's claim was based upon the alleged purchase of the land by her mother; that her mother's money paid for it, and that she inherited it at her mother's death. Appellee's claim was based upon his purchase of the land from Thomas Y. Fitzpatrick, and that the latter had purchased it at decretal sale, paid for it and received a deed from the master commissioner conveying him the title. To support his claim to the land appellee had to show that Thomas Y. Fitzpatrick was entitled to it as against appellant, his daughter. When Thomas Y. Fitzpatrick died he was succeeded as a party to the action by his administrator. The latter, though not a party to the first appeal, became a party to the action before the judgment reversed on the first appeal was rendered. This court, on the appeal, held that the lower court should have caused the land to be deeded to Noel, because Noel's vendor was entitled to it as against his daughter. In reversing the judgment and remanding the case to the lower court, this court had to direct that court to have the land conveyed to Noel upon his paying the $5,000, balance of purchase money he owed upon it; the administrator of Thomas Y. Fitzpatrick had no connection with the land, and was not a necessary party to the action in so far as a determination of the title to the land was concerned, but when as an incident to the determination of that question the money Noel yet owed for the land had to be paid into court, the administrator for the first time became a necessary party, because so much of the money as the estate of Thomas Y. Fitzpatrick was entitled to was directed by the opinion of this court to be paid to him. The money, as well as the land, had to be disposed of by the lower court upon the return of the case to that court, and, therefore, it was proper for this court to direct in its opinion what disposition to make of it. In other words, it was proper for the circuit court to dispose of the whole case and for this court to direct it in so doing, but before disposing of the money paid into court by Noel, as directed by the opinion of the appellate court, the circuit court was charged with the duty of seeing to it that the administrator of Thomas Y. Fitzpatrick was before the court, or if not to make him a party. The latter step was unnecessary, for the administrator was already before the court. As the judgment entered by the circuit court upon the return of the case, in directing the payment to the administrator of so much of the $5,000 as Thos. Y. Fitzpatrick's estate was entitled to, would have been proper as a result of the reversal of the original judgment and without any specific direction of this court, and the administrator was not prejudiced thereby, it was not necessary that he should have been a party to the appeal.

It is true, as urged in the second contention of counsel for appellants, that neither the pleadings nor proof specifically named the full consideration Noel was to pay T. Y. Fitzpatrick for the land. A pleading of the former alleged the payment in cash of $3,000 of the consideration, and that the remainder was to be paid upon the determination of the litigation then pending, if decided in favor of T. Y. Fitzpatrick, but failed to indicate the amount of such remainder. In any event it was conceded, on the former appeal, by counsel for appellant and appellee, and stated in the brief of each, that $8,000 was the consideration agreed to be paid by Noel; that $3,000 of this sum was paid at the time of the sale and that $5,000 of it was to be paid at the end of the litigation, upon the condition indicated. Eva Fitzpatrick, appellee on that appeal, was then represented by the same counsel by whom she and the administrator are represented in the present appeal. So, the matter of the consideration passing between Noel and T. Y. Fitzpatrick stands as if there had been an agreement of parties that it was $8,000, $5,000 of which remained to be paid. Therefore, this court had a right to accept this agreement as a basis for the direction given the lower court as to the disposition to be made of the $5,000, and we think appellants are now estopped to complain of the absence of allegation or proof as to the full amount of the consideration.

Judgment affirmed.

SMITH v. SIMMONS.

(Filed May 15, 1908—To be reported.)

Local Taxation—Aid to Common School Districts—Adopted Prior to Present Constitution—Legality of Levy—There is nothing in the present Constitution of the State, adopted September 28, 1891, to indicate that taxes may not be levied after its adoption, pursuant to a local law in force when it was adopted, so long as the Legislature allows the local law to remain in force and the public needs require the levying of taxes.

S. R. Crewdson for appellant.

J. B. Grubbs and L. Y. Trimble for appellee.

Appeal from Logan Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, affirming.

By an act approved March 4, 1888, the territory within the limits of common school district 49, Logan county, including the town of Adairville, was incorporated as a school district and placed under the management of a board of trustees, who were authorized to levy an ad valorem tax not exceeding seventy-five cents on each one hundred dollars worth of property, and a poll tax not to exceed two dollars, in aid of the common school. The trustees made a levy for the year 1907, of seventy-five cents on each one hundred dollars worth of property, and also levied a poll tax of $1.50. The appellants then brought this suit against the trustees to enjoin the collection of the tax on the ground that the act of 1888 is no longer in force. The circuit court dismissed their petition and they appeal.

The petition does not state any facts sufficient to show invalidity of the action of the trustees, if the act of 1888 is in force, and so that is the only question that it is necessary for us to consider. It is insisted that the act can not be in force under the present Constitution of the State, because, under it, special legislation is forbidden; taxes must be levied by general laws; and the Legislature must provide a uniform system of common schools throughout the State. That our Constitution has not the effect to repeal or make inoperative special laws passed before its adoption, has been often decided by this court. In Long v. Louisville, 87 Ky., 364, it was held that the provision of the Constitution that all taxes shall be levied and collected by general laws refers to the future, and does not affect powers conferred in the pre-existing laws. In O'Mahoney v. Bullock, 97 Ky., 774, it was held that the local act of 1890 for the purchase of turnpikes in Fayette county, the issuing of bonds and the levying of taxes to pay for them, was not affected by the adoption of the Constitution. In Pierce v. Mason County, 99 Ky., 357, a similar act as to Mason county was held in force and taxes levied under it were sustained. The same principles were applied in City of Covington v. District of Highlands, 113 Ky., 612, where a local act of the Legislature authorizing the District of Highlands to levy taxes was held still in force. The same rule has been uniformly applied to local acts creating school districts and authorizing taxes to be levied in them in aid of the common schools. In Roberts v. Clay City, 102 Ky., 88, there was an action similar to the one now before us. Bonds had been issued and a school house built. A part of the bonds were unpaid; the trustees were levying a tax to pay the bonds and carry on the school. It was held that the local act was still in force and the levies were valid. In Board of Education of Hawesville v. Louisville, &c., R. R. Co., 110 Ky., 932, it was insisted that a levy of taxes by the trustees in the Hawesville district under an act approved Feb. 27, 1880, was invalid. In that case also, the trustees had issued bonds and had made a levy to meet the bonds and run the school. The act was held in force, and the levy was sustained. While in both these cases the district had issued bonds the court did not rest its opinion upon the ground that the levy was necessary to pay the bonds; for, if it had done this, only so much of the levy as was necessary to meet the bonds could have been sustained. The court sustained the levy not only for the purpose of meeting the bonds, but also for the purpose of maintaining the school. In Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Trustees of Elizabethtown, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1169, a levy by the trustees of the school district under an act approved March 29th, 1878, was sustained upon the authority of the two cases above cited; and in that case there were no bonds, the levy being made simply to maintain the school. The cases of Hickman College v. Trustees Colored District, 111 Ky., 944, and Board of Trustees v. Morris, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 1420, in no way conflict with those above cited. In each of these cases the question presented was whether the railroad tax should be divided between the white and colored schools, and this was the only question in the case. The statute under which the tax on the railroad was levied provided that the money should be divided between the white and colored schools. There is nothing in the opinion in these cases in conflict with the former opinions. The court held that the statute requiring the tax to be divided between the white and colored schools applied to all the schools in the State, whether the levy was made under the general law or a special act. The soundness of the former opinions holding the special acts still in force is expressly recognized; for otherwise the levies there in controversy were void.

The makers of the Constitution intended to prohibit special legislation, but they contemplated that existing special legislation should continue until changed by the Legislature, unless in conflict with some of its provisions. To have blotted out at once all special legislation in the State would have been to throw the business of the State into chaos. There was the same reason for continuing schools established under special acts, as for allowing other business established under special acts to continue. Debts had been created, buildings had been erected and the education of pupils had been begun. It was important not to interrupt the course of education, or to make a new system which might make unsuitable a large part of the property which had been thus acquired. The interest of the people required that these schools which they had thus established should not be disturbed and so the Legislature, when it came to revise the school laws continued them in force as before. There is nothing in the Constitution to indicate that taxes may not be levied after its adoption pursuant to a local law in force when it was adopted, so long as the Legislature allows the local law to remain in force and the public needs require the levying of taxes. It is true the Legislature must provide a uniform system of common schools, but when the Legislature has so provided, there is nothing to inhibit a local tax in aid of the common school to improve and perfect it. The Adairville school is a part of the common school system, and the fact that there is a local tax to give the people a better school than the common school fund alone would give them, makes it none the less a common school, and in no wise infringes the constitutional provision requiring a uniform system of common schools.

Judgment affirmed.

SOUTHERN RY. CO. IN KENTUCKY v. MILLER.

(Filed May 19, 1908—To be reported.)

1. Railroads—Passenger on Caboose—Delay of Train—Evidence Excluded—In an action by a passenger on a railroad train for damages for delay in being carried to his destination, and for being compelled to ride in a caboose without fire, and for being put off of the train a long distance from the depot. Held—That the court erred in excluding the evidence offered by the defendant to show the cause of the delay.

2. Carriers of Passengers—Responsibility for Delay—Unavoidable Accidents—A common carrier must use ordinary care to carry its passengers to their destination in a reasonable time, but is not responsible for delays which are caused by accidents that ordinary care may not guard against. If there was a wreck on the road, not due to defendant's negligence, which prevented the train running to plaintiff's depot, the defendant is not responsible for the delay which could not be avoided by ordinary care.

3. Negligence of Carrier—Instructions Applicable—Measure of Recovery—The court should have instructed the jury that if the defendant negligently failed to keep its caboose in a reasonably comfortable condition, under the circumstances, or negligently failed to deliver plaintiff at the regular place for the landing of passengers at B, and as the proximate result of these things, or any of them, plaintiff suffered pain or was made sick, they should find for him a fair compensation for the time lost, for any physical or mental suffering he endured and for any permanent reduction of his power to earn money, if such there was.

4. Same—The plaintiff can not recover for any suffering or sickness which he might have prevented by the exercise of ordinary care on his part or for anything which the carrier, by the exercise of ordinary care, could not reasonably have guarded against, and if when there was no negligence delaying the train, the plaintiff voluntarily left it, and walked to the station, the defendant is not responsible for any sickness brought upon him by the walk.

E. H. Gaither, Humphrey & Humphrey, Alex. P. Humphrey and L. R. Yeaman for appellant.

Robert Harding, E. V. Puryear, E. M. Hardin and Greene & Van-Winkle for appellee.

Appeal from Mercer Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson, reversing.

J. P. Miller is a merchant residing at Burgin in Mercer county, Kentucky. In March, 1907, he went to Louisville to buy goods, and after staying in Louisville several days, took the evening train home. When he reached Harrodsburg, which is a few miles from Burgin, he changed cars, the regular train going on to Danville. At that point he took a freight train which also carried passengers. The train was a little late and did not leave Harrodsburg until about ten thirty P. M. The ticket office was not open and so he did not get a ticket. When he got upon the steps of the passenger coach he saw that there was no light or fire in it, and so he went into the caboose, which was just behind it. He was the only passenger on the train. The conductor collected his fare and when they had gotten a few miles from Harrodsburg, the train stopped. This they did because there were some cars in front of them. Towards morning they moved on further, and at seven o'clock, when they were in the yards at Burgin but before the train had been pulled up to the platform, Miller got off and walked home. He testified that he was then seven-eighths mile from the station. The conductor testified they were about two hundred yards from the station. He testified that during the night the caboose would get very hot and then would cool off; that the wind blew in upon him from under the door, it being a cold night, and he was very uncomfortable; that he got his feet wet in walking home; that he went home and went to bed; that at ten o'clock he had a high fever and continued sick for a long time. He had had Bright's disease in the fall, but his physician testified that he was discharged as cured in February. He also testified that the Bright's disease came back upon him in his sickness and that he was still suffering from it at the time of the trial. The defendant offered to show that the reason the train could not get to Burgin was that two flat cars loaded with long steel rails became uncoupled by one of the draw-heads coming out, thus dumping the rails across the track and completely blocking traffic; that there was apparently no defect in these couplers or draw-heads and that no amount of care could prevent the draw-head from pulling out; that by reason of the rails being upon the track there was a congestion of cars, so that the train could not get to Burgin sooner than it did; and that this was the sole cause of the delay: the defendant also showed that there was a good walk from where

Miller got off the train to the station, and it did not appear that he at any time complained during the night about the caboose being uncomfortable. The court refused to allow the evidence offered by the defendant as to the cause of the delay, and at the conclusion of the evidence instructed the jury as follows:

"You are instructed to return a verdict for the plaintiff for such a sum in damages as you believe from the evidence will be a fair compensation to him for any physical discomfort, trouble, inconvenience caused by him, if any, while in the defendant's caboose, by reason of the failure of the defendant to carry him within a reasonable time from its depot in Harrodsburg to its depot in Burgin, and if you believe from the evidence, that the plaintiff was caused to be and did become sick or injured in his physical health, because of the changing conditions of heat and cold prevailing in said caboose during the time he remained therein, or because of his having to walk from the place in the yards at Burgin where the train stopped, to the depot, then you will find for the plaintiff such further sum as you will believe from the evidence will be a fair compensation to him for any physical and mental suffering caused him by such sickness and ill health, and for any permanent reduction of his power to earn money, if any, by said illness, your whole finding not to exceed the sum of $5,000.

"No. 2. You can find for the plaintiff for no injuries sustained by him, if any, that are not proximate to the failure to the defendant to make the trip in the ordinary time with its caboose in ordinary comfortable condition, and to deliver plaintiff at the accustomed place at Burgin where passengers alight from passenger trains."

The jury found for the plaintiff and fixed the damages at $4,000. The court entered judgment on the verdict and the defendant appeals.

The court erred in excluding the evidence offered by the defendant to show the cause of the delay. A common carrier must use ordinary care to carry his passengers to their destination in a reasonable time, but is not responsible for delays which are caused by accidents that ordinary care may not guard against. If there was a wreck on the road, not due to the defendant's negligence, and this prevented the train from running into Burgin, the defendant is not responsible for such delay as ensued which could not be avoided by ordinary care on its part. (6 Cyc., 587, 5 Thompson on Negligence, secs. 6602-6; Hutchison on Carriers, sec. 654.)

